THE INDIAN LAW REPORTS, CALCUTTA SERIES CONTAINING CASES DETERMINED BY THE HIGH COURT AT CALCUTTA, AND BY THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL ON APPEAL FROM THAT COURT AND FROM ALL OTHER COURTS IN BRITISH INDIA NOT SUBJECT TO ANY HIGH COURT.

CALCUTTA—Vol. VIII—1882.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 24th May, 1881.

PRESENT:

SIR B. PEACOCK, SIR M. E. SMITH, SIR R. P. COLLIER, SIR R. COUCH AND SIR A. HOBHOUSE.

Suleman Kadr.....Defendant

versus

Dorab Ali Khan.....Plaintiff.

(On appeal from the Court of the Commissioner of Lucknow.)

Mahomedan Law—Construction of Will—Gift

A testatrix, entitled to Government notes under a gift, coupled with the condition that she was to receive only the interest during her life, and that after her death, the notes were to be held in trust for all her heirs, gave the following directions to S K, whom she made her principal legatee:—

"I direct S K, under this will, to pay every month Rs. 614-1-7 (being one-third of Rs. 1,933-5-4, my monthly pay allowed by the Government for notes, which are deposited) to my dependents and personal servants, as detailed below. Be it known, that the expenses of the imambara, &c., will be continued forever; and also the pay of G K and M A will be defrayed forever, i.e., generation after generation. The rest of the servants will be paid for life only."

[2] Held, that these words constituted a bequest, and were not merely the expression of wish. Also, that the bequest was not one of legacies payable out of a specified sum and no other; the statement that the monthly payments to be made amounted to one-third of the sum received monthly by the testatrix, not limiting the source of the legacies.

Quere.—Whether, under the Mahomedan law, the gift made to the testatrix was not a gift to her absolutely, the condition being void?

APPEAL from a decree of the Court of the Commissioner of Lucknow (20th June 1876), reviewing a previous decree of the same Court (3rd December 1875), and affirming a decree of the Civil Judge of Lucknow (13th April 1875).

The questions raised on this appeal related to the will of the late Nawab Malka Ahad, who died on the 26th August 1866, a widow of the ex-King of Oudh. The appeal was in a suit brought by the respondent, one of the legatees (ten others bringing similar suits), against the appellant, who was the son and representative of the testatrix, and principal legatee under the will. The claim was made to enforce payment by the latter of Rs. 3,700, on account of a bequest of Rs. 100 per mensem unpaid from the 15th December 1871 to the 15th December 1874. The decree now under appeal was made by the Commissioner of Lucknow, in accordance with a decision of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, dated the 11th March 1876, given in the suit of another legatee (Qudrat Ali v. Suleman Kadr). Of the latter suit the record was printed under an order of Her Majesty in Council, together with that of the proceedings in the present case, which was understood to have been taken as a test for the other suits.

The testatrix had become entitled to the Government notes, referred to in the will, under a gift from her deceased husband in 1842. In that year, with a view to securing payment of perpetual pensions to certain members of his family, the King of Oudh applied to the British Government, through the Resident at his Court, to allow, in return for payments made by him, "Government notes to be issued in the names of the parties and to be kept in the British Treasury, so that the principal sums could not be squandered away after His Majesty's death, and that interest be paid monthly." To this request the Government acceded; and in a letter, dated the 25th September 1842, the Resident at Lucknow was informed accordingly. Notes were issued to the amount of the money advanced by the King, and each note was enfaced thus: "This note is not negotiable, and is to remain in deposit with the Resident at [3] Lucknow; the interest accruing on it to be paid to [name of recipient] during her lifetime, and after her decease to her heirs." The Government paper issued in the name of the Nawab Malka Ahad was for Rs. 4,80,000, giving, at 5 per cent. per annum, the monthly sum of Rs. 2,000. On a reduction, in the year 1851, of the rate of interest to 4 per cent. per annum, and on a further payment of Rs. 1,00,000 by the King, 4 per cent. papers of corresponding value were held in deposit for the testatrix.

On the 24th August 1866, the Queen made a will, by which she desired her son Mirza Suleman Kadr Shah Alam Bahadur "to pay every month Rs. 644-1-7 (being one-third of Rs. 1,933-5-4, my monthly pay allowed by Government for Government promissory notes, which are deposited) to my dependents and personal servants." The testatrix then directed that the expenses of the inambara should be defrayed forever, and that the rest of the legatees should be paid for life only.

Mr. J. Graham, Q.C., and Mr. Herbert Cowell appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the Respondent.

It was submitted, on behalf of the appellant, that the effect of the transaction between the King of Oudh and the British Government was to establish a monthly pension for Nawab Malka Ahad during her life only, and for her heirs, after her decease, secured by the Government papers remaining in deposit. Consequently, the testatrix had no power to dispose of the corpus of the fund represented by the notes; which, so far as she was concerned, were held by the Government for her life only. Those who might become entitled after her death would derive title, not from her, but from the King, the donor. Moreover, the words of the will did not create bequests or legacies; they were precatory. In this they corresponded to the fact, that the testatrix had no such disposing power as was attributed to her on the part of the respondent. Reference [4] was made to Jarman on Wills, Vol. 1 [Edn. of 1881], p. 404; also to In re Hutchinson and Tenant (L. R., 8 Chan. Div., 540).

If the words could be held to amount to a bequest, it was a specific bequest, payable out of a specified fund indicated by the reference to the 'monthly pay.' This fund had failed at the time when the will operated, the Government paper no longer belonging to the estate of the testatrix after her death: Morley v. Bird (3 Vesey, 629), Hosking v. Nicholls (1 Y. & C. C. C., 478), Bothamley v. Sherson (L. R., 20 Eq. Cas., 304), and Shepherd v. Beetham (L. R., 6 Chan. Div., 597).

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by Sir R. P. Collier.—This is one of many actions brought by servants and retainers of one of the widows of the late King of Oudh, asserting their right to certain legacies under her will. The defendant is her only son and the principal devisee under that will. This may be considered a test action, inasmuch as it is understood that upon its decision the other actions pending, to the number of ten, will depend.

In order to make the case intelligible, a short statement of the facts is necessary. It appears that the late King of Oudh desired to have a Government guarantee for the payment of annuities to many persons, and for that purpose he deposited a large sum of money with the Government, obtaining from the Government promissory notes in favour of these persons. It becomes, however, necessary in this case only to refer to the principal of those persons, namely, his Queen. He obtained from the Government a promissory note for four lacs and eighty thousand rupees for the purpose of securing her an annuity of Rs. 2,000 a month. Subsequently, upon the rate of interest being lowered from five per cent. to four per cent., he deposited the further sum of a lac of rupees, and received a note corresponding in value. He died, and subsequently the Queen died, having made a will on the 24th August 1866, which is in these terms:—"Whereas the life of mankind is altogether uncertain,"—and so on,—“after my death, my son, Mirza Suleman [5] Kadr Shah Alam Bahadur, will be my sole heir and proprietor of all my assets, including moveable and immoveable property, groves, Company's promissory notes, &c., without there being a participator thereof; and all my relations and Government officers are to recognize him as my son and heir after my death. No one but Shah Alam Bahadur has any right to be my heir after my death.” Then comes the important bequest now in question: “I desire Mirza Suleman Kadr Shah Alam Bahadur, under this will, to pay every month Rs. 644-1-7 (being one-third of Rs. 1,933-5-4, my monthly pay allowed by Government for Government promissory notes, which are deposited) to my dependents and personal servants, as detailed below; and they will give their receipts for the same. It will also be the duty of Mirza Suleman Kadr Shah Alam Bahadur to defray the expenses of the imambara, of mourning assemblies, of illumination of imambara during the Moharram, and of monthly assemblies. Shah Alam Bahadur and all Government officers are to hold this my last will to be of sufficient force forever, and to carry out its provisions without any alterations. They will not, in the least, contravene the provisions of this will. Shah Alam Bahadur will treat all the dependents and servants with such kindness and affability as will secure him fame and good name, and give satisfaction to the soul of his deceased father, King Amjad Ali Shah. I have, therefore, executed this will,” and so on. “Be it known that the expenses of imambara, &c., will be continued forever, and also the pay of Gumani Khanam and Mir Amjad will be defrayed forever, i.e., generation after generation. The rest of the servants will be paid for life only." At the end of the will there is a detail of expenses, and first we have expenses of imambara, assemblies, Koran readers, &c., to be continued forever under the management of Dorab Ali Khan, Rs. 214-7-1." Then there is:—"Gumani Khanam Shahaba, my sister, to be paid" Rs. 20 per month; then comes the present plaintiff, who was the principal eunuch, Mahomed Dorab Ali Khan, Rs. 100; and then come the rest of the servants.

The case has been before three Courts. The first and the last Court, that being the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, [6] have held, that the legacy sued for, was payable out of the whole estate of the deceased Queen, including the Government promissory notes. The second Court held, that she had only a life-interest in the promissory notes, and therefore it was not payable out of that fund; but, nevertheless, that it was payable out of her general estate.

This appeal has been preferred by her son Mirza. The main grounds which have been contended for are, first, that there is no absolute bequest, but a mere expression of a wish that Mirza shall pay the legacies; secondly, that if there is a specific bequest of the legacies, it is a bequest of legacies to be paid out of a certain specified fund, and no other, viz., Rs. 1,933, which was the actual amount which the lady received from her Government promissory notes; that the lady had only a life-interest in that fund, and therefore could not exercise any testamentary power over it. It was contended further, that the legacies were only to be paid during the continuance of the services of the servants, but that point has been abandoned.

With respect to the first question, their Lordships have no doubt that the words, "I desire Mirza to pay, every month, my dependents and personal servants," coupled with the statement at the end, "Be it known that the expenses of imambara, &c., will be continued forever," and "the pay of Gumani Khanam and Mir Amjad will be defrayed forever, i.e., generation after generation, the rest of the servants will be paid for life only"—constitute a bequest, and not merely the expression of a wish or a direction.

The next question is, whether these legacies are to be paid solely out of this fund of Rs. 1,933, the income of the Government promissory notes. If the paragraph which has been read had stood alone, viz., "I desire Rs. 644 (being a third of Rs. 1,933) to be paid to my dependents and personal servants," there might have been a question whether it was not a legacy to be paid only out of a specific fund; but when their Lordships proceed further, and find that the Queen desires that the expenses of the imambara shall be paid, without specifying out of what fund,—and indeed it is but natural to suppose that for a purpose of that sort she would be disposed to appropriate her [7] general estate,—and when it is found that the sum of no less than Rs. 214-7-1 is part of this Rs. 644 which has been mentioned as being a third of the Rs. 1,933, it appears to their Lordships that, taking these portions of the will together, the bequest of the Rs. 644-7-1 cannot be treated as appropriated entirely, as far as payment is concerned, to that particular sum of Rs. 1,933. The mention of its being a third of Rs. 1,933 appears to their Lordships on the whole to amount to no more than a statement of her belief, that that was the proportion which all the sums mentioned in the schedule bore to her annuity from the Government notes, but did not amount to a specified limitation of the payment from that sum.

This being so, and the rest of the estate being admittedly sufficient to pay all these legacies, the case is disposed of in favour of the plaintiff. At the same time, their Lordships think it right to guard themselves against it being supposed that they assent to the proposition that, even if this had been a specific legacy payable out of the specific fund mentioned, it would have been invalid. Their Lordships are by no means satisfied that the gift to this lady of these Government promissory notes subject to a condition that she is to have the interest only for life, and that after her death there is to be a trust in perpetuity for all her heirs to all time, is not, according to Mahomedan law, in its legal effect, a gift to her absolutely, the condition being void. However, without determining a point which is not necessary for the decision of the case, their Lordships think it enough to say that, for the reasons which they have given, they will humbly advise Her Majesty that this judgment should be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Sale for arrears of rent—Joint owners—Darpatnidars—Purchase by defaulter—Constructive Trust.

Of three joint owners of a darpatni, two held each a four-anna share and the third an eight-anna share. Default having been made by all three in the payment of the rent, the patnidar brought a suit and obtained a decree for the arrears. In execution of this decree, proclamation was made that the darpatni would be sold on the 5th of October 1877. Up to the commencement of the sale, the four-anna share-holders were unable to pay their proportionate amount of the decree. The eight-anna share-holder declined paying his share, and, when the sale took place, he became the purchaser of the darpatni. In a suit brought by the four-anna share-holders to recover their shares from the purchaser, the lower Appellate Court, reversing the decree of the Court of First Instance, decided in favour of the plaintiffs.

Held, on second appeal, that the sale having taken place as much through the default of the plaintiffs as through the default of the defendant, the former had no equity against the latter; and that, therefore, the suit should be dismissed.

THIS was a suit for the recovery of possession of an eight-anna share of a darpatni which, on the 5th of October 1877, had been purchased at a sale in execution of a decree obtained by the patnidar for arrears of rent of the darpatni. The defaulting darpatnidars were the two plaintiffs and the defendant Ram Loll, whose share was, the plaintiffs alleged, held benami in the name of his son, the defendant Jodunath. The plaint alleged, that the two plaintiffs and Ram Loll had agreed each to pay his share of the amount on the day fixed for the sale; that, on that day, the plaintiffs were ready with their shares, but the defendant Ram Loll declared his inability to pay his; that the [9] sale consequently took place, and Ram Loll became the purchaser. The plaint charged, that the declaration of inability to pay made by Ram Loll at the last moment, was false, and was made with the view of purchasing the whole darpatni for himself in fraud of the plaintiffs.

The Judge of the Court of First Instance disbelieved the charge of fraud. He found that the plaintiffs were not, on the day of the sale, ready to pay in that proportion of the whole amount which corresponded to their shares, and he found that the defendant Ram Loll, with a view to purchase the whole darpatni himself, declined to pay his share. The Court, citing Huree Churn Bose v. Mehrarounissa Bibee (7 W. R., 318) and s. 66, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, considered, that the mere fact of the defendant not paying his share did not debar him from becoming the purchaser at the execution sale, and he dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

The plaintiffs appealed; and the District Judge, though he agreed with the Court of First Instance that the charge of fraud had not been proved, and that the plaintiffs were not in a position to pay their shares on the day of the sale, held, that as the plaintiffs and the defendant Ram Loll had been joint owners of the darpatni previous to the sale, Ram Loll could not purchase the darpatni for himself to the exclusion of the plaintiffs. For this position the Judge cited Lindley on Partnership (2nd ed.), pp. 494-5; White and Tudor's Leading Cases in Equity (4th ed.) Vol. I, p. 19. The defendant appealed.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—The facts of the case are briefly as follows:—The two plaintiffs were co-sharers to the extent of four annas each [10] in a darpatni taluk. The other eight-anna share belonged to the defendant No. 1, the defendant No. 2 holding this moiety benami for him. It appears that the rent of the darpatni fell into arrear, and that the patnidar brought suits, and recovered decrees for the rent so in arrear. The darpatni was brought to sale in execution of these decrees, and was purchased at the execution-sale by the defendant No. 1. The plaintiffs now bring this case to recover from the defendant No. 1 the moiety of the darpatni to which they were jointly entitled before the sale. The case made by them in their plaint, in paragraph six, was a case of actual or positive fraud. They there alleged that, after time had been given by the decree-holder to pay the sum due under the decree, the plaintiffs were prepared to pay their share on the date up to which time was given, and that the defendant led them to believe that he also would have his share of the money ready to make the payment on that date; they suggested that this representation was fraudulently made to mislead them, and with the intention of preventing them from raising the whole of the money which would have been necessary to satisfy the decree fully and so prevent the sale.

If that case had been proved, that would have been a case of actual fraud, and would have entitled the plaintiffs to relief in the Court in which the suit was instituted; but, as a matter of fact, that case was held below not to have been proved; and there is no appeal at present before us upon this question. The bare point urged before us is, that because the plaintiffs and the defendant were co-owners of the darpatni before the sale, the defendant, purchasing at the execution-sale, must be taken to have purchased for himself and his co-sharers: in other words, that he is to be regarded as a constructive trustee for the plaintiffs so far as their shares are concerned.

The learned Judge in the Court below has referred to certain cases well known in the Courts of Equity in England, in which it was decided that when persons occupying a fiduciary position had renewed leases or otherwise acquired property for themselves, taking advantage of their fiduciary position to do so, they could not be permitted to retain the benefit thus acquired, but must be regarded as constructive trustees for those towards [11] whom they occupied a position of trust. We think that the principle of those cases is not applicable in the present instance. We are of opinion that co-sharers in immoveable property in this country do not occupy the same position towards each other as partners under English law.

Under the decrees passed for rent, both the plaintiffs and the defendant were jointly liable. There was no several liability, and the result of all the parties being jointly liable was, that each one of them was liable to make good the whole amount due under the decree. But we will assume, for argument's sake, that the plaintiffs ought to have paid one moiety of the amount due under the decree, that moiety representing their joint interest in the darpatni taluk, and that the defendant was liable to pay the other moiety of the sum due under the decree. This assumption is the most favourable possible to the plaintiffs' case. Now it has been found, as a matter of fact, by both the Courts below, that the plaintiffs had not paid the moiety of the sum due under the decree, which moiety they admit their liability to pay.

Under these circumstances, we think that the plaintiffs, coming into a Court of Equity, cannot say that they have done all that they were bound to do, and that the sale was due to the laches of the defendant alone; and both parties being thus in default, the plaintiffs are not entitled to the assistance of a Court of Equity.

It may be well to observe, that no case was made by the plaintiffs in the Courts below; that the defendant No. 1, being a defaulter, was not at liberty to bid at the execution-sale; and that, therefore, that execution-sale must be treated as a complete nullity. The superior landlord, the patnidar, has not been made a party to this suit; and as that case was not raised or tried in the Courts below, we have not to deal with or pronounce our opinion upon it. We also deem it unnecessary to decide what the result might have been if the plaintiffs had paid the whole of the moiety of the sum due under the decree which they admit their liability to pay.

We deal with this appeal merely on the ground, that as the plaintiffs did not pay that share of the rent which they admit [12] that they were bound to pay, they are not in a position to ask that relief which they have sought in their plaint from a Court of Equity. Further, the case for relief put forward by them in their plaint was based upon actual or positive fraud, and this they have failed to establish.

Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that the decree of the District Judge must be reversed and the decree of the first Court be restored, the plaintiffs' case being dismissed with all costs in this and the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed.

versus

Wuhari Lall Singh.....Plaintiff.*

Hindu law—Reversioner—Alienation by Hindu widow—Parties—Vested and Contingent interest—Declaratory decree—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42.

The plaintiff, claiming to be entitled in reversion to certain property on the death of his grandfather's widow, sued for a declaration that certain alienations made by the widow were void as against him. To this suit the widow and her alienees were defendants. The defence was, that the plaintiff was not the reversioner, and certain parties, who claimed to be the real reversioners, intervened and were made defendants by order of the Court. The plaintiff obtained a declaration of his reversionary right, and the deeds of sale were, on certain conditions, declared void as against him. The intervenors appealed to the High Court.

Held, on appeal, that, notwithstanding the provisions of s. 42† of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief sought, and that the defendants who claimed as reversioners should not have been made parties to the suit.

*Appeal from Original Decree. No. 61 of 1880, against the decree of Babu Grish Chunder Chowdhry, Subordinate Judge of Sarun, dated the 31st December 1879.

Discretion of Court as to declarations of status of person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right, and the Court may in its discretion make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the plaintiff need not in such suit ask for any further relief :

Bar to such declaration.

† [Sec. 42 :—Any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right, and the Court may in its discretion make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the plaintiff need not in such suit ask for any further relief :
Provided that no Court shall make any such declaration where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so.

Explanation.—A trustee of property is a 'person interested to deny' a title adverse to the title of some one who is not in existence, and for whom, if in existence, he would be a trustee.]

Section 42 * of the Specific Relief Act refers only to existing and vested rights, and not to contingent rights.

THIS was a suit brought by Wahari Lall Singh, a minor, by his father and next friend, for a declaration of his right as [13] reversioner to certain property. The plaintiff stated that the property in question had belonged to one Balgobind Singh, who had died in Bhadro 1271 (September—October 1864), leaving him surviving two widows, Sustî Koer and Pharichha Koer, a daughter Bhuttu Koer (since deceased) by his wife Sustî Koer, and the plaintiff (who is the son of Bhuttu); that, upon the death of Balgobind, the widows entered into possession of his property, which finally became vested in Pharichha Koer on the death of Sustî Koer in 1284 (1877-78); and that Pharichha Koer and Sustî Koer had alienated portions of their husband's property by two bills of sale, dated the 8th and 18th of May 1874 respectively. The plaintiff claimed to be entitled to the property on the death of Pharichha Koer, and prayed for a declaration of his right thereto, for a declaration that the bills of sale should be declared void as against him, and for an injunction.

The defence was, that the plaintiff was not the grandson of Balgobind, and the property affected by the bills of sale had never been the property of Balgobind from whom the plaintiff claimed.

When the suit was first instituted, the only parties made defendants were the surviving widow, and Rajkishori Koer, the purchaser under the bills of sale of the 8th and 18th of May 1874; but subsequently certain parties (who claimed to be the real reversioners to the property of Balgobind on the death of the widow Pharichha) intervened in the suit, and were made parties thereto by an order of the Court.

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff was the grandson by the daughter of Balgobind, and that the property alienated by the widows had been their deceased husband's property; but that Rs. 5,835-11 of the purchase-money had been applied in paying off debts incurred by Balgobind; and he considered that s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) entitled the plaintiff to the declaration which he sought.

The following decree was made: "That this case be decreed to the plaintiff in the manner following:—That Wahari Lall, the plaintiff, in the capacity of grandson of Balgobind Singh, is entitled to the property left by his maternal grandfather after [14] the death of Mussamat Pharichha Koer, in case he remains alive after Pharichha Koer; that it is held, that the transfer of Mouza Jugutpur made by the widows of Balgobind Singh will be declared null and void after the death of Mussamat Pharichha Koer, in case the plaintiff pays Rs. 5,835-11 to Mussamat Rajkishori." The intervening defendants appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Branson, Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose, Baboo Durga Pershad, and Baboo Hurry Mohan Chuckerbutty for the Appellants.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdry, Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey, and Baboo Aubinash Chunder Banerjee for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by

Mitter, J.—This suit was brought by one Wahari Lall Singh, for a declaration that certain deeds of sale, dated the 8th and 18th May 1874, executed by two Hindu widows, Pharichha Koer and Sustî Koer, widows of one Balgobind, are void and inoperative as against the plaintiff, he being the presumptive heir to the estate of Balgobind after the death of the last surviving widow, Pharichha Koer. The object of the suit was, further, to have a declaration that the plaintiff, according to Hindu law, is the next reversionary heir to the estate left by the aforesaid Balgobind. The plaintiff alleges that he is the daughter's son of the aforesaid Balgobind by Sustī Koer. The suit was brought after the death of Sustī Koer against Pharichha Koer, the other widow, and the person in whose favour the aforesaid deeds were executed. It appears, that while this suit was pending, the appellants before us, Grooman Singh and others, intervened, and alleged that, upon the death of Pharichha Koer, they would be entitled to succeed to the estate of Balgobind, and not the plaintiff, as he was not his daughter's son, but of his brother Abhiman. They were made defendants by an order of the Court dated the 20th April 1879. It also appears that the widow Pharichha Koer denied [16] the relationship of the plaintiff as alleged by him. The lower Court raised an issue upon this point, —viz., was the mother of the plaintiff a daughter of Balgobind Singh? The lower Court having decided this issue in favour of the plaintiff, as well as the other issues raised in the case, awarded a decree to the following effect in favour of the plaintiff,—"That this case be decreed to the plaintiff in the manner following, to wit: that Wahari Lall, the plaintiff, in the capacity of grandson of Balgobind Singh, is entitled to the property left by his maternal grandfather after the death of Mussamut Pharichha Koor, in case he remains alive after Pharichha Koer; that it is held, that the transfer of Mouza Jugutpore made by the widows of Balgobind Singh will be declared null and void after the death of Mussamut Pharichha Koer, in case the plaintiff pays Rs. 5,835-11 to the defendant Mussamut Rajkishori; and that the prayer for issue of prohibitory orders is rejected with costs."

Now it appears to us, that the first declaration, which has been made in this decree, is erroneous. It is abundantly clear upon the authorities, that a person who stands in the position of presumptive heir upon the death of a Hindu widow is not entitled to maintain a suit for a declaration of his so-called reversionary right. We may here cite only one case, which is exactly in point—Dooli Chand v. Burj Bhokun Lal Arastī (6 C. L. R., 528). Some of these cases were decided before the Specific Relief Act came into operation: but in our opinion the aforesaid Act has made no alteration in the law. Section 42* refers only to existing and vested rights, and not to contingent rights like those of a person who has only a chance of succeeding to the estate of a Hindu after the death of a female heir in possession of the property. That also appears from a consideration of the difference in the language used by the Legislature in the illus. (d) and (c) of s. 42. Illustration (c) contemplates a case like the present, and the illus. (d) applies to the case of a vested right of reversion. The appellants, therefore, have no sort of interest in the suit which was brought by the plaintiff, because, if the suit was dismissed, they could not have been affected by the result; and if it was decreed, they, after the death of the widow, [16] if they were really persons entitled to succeed to the estate of Balgobind in preference to the plaintiff, would have been entitled to claim this property also. It is only in the event of the plaintiff being entitled to succeed to the declaration which he asks for in the plaint, —viz., that he would be entitled to succeed to the estate of Balgobind after the death of Pharichha Koer, that the appellants before us would have an interest in the result of the suit. But the plaintiff is not entitled to that declaration; the appellants, therefore, should not have been made defendants in the suit. We, accordingly, set aside the order by which they were made defendants, and direct that their names be struck off from the category of defendants. We also set aside that part of the declaration given in the decree by which it is declared, that the plaintiff, as the daughter's son of Balgobind, would be entitled to the property left by his maternal grandfather after the death of Mussamut Pharichha Koor, in case he survives Pharichha Koor. As the appellants themselves intervened and applied to be made defendants, we think that they were rightly made liable for costs in the lower Court; but as to the costs of this appeal we are of opinion that they had reasonable grounds for coming up to this Court in order to have the declaration, which has been made against them, set aside. We are, therefore, of opinion, that they should not be made liable, for the costs of this appeal, and that each party should bear their own costs in this Court.

Decree varied.

[17] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 19th July, 1881.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Sunrun Thakoor.....Defendant

versus

Chunder Mun Misser and others.....Plaintiffs.*

Mitakshara Law—Partition—Ancestral Property—Wife's share on Partition.

Under the Mitakshara law, where partition of ancestral property takes place between a father and a son, the wife of the father is entitled to a share.

THIS was a second time on which this case came before the High Court on special appeal. On the former occasion the learned Judges (AINSLIE and McDONELL, JJ.) remanded the case for the trial of certain issues. The order of remand was as follows:—

This is a suit by a member of the joint family against the auction-purchaser of the rights and interests of other members of the family, who executed a bond mortgaging their shares as security for a loan. The auction-purchaser brought a suit on the bond, and having obtained a decree, put the mortgaged property up for sale in execution thereof and purchased it himself. The lower Appellate Court has found as a fact that the family was joint, but this is not a matter of any material importance now, because the question of the rights of an auction-purchaser in such a case as this has been determined by a recent judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Deen Dyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198; 1 C. L. R., 49). Their Lordships, while refraining from expressing any dissent from the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Sudabart Prasad Sahu v. Folbash Koer (3 B. L. R., F. B., 31) in respect of voluntary alienations, have determined that, as regards sales in execution of decree, the rights and interests of a debtor in a joint family property may pass to an auction-purchaser, and that [18] the auction-purchaser has a right to demand a partition of the interests so acquired by him. This being so, it appears to us, that if an auction-purchaser can as a plaintiff come into Court and demand a partition of the interests of the persons whose rights he has acquired, he is equally entitled as a defendant to set up that right of partition against a member of the joint family who seeks to reclaim the property which has come into his possession.

In the case before the Privy Council the order that was made took a peculiar form, because, we apprehend, there was a peculiarity in that case. One of the members of the joint family had not been represented in the suit, and therefore a final declaration as to the rights of the several members of the family could not then be made; and it may be that their Lordships thought that it was unnecessary to re-open that particular case when the same question could be as well tried in a separate suit by the auction-purchaser. In this case, however, we think that as the suit is to go back to the first Court, there is no reason why a final adjudication should not be arrived at. The Court will ascertain from the parties the persons who are admitted or said to have been members of the joint family at the time of the execution-sale, and if all the members are already parties to the present suit, the Court will at once go on and determine any questions which may arise between them. If any person who is said to have been entitled to any share at that time is not on the record as a party, the Court will take proper steps to put him or her on the record. It will then decide what shares would actually have come on partition to the judgment-debtors had a partition taken place on the day of the sale, and the plaintiff's right to recover from the defendant will depend on the amount of shares determined. If those shares amount to the whole 13 annas, 6 gandas, 2 cowries, 2 krants in the possession of the defendant, of course the suit will be dismissed, otherwise the plaintiff will be entitled to recover proportionately.

In accordance with this order of remand the Court below ascertained the parties who were members of the joint family, and the shares of each; amongst other things giving to a lady, on partition, a share equal to that allotted to each of her sons and to her husband. This decree was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Mitter, J.—The only question which we reserved for consideration is, whether, under the Mitakshara law, a share is allotted to a wife in a partition of an ancestral property between a father and a son.

The question we find is no longer an open one, having been decided on several occasions: see Mahabeer Persad v. Ramyad Singh (12 B. L. R., 90), Laljeet Singh v. Raj Coomar Singh (12 B. L. R., 373), Jodoonath Dey Sircar v. Brojonath Dey Sircar (12 B. L. R., 385), and Pursid Narain Singh v. Honooman Sahoy (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 845).

Upon an examination of the Mitakshara itself, we have come to the conclusion that though there is no express text upon the point yet the decisions are in accordance with the principle upon which express texts upon kindred subjects are based. In some of the cases cited above, v. 8, s. 11, chap. I and vv. 1 and 2, s. 7, chap. I are relied upon in support of this proposition of law. But the first text refers to paternal or father's self-acquired property, and the other texts apply to the case of a partition after the death of the father. But if the mother is entitled to a share in the partition of ancestral property after the death of the father, there is no valid reason why, upon the same principle, she should not get a share when the ancestral property is divided between the father and the son. Moreover, v. 2, s. 6, chap. I, which applies to the partition of paternal as well as of ancestral property, shows by implication that the proposition of law laid down in these cases is quite in accordance with the view of the author of the Mitakshara. Speaking of the rights of the posthumous son, he says—"The sons being separated from their father, one who shall be afterwards born of a wife equal in class, shall share the distribution. What is distributed, is distribution, [20] meaning the allotments of the father and mother: he shares that; in other words, he obtains after (the demise of) parents, both their portions: his mother's portion, however, only if there be no daughter; for it is declared, that daughters share the residue of the mother's property after payment of her debts."

It is clear from this text, that, on the distribution of the ancestral property, a share is allotted to the mother also.

The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 22nd June, 1881.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Narsing Dass.....Plaintiff

*versus*Najmooddin Hossein.....Defendant.*

Mahomedan law—Mortgage—Ancestral debt—Money-decree—Purchaser at execution sale—Notice—Alienation by heir.

In execution of a money-decree against the heirs of a deceased Mahomedan for a debt incurred by him, A purchased certain property which had been allotted to the widow of the deceased in lieu of dower and of her share of the inheritance. Previously to the purchase, however, the widow had mortgaged the same property to B, who, at the time of the mortgage, knew of the debt for which the decree was obtained. In a suit by B against A, on the mortgage, it was not shown that there were not assets in the hands of the heirs-at-law to satisfy the debt due to A's vendor.

Held, that B was entitled to recover.

Syed Bazayet Hossein v. Dool Chund (L. R., 5 L. A., 211) followed.

IN this case it appeared that, on the 18th of October 1866, one Eftakharuddin executed a money-bond in favour of one Lalla Jha for the sum of Rs. 546. Eftakharuddin died some time afterwards, and on the 20th November 1872, Lalla Jha, in a suit against the heirs of Eftakharuddin, obtained a decree on his bond. This decree was reversed on appeal by the Additional Judge of Tirhoot, on the 8th of April 1873, but was restored [21] by the High Court on Special Appeal on the 20th of April 1874. On the 26th of February 1876, Lalla Jha sold his decree to the defendant Chowdhry Najmooddin Hossein, who, at a sale in execution of this decree, purchased the share of Eftakharuddin's widow in Mouza Jhurja, a property which had belonged to Eftakharuddin, and which, at a partition amongst the heirs of Eftakharuddin, had been allotted to the widow, partly as her share of the inheritance and partly in lieu of dower. Previously, however, and on the 28th of March 1874, the widow had mortgaged to the plaintiff her share in Mouza Jhurja, and on the 16th of March 1878, he brought the present suit against the widow and Najmooddin Hossein to recover the mortgaged-money. The defence was, that the bond of 1874 was fraudulent and void; and that, even if it were not so, under Mahomedan law the title of the defendant was superior to that of the plaintiff.

The Subordinate Judge found that the bond of 1874 had been executed bona fide for valuable consideration, and without notice of Lalla Jha's claim; and he decreed the plaintiff's claim with costs. The District Judge on appeal said,—that “if the mortgage was a bona fide transaction, and the mortgagee exercised due care and caution, and was without notice of any prior claim on the estate," then the decree of the lower Court was right. But he found that "the plaintiff has failed to prove that consideration really passed under the mortgage-bond on which he sues, or that he was acting bonâ fide, or, if consideration did pass, that he exercised due caution, and was reasonably satisfied of the necessity of the loan for the purposes of the estate." The Judge then reversed the decree of the lower Court, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

The plaintiff appealed.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry for the Appellant.

Mr. M. L. Sandel for the Respondent.

Mitter, J.—This was a suit on a bond for Rs. 1,800, [22] executed by Fahtemul Zohra, widow of Sheikh Eftakharuddin, hypothecating, amongst other properties, one anna fifteen gandas of Jhurja, of which the respondent is in possession under an auction-purchase of the rights of the aforesaid widow made on the 15th August 1877. The mortgage-bond is dated the 28th March 1874.

It appears that Sheikh Eftakharuddin died between 1868 and 1872, leaving him surviving the aforesaid widow and two sons as his heirs. In the year 1866 he borrowed Rs. 546 by a bond, dated the 18th of October, from a person named Lalla Jha, who obtained a decree for the loan against the aforesaid heirs on the 20th November 1872.

This decree was reversed by the Judge on the 8th April 1873, but was restored by this Court in Special Appeal on the 20th April 1874.

It appears that Sheikh Eftakharuddin was possessed of four annas of this mouza, viz., Jhurja. After his death, by a Tukseemnamah, dated the 20th January 1871, executed between his heirs, one anna fifteen gandas was allotted to the widow, fifteen gandas in lieu of her dower, and the residue as her share by right of inheritance. Lalla Jha sold the decree obtained by him to the respondent, who, in execution of it, first of all attached the whole four annas; but by a petition subsequently made, proceeded only against one anna fifteen gandas, the share hypothecated in the plaintiff's bond. The plaintiff thereupon put in an application in the execution Court, notifying his mortgage, and the property was sold with the notice of his mortgage, and purchased by the respondent himself on the 15th August 1877.

The defence of the respondent is substantially based upon two grounds, namely,—1st, that he having purchased the property in execution of a decree passed for the debts due from the ancestor, must be deemed to have acquired it under the Mahomedan law free from the incumbrance created by one of the heirs; and 2nd, that the bond was a collusive instrument brought about to defeat the claim of his vendor. The Subordinate Judge overruled both these pleas and awarded a decree, directing, that that part of the mortgaged premises which is [23] still in possession of the original mortgagor, should be sold first, and that if, after such sale, the decree be not satisfied, one anna fifteen gandas of Mouza Jhurja in the possession of the respondent should then be sold. On appeal the District Judge has reversed this decree so far as the respondent is concerned. He finds (i) that the plaintiff had notice of the debt of Lalla Jha, still remaining unpaid when the bond was executed in his favour; and (ii), that the "plaintiff has failed to prove that consideration really passed under the mortgage-bond on which he sues."

If this last finding is correct, we cannot interfere. But it seems to us that the bond upon which the suit is brought has been proved by the lower Court to have been executed by Fahtemul Zohra. The respondent acquired her rights in one anna fifteen gandas of this property in the year 1877, the bond having been executed in the year 1874. The recital in the bond that the consideration was received by the executant, is evidence quantum valeat against the respondent. Therefore, until the latter can show that this recital is not true, it must be held that the consideration was paid. This has not been shown; therefore, the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon this point cannot stand. Consequently, the position of the plaintiff is this:—He took a mortgage from one of the heirs of a deceased Mahomedan having notice of an outstanding debt due from her ancestor. Is the mortgage under the Mahomedan law absolutely void? I do not think that there is any authority for holding the affirmative. In Syud Bazayet Hossein v. Dooli Chund (L.R. 5 I.A., 222), the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, after reviewing many decided cases on the point, laid down the law thus:—"A creditor of a deceased Mahomedan cannot follow his estate into the hands of a bonâ fide purchaser for value to whom it has been alienated by his heir-at-law." But it does not follow from this that such a creditor, under all circumstances, can follow the estate in the hands of a purchaser who had notice of his claim. The purchase with notice is not absolutely void, but the purchaser takes the property subject to the rights [24] of the creditor whatever they are. The Mahomedan law on this subject is, that, out of the assets of a deceased person, funeral expenses should be defrayed first, then the debts, and then the legacies. The residue is to be distributed amongst the heirs. Therefore, if the assets in the hands of an executor or the heirs-at-law are not sufficient to discharge a particular debt, the creditor may follow any property in the hands of a purchaser from the executor or heirs-at-law with notice of his claim. In this case it is not shown that the assets in the hands of the heirs-at-law were not sufficient to satisfy the debt due to the respondent's vendor. On the other hand the fact is, that the debt was satisfied by the sale of a portion of the assets in the hands of one of the heirs, viz., the equity of redemption of Musst. Fahtemul Zohra in one anna fifteen gandas of Mouza Jhurja.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is therefore erroneous, and we accordingly set it aside and restore that of the first Court with costs.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 16th August, 1881.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Rajkristo Moitro and others.....Defendants

versus

Koylash Chunder Bhattacharjee.....Plaintiff.*

Unlawful agreement—Void consideration—Public policy—Agreement to suppress Criminal proceedings.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for possession of a house and premises, which he had bought from the latter. The defence was, that the sale was made for the purpose of raising money to be given to certain third parties as a bribe to induce them to withdraw a charge of criminal breach of trust, which they had preferred against the defendant. The lower Appellate Court held, that the defence was bad, on the ground that there was no evidence to show that the plaintiff was a party to, or in any way concerned in, the unlawful agreement, and gave the plaintiff a decree.

[25] Held, that the decree was correct, as there was no evidence to show either that the plaintiff knew of the agreement to suppress the criminal prosecution, or that any money had been paid in pursuance of such unlawful agreement.

THIS was a suit for possession of certain land and buildings, brought by Koylash Chunder Bhattacharjee against Rajkristo Moitro and two persons named Chuckerbutty. The plaintiff alleged that the premises had, in the first instance, belonged to the Chuckerbutty defendants; that they had been purchased by Rajkristo at a sale held in execution of a money-decree obtained against the Chuckerbuttys by some third party; and that, on the 4th of September 1878, Rajkristo had sold them to the plaintiff for Rs. 320, but had since refused to give up possession to the plaintiff. Rajkristo's defence was, that the Chuckerbuttys had brought a charge of criminal breach of trust against him; that they agreed to withdraw the charge in consideration of his conveying to them the premises which he had bought at the execution-sale; and that he did so convey by executing a kobala in the name of the plaintiff who was a mere benamidar for the Chuckerbuttys.

The Court of First Instance decreed the plaintiffs claim. On appeal, the defendant shifted his case, and contended that the suit must be dismissed even if it were proved that the consideration-money had been paid, as it was paid for the purpose of being handed over by the defendant to the Chuckerbuttys as a bribe to them to withdraw from the criminal proceedings. In reference to this the Judge said:—"The plea taken in the written statement, and in regard to which the issues were framed, was, whether the appellant had been induced to sell the property to the plaintiff by intimidation or undue influence; that ground has been abandoned as untenable, and the appellant now seeks to repudiate the sale on the ground that the consideration he received was to enable him to refund some money he had embezzled and so to compromise certain criminal proceedings that had been commenced against him. The agreement to repay the money embezzled, in consideration of the withdrawal of the criminal case, was no doubt opposed to public policy and unlawful. But the question is, whether [26] a totally different agreement by which the appellant raised money from a third party is an unlawful agreement. The decision of this question must depend, I think, upon the answer to be given to another question, viz., whether the third party, the present plaintiff, was a party to, or in any way concerned in, the other agreement. Of this there is no evidence whatever. It is alleged that he is merely the benamidar for the Chuckerbuttys; but the allegation is improbable on the face of it. And though possibly the plaintiff may have guessed or even heard of the reason why the appellant was parting with his property, still I do not think that the Court can go so far as to presume privity therefrom, and to hold that the plaintiff was bound to follow the purchase-money and see to its application." The Judge then affirmed the decree of the Court of First Instance and dismissed the appeal with costs. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Field, J.—The plaintiff in this case is the purchaser of certain immoveable property under a registered conveyance, and he brings this suit to obtain a declaration of his title to the property, his possession and quiet enjoyment having been disturbed by certain acts of the defendants.

The only point we have to decide is, whether the consideration for the conveyance is an unlawful consideration. The contention is, that the money for which the property was sold was used for the purpose of suppressing a criminal prosecution; that this was an unlawful object; and that the plaintiff being well aware of the unlawful purpose to which the money was about to be applied, is affected with this knowledge, and cannot enforce the contract which was made for this unlawful consideration.

We think that this contention is not tenable. The plaintiff [27] was no party to the criminal prosecution. His contract for the purchase of the property was entirely separate; and there is not sufficient evidence upon the record to show, first, that the money was paid over to the person who instituted the criminal prosecution under circumstances which would make this payment a breach of the law; and secondly, that the plaintiff was well aware of the whole of these facts. Having regard to the provisions of the exception to s. 214* of the Indian Penal Code, it is clear that it is not every compromise of a criminal prosecution out of Court which is a breach of the positive law. In this particular instance the prosecution was for a criminal breach of trust, and there is probably no class of criminal cases between which and matters of purely civil remedy it is more difficult to draw the line accurately. Under those circumstances, we think that, as the contract in this case was not made with the prosecutor in the criminal case, but was a wholly separate contract, and as the facts are not sufficiently well proved to show that that compromise was a breach of the positive law, and that the plaintiff was well aware of this, and that those facts constituted a breach of the law, we think that the contention of the appellant cannot succeed. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Prinsep, J.—I concur in dismissing this appeal. The law on this point, supposing that the agreement had been made directly with the plaintiff, is thus summed up by Mr. Pollock in his Principles of Contract (p. 342, 2nd ed):—
“A makes an agreement with B, who intends, by means of something to be obtained or done under it, to effect an unlawful or immoral purpose. If A does not know of this purpose, there is a contract voidable at his option when he discovers it. If he does know of it, the agreement is void.” In the present instance, the District Judge finds that there is no evidence to show that the plaintiff was aware of the object to be attained by this agreement, supposing it to be immoral; and on that ground, in my opinion, the case was rightly decided.

Appeal dismissed.

[On appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.]

Execution of Decree—Appealable Order—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 244 and 588, cls. (j) and (r).

An order for attachment and sale of property in execution of a decree, is an order “of the same nature with” an order made in the course of a suit for attachment of the debtor’s property. The latter order is appealable under s. 588, cl. (r) * of the Code of Civil Procedure. It follows that an order for attachment and sale in execution of a decree is [according to the requirement of s. 588, cl. (j)] “of the same nature with appealable orders made in the course of a suit”; and therefore is appealable under that section.

Orders appealable. * [Sec. 588 :— An appeal shall lie from the following orders under this Code and from no other such orders :—

(i) orders under section 244, as to questions relating to the execution of decrees, of the same nature with appealable orders made in the course of a suit ; *

(r) orders under section 479, 480, 481, 485, 492, 493, 496, 503 ;

APPEAL from a decree of the High Court (1st April 1879, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 51), dismissing an appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad (31st August 1878).

The question arising on this appeal was, whether, under the Code of Civil Procedure, s. 588, an appeal would lie from an order of a Court disallowing objections made to the execution of a decree, and in effect granting an application for the attachment and sale of certain property belonging to the judgment-debtor. The decree had been obtained by the father of the present respondent in 1856, in the Court of the Judge of Ghazipore, for the possession, with mesne profits, of lands then situate in that district. Having been modified by the High Court of the North-Western Provinces, the decree was affirmed on appeal to Her Majesty's Council in 1867. While the appeal was pending, the Government of India, in January 1867, issued an order, whereby the boundary between the districts of Shahabad and of Ghazipore was altered, and the lands in suit were thenceforth within the Shahabad district.

[29] In consequence of this change, the execution record was, on the 11th November 1867, sent by the Court of the Principal Sadr Amin of Ghazipore, where it was then pending, to the Court of the District Judge of Shahabad, by whom it was transferred to the Subordinate Judge of the same district. On an application to have the amount of mesne profits ascertained, the Subordinate Judge found upwards of eleven lakhs of Rupees to be due; and after proceedings taken by the judgment-debtors in order to get the case back to Ghazipore, the record was, by order of the High Court of the North-Western Provinces, finally taken away from that jurisdiction, and remained with the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad. In this Court the decree-holder, on the 26th June 1878, applied for execution of his decree for mesne profits against certain lands of the judgment-debtors situate in the Shahabad district, by sale of their right, title, and interest therein. The judgment-debtors filed objections, to the effect that the execution-proceedings had been carried on in a Court not having jurisdiction, and that the application was barred by limitation under art. 179^a of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). On the 31st August 1878, an order was made by the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, disallowing these objections, referring, on the question of jurisdiction, to Kallee Dos Neogy v. Huronath Chowdhry (3 W. R., Civ. Rul., 5).

Against this order the judgment-debtors appealed to the High Court, which held, that no appeal against that order would lie under s. 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and therefore did not dispose of the questions of limitation and jurisdiction forming the grounds of appeal. The Judgment is reported in the Indian Law Reports, 5 Calcutta Series, p. 51.

[30] On the question, whether the proceeding of 31st August 1878 was an appealable order, it was contended that it fell within the language of s. 588, cl. (j) of the Code of Civil Procedure. The dispute of jurisdiction was cognizable also, according to the general principle mentioned in the judgment in Alluf Hossein v. Grish Chunder Roy (15 W. R., Civ. Rul., 556).

For the respondent it was argued, that the decision of the Subordinate Judge only disallowed objections, and was not a general order for attachment and sale. But even if dealt with as equivalent to an order for attachment and sale, it was an order upon a question relating to the execution of a decree under s. 244^a of the Code of Civil Procedure; but was not "of the same nature with" any of the appealable orders enumerated in s. 588.

SIR B. PEACOCK having stated that their Lordships held the order to be appealable within the meaning of s. 588, counsel for the appellants were heard on the grounds of appeal taken in the High Court, viz., limitation, and the alleged absence of jurisdiction. Reference was made to Rajeeb Ram Doss v. Mahomed Haseem (6 W. R., Mis., 51).

On this part of the case the respondent's counsel were not called upon.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir B. Peacock.—The appeal to the High Court in this case was from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad made upon an application for execution of a decree, praying that an attachment and sale of the judgment-debtors' property specified in the application should be held for the purpose of satisfying the decree. A question arose as to whether the Statute of Limitation was a bar to that application, and the Subordinate Judge held, that the debtors' plea of limitation should be disallowed with costs. He did not go on to say that the attachment be issued; but their Lordships treat the order as substantially an order that the debtors' plea of limitation should [31] be disallowed, and that the application should be granted. The case was appealed to the High Court, and that Court dismissed the appeal upon the ground that the order was not an appealable order within the meaning of the 588th section of Act X of 1877. The section says:—"An appeal shall lie from the following orders under this Code, and from no other such orders"; and then a number of orders are enumerated, and amongst them are the orders specified in cls. (j) and (r). Clause (j) is:—"Orders under s. 244 as to questions relating to the execution of decrees of the same nature with appealable orders made in the course of the suit"; and one of the orders in cl. (r) is an order under s. 485, by which property of the defendant sufficient to satisfy any decree which may be passed in the suit may, under certain circumstances, be attached in the course of a suit, and need not, according to the provisions of s. 490, be re-attached in execution of such decree. The question then is, whether an order for attachment and sale in execution of a decree is an order "of the same nature" as an order made in the course of a suit for attachment of the debtor's property. Their Lordships think that the nature of the order in both cases is an order for attachment of property, and that an order for attachment of property in execution of a decree is an order of the same nature as an order for attachment of property in the course of the suit. Indeed, the only appealable order in the course of a suit at all resembling an order for attachment of property in execution of a decree, is an order under s. 485. Their Lordships, therefore, are of opinion that, taking the order under appeal as substantially an order for attachment and sale of the property in execution of the decree, it was an appealable order within s. 588. The learned Judges of the High Court have not very clearly stated their reasons, but the learned Chief Justice, Sir RICHARD GARTH, does state that the order in this case was substantially, and in fact, an order to grant an application for attachment and sale; and in that remark their Lordships concur. They, therefore, think that the order of the High Court ought to be reversed, so far as it says that the order is not appealable.

[The rest of the judgment is not material for the purposes of [32] this report. In the result the judgment of the High Court was affirmed and the appeal dismissed.]

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Religious Endowments—Pleading—Form of suit— Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 30, 539—Reg. XIX of 1810—Act XX of 1863.

In a suit by two of the worshippers at a certain mosque, instituted after having obtained the sanction of the Advocate-General under s. 539† of the Civil Procedure Code, against the mutawalli of the mosque, and two other persons to whom the mutawalli had mortgaged part of the endowed property to secure the repayment of a loan, it appeared that one of the mortgagees had sold some of the wuqf property in execution of a decree which he had obtained upon his mortgage, and the property had been purchased by the other mortgagee. The plaintiffs prayed, that the property purchased might be declared to be wuqf; that the sale in execution might be declared to be invalid; that a mutawalli might be appointed by the Court; and that the costs of doing the acts of the wuqf might be defrayed from the profits of the property belonging to the endowment.

Held, that so far as regarded that portion of the prayer as fell within the provisions of s. 539 of the Code, the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue, as they were not “persons having a direct interest in the trust” within the meaning of the section, and that the suit should have been instituted under s. 14‡ of Act XX of 1863 after sanction obtained under s. 18.‡

thereof, or the trusts relating thereto, may, without joining as plaintiff any of the other persons interested therein, sue before the Civil Court, the Trustee, Manager, or Superintendent of such Mosque, Temple, or religious establishment, or the Member of any Committee appointed under this Act, for any misfeasance, breach of trust, or neglect of duty, committed by such Trustee, Manager, Superintendent, or Member of such Committee, in respect of the Trusts vested in, or confided to, them respectively, and the Civil [33] Held also, that though the plaintiffs might possibly have obtained leave to sue under s. 30* of the Code on behalf of themselves and the other persons attending the mosque, they not having obtained such leave, were not entitled to institute the suit for the purpose of obtaining the relief asked for in the other prayers of the plaint.

The words "trustee, manager or superintendent of a mosque," &c., mentioned in Act XX of 1863, mean the trustee, manager or superintendent of a mosque, &c., to which the provisions of the Act are applicable, not the trustee, &c., of any mosque. And such persons are those to whom the provisions of Reg. XIX of 1810 were applicable.

The mosques, &c., to which the provisions of that Regulation were applicable, were mosques for the support of which endowments had been granted in land by the Government of the country or by individuals, and the mosques, &c., to which the provisions of Act XX of 1863 apply are, not any mosques, &c., but any mosques for the support of which endowments in land have been made by the Government or private individuals.

IN this case it appeared, that one Sheikh Meheroolah executed a deed of wuqf on the 8th Aghran 1241, or 22nd November 1834; and under it he made an endowment of certain land, directing that the profits thereof should be appropriated to the maintenance of a mosque, and for guests, travellers, and indigent persons. The defendant No. 1 was appointed mutawalli under this deed of wuqf. The plaintiffs in this suit were, as they stated in the 10th paragraph of their plaint, followers of the Mussulman religion, living in the village of Gopalpore, in which the mosque was situated. They said, that they had, therefore, a right and interest in protecting the masjid. They then alleged that the defendant No. 1, the mutawalli, took a loan of Rs. 575 from the defendant No. 2, on the 31st Bysack 1277 (13th May 1870), mortgaging to him the property set out in the schedule annexed to the plaint, which was part of the endowed property; and that he also took a loan of Rs. 650 from the defendant No. 3, on the 20th Cheyet 1278 (1st April 1872), and concluded an izara-settlement with the defendant No. 3. The plaint then stated that the defendant No. 2 brought a suit upon the mortgage-bond, obtained a decree, took out execution, and brought to sale the property which was the subject of the mortgage-bond, whereupon the defendant No. 3 purchased this property. They then [34] asked in their plaint—first, that the property mentioned in the schedule to the plaint might be declared to be wuqf property; secondly, that the auction-purchase of the property No. 2, on the 8th January 1878, made by the defendant No. 3, and the izara and mortgage in favour of the defendant No. 3, might be declared invalid; thirdly, that a competent person might be appointed by the Court as mutawalli for performing the work connected with the wuqf.

They did not ask that the present mutawalli might be removed, but the Court considered that it was intended to ask for his removal, as otherwise another mutawalli could not be appointed in his place. Fourthly they asked, that an order might be passed to the effect that the costs of doing the acts of the wuqf might be defrayed from the profits of the property mentioned in the schedule annexed to the plaint.

Court may direct the specific performance of any act by such Trustee, Manager, Superintendent, or Member of a Committee, and may decree damages and costs against such Trustee, Manager, Superintendent or Member of a Committee, and may also direct the removal of such Trustee, Manager, Superintendent, or Member of a Committee.]

* [Sec. 30 :—Where there are numerous parties having the same interest in one suit, one

One party may sue or defend on behalf of all in same interest. or more of such parties may, with the permission of the Court, sue or be sued, or may defend in such suit, on behalf of all parties so interested. But the Court shall in such case give, at the plaintiff's expense, notice of the institution of the suit to all such parties either by personal service or (if from the number of parties or any other cause such service is not reasonably practicable) then by public advertisement, as the Court in each case may direct.]

The plaintiffs had obtained the sanction of the Advocate-General to the institution of the suit under s. 539^{*} of the Civil Procedure Code.

The learned Judge in the Court below dismissed the suit, mainly on the ground that the plaintiffs had no cause of action against the defendants, under the Code.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Munshi Serajul Islam for the Appellants.

Babu Nilmadhub Sen and Babu Rashbehary Ghose for the Respondents.

Prinsep, J. (who, after stating the facts of the case as above, continued): Now, the first and indeed the only question which we have to decide is, whether the plaintiffs were competent to institute and maintain this suit. They seem to have thought that the suit was within the provisions of s. 529 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and they made an application to, and obtained the sanction of, the Advocate-General before instituting their suit. Now, the first observation that occurs to us on this point is, that a considerable portion of the prayer of the suit is clearly [35] outside the provisions of s. 539, and that, in so far as regards so much of the prayer as does not fall within the provisions of this section, for reasons to be given hereafter, the plaintiffs were not entitled to institute this suit. But it appears to us that, even so far as regards that portion of the prayer of the plaint which falls directly within the provisions of s. 539, the plaintiffs are not persons to whom the provisions of that section can be held to be applicable. The section provides, that "in case of any alleged breach of any express or constructive trust created for public charitable purposes, or whenever the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust, the Advocate-General, acting ex-officio, or two or more persons having a direct interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate-General, may institute a suit in the High Court or the District Court, &c." Now, this suit was not instituted by the Advocate-General. It was instituted by two persons who obtained the sanction of the Advocate-General in writing. Then arises the question—Were these two persons "persons having a direct interest in the trust" within the meaning of this section. We think that this question must be answered in the negative. The only interest which the plaintiffs allege in their plaint is, that they are followers of the Moslem religion; that they live in the village of Gopalporo; and that they had been in the habit of attending prayers in the mosque. We think that, assuming the facts here stated to be correct, they do not constitute a direct interest in the trust. It is scarcely necessary to support this by argument, but we may refer to s. 15 of Act XX of 1863 (The Religious Endowments Act), in which a clear distinction is drawn between persons having a direct or "immediate interest," and persons "having a right of attendance, or having been in the habit of attending, at the performance of the worship or service of any mosque, temple," and so forth. It is quite clear, that, according to the intention of the Legislature as shown in this section, persons who are in the habit of attending prayers at a Mahomedan mosque are not persons who have a direct interest in the endowment. Then arises the question whether the provisions of The Religious [36] Endowments Act XX of 1863, are applicable to the present case. This is a question of some nicety, but we think that if this Act be read with the old Regulation to which it refers, any difficulty that may at first sight suggest itself will disappear. Section 18* of the Act enacts, that no suit shall be entertained under this Act without a preliminary application being first made to the Court for leave to institute such suit. The word 'Court,' according to the definition, means the principal Court of original civil jurisdiction in the district; and it is admitted that no preliminary application was made to the District Judge in the present case for leave to institute this suit. Then what are the suits which may be instituted under the Act? Section 14 provides, that any person or persons interested in any mosque, temple, or religious establishment, &c., may, without joining as plaintiff any of the other persons interested therein, sue before the Civil Court the trustee, manager, &c., &c., for any misfeasance, breach of trust, or neglect of duty, &c., and the Civil Court may direct the specific performance of any act by such trustee, manager, and so forth, and may also direct the removal of such trustee, manager, &c. Now, the only part of the prayer of this plaint which falls within the purview of this section, is so much of it as must be construed to be a request that the defendant No. 1 be removed from his office of mutawalli, and so much of the fourth prayer as asks that the expenses of performing the acts of the wuqf be defrayed from the profits of the properties mentioned in the schedule annexed to the plaint. For the present we reserve consideration of the other prayers of the plaint. Now, the words of s. 14 are very general in their terms, and the question arises, what is meant by the trustee, manager, or superintendent of a mosque mentioned in s. 14; does it mean the trustee, manager, or superintendent of any mosque, or the trustee, manager, or superintendent of a mosque to which the provisions of Act XX of 1863 are applicable. We think the latter construction is the proper one. Then what are the mosques to which the provisions of Act XX of 1863 are applicable? In order to answer this question, we must examine, not only the Act itself, but the old Regulation, XIX of 1810. The preamble to [37] this Regulation is as follows:—"Whereas considerable endowments have been granted in land by the preceding Governments of this country and by individuals for the support of mosques, Hindu temples, colleges, and for other pious and beneficial purposes; and whereas there are grounds to suppose that the produce of such lands is in many instances appropriated contrary to the intentions of the donors, to the personal use of the individuals in immediate charge and possession of such endowments; and whereas it is an important duty of every Government to provide that all such endowments be applied according to the real intent and will of the grantor," &c. Now, it is clear from this preamble, that the mosques with which the Regulation is concerned, are mosques for the support of which endowments have been granted in land by preceding Governments of this country and by individuals. The Regulation then goes on to vest, by s. 2, the general superintendence of all these lands in the Board of Revenue. Section 3 declares it to be the duty of the Board of Revenue to take care that all endowments made for the maintenance of establishments of the above description be duly appropriated to the

* [Sec. 18 :—No suit shall be entertained under this Act without a preliminary application being first made to the Court for leave to institute such suit. In calculating the costs at the termination of the suit, the stamp duty on the preliminary application shall be estimated, and shall be added to the costs of the suit. If the Court shall be of opinion that the suit has been for the benefit of the trust, and that no party to the suit purpose for which they were destined by the Government or the individuals by whom such endowments were granted. Sections 4, 5, and 6 contain provisions as to the mode in which this duty is to be performed. Section 8 enacts that, in order to enable the Board of Revenue to carry into effect the duties entrusted to them by this Regulation, local agents shall be appointed subject to the authority and control of the Board. Section 9 declares the Collectors of districts to be ex-officio agents. Section 10 makes it the duty of these local agents to obtain full information, from the public records and by personal enquiries, respecting all endowments. Section 11 makes it the duty of these agents further to ascertain and report the names, together with other particulars, of the present trustees, managers, or superintendents of the several institutions, foundations, or establishments described in the Regulation, whether under the designation of mutawalli or any other, and by whom and under what authority appointed or elected. Section 12 directs the local agents to report to the respective Boards all vacancies or casualties which may occur, with full information as to the [38] pretensions of claimants. Section 13 directs that, in those cases in which the nomination to the office of trustee, manager, or superintendent rests with Government or a public officer, the agents are to recommend fit persons to fill up the vacancies. Section 14 directs the Board of Revenue, on receipt of the report and information required by the above section, to appoint the person or persons nominated for their approval, or make such other provision for the trust, superintendence, and management as to the Board may seem proper. Now it is notorious, that, after the passing of that Regulation, the Collectors of districts furnished to the Board of Revenue information regarding some of those Hindu and Mahomedan endowments with which the Regulation was concerned; and, in some instances, the Board of Revenue took over the management of the land which formed the subject of the endowment; but in the large majority of instances, the Board of Revenue did not take charge of the land which had been granted by individuals for the support of mosques, Hindu temples, &c. Nearly half a century afterwards, the Government, for reasons to which it is unnecessary to advert here, came to the conclusion that they ought to divest themselves of the management of the lands which they had taken under their charge in accordance with the provisions of that Regulation; and it was to effectuate this purpose that Act XX of 1863 was passed by the Legislature. The preamble to this Act is as follows:— "Whereas it is expedient to relieve the Board of Revenue, and the Local Agents in the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal and the Presidency of Fort Saint George, from the duties imposed on them by Reg. XIX of 1810 of the Bengal Code, so far as those duties embrace the superintendence of lands granted for the support of mosques or Hindu temples, and for other religious uses; the appropriation of endowments made for the maintenance of such religious establishments: the repair and preservation of buildings connected therewith, &c., &c. Then s. 3 of the Act deals with the case of every mosque, temple, or other religious establishment to which the provisions of either of the Regulations specified in s. 1 are applicable, and the nomination of the trustee, manager, or superintendent whereof at [39] the time of the passing of the Act is vested in, or may be exercised by, the Government. If this section is read with the sections of the Regulation to which I have already referred, it is perfectly clear that the trustee, manager, or superintendent mentioned in Act XX of 1863 is the trustee, manager, or superintendent of those mosques to which the provisions of Reg. XIX of 1810 were applicable; and, as I have already pointed out, it is clear from the preamble to that Regulation that the mosques to which the provisions of the Regulation are applicable, are mosques for the support of which endowments had been granted in land by the Government of the country or by individuals. The question then arises—Is the mosque with which we are now concerned a mosque for the support of which an endowment in land has been granted by Government or by individuals? and when we refer to the wuqfnamah at page 8 of the paper-book, it is impossible to answer that question otherwise than in the affirmative. But it may be contended that the provisions of Act XX of 1863 ought to be limited merely to those mosques, Hindu temples, &c., the land granted for the endowment of which had actually been taken under the management of the Government. Returning to s. 3, I have already pointed out that the class of cases to which this section is applicable, is that class of cases in which the trustee, manager or superintendent was appointed by Government; and as to this class of cases, the Local Government was to make special provision as provided in the Act. These special provisions are found in ss. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12; and briefly they are to this effect, that the Government should appoint, once for all, one or more committees in every division or district, and should transfer to those committees all the land or other property which previously had been under the management of the Revenue officers of Government. Then s. 4 deals with another class of cases, the class of cases in which the trustee, manager, or superintendent was not appointed by Government, nor was the appointment subject to the confirmation by Government. As to this class of cases, the provisions applicable are contained in ss. 4, 5, and 6 of the Act. We have already referred to the preamble. Section 1 is merely a [40] repealing section. Section 2 contains general definitions. Section 3 and ss. 7 to 12 inclusive are concerned with that class of cases in which the trustee, manager, or superintendent was appointed by Government. Sections 4, 5, and 6 are concerned with another class of cases in which the trustee, manager, or superintendent was not appointed by Government. Then comes s. 13, which enacts:—"It shall be the duty of every trustee, manager, and superintendent of a mosque, temple, or religious establishment to which the provisions of this Act shall apply, to keep regular accounts," and so forth. Now, who are the trustees, managers, or superintendents of religious establishments to whom the provisions of this Act apply? It appears to us that if we read the language of ss. 3 and 4, it is impossible to come to any other conclusion than that the trustee, manager, or superintendent to whom the provisions of the Act apply is a trustee, manager, or superintendent of a mosque, temple, or other religious establishment to which the provisions of Reg. XIX of 1810 apply; and, as I have already pointed out, the mosque, temple, or other religious establishment to which the provision of Reg. XIX of 1810 applies, is a mosque, temple, or other religious establishment for the support of which endowments have been granted in land by the Government or by individuals. The conclusion, then, to which we are led is, that the same construction must be put upon ss. 13 and 14 of the Act, and that the mosque, temple, or religious establishment there mentioned is, not any mosque, temple, or religious establishment whatever, but any mosque, temple, or religious establishment for the support of which endowments in land have been made by the Government or private individuals. So far then as concerns that portion of the prayer of the plaint which falls within the provisions of s. 11 of Act XX of 1863, we think that this suit could not have been instituted without obtaining the sanction required by s. 18 of the Act.

We now come to deal with the other prayers in the plaint which do not fall within the provisions of s. 14 of the Religious Endowments Act. These prayers are, that the property mentioned in the schedule to the plaint may be declared to be wuqf; that the mortgage and the izara, and the sale under the [41] mortgage, may be set aside, and that a competent person may be appointed by the Court as mutawalli. Now, so far as regards those prayers, we think that the plaintiffs were not authorized to institute this suit merely by reason of their having that interest which is set out in para. 10 in the plaint,—that is, an interest created by their being followers of the Moslem religion, living in the vicinity of the mosque, and being in the habit of attending the musjid. That interest is common to them with a large number of other persons—common to them with, we will not say, all the Mahomedan population of the country, but certainly with all the Mahomedan residents in the vicinity; and we think that this is a case which falls within the provisions of s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section enacts, that “where there are numerous parties having the same interest in one suit, one or more of such parties may, with the permission of the Court, sue, or be sued, or may defend in such suit, on behalf of all parties so interested.” It may be quite possible that if these plaintiffs had applied to the Court under the provisions of s. 30, they would have obtained permission to institute this suit; but not having obtained that permission, they certainly were not entitled to institute the suit; and, under these circumstances, we think that the ground of objection taken by the defendants in the second paragraph of their written statement, and which forms the subject of the second issue, was a good objection; and that this suit was properly dismissed by the District Judge. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

Appeal dismissed.

PRESENT:

SIR B. PEACOCK, SIR M. E. SMITH, SIR R. COUCH, AND SIR A. HOBHOUSE.

versus

Shaikh Mahomed Lal and others.....Defendants.

[On appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.]

Non-joinder of a necessary party—Alienation of debuttur lands—Trust for religious purposes.

The representatives of three out of four Hindus, who were joint sebaits, managing debuttur property, sued to have an alienation, made by the fourth sebit alone, set aside. They did not make the latter a party to the suit; nor did the plaintiffs ask the assistance of the Court to make him one, under s. 73* of Act VIII of 1859.

Held, that he was a necessary party. It was not enough that he was a member of the body of sebaits; and although indirectly he might have gained advantage from the suit brought by the other sebaits, this did not suffice to connect him with the suit as a party to it. No ground of making an exception to the general rule was presented.

APPEAL from a decree of a Divisional Bench of the High Court (18th November 1878), in part affirming, and in part reversing, a decree of the Judge of the District of East Burdwan (8th September 1876), and thereby dismissing the suit.

This suit was brought by the representatives of three out of four members of a Hindu family who were joint sebaits, holding property which had been dedicated for debseba. The object of the suit was to set aside an alienation made by the fourth sebit, under which the defendants, the present respondents, claimed to hold the property. The ground of the suit was, that the property, a mouza named Keshabpur, in East Burdwan, was trust property, to be held in trust for the established worship of certain deities, and was debuttur.

The fourth sebit had not joined in the suit as plaintiff, nor had he been made a defendant.

The Court of First Instance decreed in favour of the plaintiffs for part of the land claimed. On appeal, the High Court [43] dismissed the whole claim, on the ground that the fourth sebit, under whom the defendants claimed, was not a party to the suit; and also on the ground of limitation.

In the year 1813 (30th Sraban 1220, Bengali style), five brothers, surnamed Dutt, viz., Manikram Sambhuram, Bissonath, Kashinath, and Gopinath, being a joint family, executed an agreement setting apart joint property for debseba in their family-house, and also at Sri Brindaban. First a portion, and afterwards, as it was stated, the whole of mouza Keshabpur was included in this trust.

Down to 1849, when Manikram died, he continued to be sole sebit. Sambhuram, Gopinath, and Kashinath had died before him. Manikram was succeeded in the office of sebit by his widow, Shokhimoni, during whose management proceedings were taken by some of the family to obtain a declaration of the trust. Gopinath's issue had died. Sambhuram had left a son, Brojonath; and Kashinath had left a son, Baikantnath; who afterwards made the alienation, giving rise to the present suit. The surviving brother, Bissonath, died in 1845, leaving his son Harinath, the father of the appellant in the present suit, Rajendronath Dutt.

The proceedings commenced in the time of Shokhimoni, widow of Manikram, resulted in an appeal to Her Majesty in Council; and in 1871, it was determined—see Juggutmohini Dossee v. Mussumat Sokheemonee Dossee (14 Moore's I. A., 289)—that the lands mentioned in the schedule to the plaint in the suit on that appeal, were dedicated to the religious purposes specified in two deeds of endowment, dated in 1813, and in 1820, and executed by the five brothers abovementioned. On the 23rd August 1873, the parties to that suit registered a deed of settlement for the management of the trust, by which it was agreed that the office of sebaite should be held by the representatives of the four surviving lines of descent (that of Gopinath being extinct) in equal shares. Baikantnath, the son of Kashinath, was thus entitled to a fourth share, and was sebaite with three others. This deed stated that eleven annas of Keshabpur had been included in the arpanamas, or original [44] endowments, and that the rest of the mouza had been afterwards purchased out of proceeds of sales of debuttur property.

Meantime, however, in 1871 (26th Falgun 1275 B. S.), Baikantnath had executed a document purporting to convey to his sister's son, Anand Gopal, the mouza Keshabpur, holding himself entitled to it under a family partition. Anand Gopal then conveyed it to the defendants.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon appeared for the Appellants.

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. J. D. Mayne for the Respondents.

For the appellants it was argued, that the suit had been wrongly dismissed. The property alienated by Baikantnath had remained subject to the trust and no title could have been obtained free from the trust, by those who had taken Keshabpur pendente lite. Metcalfe v. Pulvertoft (2 V. & B., 200) was cited.

For the respondents it was submitted, that this suit could not be maintained in the absence of Baikantnath Dutt, who was a necessary party; see Rajaram Tewari v. Lachman Prasad (1 B. L. R., A. J., 118) and Gokool Pershad v. Etwaree Mahto (20 W. R., 138).

Sir R. Couch.—The suit in this appeal was brought by certain persons to recover a mouza called Keshabpur; and the case stated in the plaint is, that the predecessors of the plaintiffs, being five brothers, had dedicated certain lands to family idols; that Manikram Dutt, the eldest of the brothers, being the sebaite, was managing the seba of the idols, out of the proceeds of the consecrated properties and was superintending the debuttur properties; and that, after the death of two of the brothers, he acted improperly with reference to the debuttur properties, and apportioned out of them a lot called Pilkundi as the share of Gopinath Dutt, one of the brothers, and the Mehul Keshabpur, the subject of the present suit, to Baikantnath Dutt, the son of Kashinath Dutt deceased, another of them. The plaintiffs sue for possession of the whole as debuttur.

[45] The property which had been so dedicated was the subject of a suit which was commenced in 1857, and ultimately came by appeal before this Board. The nature of the suit is stated in the judgment which was then delivered. The plaint in it is set forth in the record in this suit. It appears to have been brought by Harmath Dutt, the son of one of the five brothers, against all the other members of the family. Amongst them was Baikantnath Dutt, who is said in the present plaint to have had Keshabpur apportioned to him. The judgment (14 Moore's I. A., 299) states, that the suit was for possession, but not for possession in the ordinary character of proprietor of lands; that the plaintiff made title to the possession on the ground that the lands had been dedicated to the religious service of the family idols by virtue of two instruments of dedication in the years 1813 and 1820, which, still at the time of the suit, impressed on the lands a trust which the plaintiff by the suit sought to have declared. He also asked to be appointed sebaite or manager of the lands so dedicated.

It appears from the judgment that, amongst other matters of defence which were set up by the defendants, was a deed of partition, which was said to have been a deed by which a different arrangement was made of the family property. Certain other property was devoted to the family idols, and the property originally dedicated was divided between the members of the family. Their Lordships, in that case, considered that this was not a genuine deed. They said with regard to it: "The second deed, however, does afford ground for suspicion. It makes no reference whatever to the first deed; it professes to be the ordinary partition of a, till then, joint family property. It appoints as a sebaite one whom no prudent person would appoint a trustee—one an actual insolvent. Such an appointment, independently of its obvious impropriety, would be little likely to be made by a Hindu family having several and more competent members, from the fear of the scrutiny to which it might lead if the creditors of the sebaite traced the property to his possession. Again, as a dedication in fact was to be defeated by it, some difficulty on this ground alone would present itself to the minds of those who might meditate on the [46] change which the deed seeks to effect. All comparison, therefore, supports the deed prior in time, which priority alone, in a balanced state, would establish the first instrument:" and they proceeded to say, "A decision against the plaintiff generally in this suit would be, in substance, deciding against a trust prima facie well established on evidence of a subsequent deed of revocation, not only not proved, but on every examination of it discredited." Their Lordships in the result declared, "that the lands specified in the schedule to the plaint,"—which included the Mouza Keshabpur, and also the lot Pilkhundi,— "were and continue dedicated, under the instruments of dedication of 1813, and 1820, to the religious uses specified in those instruments of endowment." And they added a declaration, that the decree was to be without prejudice to any further suit or proceedings, for the enforcement of the religious trusts declared on the appointment of a proper sebaite.

A question has arisen as to whether the whole of Mouza Keshabpur was dedicated. In the deed of dedication only eleven annas were mentioned. Subsequently, five annas seem to have been purchased by Manikram, the sebaite, and it would rather appear to have been assumed that the whole sixteen annas had become subject to the dedication. In the view which their Lordships now take of the case, it is unnecessary to determine whether this judgment must be considered as a binding decision upon the parties as to the dedication of the entire sixteen annas, or only of the eleven. What was contemplated was, that the property being shown to be debuttur property and dedicated to family idols, a proper sebaite should be appointed, who might bring a suit, or take other proceedings, to have the trusts so declared enforced, and so this declaration was added.

This judgment was delivered in 1871. The parties appear not to have done anything immediately; but, on the 22nd of August 1873, they professed to appoint the sebaite. They executed what they call a deed of settlement for management of the seba of the gods, by which, after reciting that Gopinath Dutt had died without any heir, and that as heirs of the remaining four brothers they each held a four-anna share, they say:—"We do hereby covenant, that we, being in possession [47] as sebaits of the properties mentioned in the schedules of the two deeds of endowment aforesaid, and besides [the properties mentioned in] the arpan-namas of the properties acquired out of the proceeds of the debuttur properties and of the properties which are used to meet the expenses of the debseba, and which are embodied in the schedule of the plaint of the former suit, No. 6, and, in addition to these, of those properties which are debuttur for the expenses of the debseba,— the whole of these being entered in the schedule below,— will manage the duties connected with the seba of the Devas, according to fixed arrangement. " They then make a provision for what is to be done with the different moneys, and give particular directions with regard to the appointment of persons to make collections. The result is, that all the members of the family, including Baikantnath, all the persons who had an interest in the property, or would have had an interest in it if there had been no dedication to the idols, are made *sebait*s. The trust is mixed up with the private interest, and there remains outside no person who would have an interest or duty to see that the trusts were properly executed. All the persons interested are themselves made trustees and managers for the execution of the trusts. That certainly does not seem to have been the kind of appointment which was contemplated by their Lordships.

The objection was taken by the defendants in the present suit that Baikantnath, who, by this deed of August 1873, was appointed one of the *sebait*s, and took a fourth share of the property as sebait, is not a party to it. The defendants say, he ought to have been joined as a plaintiff, or, if he would not become a plaintiff, he should have been made a defendant. The plaintiffs say, that he would not consent to become a plaintiff with them. If he would not consent to that, they might have made him a defendant. The objection being taken in the first Court, the Judge overruled it. He does not appear to have said much on the subject, but he held that it was not necessary that Baikantnath should be a party. The defendants appealed from that judgment, and in their grounds of appeal they distinctly take the objection. The first is:—" For that [48] the Court below ought to have held that there has been no proper appointment of the plaintiffs as *sebait*s, and that in any event the present suit could not be successfully maintained by the plaintiffs on the record in the absence of Baikantnath." The learned Judge who delivered the judgment of the High Court says with respect to this objection:—" I think that Baikantnath Dutt should certainly be a party to this case. The suit is to do away with a sale effected by him, and for which he received full value of the property in suit. Full justice could scarcely be done without having him before the Court in his personal capacity. The Judge below remarks that Baikantnath is substantially a co-plaintiff, because he is a member of the body of the *sebait*s; but he ought to be on the record substantially as a defendant in his personal capacity, and answerable for the costs of the proceedings arising out of his alleged misconduct. As it is, he has been allowed to make away with endowed property, appropriate the value of it, and then to be a substantial, but unseen, co-plaintiff in recovering it from the purchaser, to whom, however, the lower Court finds that it can award no compensation, because he should get it, if at all, from the vendor in his private capacity, and not from the plaintiffs, who sue as *sebait*s." The judgment refers to many of the substantial reasons why Baikantnath should have been a party to the suit. Their Lordships will mention presently the transactions which are alluded to. It was evidently the opinion of the High Court that he ought to have been made a party to the suit. The Judges appear to have thought that he might be considered to be a plaintiff, because he was a member of the body of the *sebait*s; but although he might indirectly gain benefit from the suit, the fact that the other *sebait*s were suing did not make him also a plaintiff. They do not profess to sue on his behalf. He really was not a party to the suit at all; and no decree could be made in it which would bind him. Whatever might be necessary in order to do complete justice between the parties, so far as it would affect Baikantnath, could not be done. It would appear that the Judges of the High Court intended to decide the case in favour of the defendants upon this objection as well as upon the [49] bar of limitation. They said:—"we are of opinion, therefore, that under the circumstances of the case, and regard being had to the sort of debuttur which is in question, and to the fact that the family generally were parties to the division of the debuttur property, Baikantnath Dutt should have been personally a party to the suit; and that if the plaintiffs be entitled to recover the property from the defendants, appellants, they should be required to reimburse them the purchase-money, and that Baikantnath should have been saddled with all the costs. And the same consideration would induce us to refuse any decree for mesne profits." They then considered the question of the law of limitation, and held that the defendants were bona fide purchasers, and were, therefore, protected by it.

Under those circumstances, the respondents say, in support of the decision of the High Court, and in answer to the present appeal, that the non-joinder of Baikantnath is not an objection of form only,—that the Court ought, in a suit of this kind, to have him before it, so as to be able to bind him and to do complete justice. The appellants have not, on any occasion, sought the assistance of the Court, as they might have done under s. 73 of Act VIII of 1859, to make him a party to the suit. It was not the province either of the High Court or the District Judge to force that course upon them. The objection was clearly taken; and they, from motives of their own, deliberately abstained from making him a party to the suit. It is certainly not a case in which the Court should make an exception to the general rule which would require him to be a party.

That motives for keeping Baikantnath out of the suit existed may be seen from the nature of the previous transactions. He is said in the plaint to have been put in possession of Keshabpur by Manikram, who was at that time the sebaite; but it would seem, from the case made in the former suit, that though the deed of partition was discredited in the former appeal, it was under colour of some deed of partition executed between the members of the family that Baikantnath obtained the possession of Keshabpur as early as 1841, and so through the act of the very persons who are plaintiffs in the present [50] suit. Having thus obtained possession, he subsequently made a conveyance to Anand Gopal, his nephew, on the 17th of September 1861. Whether this conveyance was only a benami transaction, and Baikantnath continued to be still the owner of the property, or whether, which is possible, Baikantnath sold it for a sum much under its value, as an advancement to or in order to benefit his nephew, is not clear; nor is it necessary now to say which was the real nature of the transaction. There is evidence that Anand Gopal exercised acts of ownership; that he made leases of and received rent for some portions of the property, and that he was apparently the owner of it. Being apparently the owner, he, on the 8th of March 1869, sold a moiety of it to some of the defendants for Rs. 5,200 and the other moiety to the other defendants, on the 15th of July 1871, for Rs. 6,000. It is clear, and is not disputed, that these prices represented the full value of the property. The defendants gave the full value, and held the property for some time. Then came the appointment of sebaits of the 22nd of August 1873 of the whole family, including Baikantnath, by virtue of which this suit is brought. Now, the defendants having paid the full value to Anand Gopal, and there being this case with regard to Baikantnath, whose acts could not have been unknown to the plaintiffs when they appointed him joint sebaite, that he had parted with the property, which was debuttur, and, through his conduct in so parting with it, it had come to be sold to the defendants, the plaintiffs, the other members of the family, seek to set aside the transaction—to recover back the property, it is true as debuttur, but under circumstances which raise a considerable suspicion whether the object is to treat it when it is recovered as debuttur, or to have the benefit of it for themselves. The whole transaction seems to be of such a character that, if there is a case in which it is just and proper to give effect to the general rule that all the parties interested in the subject-matter of a suit should be joined in it, this appears to their Lordships to be one.

Under these circumstances, their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the decree of the High Court be affirmed, [51] and the appeal be dismissed; and the appellants will pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

[On appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.]

Limitation applicable to execution of decree in suit instituted before 1st April 1873—Staying sale of attached property—Striking off—Limitation Acts (XIV of 1859, s. 20, and Act IX of 1871, s. 1).

An application for execution of a decree is an application in the suit in which the decree has been obtained. From this, and from the enactment in s. 1 of Act IX of 1871, that nothing contained in s. 2, or in Part II of that Act, shall apply to suits instituted before the 1st April 1873, it follows, that nothing contained in sched. ii of that Act, extended to an application for execution of a decree in a suit instituted before that date. No such application was barred by s. 20 * of Act XIV of 1859, if made within three years from the date of a proceeding within the meaning of that section. Although the execution of a decree may have been actually barred by time at the date of an application made for its execution, yet, if an order for such execution has been regularly made by a competent Court, having jurisdiction to try whether it was barred by time or not, such order, although erroneous, must, if unreversed, be treated as valid.

Where a sale of attached property is stayed by a Court upon the application of the judgment-debtor, on condition of the attachment remaining in force, the subsequent striking off of such application from the file of the Court does not affect the rights of the decree-holder.

APPEAL from a decree of the High Court (6th January 1879) † dismissing an appeal from an order of the Second [32] Subordinate Judge of Mymensing (9th May 1878), whereby an application for the execution of a decree of the year 1851 was rejected.

The appellants held a decree, dated 8th July 1851, obtained by their father against the respondent's father on a bond of the year 1848.

The amount due on the decree, originally Rs. 9,858, had become, by accumulated interest, Rs. 40,873. Of this decree the appellants applied for execution, which was refused on the 22nd September 1877. The present question was, whether or not the decree-holders' rights to proceed in execution had been barred by limitation.

The proceedings taken by the decree-holders between the 8th July 1851 and the 22nd September 1877, are set forth in order in their Lordships' judgment. The order of the 8th October 1871, made by the Subordinate Judge of Mymensing, was, "that the attachment process do issue, fixing the 12th December next." The list of property attached, comprising the right of the judgment-debtor in certain lands, was filed by order of the same Judge on the 3rd December; and on a subsequent day it was ordered that the sale should take place on the 20th January 1875. That sale was stayed by order on petition, dated the 21st January, in which the debt was admitted. Afterwards, on the 25th January 1875, on a petition, in which both parties joined, the execution of the decree was stayed on the terms that the attachment should continue upon the property attached. On the 9th February 1875, at the request of both parties, the Court ordered that the case be struck off its file.

On the 22nd September 1877, the decree-holders made the application for execution out of which this appeal arose. The defence was, that the decree-holders had not, within due time, taken proceedings bona fide for the execution of the decree, and that though certain applications had been made, the period of limitation had elapsed.

The Subordinate Judge held that the execution asked for was barred by limitation. First, because the present application had been made when more than three years had elapsed [53] from the service of notice on this respondent, which was effected on the 10th September 1874. The applicants were not relieved from the bar by the acknowledgment of debt made, as it was ineffectual in regard to a decree. Secondly, because, when the application was made, viz., on the 5th September 1874, the right to execute had been already barred by time; and could not by any application, or order, be revived.

The judgment of the High Court (MORRIS and PRINSEP, JJ.), dismissing an appeal from the above decision, is reported in the Indian Law Rep., 4 Cal., 708.

On this appeal

Mr. J. Graham, Q. C., and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe appeared for the Appellants.

Mr. J. F. Leith, Q. C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne for the Respondent.

For the appellants it was contended, that the Courts had wrongly decided that execution of the decree of 1851 was barred by time. A competent Court had, in 1874, made an order for execution which had not been reversed. The respondent's property had been attached, he obtaining a stay of proceedings on admission of the debt, and on terms that the attachment should continue; whereby the decree had been treated as in force. If it were necessary to look behind the order of the 8th October 1874, it would appear, that the application of the 5th September 1874, on which it was founded, was in substance a continuance of proceedings in execution previously taken by the decree-holders. And the latter was not, as it had been erroneously held to be, an application barred by art. 167 * of sch. ii of Act IX of 1871. It was a 'proceeding' to keep in force a decree, as that term was explained in Maharajah Dheeraj Mahtab Chund v. Bulram Singh, (13 Moore's I. A., 479). The same might be said of the subsequent application for execution made on the 22nd September 1877, both applications falling within the 4th clause, column 3, art. 167 of sch. ii of Act IX of 1871. Gouree Sunkur Tribedee v. Arman Ali Chowdhry (21 W. R., 309), [54] Jamna Das v. Lalitaram (I. L. R., 2 Bom., 294), and Hurrochunder Roy Chowdhry v. Shoorodhonee Debia (9 W. R., 402). The respondent had also made repeated acknowledgments of liability; for instance, in a petition of the 30th November 1871, signed by his agent duly authorized for the purpose; and again in an application for stay of sale made in January 1875.

Description of application.	Period of Limitation.	Time when period begins to run.
For the execution of a decree or order of any Civil Court not provided for by No. 169.	Three years.	The date of the decree or order, or (where there has been an appeal) the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court, or (where there has been a review of judgment) the date of the decision passed on the review, or (where the application next hereinafter mentioned has been made) the date of applying to the Court to enforce, or keep in force, the decree or order, or (where the notice next hereinafter made has been issued) the date of issuing a notice under the Code of Civil Procedure, section two hundred and sixteen, or (where the application is to enforce payment of an instalment which the decree directs to be paid at a specified date) the date so specified.]

To both of which, either s. 4 of Act XIV of 1859, or s. 20* of Act IX of 1871, was applicable. On this point were cited: Prosunno Coomar Roy v. Kasheekant Bhattacharjee (5 W. R., Mis., 31), Chunderkant Mitter v. Ramnarain Dey Sircar (8 W. R., 63), Digamburee Debia v. Sharodapershad Roy (3 W. R., Mis., 27), and Joteeram Doss v. Shaikh Huruf (6 W. R., Mis., 115). With reference to the effect of striking off the file a case in execution, Chumun Lall Chowdhry v. Doman Lall (9 W. R., 205) was cited. Such a proceeding did not render necessary a new application for execution; see Mussamut Zahoorun v. Tayler (10 W. R., 380), Jhooboo Sahoo v. Ramchurn Roy (11 W. R., 517), and Soondur Singh v. Buhooria Alum Bashee Kooer (24 W. R., 37). A new notice under s. 216 of the Code (VIII of 1859), ordered by the Court, gave a new starting point under art. 167 of sch. ii of Act IX of 1871; and the new period ran from the date on which such notice was served on the judgment-debtor, not from the date of issue. The notice now in question having been issued on the 10th September 1874, was served on the respondent on the 23rd idem. Reference was also made to Koonj Beharee Lal v. Girdharee Lall (22 W. R., 484), Moheshchunder Sein v. Mussamut Tarinee (10 W. R., F. B., 27), Norendernarain Singh v. Dwarka Lal Mundur (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 397) and Puddomonee Dossee v. Roy Mothoornath Chowdhry (20 W. R., 133). As to what constituted a bond fide proceeding, Eshanchunder Bose v. Prannath Nag (14 B. L. R., 143) was referred to; and also Booboo Pyaroo Tuhobildarinee v. Syed Nazir Hossein (23 W. R., 183) was referred to.

For the respondent it was contended, that execution of the decree was barred by time when application for execution was [55] made. At the time when the decree of 1851 was passed, there being then no Legislative enactment of limitation for the execution of decrees, by a rule of analogy derived from Reg. III of 1793, a twelve years' bar had been adopted by the Courts, and no order for execution was granted after the expiration of that period: Juggunath Pershad Sircar v. Radhanath Sircar (2 Sel. Rep., (Beng., S. D. A.), 280). Before the expiration of twelve years from the date of the plaintiff's decree, the Limitation Act XIV of 1859, was passed, coming into operation about one year and six months before the decree of 1851 would have expired. The decree-holders had, when the Act came into force, three years within which to make their application for execution; s. 20 of Act XIV of 1859; Delhi and London Bank v. Orchard (L. R., 4 I. A., 135). Then followed the decree-holders' different applications. Through these, the argument went to show, that no attempt to bona fide realize the amount of the decree could be traced. In regard to one of the applications made on 9th February 1863, a petition to restore the case and to realize about Rs. 600, it was contended, that this was so small a part of the decreed amount that it was 'illusory.' The decree-holders had in fact been barred as long ago as 1863, and all their applications since then made had been useless.

SIR B. PEACOCK having pointed out that there was no evidence that the application of 9th February 1863 was 'illusory,' counsel argued that, as a decree, of which the execution was already barred, could not be revived (on which point Mussumat Zahoorun v. Tayler (10 W. R., 380) was cited), this decree could not, by the proceedings taken in 1874, have been rendered capable of being executed. SIR B. PEACOCK observed, that the objection that execution had already in 1874 been barred, if tenable, should have been taken before the making of the order of the 8th October 1874. He also called attention to ss. 1 and 2 of Act IX of 1871.

It was then argued for the respondent, that there had been a complete discontinuance of proceedings before 1871; and that, [56] under Act XIV of 1859, the execution was barred. Reference was made to Bisseshwar Mullick v. Maharajah Mahtab Chunder Bahadoor (10 W. R., F. B., 8).

The appellants' counsel were not called upon to reply.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir B. Peacock. - On the 22nd September 1877, Ishana Debi, the mother and guardian of the appellants, presented a petition to the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, in which she stated that her husband instituted a suit, No. 26 of 1851, against Shama Kant Lahiri Chowdhry, deceased, and obtained a decree against him on the 8th of July in that year; that, after application to execute the decree, her husband died, and that she, as guardian of the minors, being substituted in the place of her husband, revived the decree against the defendant, Shama Kant Lahiri, and after his death against his son, who was the owner and possessor of the property left by him, and that the property of the judgment-debtor was attached; that, after the date of the sale had been fixed, the sale was stayed on the application of the judgment-debtor with the attachment continuing, and the execution case struck off on Monday, the 9th of February 1875. She, therefore, prayed that the execution case might be restored, and that notice being first served on Grija Kant Lahiri Chowdhry, the son and heir of the said Shama Kant, the amount due under the decree might be realized, together with interest for the time of the pendency and the costs of execution by sale of the property under attachment.

The facts stated in the petition were correct, and were reported to be so by the Amla to whom the case was referred for report. The judgment-debtor having been served with notice appeared, and contended, amongst other things, that the application was barred by limitation; that the decree was dated the 8th of July 1851, and that no proceedings had been bona fide taken from that time to keep the decree alive within the period laid down by Acts XIV of 1859 and IX of 1871, and he alleged that the decree-holders, actuated by mala fides, not [57] having realized the money for such a long time, simply with the desire of increasing the interest, were not entitled, according to law and justice, to enforce it.

The dates of the several applications and proceedings to enforce, or keep in force, the decree, are, with one exception, correctly stated in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. They are as follow:—

The date of the decree, 8th July 1851.

First petition of execution, 3rd May 1861.

Notice served, 25th May 1861.

Struck off for default of payment of costs of attachment, 27th June 1861.

Second petition, 9th February 1863.

Struck off for default of payment of costs, 29th August 1863.

Third petition, 19th December 1864.

Debtor's property attached, 6th June 1866

Struck off at request of parties, 19th June 1866.

Fourth petition against Grija Kant as heir of Shama Kant, now deceased, 8th May 1868.

Notice, attachment, sale-proclamation, &c., served, after which debtor applied for two months' time, and execution struck off, 19th August 1868.

Fifth petition, 26th July 1871.

Notice served on the debtor, 7th August 1871.

Attachment caused, 31st August 1871.

Sale-proclamation issued, 26th September 1871.

Debtor applied for two months' time, 30th November 1871.

Struck off for default of payment of sale-fee, 31st January 1872.

Sixth petition, 5th September 1874.

Notice issued, 10th September 1874.

Notice served, 23rd September 1874.

Decree-holders' petition to attach properties, 8th October 1874

Sale-proclamation issued, 27th Aughran 1281.

Petition of judgment-creditors to stop sale for seven days, and sale stopped, 21st January 1875.

Debtor's petition to stop sale for three months, admitting the debt, and attachment to remain, 25th January 1875.

Seventh, or present petition, 22nd September 1877.

Taking those as the correct dates, he held that the application [58] of the 22nd of September 1877 was barred by limitation, not being within three years from the date of the petition of the 5th of September 1874, or from the date of the issuing of the notice on the 10th of September 1874, under s. 216 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act VIII of 1859). In arriving at that conclusion, he treated the case as falling within the Indian Limitation Act, 1871 (Act IX of that year), and he held, amongst other things, that, under cl. 5 in the 3rd column of art. 167 of the second schedule, the date of the issuing, and not the date of the service of the notice, was the date referred to; and that, under cl. 4 of the 3rd column of the same article, the date of the sixth petition, and not the dates of the subsequent order or proceedings under it, was the date from which the period of limitation began to run. Both of those dates, it will be observed, were more than three years before the 22nd September 1877, the date of the petition under consideration.

It was urged on behalf of the petitioner before the Subordinate Judge, that the period of limitation ought to be counted from the 8th of October 1874, the date on which the execution-creditors applied to attach other properties of the judgment-debtor; but he held that that application was not in accordance with the Code of Civil Procedure, and that, consequently, upon the authority of the case of Gourree Sunkur Tribedee v. Arman Ali Chowdhry (21 W. R., 309), it was not an application within the meaning of the 4th clause of art. 167. In that case, however, which is not fully reported, it is to be inferred that no order was made upon the application. In the present case, the Subordinate Judge, upon the petition of the 8th of October 1874, made an order on the same day that the attachment process do issue.

The effect of that order will be presently considered.

The Subordinate Judge also observed that the sixth application was barred by limitation on the 5th of September 1874, as it was more than three years even from the 7th of August 1871, the date on which the notice was actually served, and much more so from the date of the fifth application, which was made on the 26th of July 1871. In support of that view he referred to the case of Bisseshur Mullick v. Maharajah Mahtab Chunder (10 W. R., F. B., 8). That case, however, is very different [59] from the present. There, there was merely the service of a notice on the judgment-debtor after the decree was barred; but no order was made. Here an order for attachment was made by the Subordinate Judge on the 8th October 1874, after notice served on the judgment-debtor on the 23rd of September 1874, to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him. The order was made by a Court having competent jurisdiction to try and determine whether the decree was barred by limitation. No appeal was preferred against it; it was acted upon, and the property sought to be sold under it was attached, and remained under attachment until the application for the sale now under consideration was made.

The Courts below make no reference to the order, or to the attachment under it; and in the list of dates set out by the Subordinate Judge, the order, and the date of it, are wholly omitted. Admitting, for the sake of argument, but only for the sake of argument, that the decree was barred when the sixth application was made,—when the notice was served on the 23rd of September 1874,—and when the petition of the 8th of October 1874 was presented, and that the Subordinate Judge ought to have dismissed the petition upon the ground of limitation, although it was not set up or relied upon by the judgment-debtor, still his order, though erroneous, was valid, not having been reversed.

The applicants appealed to the High Court from the order of the Subordinate Judge rejecting the application now under consideration. The High Court considered it unnecessary to determine the questions arising out of the petition and order of the 8th October 1874, or of any of the proceedings between the 5th of September 1874 and the 22nd of September 1877, inasmuch as they considered and held, that the decree was barred when the petition of the 5th of September 1874 was presented. The Judges said,—"A decree once dead no proceeding by means of an application out of time could revive it." But, as already observed, the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction upon the petition of the 8th October 1874 to determine whether the decree was barred on the 8th October 1871, and he made an order that an attachment should issue. Ho, whether [60] right or wrong, must be considered to have determined that it was not barred. A Judge in a suit upon a cause of action is bound to dismiss the suit, or to decree for the defendant, if it appears that the cause of action is barred by limitation. But if, instead of dismissing the suit, he decrees for the plaintiff, his decree is valid, unless reversed upon appeal; and the defendant cannot, upon an application to execute the decree set up as an answer that the cause of action was barred by limitation. Suppose the order for attachment of the 8th of October 1874 had been affirmed on appeal by the High Court, upon the ground that it was not barred by limitation, it is clear that the Judge of the original Court, when the application for a sale of the property attached under it was made, could not have rejected the application upon the ground that the decree was barred on the 5th of September 1874, or on the 8th of October 1874, when the order was made, upon the ground that the decree was dead when the petition upon which the order was made was presented. Yet the order when affirmed upon appeal could have no greater binding effect than the order itself so long as it remained unreversed. Here the judgment-debtor, so far from appealing against the order for the attachment, acknowledged its validity, and presented the petition of the 25th of January 1875, by which he prayed that the sale under the attachment might be stayed for three months, and the execution case struck off for the present, with the attachment remaining in force. Upon that petition being presented, the creditors agreed to have the execution stayed in accordance with the petition, "the attachment on the property attached continuing." It appears to their Lordships impossible to hold that, if immediately after the expiration of the three months the execution-creditors had made the present application, it could, in the face of the order of the 8th October 1874 and the subsequent proceedings, have been reversed, upon the ground that the decree was dead on the 5th of September 1874, or on the 8th of October 1874. The present application, having been made within three years after the order of the 8th October 1874, is as valid as if it had been made immediately after the expiration of the three months.

[61] Their Lordships think it right to observe that, irrespective of the consideration that the order of the 8th of October 1874 was binding, the decree was not barred on the 22nd September 1877, when the application was made. Both of the Courts below have treated the case as governed by the Indian Limitation Act of 1871, Act IX of that year. But their Lordships are of opinion that the present case does not fall within it. The Act was to come into force on the 1st of July 1871, but it was enacted by s. 1 that nothing contained in s. 2, or in Part II, should apply to suits instituted before the 1st of April 1873. By s. 2, and the 1st schedule referred to therein, Act XIV of 1859 was with one exception, which does not affect this case, repealed. By s. 4 of the Act, which is part of Part II, it was enacted that, subject to the provisions contained in ss. 5 to 26 inclusive, none of which appear to affect this case, every suit instituted, appeal presented, and application made after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the second schedule shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence. One of the applications for which a period of limitation is prescribed by the second schedule, is an application for the execution of a decree or order of a Civil Court not established by Royal Charter. It appears to their Lordships that a thing which applies to an application in a suit applies to the suit, and that an application for the execution of a decree is an application in the suit in which the decree was obtained, and that, as regards suits instituted before the 1st of April 1873, all applications in it are excluded from the operation of the Act. Nothing, therefore, contained in s. 2, or in s. 4, or in sched. ii of the Act extends to an application for the execution of a decree in a suit instituted before the 1st of April 1873. There are many applications mentioned in sched. ii, and for which a period of limitation is prescribed thereby, which are clearly applications in a suit: such for instance, as those described in numbers 166, 167, and 164. There are also many enactments which show that an application for execution of a decree is an application in the suit in which the decree was obtained. For example, by s. 207, Act VIII of 1859, the application may be made by the pleader in the suit. By s. 212 [62] the application is to contain "the number of the suit." By s. 216, if the enforcement of the decree is applied for against an heir or representative of "an original party to the suit," a certain notice is to be given. By s. 15, Act XXIII of 1861, the application is to be entered "in the register of the suit," and so forth.

The reasons which may be presumed to have induced the Legislature not to apply the new rules of limitation to suits commenced before the 1st day of April 1873, are of equal force with regard to applications for the execution of decrees.

It cannot be disputed that, in several cases, such as the case reported in 22 Weekly Reporter, Civ. Rul., 155, applications for the execution of decrees in suits instituted before the 1st of April 1873 have been treated as falling within the provisions of sched. ii of Act XIX of 1871, but the point was assumed rather than decided.

It was scarcely contended in the argument before their Lordships, that the application of the 22nd of September 1877 was barred, if the case is governed by s. 20, Act XIV of 1859. It was within three years from the date of the service of the notice on the 23rd September 1874, which was a proceeding within the meaning of the last-mentioned section; also within three years from the date of the petition of the 8th of October 1874, and of the order of the same date made thereon.

In the face of the applications of the judgment-debtor made from time to time to stay the sale of property which had been attached, it cannot be presumed that the decree was ever satisfied, nor was there any finding of either of the Courts below that the several proceedings were not bona fide for the purpose of enforcing the decree or of keeping it in force. It appears from the return of the Amila of the 12th of November 1877, that the proceedings under the petition of the 8th of October 1874 were struck off on the 9th of February 1875, on account of the decree-holders not paying the costs of issuing the notification; but as the sale was stayed on the 25th of January 1875 for three months upon the application of the judgment-debtor, and upon the condition that the attachment should remain in force, the striking off of the case from the Judge's file [63] on the 9th of February 1875 did not affect the rights of the decree-holders. Their Lordships have alluded to this fact, as reference was made in the argument to the effect of striking off.

For the reasons above stated, their Lordships will humbly recommend Her Majesty to reverse the decrees and orders of both the lower Courts, and to order the respondent to pay the costs of the appellants in those Courts; and further to order that the prayer of the petition of the 31st of Bhadro 1284, corresponding with the 22nd of September 1877, be granted.

The respondent must pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the Appellants: Messrs. Watkins and Lattey.

[I. THE PRINCIPLE—

It has been pointed out by the Judicial Committee itself that the bar is not owing to the applicability of any principle of res judicata, but arises out of the desire to secure finality in litigation.

The question, if the term "res judicata" was intended, as it doubtless was, and was understood by the Full Bench, to refer to a matter decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit, was irrelevant and inapplicable to the case. 6 All. 269 at 274 = 11 I. A. 37. "The matter decided by Mr. Probyn was not decided in a former suit, but in a proceeding of which the application in which the orders reversed by the High Court were made was merely a continuation. It was as binding between the parties and those claiming under them as an interlocutory judgment in a suit is binding upon the parties in every proceeding in that suit, or as a final judgment in a suit is binding upon them in carrying the judgment into execution. The binding force of such a judgment depends not upon sec. 13, Act X of 1877 but upon general principles of law. If it were not binding there would be no end to litigation. 6 All., 269 at 274.

The doctrine rests on the ground that the judgment-debtor, when called on to dispute if he wished or if he could, a certain proposition of right and consequential demand of relief or action by the judgment-creditor, had either failed in his contention to the contrary or at any rate allowed judgment to go by default:—11 Bom., 537. See also (1907) U. B. R. (1907) 1st Qr., C. P. C., sec. 13 : 14 Bur., L. R. 35.

II. ORDERS IN PROCEEDINGS IN EXECUTION ARE BINDING SO AS TO BAR SIMILAR APPLICATIONS

This case decided that a prior order to the effect that the application was not barred by limitation was binding : 8 Cal., 51 ; see also (1895) 23 Cal., 374 ; 25 Cal., 789 (16 All., 443 ; 34 Cal., 13 (not decided) ; 11 Cal., 376 ; 15 Bom., 28, (1901) 4 O. C. 333 ; 3 Bom. L. R. 416 ; (1906) P. R. 47 ; (1906) P. L. R. 86.

"It seems to be a necessary conclusion that the same effect must be given to a decision, that an application is time-barred. If a decision be valid and binding, although it may be erroneous, when it is given in favour of one party, it cannot be less so when it is in favour of the other party (1881) 6 Bom. 54 explaining 3 Cal. 17. See also 9 Cal. 65.

"The decree of the Sadr Court was a written document. Mr. Probyn had jurisdiction to execute that decree, and it was consequently within his jurisdiction and it was his duty to put a construction upon it. He had as much jurisdiction upon examining the terms of the decree, to decide that it did award mesne profits as he would have had to decide that it did not. The High Court assumed jurisdiction to decide that the decree did not award mesne profits, but, whether their construction was right or wrong, they erred in deciding that it did not, because the parties were bound by the decision of Mr. Probyn, who, whether right or wrong, had decided that it did."—(1883) 6 All. 269 P. C. at 275, 276 ; 11 L. A. 37.

Similarly binding is the construction of decree ; as to whether it ordered future payments:—(1884) 9 Bom. 328 ; as to relief, 19 Mad. 54 ; as to interest, 7 All. 102 ; (1901) 21 A. W. N. 32 ; (1912) 16 C. L. J. 101 ; 17 C. W. N. 565 ; 17 L. C. (936) ; as to mesne profits, (1883) 6 All. 269.

Similarly, the invalidity of sale certificate cannot be set up after its grant :—6 Bom. 586 ; setting aside sale in execution, 8 C. L. J. 193 ; 10 C. W. N. 209 ; 1 L. C. 284 ; liability to attachment and sale :—31 Cal. 882 ; 8 C. W. N. 672 ; 14 Bom. 206 ; 7 All. 282 ; executability by revivor etc. 20 Cal. 551.

Similarly as to points of law:—sale in contravention of sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act:—(1905) 2 C. L. J. 581, see also 21 Mad. 695.

Partial execution having proceeded, one cannot set up anything that would show that it was not in accordance with law:—(1890) 15 Bom. 242.

As to inquiry into mesne profits, see 11 C. L. J. 501 ; 5 L. C. 387. •

But a petition to postpone the sale cannot be treated as an estoppel. They contain no admission, that the decree could be legally executed against the respondent and are not within the description of an estoppel given in the Indian Evidence Act 1872 sec. 115 and following sections:—10 Cal. 196 at 206 ; 10 L. A. 119. Nor is the principle applicable, where the relief is different as in maintenance claims for different periods:—18 Mad. 482.

Review proceedings in consent decree is no bar to suit for impeaching that decree subsequently. —10 C. L. J. 420 ; 13 C. W. N. 1197 ; 2 L. C. 129.

The parties must be the same : See (1890) 13 Mad. 347, (1904) 1 C. L. J. 500.

III. JURISDICTION—

The order should be within jurisdiction though the decision may be wrong.—11 C.W.N. 296 ; 2 C. L. J. 384 ; 9 C. W. N. 956, 10 Cal. 196 at 206; error as to limitation is not jurisdictional calling for the exercise of revisional powers :—(1883) 7 Bom. 341.

IV. ADJUDICATION NECESSARY—

It is not necessary that there should be an order for attachment ; the principle is applicable whenever there should be an adjudication by the Court upon the rights of the parties to the execution proceedings :—(1911) 15 C. L. J. 453 at 456 ; 10 I. C. 359 ; 17 C. W. N. 113 citing 11 C. L. J. 357 ; 24 All. 282 dissenting from 15 All. 198.

See also 14 C. W. N. 114 ; 3 I. C. 47 ; 13 Cal. 257 ; 19 Bom. 675.

V. THE PARTY MUST HAVE HAD OPPORTUNITY TO CONTEST THE PROCEEDINGS—

Proceedings without notice under sec. 218 are not binding :—14 C.W.N. 433 ; 11 C.L. J. 357 ; 5 I. C. 89 ; 12 C.L.J. 312 ; 13 C. L. J. 26, 9 I.C. 213 ; 7 Bom. 316 ; 27 Cal. 210, because he has not had the opportunity to contest the validity of the proceeding :—28 Mad. 355 ; 30 Mad. 255.

“ A mere order of Court without contest is necessarily res judicata. This is especially so in the case of execution proceedings which are primarily executive, though questions may arise in them for judicial decision.”—9 Bom. 328 at 332.

Such an order, prima facie only of an executive character, could not possibly have the effect of res judicata unless the judgment-debtor being called on to dispute, if he wished or if he could, a certain proposition of right and consequential demand of relief or action by the judgment-creditor had then either failed in his contention to the contrary or at any rate allowed the judgment to go by default :—11 Bom. 537 at 540.

The application had in fact been made for execution against the person of the judgment-debtor but the notice gave him no intimation of this. He had no reason to suppose that the application went beyond the terms of the decree. He did not appear and in his absence an order was made for execution against his person but it was not executed, because the judgment debtor failed to pay the requisite fee.

The order made by the Subordinate Judge was res judicata as to the legal possibility of further execution in terms of the decree, but not as to the special construction which the judgment-creditor sought to impose on it :—11 Bom. 537 at 540. Notice under 248 should be followed by an order for execution in order to be binding :—14 C.W.N. 114 ; 8 C.L.J. 193 ; 35 Cal. 1060 ; 12 C.W.N. 216. Notice on transfer of decree does not dispense with notice under 248 for execution as the executability does not come into question on the former stage :—(1910) 15 C.L.J. 123 ; 8 I.C. 22. Notice under O. XXI r. 22 ; order under, r. 23, for execution sale—not open to be set aside :—(1913) 19 I.C. 377.

If a judgment-debtor does not appear on the notice to contest it under O. 21 r. 22, he can avail himself of the provisions of the Code which authorise him to put in objections when his property is attached unless barred by acquiescence :—11 I. C. 216. Specific prayers must be indicated in the notice :—(1904) 28 Mad. 355 ; 15 M. L. J. 247.

Where neither the decree nor order specified the liability to sale of the interests of certain defendants, and there were orders in execution for sale and for publication of proclamation of sale on notice to them, it was held nevertheless that as the notice did not expressly mention them, they had not the effect of res judicata :—30 Mad. 255 ; 17 M.L.J., 201 ; 2 M. L. T. 167. Upon the principle of want of opportunity, inter alia, attachment before judgment was held not binding :—(1911) 3^d Cal. 448 ; 15 C. W. N. 195 ; 10 I. C. 308.

Notice on oneself as guardian 10 Cal. 196 at 203, 206 (:10 I. A. 119) or fraudulent suppression of notice does not create a bar :—11 C. L. J. 357.

Notice is necessary but appearance is not :—13 All. 564 ; 3 S. L. R., 133 ; 24 Mad. 669 ; 24 Mad., 683.

VI. EFFECT OF ORDER STRIKING OFF APPLICATION, ETC., ON DEFAULT—

If there had been adjudication, whether the judgment-debtor had chosen to appear and defend or not, then the subsequent default of the decree-holder does not affect its binding character. It is otherwise if there had been no adjudication :—

“ When an order is made striking an execution case off the file of pending cases or dismissing it on grounds other than a distinct finding that the decree is incapable of execution, that the decree holder's right to get the decree executed is barred by limitation or by any other rule of law, or on some similar ground on which the application has clearly been dismissed on the merits, whether the word ‘ dismissed ’ or the words ‘ struck off the file ’ or any other similar words have been used in the order, the decree holder is not barred by the force of any such order from presenting and prosecuting a fresh application for the execution of his decree.”—15 All. 84 F. B. ; (1902) P. R. 90. If after notice, execution proceedings are struck off for the default of the decree-holder, then the issue of execution remains unadjudicated :—28 Cal., 122 ; 3 C. L. J., 240 ; 10 C. W. N., 209 ; 22 Bom., 83 ; 12 C. L. J., 312. But this does not upset any previous order, 11 C. L. J., 91, as for instance, order under 249 that the decree may be executed :—15 C. L. J., 453 ; 17 C. W. N., 113 ; 10 I. C. 359 ; 24 All. 282 ; 1898 A. W. N. 96 ; 13 O. C. 90 ; 6 I. C. 746 ; 26 M. L. J., 189.

VII. EFFECT OF APPELLATE VARIATION OR AMENDMENT ON AN OTHERWISE BINDING ORDER—

Amendment on merits re-opens the question :—(1911) 39 Cal., 265 ; 14 C. L. J., 481 ; 12 I. C., 151 ; (1910) 12 C. L. J., 312 ; 7 I. C. 55 ; (1902) 6 O. C., 44 ; 10 All., 51 ; see also 8 All., 492 ; 6 A. W. N., 156 ; similarly the later order of the appellate Court :—(1911) 35 Bom., 245 ; 13 Bom., L. R. 230 ; 10 I. C. 811.

The order might be attacked in the Appellate Court though no appeal had been preferred therefrom, under the C. P. C. 1882 :—(1894) P. R., 89.

Where the order is final it is binding .—

It was said that a special appeal from that judgment did not lie to the High Court. If so, the judgment was final ; if an appeal did lie and none was preferred, the judgment was equally final and binding upon the parties and those claiming under them. It would be a reproach upon the administration of justice, if, after endeavouring for eleven years to obtain execution for mesne profits in accordance with a judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction against which no appeal was preferred, the parties could now be told that judgment was erroneous, and that they were not entitled to mesne profits," 6 All., 269 at 275 ; 11 I. A., 37.

VIII. RETROSPECTIVITY OF STATUTES AFFECTING PROCEDURE—

In this case the Limitation Act 1871 was held inapplicable to proceedings prior to its passing, by reason of the express provisions in that behalf therein contained. Followed in 10 Cal., 196 ; 10 I. A., 119 ; 10 Cal., 748 ; 2 A. W. N., 151 ; 9 Cal., 644 doubting 9 Cal., 446.

To this extent therefore this case is an authority that where in a statute affecting procedure (Limitation Act is such statute) there are provisions express (or necessarily implied) depriving the retrospective character, these provisions will prevail. The general question is discussed fully in 16 Cal., 267 F. B. See also 11 Cal., 55 ; 13 Cal., 86 ; 14 Bom., 516 ; 8 Bom. 340 ; 18 Mad., 482 ; 10 Cal. 718 ; 7 Bom., 459 ; 6 Bom., 51 ; 9 Cal. 644 doubting 9 Cal., 446 19 C. L. J., 187.

IX. SUIT—'PROCEEDING' MEANING OF—

As regards the meaning of 'proceeding', see also the following cases. 16 Cal., 457 ; 16 Cal., 405 ; 10 Cal., 718 at 753 ; 7 Bom., 459 at 463 ; 15 Bom., 438 ; 19 I. C., 968 ; 15 Bom., 438 ; 16 Bom., 731 ; 12 All., 581 ; 15 All., 84 at 91.]

[8 Cal. 63]
ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 7th July, 1881.

PRESENT:

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE.

In the matter of Abdul Sobhan.

Transfer of trial to another district—Refusal by Judges to hear affidavits in support of application—Application to the Chief Justice to appoint another Bench to hear and determine case Interlocutory Order in Criminal matters, Finality of High Court Charter Act (24 and 25 Vict., c. 104, s. 14).

Where a rule had been obtained on behalf of a prisoner, calling on the prosecution to show cause why the case should not be transferred for trial to some other Court of Session than that in which it was then pending, on the ground that such strong feeling and prejudice existed in the district against the accused as to render it unlikely that he would get a fair trial, a Division Bench of the High Court, duly constituted, consisting of two Judges, refused to allow the affidavits in support of the application to be read, and discharged the rule. Subsequently, an application was made to the Chief Justice to appoint another Bench of the High Court to hear and determine the rule, on the ground that it had not been heard, and that, consequently, the order passed by the Bench discharging it was null and void.

[64] Held, that the Chief Justice, having once appointed a Bench under s. 14 of the Charter Act (24 and 25 Vict., c. 104) to hear any particular case, has no power to interfere when the case has been disposed of by that Bench.

Held also, that the refusal of the Bench to hear the affidavits read, if an error at all, was simply one of law in the course of dealing with a matter clearly within their jurisdiction; and that, therefore, the decision could not be treated as a nullity, or its legality questioned by the Chief Justice.

Held further, that whether the judgment had been signed or not, previous to the application being made to the Chief Justice, an interlocutory order of such a nature in a criminal matter is not final, but may be reviewed or reconsidered, or a similar application may be entertained, as often as the Court in its discretion may think proper.

IN this case an application had been made for the transfer of a trial from Patna to the High Court. The grounds for the application were, that a strong local feeling existed against the prisoner and that it was likely, therefore, that he would not be able to get a fair trial. Mr. Jackson and Mr. Gasper, on the 27th June, appeared before a Division Bench, consisting of Mr. Justice CUNNINGHAM and Mr. Justice PRINSEP, in support of a rule which had been obtained, calling upon the Crown to show cause why the case should not be transferred for trial to the High Court in its Original Criminal Jurisdiction, or to some other Court of Session.

Mr Kilby, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, appeared for the Crown.

Mr. Jackson stated the nature of his application and the grounds upon which it was based. A discussion followed, the result of which was, that the rule was discharged, the learned Judges under the circumstances declining to hear the affidavits read in support of the rule.

An application was then made by Mr. Branson to the Chief Justice sitting alone, that another Bench should be appointed to rehear the rule, upon the ground that there had been no valid hearing before the Criminal Bench; and this application was founded upon an affidavit made by Mr. Warde-Jones, the attorney for the prisoner, which stated as follows:

"I instructed Mr. Jackson and Mr. Gasper, Barristers-at-law, to appear before the Divisional Bench, consisting of Mr. [65] Justice CUNNINGHAM and Mr. Justice PRINSEP, in support of a rule which had been issued by the said Bench on the petition of my client, Moulvie Abdul Sobhan.

"2. The said Mr. Jackson and the said Mr. Gasper appeared on the 27th instant in support of the said rule.

"3. The exhibit hereunto annexed, and marked A, is an account of what transpired before the said Divisional Bench on the said 27th instant.

"4. I was present before the said Divisional Bench without interruption from the beginning to the end of the address of the said Mr. Jackson, and heard and saw all that transpired during the said address.

"5. I believe exhibit A to be a true and faithful representation of all that transpired before the said Divisional Bench on the said occasion.

EXHIBIT A.

"Mr. Jackson opened. He said that this was an application for the transfer of a trial from the district of Patna. The petitioner had been charged with bribery, and he was apprehensive of not getting a fair trial at Patna, on account of the strong local feeling existing against him. Mr. Jackson stated that the rule had been obtained under the misapprehension that the trial at Patna would be by jury. But this did not affect the application; for assessors are taken from the same class of people as jurors. After discovering his error, Mr. Jackson said, that he had at once informed their Lordships of the matter; and their Lordships, after due consideration, had decided that the rule which had been issued on his client's petition should not be withdrawn. After some further remarks from Mr. Jackson, Mr. Justice CUNNINGHAM asked Mr. Kilby, if Government really objected to the transfer.

"Mr. Kilby.—Yes, my Lords. A number of Government officers and others are witnesses in the case, and great inconvenience will be caused to many persons by a transfer.

"Mr. Justice CUNNINGHAM.—But Mr. Jackson's point is, that the chances are that he will not get assessors who will fairly try his case. If he makes that out, we would be inclined to interfere in the matter.

[66] "Mr. Jackson.—And moreover we say, that the Judge of Patna has himself said that he will be glad if the case is transferred.

"Mr. Justice CUNNINGHAM.—But is not that a reflection on the Judge?

Mr. Jackson.—Not in the least, my Lords. I desire not to make the slightest reflection on the Judge.

"Mr. Kilby then read the letter from the Judge, in which he stated that what he meant by saying that he would be glad if the case were removed from his Court was, that it was likely to be a long trial, and that by trying this case the rest of his work would be interfered with.

"Mr. Justice CUNNINGHAM.—Well, Mr. Jackson, you have not by any means convinced me that you will not have a fair set of assessors to sit at your client's trial at Patna.

"Mr. Jackson said, he had not yet placed any of the facts on which he relied before the Court, and desired to read a petition which had been filed in one of the Courts at Patna by a number of powerful zamindars of the district, who had nothing whatever to do with the matter which was before that Court. This petition, Mr. Jackson contended, was a most improper one. It indicated the intense local feeling against his client, and was distinctly intended to prejudice a Court of Justice against his client in a matter which was at the time judicially before that Court.

"Mr. Jackson then began to read this petition, when he was interrupted by Mr. Justice PRINSEP, who said—'But the Judge will take care not to have them amongst the assessors.'

"Mr. Jackson.—That would not be sufficient, I submit; for these zamindars are men who can influence a large number of people there.

"Mr. Jackson then proceeded to read the petition in support of his application. He had read only the first paragraph, and a portion of the second, when

"Mr. Justice CUNNINGHAM, after a short consultation with Mr. Justice PRINSEP, said :—'We cannot interfere, Mr. Jackson. The Judge of Patna will, no doubt, try the case with great care.'

[67] "Mr. Jackson.—But your Lordships have not yet heard a single word of our affidavits.

"Mr. Justice PRINSEP said, that he had read a portion of the petition.

"Mr. Justice CUNNINGHAM said :—'We have heard you, Mr. Jackson. We cannot interfere.' (Mr. Jackson had not addressed the Court more than ten minutes).

"Mr. Jackson with much warmth said :—'Very well, my Lords. Your Lordships have chosen to dispose of a matter of the last importance to my client without hearing any of the facts in support of my application. Most of our facts are not contradicted by the other side; and I have two long affidavits in support of my contentions, which your Lordships have not allowed me even to read out, and I sit down under protest.'

Mr. Branson in support of the application. The facts of this case have never been before their Lordships. They have not heard the counsel engaged in support of the rule, and the order made is null and void. I therefore ask that a fresh Bench may be appointed to hear the application. [GARTH, C. J.—I should be glad to hear some authority on the point. I do not see how I have power to interfere.] In one instance, Sir BARNES PEACOCK adopted this course. The case has not been reported, but the facts were, that a Division Bench, consisting of MARKBY and L. S. JACKSON, JJ., who had been appointed to hear the criminal appeals, divided between themselves a number of appeals in which no one was instructed to appear. * Each Judge read and decided half the cases, the other Judge concurring in and signing the judgments of his colleague*. When Sir BARNES PEACOCK became aware of this course of dealing with the appeals, his Lordship declared the decisions to be null and void, set aside each of the judgments, and directed the cases to be brought before him; and with another

* This statement of the facts is not quite accurate. The learned Judges divided the cases between themselves, considering that they were authorized to do so by a rule of Court passed in January 1865 [see Queen v. Chundra Jugi (9 B. L. R., 6)], and each passed independent orders on the cases read by him, but did not concur in or sign the orders passed by his colleague.—ED., I. L. R.

[68] Judge heard the cases again. [GARTH, C.J.—There is this difference between that case and the present one. There the order of the Court was, that the two Judges should sit on the appeals, instead of which the Judges took upon themselves to sit separately, contrary to the orders of the Chief Justice and the rules of the Court. But in the present case the two Judges had heard the case together, and while Mr. Jackson was proceeding to read the affidavit, they stopped him and rejected the application; so that there can be no doubt that the Judges were sitting to hear the case in accordance with the order of the Chief Justice and the practice of the Court.] The Judges must give the parties a hearing. They are appointed to hear and determine cases, and cannot determine them without a hearing. Suppose they had said they would not hear the defence, but would act according to the case for the prosecution, could they be said to be acting according to your Lordship's instructions? [GARTH, C.J.—Suppose I did the same thing, who is to set me in order? Is a Division Bench, consisting of two Puisne Judges in a different position from a Division Bench consisting of myself and another Judge? In such a case the proper course is to appeal to Government.] Your Lordship is, undoubtedly, above the other Judges of the Court. [GARTH, C. J.—As Chief Justice, I have certain functions to perform in constituting Benches, but having done so, have I power to call them to account?] There is a minute by Sir BARNES PEACOCK pointing out how the Chief Justice can interfere in such cases. My case is, that there has been no hearing, and that your Lordship has power to direct the case to be heard. He also referred to The Queen v. Zuhuruddin (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 219).

Garth, C. J.—This was an application made to me by Mr. Branson on Tuesday last, in the case of The Empress v. Moulvie Abdool Sobhan.

The prisoner is charged with bribery; and his case stands for trial at the next Criminal Sessions at Patna. A rule had been obtained on his behalf in this Court, calling upon the Crown to show cause why his case should not be transferred for [69] trial, either to the High Court in its original criminal jurisdiction, or to any other Court of Sessions where the jury system prevails.

The ground upon which this rule was obtained (stated shortly) was, that there was such a strong feeling and prejudice existing against the prisoner in the Patna district, that he could not secure a trial there by fair and unprejudiced jurors or assessors.

This rule came on to be heard before the Criminal Bench on the 27th instant (last Monday). Mr. Jackson appeared in support of it, and I find from the affidavits that he stated to the Court the nature of his application, and the grounds upon which he relied in support of it; that a discussion then ensued, in which the learned Judges appear to have expressed a view against the application; and upon Mr. Jackson proposing to read his affidavits in extenso, they declined to hear them, and informed Mr. Jackson that his application was refused.

Mr. Branson then applied to me on the following morning, as the Chief Justice of this Court, to appoint another Bench to hear the rule, upon the ground that, in point of law, there had been no hearing before the Criminal Bench. He contended that the Judges were bound to allow Mr. Jackson to read his affidavits, and that they could not possibly know the facts without ascertaining what the affidavits contained; and that as they had not done so, the decision ought to be treated as a nullity, and that I, as Chief Justice, had the power to refer the case for trial to another Bench.

In support of this view he cited two precedents, to which I shall presently refer, where, as he contended, a similar power had been exercised by the Chief Justice of this Court.

I was strongly of opinion at the time that I had no power at all to interfere, but having regard to the novelty and importance of the question, I took time to consider my Judgment.

Having done so, I am more than ever satisfied that I have no such power, and that the precedents referred to by Mr. Branson have no application to the present case.

The first of these occurred in the early part of the year 1869.

A Criminal Bench of this Court, consisting of two Judges, had been appointed by the Chief Justice in the usual way, for [70] the purpose of hearing criminal appeals; instead of sitting together to hear these appeals, the Judges thought proper to hear them separately, that is to say, one Judge sitting alone heard some of them, and the other sitting alone heard the rest; but the judgments in all the cases were signed by both Judges. Upon this being represented to the Chief Justice, he considered that, in point of law, there had been no hearing at all of these appeals, because they had not been heard by a legally constituted Court, and one Judge sitting alone had no jurisdiction to hear them. He, therefore, ordered the same Criminal Bench to hear them again, and upon the Judges of that Bench declining to do so upon the ground that they had been already judicially decided, the Chief Justice sent them to another Division Bench, by whom they were finally determined.

In this view of my learned predecessor I entirely agree. It is the province and duty of the Chief Justice, under s. 14 of the High Courts Act, to determine what Judge or Judges shall decide each case; and if two Judges are appointed by him to hear an appeal, it is quite clear, I think, that no single Judge has any jurisdiction to hear it.

But here there was no question of jurisdiction. The rule was disposed of by a Court of two Judges duly constituted by myself for that purpose; and the only complaint is, that those Judges, having heard the case up to a certain point, decided it without allowing Mr. Jackson to read certain affidavits.

If they erred at all in this, their error was simply one of law in the course of dealing with a matter which was clearly within their jurisdiction. There is no pretence for saying, as it seems to me, that their decision was a nullity, or that the Chief Justice of this Court has any right to question its legality.

The other precedent referred to by Mr. Branson, is The Queen v. Zuhiruddin (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 219). In that case a prisoner was committed to take his trial at Patna. On the application of the District Magistrate by letter to this Court, the Judge in the English Department made a summary order transferring the case for trial to Shahabad.

[71] The prisoner then applied to this Court for a rule calling on the Crown to show cause why the order of transfer should not be rescinded, upon the ground that it had been made without notice to him, and that the Judge in the English Department had no power to make it.

This rule was heard by a Full Bench, of which the Judge of the English Department was a member, and with his entire concurrence the rule was made absolute.

That case, it is clear, has no application at all to the present. It only decides that the transfer of a criminal case from one District Court to another can only be made by the High Court in its judicial capacity.

The reason, as I have already mentioned to Mr. Branson, why the learned Judges in the present case declined to hear the affidavits read, was because they were under the impression that Mr. Jackson had already explained the reasons upon which his application was founded: and because they were led to believe, from what Mr. Jackson himself had stated, that his client's objection was, not to the trial taking place at Patna, but to its being tried before the Sessions Judge there. Mr. Jackson, as I understand, had offered to withdraw his rule, if his client could only be tried by another Judge at Patna, Mr. Tweedie. Under these circumstances, it did seem to the Judges an unnecessary waste of time to have the affidavits read. But if the prisoner's counsel think otherwise, and desire now to be re-heard upon the affidavits, they have only to make a proper application for that purpose.

If the Judges were under a wrong impression as to what Mr. Jackson said or intended, they are willing to be set right; and I can only say that, in expressing their readiness to hear the case again, they have done, as it seems to me, all that they could reasonably do, and what I certainly should have done myself under similar circumstances.

Then Mr. Branson has suggested that I should send the case to be tried by another Bench, on the ground that, before the same Bench the case would not be heard without some bias. But in the first place, I think that I have no power to do this: and in the next place, if I had, I should not exercise it. I find [72] nothing in the case, as it has been presented to me, which would justify either Mr. Branson or myself in supposing that the matter, if heard again, would not be dealt with in perfect fairness.

I would observe, in conclusion, that Mr. Branson seemed to be under the impression, that a criminal case of this kind cannot be reconsidered. But in point of fact no judgment has yet been signed; and even if it had, in my opinion an interlocutory order in such a matter is not necessarily final. It is clearly not a res judicata, but may be reconsidered or reviewed, or a similar application may be entertained, as often as the Court in its discretion may think proper.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 15th July, 1881.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MORRIS, AND MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM.

Obhoy Churn Sircar and others.....Plaintiffs

versus

Huri Nath Roy and others..... Defendants.*

Butwara—Collector's Proceedings—Partition—Private arrangement—Onus.

A and B were joint owners of a mouza. B leased his share in patni to C. By arrangement between A and C, a partition of the lands was made, and each party collected the rents of the lands allotted to him. Forty years afterwards, a butwara of the mouza was made by the Collector between A and B, whereby lands held by C, under the previous arrangement were allotted to A. C was no party to the butwara proceedings. In a suit brought by A against C for possession of the lands so allotted, the plaintiff alleged that the previous division of the lands between A and C was a temporary one, made after the commencement of the butwara proceedings. The lower Appellate Court found, that the plaintiff's allegations had not been proved, and dismissed the suit.

[73] Held (TOTTENHAM, J., dissenting), that the decree of the lower Court was correct, as it lay on the plaintiff to show that the private partition had come to an end.

THIS was a suit for possession of certain lands in Turuf Peadaha, Parganna Bazuchap, in the district of Rajshahye, brought by the executors under the will of one Gopal Gossain, against Bojoy Gobind Chowdhry and against others, who held a patni lease of the Chowdhry's share in the turuf.

The plaint, which was filed on the 7th of August 1876, stated that Gopal Gossain was the owner of a four-anna share of the turuf, and the Chowdhrys of a twelve-anna share; that the other defendants, the Roys, obtained a patni lease of the Chowdhry's share, after which Gopal Gossain and the patnidars remained in joint possession of the whole turuf; that, afterwards, proceedings were taken for a partition between Gopal Gossain and the Chowdhrys; that, after these proceedings had been in progress for a long time, a temporary partition of the lands was, in the year 1242 (1836), made between Gopal Gossain and the patnidars; and that this partition was had merely for the sake of convenience in collecting the rents, and was intended to continue until the regular butwara, then in progress, had been completed and no longer; that, in the year 1874, after a space of seventy years, the butwara was completed and the shares of Gopal Gossain and the Chowdhrys respectively assigned; and that the defendants refused to give up to the plaintiffs possession of certain lands which were included in Gopal's share. The patnidar in their written statement alleged that their ancestors had obtained the patni lease of the twelve annas share; that, shortly afterwards, the private partition mentioned by the plaintiffs was made; that, in 1241 (1835), the ancestor of the Chowdhrys, having brought Roghunath Nundi's twelve annas share, at a sale for arrears of revenue, confirmed the patni of 1207 (1801); and that the private partition, which was intended to be permanent, had been completed long before the regular butwara was commenced, and was not affected by the allotment of 1874, as the patnidars were not parties to the butwara proceeding.

The Court of First Instance having made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs, the defendants appealed. The District Judge [74] in his judgment said :—" I find (i) that it is not proved that the private partition in this case was meant to be temporary; (ii) that it is not proved that butwara proceedings were pending when this partition was made; (iii) that even were they, the partition might have been independent, and not meant to be subject to the result of such." The judgment of the Court of First Instance was reversed, and the suit dismissed with costs. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Babu Sreenath Dass and Babu Saroda Churn Mitter, for the Appellants, argued, that the private partition was wholly informal, was made without any writing, and that the subsequent butwara proceedings showed that it was only intended to be temporary. The patnidars, on partition, must take what the Collector has allotted to their zamindar.—Byjnath Lall v. Ramooddeen Chowdhry (21 W. R., 233), and Sharat Chunder Burmon v. Hurgobindo Burmon [I. L. R., 4 Cal., 510; Contract Act X of 1872, s. 23, cl. (j.)]

Babu Doorga Dass Dutt and Babu Rajendro Nath Bose for the Respondents.

Tottenham, J.—I am compelled, with regret, to confess, that I have not succeeded in bringing myself to take the same view of this case as my learned seniors; and feeling that, under the circumstances, my opinion must be erroneous, I should be glad to let it remain unexpressed. But as s. 576* of the Code of Procedure seems to require me to state in writing the decision which I think should be passed on the appeal, I think it more respectful to the majority of the Court to state my reasons at the same time.

The position of the parties appears to me to be this; the plaintiffs are prima facie entitled to the lands assigned, and this is, I think, sufficient to start their case in seeking to disturb the existing arrangement to them under the butwara. But the defendants plead a special agreement of a permanent nature [75] which entitles them to retain possession as against the plaintiffs of portions of those lands, although admittedly those portions no longer belong to their lessors. It seems to me clear, that it lies upon the defendants to prove their plea to the full; and that the burden is not shifted from them to the plaintiffs merely because the latter have admitted one portion of the plea, viz., that there was an agreement, which, however, they contend, was not intended to be permanent; and which, I believe, in the absence of express conditions, would only remain in force so long as both parties wished to abide by it.

The defendants' case depends upon the nature of the agreement, and it is, I think, for them, and not for the plaintiffs, to prove it.

No evidence appears to have been given on this point by either party, and the lower Appellate Court, having laid the onus on the plaintiffs, dismissed the suit, because they had not discharged that onus.

* [Sec. 576 :—When the appeal is heard by more Judges than one, any Judge dissenting from the judgment of the Court shall state in writing the decision or order which he thinks should be passed on the appeal, and he may state his reasons for the same.]

Dissent to be recorded.

I am of opinion, that the onus was wrongly placed, and that the decision of the lower Appellate Court ought to be reversed.

I would add, that this Court, on second appeal, is not, as it seems to me, competent, either upon consideration of the long continuance of the arrangement, or upon any other consideration, to determine what was the nature of the agreement. That is a pure question of fact which cannot legally be decided on a second appeal.

Morris, J.—The real defendants in this suit are the patnidars. When, therefore, the plaintiffs sue to eject them from land of which they are found to have been in possession for the last fifty years, it lies upon them to prove conclusively their right to do so. The plaintiffs claim the right solely on the ground that, under a recent butwara by the Collector, the land in suit falls within the block or 'puttee' assigned to them as constituting their four annas share. The patnidars reply that they were no parties to the butwara, and cannot be bound by it. They allege further, that the land in suit forms part of the estate which, prior to the butwara, was, under a private arrangement between them and the plaintiffs, assigned to them [76] as comprising the twelve annas share of the zamindari, which they took in patni from the proprietor of that share; that they have been and are in possession under this arrangement; and that their possession cannot now be disturbed. The plaintiffs admit the fact of an arrangement of the kind alleged by the defendants, and that possession followed upon it. They, however, assert that this arrangement was necessarily of a temporary character, being liable to come to an end at any moment when the entire estate, as a joint undivided property, became subject to the incident of butwara.

It seems to me, that the onus of proof of the arrangement between the plaintiffs and the patnidars being of a temporary character, and liable to be broken through on the occasion of the butwara, lies entirely upon the plaintiffs. Had the property continued joint,—that is to say, had there been no private arrangement between the four-annas plaintiff-proprietors and the twelve-annas patnidar-defendants, then, doubtless, on the occasion of a butwara at the instance of the plaintiffs and the patnidars' lessor, the patnidars would be bound to follow the share assigned to the latter. But when, admittedly, an independent arrangement was made between the four-annas plaintiff-proprietors and the patnidars of the twelve-annas share, by which, as between them, the whole estate was partitioned, and this arrangement was acted on by possession following according to the partition, then I hold that the plaintiffs cannot set aside this arrangement by simply relying on a butwara to which the patnidars were not consenting parties. They must show that the arrangement was of a limited and conditional character. It was quite within the power of the plaintiffs and of the patnidars to divide the estate between them, and once this division was made and acted on, no conduct of the plaintiffs with a third party can disturb it or affect its validity.

I agree, therefore, in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, and would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Garth, C.J.—The Judges of the Division Bench having differed in opinion upon a point of law, the matter has been referred to me as a third Judge; and as the parties desired it, the case has been re-argued before us.

[77] The facts are these:—The plaintiffs are the owners of a four-annas share of an estate called 'Turuf Peadaha, and the defendants No. 2 are the owners of the other twelve-annas share.

The defendants No. 1 are the patnidars of the twelve-annas share under a patni, which was confirmed in the year 1241 B.S., but which appears to have been originally granted some thirty years earlier.

The estate at that time being undivided, the patni lease only conveyed to the patnidars the undivided twelve-annas share; but it is an admitted fact in the case, that, after the patni was granted, an amicable partition of the estate was made as between the owners of the four-annas share on the one hand, and the patnidars on the other, by which certain lands were appropriated to the patnidars as representing their twelve-annas share, and the remaining lands were appropriated to the four-annas share-holders as representing their share.

It is also admitted, that, in accordance with this private partition, the lands thus appropriated to the patnidars have been in their possession for upwards of forty years past.

After the patni was granted, the owners of the four annas share took the usual steps to have a butwara of the whole estate made by the Collector. Whether those steps had or had not been taken at the time when the private partition was made, does not appear; but the proceedings before the Collector were, undoubtedly, delayed for a good many years, and the butwara was not finally completed until the year 1871.

The division of the lands effected by the butwara was in many respects different from that effected by the private arrangement with the patnidars; and the consequence was, that some of the lands which were allotted to the plaintiffs (as the four annas shareholders under the butwara) were those which, by the previous arrangement, had been appropriated to, and were in the possession of, the patnidars.

The Collector, in the usual way, gave possession of these lands to the plaintiffs as against the defendant No. 2, but the defendants No. 1 insisted that they were no parties to, and were not bound in any way by, the butwara proceedings; and [78] as they refused to relinquish possession of these lands to the plaintiffs, this suit was brought.

Upon these facts the lower Court has found

1stly—That it is proved, that the private partition (that is, the arrangement between the owners of the four annas shares and the patnidars) was meant to be temporary.

2ndly—That it is not proved, that the butwara proceedings were pending when that partition took place.

3rdly—That even if they were pending, the partition might have been independent, and not intended to be subject to the butwara.

Upon these findings, the lower Court has decided that the plaintiffs were bound to prove that the private partition had come to an end, and that as they had not done so, the suit should be dismissed.

The point of law which has been raised here, and upon which the learned Judges of the Division Bench have differed in opinion, is this—whether, under the circumstances, the onus was upon the plaintiffs to prove that the private partition had come to an end; or whether the onus lay upon the defendants No. 1 to prove that the private partition was still in force.

In order to ascertain on whom the onus lies, I think it is necessary first to see what was proved or admitted on either side.

Now, it is an acknowledged fact on both sides, that the private partition was not only made, but that it has been acted upon by both parties for upwards of forty years. There is no reason, so far as I can see, why the continuance of such an arrangement is not perfectly consistent with the butwara made by the Collector. That butwara was made for revenue purposes, as between the plaintiffs and the defendants No. 2, and the defendants No. 1, the patnidars, were no parties to it.

Moreover, it does not appear that, at the time when the private arrangement was made, any steps had been taken to have the Collector's butwara effected, so that no presumption can arise that the arrangement was only to be in force until the Collector's butwara was completed.

Then, the fact of this private arrangement having admittedly [79] existed, and been acted upon for forty years, raises a presumption, as it seems to me, that it was of a permanent character; or at any rate throws upon the plaintiffs, who seek to disturb the existing state of things, the onus of showing that it has been legally determined.

This is a principle upon which the Courts and the Legislature have generally thought it right to act, as in cases of presumption and in presuming, that a tenancy or a partnership or other state of things continues until the contrary is proved (see the Indian Evidence Act, s. 109,^{*} and Taylor on Evidence, 1st edn., s. 123).

I think, therefore, that the lower Appellate Court was right, and this appeal will, consequently, be dismissed with the costs of both hearings in this Court.

The same order will be made in the other cases, Nos. 433, 434, and 595 of 1879.

Appeal dismissed.

Mortgage—Patnidar—Adverse possession—Sheriff's sale—Execution—Decree for account—Lis pendens—Priority—Redemption—Parties.

On the 6th of September 1865 B obtained a patni lease of certain land from the zamindar, and at an auction-sale by the Sheriff of Calcutta, on the 21st of February 1867, the zamindar's interest was knocked down to B, and a conveyance of the property to him was executed by the Sheriff on the 1st of April 1867. On the 13th of March 1879 a suit for khas possession was brought against B by C, who had bought the property at a sale in execution of a decree made on a mortgage thereof, the date of the mortgage being the 11th of January 1865, and the date of the decree being the 30th of November 1865. B pleaded adverse possession.

Held, that B's possession as patnidar only could not be considered as adverse to C, who claimed the superior interest; that B's possession as purchaser could not be considered to have commenced before the date of the [80] conveyance to him by the Sheriff,—namely, the 1st of April 1867; and that, therefore, the plea of adverse possession was bad, since the suit had been instituted within twelve years of that date.

In 1855 a decree for an account was passed in the Supreme Court at Calcutta, against A, an executor. A died in 1856, and the suit, which was revived against his representatives, came on for consideration on further directions on the 29th of August 1866. It was then found that A's estate was liable for Rs. 1,32,406-11-8, and his representatives were ordered to pay this money into Court. The representatives having made default in payment, a writ of fieri facias was issued, under which certain property was sold by the Sheriff of Calcutta and conveyed by him to B on the 1st of April 1877. Previously to this the representatives of A had, on the 11th of January 1865, mortgaged the same property, together with other lands, "for the purpose of paying the Government revenue of certain taluqs belonging to A deceased," and the mortgagee having obtained a decree on his mortgage, the property was sold to C, in execution of the mortgage-decree, on the 30th of March 1867. In a suit for possession by C against B, the latter pleaded lis pendens.

Held, that the nature of the suit, in which the decree of 1855 and the subsequent order of 1866 were passed, was not such as to warrant the application of the doctrine of lis pendens to the mortgage of the 11th of January 1855.

Kailas Chandra Ghose v. Fulchand Jaharri (8 B. L. R., 171) followed.

Held also, that though the sale to B was made for the express purpose of paying the debts of A, B's title was not to be preferred to that of C, who claimed under the mortgage of 1865, which was made for the purpose of paying Government revenue; and,

Semle.—The result would be the same even if the mortgage of 1865 had not been made for the purpose of paying Government revenue, as it did not appear that the mortgagee, at the date of the mortgage, knew that there were unpaid creditors of A, and that A's representatives intended to misapply the money so advanced to them.

Greender Chunder Ghose v. Mackintosh (1 L. R., 4 Cal., 897) followed.

Where the mortgagee of a zamindari brings a suit on his mortgage against a mortgagor who previously to the mortgage has granted a patni lease of the zamindari to a third party, the latter should be made a defendant in order to give him an opportunity to redeem.

Terms upon which a patnidar was let in to redeem* stated*.

*Appeal from Original Decree, No. 68 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Kristo Chunder Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Nuddea, dated the 5th of February 1880.

THIS was a suit for khas possession of certain property situate in the district of Nuddea. The facts were as follows :—On the 20th January 1855 a decree of the Supreme Court at Calcutta was passed in a suit brought by the heirs of one Promothonath [81] Dey against Ashutosh Dey, the brother of Promothonath and the executor of his last will. The decree established the will of Promothonath; declared that an amicable partition previously made was binding on Ashutosh and the heirs of Promothonath; directed an account of the moveable and immoveable estate of Promothonath come to the hands of Ashutosh; appointed Ashutosh receiver of the rents and profits of the immoveable estate of Promothonath on his own personal security; and reserved the consideration of all further directions and subsequent costs with liberty to apply. Ashutosh Dey died in 1865, and the suit, which was revived against his representatives, came on for further directions, on the Master's report, on the 29th of August 1866. It was then declared that the estate of Ashutosh Dey was liable for Rs. 1,32,406-11-8; and the representatives of Ashutosh were ordered to pay that sum into Court. This order having been disobeyed, a writ of perpetuam was issued to the Sheriff, by virtue of which he, on the 21st of February 1867, sold the disputed property to the defendant Kasumunnissa, who had previously obtained a patni lease thereof from the representatives of Ashutosh on the 6th of September 1865. The conveyance from the Sheriff to Kasumunnissa was executed on, and bore date the 1st of April 1867.

The plaintiff claimed title in this way. On the 11th of January 1865 the representatives of Ashutosh Dey borrowed Rs. 2,000 from Modun Mohun Haldar, in consideration of which they gave an equitable mortgage of certain properties, including the property in dispute, as security for the loan. The memorandum of mortgage recited, that the money was borrowed "for the purpose of payment of the Government revenue of certain taluks belonging to the estate of Ashutosh Dey, deceased." In August 1865 Modun Mohun instituted a suit on this mortgage in the Calcutta High Court against the mortgagor and a subsequent equitable mortgagee; and, on the 30th of November 1865, obtained the usual decree for an account and sale in default of redemption. Under this decree the property in dispute was sold by the Registrar of the High Court to Nil Madhub Bose on the 30th of March 1867, and a conveyance to him was executed on the 6th of November 1868.

[82] The plaintiff now brought the present suit against the representatives and against Kasumunnissa for khas possession of the property in dispute. The plaint was filed on the 13th of March 1879. The Subordinate Judge found that the suit was not barred by limitation; that the right of Kasumunnissa was not affected by Modun Mohun's decree; and, citing Goper Bundhoo Shantha Mohapattur v. Kallee Pudo Bauerjee (23 W. R., 338) and Byjnath Singh v. Gobardhan Lal Mohasohree (24 W. R., 210), he gave the plaintiff a decree for khas possession, allowing Kasumunnissa to come in and redeem.

Kasumunnissa appealed to the High Court, on the grounds—(i) that the suit was barred by limitation; (ii) that the lower Court was wrong in not holding that the possession of the defendant was not adverse to the rights of the persons whom the plaintiff represented; (iii) that the plaintiff, having derived his title from the residuary devise under the will of Ashutosh Dey, did not possess any rights superior to those of the defendant, who had bona fide, without notice of the mortgages in question, purchased the disputed property for the satisfaction of debts due by the said Ashutosh Dey; (iv) that the suit should have been dismissed when the defendant was no party to the proceedings from which the plaintiff derived his title; (v) that the Court below should have held that the plaintiff and the persons whom he represented had always full knowledge of the existence of the debt of Ashutosh Dey for which the property was ultimately sold by the Sheriff under the writ of fiери facias; (vi) that the learned Subordinate Judge should have held that the decree for sale, made in the High Court of Calcutta, of property situated in the mofussil, and the sale thereof by the Registrar of the said Court, could have no operation whatever upon the title of the defendant: (vii) that, under the circumstances of the case and the evidence on the record, the suit should have been dismissed with costs as against Kasumunnissa.

The Judgment of the Court (PONTIFEX and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Pontifex, J.—In this appeal both the parties claim under their representatives of one Ashutosh Dey. The plaintiff claims under a mortgage made by Ashutosh's representatives on the 11th January 1865. The mortgagee instituted a suit upon that mortgage, making a second mortgagee, whose mortgage was dated the 12th January 1865, a defendant in that suit. He also made the representatives of Ashutosh Dey defendants. And on the 13th November 1865, he obtained a decree on the Original Side of this Court, directing that, unless the defendant paid his mortgage-debt within a time therein named, the property should be sold. Under that decree the property was sold on the 30th March 1867, and purchased by the present plaintiff. A conveyance was made to the present plaintiff on the 6th November 1868; and on the 13th March 1879, he instituted this suit against the defendant, claiming khas possession of the property which he purchased.

The defendant's title, also under the representatives of Ashutosh, is as follows:—On the 6th September 1865 she obtained a patni of the disputed property, for which she paid a considerable premium; and on the 21st February 1867 she contracted, in a certain suit to which I shall presently refer, to purchase the property in dispute; and under that contract, on the 1st April 1867, a conveyance was made to her of the property in dispute. Now, the suit in which the sale was made to the defendant was a suit of this nature. Ashutosh Dey had a brother, Promothonath Dey; and apparently during the lives of the brothers, Ashutosh had been the managing member of the family. Promothonath Dey having died, his representatives instituted a suit against Ashutosh, asking that accounts might be taken of the management of the joint estate, and that a partition might be effected between the parties. By the decree in that suit accounts were directed, and Ashutosh Dey himself was appointed the receiver without security. The decree was dated the 28th [84] February 1855, and was in the usual form, declaring that Promothonath Dey's will was established, and directing that a receiver should be appointed with usual powers, and that accounts should be taken, reserving further consideration. By a subsequent order in that suit, dated the 29th August 1866, it was found, upon the Master's report, that a sum of Rs. 1,32,406 was due from the estate of Ashutosh Dey (who had died subsequently to the first decree); and it was also found that the representatives of Ashutosh Dey, who had been made parties by revivor to that suit, admitted assets of Ashutosh Dey; and there was an order that the representatives of Ashutosh Dey should pay the sum of Rs. 1,32,406 into Court to the credit of that suit. That last order was, as I have said, made on the 29th August 1866; but the representatives of Ashutosh Dey, being unable to pay into Court the sum of Rs. 1,32,406 as directed by that order, an order was subsequently made by the Court that part of Ashutosh Dey's estate should be sold; and it was under this last order that the defendant, on the 21st February 1867, contracted to purchase this property, and on the 1st April

1867 obtained a conveyance of it. Now, the plaintiff being a purchaser under the mortgage-decree, has sued, as I have said, for khas possession. The first objection taken by the defendant is, that the suit is barred by limitation, on the following ground, —namely, that inasmuch as she, the defendant, has been in possession as patnidar since the 6th September 1865, and as this suit was not commenced until the 13th March 1879, and moreover as she, the defendant, contracted to purchase on the 21st February 1867, her possession must be taken to have been adverse for twelve years before suit. We do not think, however, that the defendant is entitled to rely on her possession as patnidar, as adverse possession against the plaintiff's claim to the superior interest; and although the defendant contracted to purchase the superior interest on the 21st February 1867, which would be more than twelve years before suit, yet, inasmuch as the conveyance was not made to her until the 1st April 1867, we are of opinion that she cannot be considered to have been in possession of the superior interest as purchaser until the date of that conveyance, and as that date was within twelve years of suit, she is not now [86] entitled to contend that the plaintiff's claim is barred by adverse possession. The defendant next contends, that her purchase on the 21st February 1867 is entitled to priority over the plaintiff's purchase in the mortgage-suit for the following reasons,—that the defendant's purchase was made in a suit which was depending long before the date of the mortgage under which the plaintiff claims, and that the sale to the defendant was made in order to pay a debt of Ashutosh Dey himself, and which had been found to be owing from Ashutosh to the plaintiff in that first suit: and that such suit as a lis pendens affected the plaintiff and the mortgagee under whom the plaintiff claims. That, however, depends entirely upon the nature of the suit. The order that I have referred to in that suit dated the 28th February 1855, which was the only order precedent to the mortgage, gave no notice whatever that this particular property of Ashutosh Dey could be in any way affected by the result of that suit. In the case of Kulus Chandra Ghose v. Fulchand Jaharri (8 B.L.R., 474), a question of lis pendens, very similar to this, had to be considered, and at page 489, SIR RICHARD COUCH, who was then the Chief Justice, makes these observations:—“With regard to the question of lis pendens, the doctrine appears to be this, that the alienee is bound by the proceedings in the suit after the alienation and before he becomes a party. Then the question is, by what proceedings in the suit is he bound? Is he bound by the proceedings which arose from the nature of the suit, and from the case set up, and the relief prayed in the bill, or is he to be bound by any order which the Court may be induced by the parties to make in the course of the suit? I can find no authority which goes to the extent of saying, that because he does not think fit to become a party to the suit, he is to be bound by any order whatever that may be made. It seems to me, that he ought only to be bound by proceedings which, from the nature of the suit and the relief prayed, he might expect would take place; and if there had been no notice in this case, it might have been necessary for us to determine what is the precise effect of lis pendens. But this need not now be determined. Practically there is no substantial difference [86] between lis pendens and having notice of the suit. He would be equally bound by them, and not more by one than by the other. Looking at the decree of the 2nd February 1864, I am of opinion that Fulchand Jaharri cannot be taken to have anticipated that such an order as this would have been made in the suit, and it is not a proceeding by which he is bound.” Applying these observations to the case before us, it seems to us, that the mortgagee, who claimed under the mortgage of the 11th January 1865, could not at that time have anticipated that the order of the 29th

August 1866, or the subsequent order in that suit directing this particular property to be sold, would be made; and therefore neither the mortgagee, nor the plaintiff claiming under him, would be bound by the subsequent order for sale in that suit; and his mortgage, therefore, would be entitled to take precedence of the defendant's purchase in that suit. But then it is argued, that as the sale to the defendant was made for the express purpose of paying the debts of Ashutosh, it ought to have priority over a mortgage made by the representatives of Ashutosh, the money secured by which was avowedly not to be applied in payment of the debts of Ashutosh. But the avowed purpose for which the mortgage was made was to raise money for payment of Government revenue, the payment of which would be in the nature of an insurance of Ashutosh's property for the claim of his creditors, and such a mortgage would, therefore, be entitled to priority, and if the mortgage had not in fact been made to provide for payment of Government revenue, still there is nothing in this record to show that the mortgagee was aware that there were unpaid creditors of Ashutosh, or even if aware of that fact, that Ashutosh's representatives intended to misapply the money advanced to them. And unless he was proved to have notice of both these circumstances, he would be entitled to insist on the validity of his mortgage as against the creditors of Ashutosh—Greender Chunder Ghose v. Mackintosh (I.L.R. 4 Cal. 897).

We are, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff's title as claiming through the mortgagee prevails over the defendant's title. But inasmuch as the defendant was a patnidar, and so far as [87] appears from this record and according to the finding of the Judge of the Court below, her patni was dated before the time the mortgage-suit was instituted, we are of opinion that she, as patnidar, ought to have been made a defendant in the mortgage-suit, so as to have the opportunity afforded her of redeeming the mortgages. In this country patnis, zuripeshgi leases, and interests of that nature are very considerable interests in the land, and cannot be looked upon as mere leases for a term of years which a mortgagee might have the right to disregard. They are in fact substantial proprietary interests, on the grant of which, as in this case, considerable premiums are paid; and it is only equitable, that persons in that position should be allowed the opportunity of preserving their interests by redeeming any mortgages made by the superior holder. In this case the patnidar was not made a party to the mortgage-suit; and therefore any decree in that suit would not affect her, and the plaintiff having purchased under that decree, can have no higher right against her than the mortgagee would have had if he had made her a defendant to the suit on the mortgage. What then are the plaintiff's rights against the defendant in this suit? It has been urged, that inasmuch as he instituted this suit for khas possession, the suit ought to have been simply dismissed, and certain authorities have been referred to as showing that that was the proper course to be followed. But in this case the Subordinate Judge has in fact treated the suit as a redemption-suit, and has given a decree to the plaintiff, subject to the defendant's right whatever that may be, to redeem. We think, therefore, it would be improper, under the circumstances, to dismiss the suit without giving the plaintiff any relief. Moreover, it has been brought to our notice, that although the learned Judge in the Court below has, in his judgment, found that the mortgage-suit was instituted after the date of the patni, as a matter of fact, the mortgage-suit was instituted before the date of the patni. This is an additional reason why we should not dismiss the suit, merely because it was wrongly conceived in asking for khas possession. But inasmuch as the plaintiff has not appealed from the decree of the Subordinate

Judge, we cannot now interfere with his finding, and we must deal [88] with the case as if the mortgage-suit had in fact been instituted after the date of the patni. Then what are the equitable terms upon which the defendant should be permitted to redeem the plaintiff? It has been stated, that the mortgage under which the plaintiff claims comprised additional property as well as that which the defendant purchased on the 1st of April 1867. If the defendant had been a party to the mortgage-suit, she could not have redeemed without paying the aggregate amount of the principal and interest—moneys due upon both the mortgages at the date of the mortgage-decree, but she would have been let in to redeem on paying that amount. Now the price paid by the plaintiff for the land in dispute when he purchased on the 30th of November 1867, may have been either more or less than that aggregate amount. If it was more, we think the defendant is entitled to redeem on paying that aggregate amount (with interest as hereinafter mentioned) and no more; because it was not her fault that she was not made a party to the mortgage-suit, and she has not received the excess. If, on the other hand, it was less, we think the defendant is entitled to redeem on paying the amount paid by the plaintiff as purchase-money on the 30th November 1867 (with interest as hereinafter mentioned). The defendant having the alternative of paying either of the amounts referred to, must also pay interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum for three years preceding the date of the decree of the lower Court upon the capital sum so to be paid until the date of payment. The defendant will be allowed six months within which she must pay these sums, and the decree will be, that unless she pays the smaller of the capital sums before indicated, together with interest thereon as before mentioned, within the said six months, she will be foreclosed, and the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree for khas possession. If, on the other hand, she makes the payments directed within the six months, then the plaintiff, upon such payment, must convey to the defendant all the interests of the plaintiff in the property. We think that the costs of the suit should follow the usual course in a mortgage-decree, viz., if the defendant redeems under the liberty which we have given her, she must do so on the terms of paying all the costs of the suit. If, on the other [89] hand, she does not avail herself of that privilege, then there will be no order for costs, and the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree for khas possession.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 2nd August, 1881.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MORRIS AND MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM.

Hem Chunder Chowdhry.....Decree-holder

Brojo Soondury Debee.....Judgment-debtor.*

Application in aid of execution—Possession Wasilat—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sched. ii, art. 179, cl. 4.

Where a decree is one for possession, with wasilat from the date of dispossession to the date of suit, an application for wasilat, if not made within three years from the first application in execution, is barred.

An application made by a judgment-creditor to take out of Court certain moneys there deposited by his judgment-debtor, cannot be considered to be an application to the Court to take a step "in aid of execution," and is not, therefore, within the meaning of cl. 4 of art. 179†, sched. ii of Act XV of 1877.

Bunsee Singh v. Mirza Nazuf Ali Beg (22 W. R., 328) distinguished.

THE plaintiff, one Hem Chunder Chowdhry, on the 10th February 1877, obtained a decree against the defendant for possession of certain properties, with mesne profits from the date of dispossession to the date of suit. On the 4th April 1877 he applied to the Court for execution and for the assessment of mesne profits, and obtained formal possession through the Court on the 14th June 1877; wasilat, however, remained unascertained. And on the 28th June 1877, he applied to take out of Court certain moneys deposited by the judgment-debtor. On the 17th May 1880 he made another application for costs and wasilat. To this, however, one of the judgment-debtors objected, on the ground that the application was barred by limitation.

[90] The Subordinate Judge held, that the application for wasilat had been made within three years from the date of the delivery of possession, and that, therefore, it was not barred, there being nothing to show that the decree-holder had made any unnecessary delay in taking out execution; but he held that the application for costs was barred.

The judgment-debtor appealed to the District Judge against the finding of the lower Court, that the application for wasilat was not barred. The District Judge, following the ruling in the case of Bunsee Singh v. Mirza Nazuf Ali Beg (22 W. R., 328), found, that although the application was not barred, yet it was right that the Court should consider whether or not the proceedings for assessing wasilat had been instituted promptly and pursued with sufficient diligence; and that, inasmuch as the decree-holder, in the present suit had allowed a period of two years, eleven months and three days to elapse between the date of taking possession and the last proceedings in execution on the 28th June 1877, he held, that such a delay was incompatible with promptitude and diligence, and therefore allowed the appeal.

*Appeal from Appellate Order, No. 59 of 1881, against the order of T. M. Kirkwood, Esq., Judge of Mynensingh, dated the 16th December 1880, reversing the order of Baboo Nobin Chunder Ghose, First Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 27th September 1880.

† [q. v. supra, 8 Cal. 29.]

The decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Umbica Churn Bose for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MORRIS and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by Morris, J. It seems to us that there is some difference between this case and the case referred to by the Judge, viz., Bunsee Singh v. Mirza Nuzuf Ali Beg (22 W. R., 328). In the latter case, the decree was a decree for possession and a direction was given therein that the plaintiff do recover wasilat from the date of suit to the date of recovery of possession. In the present case, the decree was a decree for possession with wasilat from the date of dispossession to the date of suit. It is, therefore, argued that the award of wasilat is part of the decree. Admitting this for the moment, and without going to the length [91] of the decision in the case of M. S. Inzeelun v. Syud Keramat Hossein (21 W. R., 212), it seems to us, that even on this assumption the judgment of the lower Court must be upheld, and that the application for execution in the shape of determination of mesne profits is barred by limitation. The decree bears date the 10th February 1877, and the first application, which appears to us to be the only application for execution, was made on the 4th April 1877. The application for determination of wasilat was made on the 17th May 1880, which is more than three years from the date of the first application. It has been argued that the application made on the 28th June 1877, by the judgment-creditor, to receive a certain sum of money deposited by the judgment-debtor, is an application within the meaning of cl. 4, art. 179^{*} of sched. ii of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877. But it seems to us, in spite of certain rulings of the Madras and Allahabad High Courts, which have been quoted to the contrary, that we cannot treat an application for money deposited by the judgment-debtor as an application to the Court "to take a step in aid of execution." In no sense can an application to the Court for an order for payment of the money deposited in satisfaction of the decree be said to constitute a step taken by the Court "in aid of the execution." The money so deposited can be taken out by the judgment-creditor years after the date of deposit, and therefore the order of payment by the Court in no way affects the question of execution. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal—Costs —Appealable order.

If an order is itself appealable as affecting the jurisdiction of the Court or the merits of the case, an appeal will lie from that part of the order which relates to costs ; but, as in the case of decrees, in those cases, and those [92] cases only where the order is appealable, will an appeal lie against the direction as to costs, which is ancillary to the order.

APPEAL from the decision of BROUGHTON, J.

This was a suit to have a mortgage, dated the 7th September 1875, declared fraudulent and void, and to have a decree upon it, dated the 1st May 1876, set aside ; such decree having been obtained by consent, in a suit in which Roy Lutchmeeper Singh Bahadoor was plaintiff, and Gopinath Dobay and Sibnath Dobay were the defendants. They were made defendants in the present suit, which was originally brought by Byjonath Persad ; but while it was pending, the latter died, and his sons, Balkissen and Ojoodia Persad, were substituted as plaintiffs. At the hearing in the original Court, on an objection being taken on behalf of the defendant, that other members of Byjonath's families were interested in the subject-matter of the suit, and should therefore be made parties, an order was made on the 25th February 1880, adjourning the further hearing of the case, with liberty to the plaintiffs to have the additional parties added in the meanwhile, and ordering the costs of such adjournment to be borne by the plaintiffs.

When the case came on subsequently, it was heard out, and the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed with costs.

The plaintiffs then appealed, and amongst other grounds of appeal, they objected to being saddled with the costs of the adjournment.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and WILSON, J.), so far as it referred to the question of those costs, was as follows :

Garth, C.J.—Certain it is that, on the one hand, the plaintiff was mistaken in supposing that the Dobays owed no money to Luchmeeper at the time of the mortgage ; and on the other, Luchmeeper was not aware of the true position of the plaintiff's family as regards the banking business. The consequence was, [93] that when the trial had proceeded for some time, it transpired that the plaintiff, Byjonath, although professedly carrying on business in his own name was really doing so on behalf of the other members of his family, who were interested in the bank ; and thereupon Mr. Kennedy took an objection, that all the persons so interested ought to be made parties to the suit.

This was resisted on the part of the plaintiff ; but the learned Judge, after hearing both sides, thought it right to adjourn the case, giving the plaintiff's counsel an opportunity of applying to the Court within one month to add the other members of the firm as plaintiffs, or if he elected not to do so, giving the defendants leave to apply to the Court to dismiss the suit. Meanwhile the costs of the adjournment were ordered to be paid by the plaintiff.

No doubt the plaintiff's counsel were placed in some difficulty by this order. The learned Judge appeared to be of opinion, that the other parties ought to be joined, and if the plaintiff had declined to apply to make them parties within the specified time, he ran great risk of having his case dismissed.

Under these circumstances the plaintiff's counsel made the application to add the other members of the family with a strong protest, that they did so under compulsion, and after some time, during which the additional parties were placed on the record (not as plaintiffs, but defendants), the trial again proceeded.

A large amount of additional costs was thus thrown upon the plaintiff ; and one of the grounds of appeal before us is, that the plaintiff ought not to have been made to pay the costs of the adjournment.

The only point, which remains to be considered, is with regard to the additional parties who were placed upon the record, and the long adjournment which took place in consequence of Mr. Kennedy's objection.

Whatever might have been our view as to the necessity for adding those parties, or the propriety of throwing the costs of the adjournment upon the plaintiff, we think that, in this [94] instance, we have no power to entertain these questions in a Court of appeal.

It is very possible that, under special circumstances, either the addition of a party or the adjournment of a trial might be a matter affecting the merits of the cause. But here there seems no ground for such a contention ; see the observations of PEACOCK, C. J., in Kumara Upendra Krishna Deb Bahadur v. Nabin Krishna Bose (3 B. L. R., O. J., 113 ; cf. page 118).

It is said that the plaintiff was unjustly ordered to pay the costs of the adjournment. It is argued, that if the case was adjourned in consequence of Mr. Kennedy's objection, and if that objection was unfounded, then, upon the merits of the question, the plaintiff was right ; and that as the costs of the cause can, undoubtedly, be made the subject of appeal, it is said that the plaintiff has a right to appeal against the order for costs in this instance : Grudharilall Roy v. Sundar Biby [B. L. R. (Full Bench), 496] ; Buldeo Narayan v. Scrymgeour (6 B. L. R., 581). In both these cases, however, the subject of appeal was the costs of the decree : and the principle upon which the Full Bench apparently proceeded was this ; that as the costs formed part of the decree, and the decree was appealable, that part of it which related to costs was appealable also, and to the same extent as the decree itself. Thus, in a special appeal, the only objection which could be taken to the decree as regards costs would be one upon some point of law ; whereas in a regular appeal, the objection as to costs might be made either upon a point of law, or upon the ground of discretion.

We see no reason why the same principle should not properly be applied to the costs of appealable orders. If the order is itself appealable, as affecting the jurisdiction of the Court or the merits of the case, there seems no reason why an appeal should not lie from that part of the order which relates to costs. There must, of course, be some limit to appeals against orders for costs; and it would seem only reasonable, as well as consistent with authority, to apply the same rule to orders, as to decrees, and to hold that, in those cases, and those cases only where the [95] order is appealable, the direction as to costs which is ancillary to the order should be appealable also.

In this case, as the order for adjournment was not appealable, we think we cannot entertain any objection against the order as to the costs.

The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs on scale No. 2.

Appeal dismissed.

[On Appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.]

Assessment of land formerly occupied for Government Salt Works. -

Reg. I of 1824.

Upon the relinquishment by the Government of lands, within the ambit of a permanently settled zamindari, continuously used before and since the perpetual settlement of salt-works, from the commencement of salt-making by the Government, until after the passing of Reg. I of 1824, the provisions of that Regulation are applicable to the mutual rights of the zamindar and of the Government.

Such lands were held by the officers of the Salt Department, in terms of cl. 11 of that Regulation, "free of rent" and "under a perpetual title of occupancy," whether belonging to a permanently settled estate or not. The force of the Regulation and the right of the Government to assess such lands, are not affected by 'khalari' payments having been made, among other compensations, by the Government to the zamindar; and cl. 11 appears to contemplate some such payment. On a settlement of the relinquished lands, 'khalari' payments, being "sums remitted to the zamindars and to be allowed in perpetuity," within the meaning of the 4th clause of s. 9 of [96] Reg. I of 1824, must be continued to the zamindar ; or, if a settlement should be made with others, he should be assessed only for the land retained by him.

APPEAL from a decree of a Divisional Bench of the High Court (15th September 1879) altering a decree of the Officiating Judge of the Midnapore district (7th July 1876), made after a remand order of a Divisional Bench of the High Court (20th January 1875), whereby a decree of the Judge of the Midnapore district (8th August 1873) dismissing the suit, was reversed.

This appeal raised a question of the construction and application of Reg. I of 1824, which declares, as its title states, "in what manner the claims of the zamindars and of the officers in the Salt Department are to be adjusted in certain districts where lands are required for the purposes of salt manufacture." The respondent disputed the right of the Government to assess lands within the ambit of a permanently settled zamindari in Hidgelli in the Midnapore district, in which the manufacture of salt had been carried on by the Government from the year 1780 until 1863, when, as in other parts of Bengal, it was relinquished. This zamindari, containing three parganas, viz., Dakhin Mal, Bahirimutha, and Baitgarh, treated as forming one estate, was settled in 1801 with Raja Narnarain Roy, the ancestor and predecessor in title of Raja Gojendernath Roy, who, with Raja Kuar Narain Roy, held it in 1863. Both the latter Rajas were dead at the time of this appeal, and were represented by their widows, Rani Anandomoyi Debi and Rani Horripria Debi. Within the limits of the parganas above named were about 16,615 bighas, producing only salt, and wood used for fuel in making salt ;—lands locally known as 'chatar' and 'jolpai'. These lands the Government occupied for salt-works before the decennial and the perpetual settlements, having in 1780 undertaken the khas or direct management, through the Salt Department of the Nimak Mehal, or revenue derived from salt ; and having then ceased, generally, to farm out the right of salt making. The zamindar received, mushuhara [97] or compensation for the loss of profits on salt-making, at first fluctuating, but afterwards, in the year 1838, fixed at Rs. 618 per annum ; also an allowance of salt and 'khalari khezana'† ; the latter being Rs. 393-11-0 for each of the two Parganas, Dakhin Mal and Bahirimutha, there being none for Pargana Baitgarh. The entries made at settlement in regard to the khalari payment, are described in their Lordships' judgment.

On the 20th July 1865, the Collector of the Midnapore district, under the orders of the Government, issued a notice to the Rajas entitled to these three parganas, calling upon them to enter a settlement for the revenue of the lands in which, on and from the first May 1863, salt-making had been relinquished by the Salt Department. Raja Gojendernarain Roy was then a minor, but after attaining his majority he refused compliance with the above. The Collector, thereupon, made temporary settlements of the land with other engagers for the revenue, who were made co-defendants in this suit, with the Collector on the part of the Government, and the widow of Raja Kuar Narain Roy, then deceased. *

By his suit, commenced in 1872, Raja Gojendernarain sought to obtain a declaration that the lands in which salt-making had been relinquished by the Government were part of the mal, or revenue-paying land of the zamindari (to a moiety thereof he was entitled in possession) and were already subject to the perpetual settlement; so that the temporary settlements were invalid. According to the plaint, the plaintiff's ancestors, before British rule, used to make salt in Parganas Dakhin Mal and Bahirimutha, through molunghis on the lands fitted for the purpose. After 1780, when they no longer had this privilege, they received 'khalari rent' and mushuhara. On the 29th of May 1801, the three parganas were settled with the plaintiff's grand father, the jumma upon them was fixed, and in accordance with a resolution of the Governor-General in Council of the 8th August 1794, an annual sum, as Khalari rent, was granted; the latter representing what the molunghis had formerly paid for rent of the salt lands. The [98] Government also allowed mushuhara, and salt at the rate of four maunds for every hundred maunds made. In Pargana Baitgarh, before the settlement, no lands were used for salt-making, and therefore, in the daol, or estimate of the profits of the land made at the settlement, no khalari rent was mentioned for that pargana. The Salt Department, however, afterwards used such land in Baitgarh, as well as in the other parganas, as was suitable for its purposes; the land reverting, on its becoming exhausted of salt and fit for cultivation, to the mal lands of the zamindari. In this way the quantity of land used in the manufacture of salt varied from time to time, the Government having, between 1801 and 1864, used all such land in the three parganas as was saliferous, and having paid khalari rent accordingly, with the other compensations above mentioned. The defence made by the Collector on behalf of the Government was, that cl. 11 of s. 9 of Reg. I of 1824, authorized assessment of the lands in question; and it was denied that lands once salt-producing were ever made over to the zamindar.

This defence was held good by the District Judge (Mr. C. E. Lanco) who dismissed the suit with costs. He held it barred by Reg. I of 1824, whether the khalari payments had been made by way of rent or not. At the same time he was of opinion that the payments in this respect "were not of the nature of rent, and were not calculated upon the lands themselves, or upon their extent." On appeal to the High Court, a Divisional Bench, (AINSLIE and MITTLER, JJ.), reversed the decree of the lower Court, and remanded the suit, under s. 351 of Act VIII of 1859, for trial with reference to the question, among others, "whether all the 16,665 bighas had been held from before and continuously since the perpetual settlement down to the 8th of January 1824, the date of the passing of the Regulation in question, in order that it might appear whether any part of the land in suit was exempt from its operation." Thereupon the successor in office of the District Judge observing that it had not been decided by the Appellate Court that cl. 11 governed the case, fixed issues, upon the consent of both parties, opening the whole question. In his judgment (7th February 1876) he found that "the khalari payments were rent paid for the use of the land by the Government:" [99] whence he concluded that, in Parganas Dakhin Mal and Bahirimutha (for which alone these payments were entered at settlement), the disputed lands were included in the perpetual settlement, so as to prevent their being again assessed. The lands used and relinquished in Pargana Baitgarh were not in his opinion, so included, and to them he considered cl. 11 of s. 9 of Reg. I of 1824 to be applicable. He decreed in favour of the plaintiff for a moiety of the former lands, but not for any of the latter, and adjusted the costs accordingly.

The defendant appealed to the High Court, while, as to the lands in Baitgarh, the plaintiff, respondent, filed objections under s. 348 of Act VIII of 1859. The same Divisional Bench which had remanded the suit, dismissed the appeal on the part of the Government, and allowed the plaintiff's objections. The decree was altered in favour of the plaintiff and the whole of her claim was decreed.

That part of the judgment of the High Court (given by AINSLIE, J., and concurred in by MITTER, J.), which related to cl. 11 of s. 9 of Reg. I of 1824, was as follows:—

“The basis of that clause, as it seems to me, is the notion that, as regards lands held from before the permanent settlement there could not be any collections at the date of that settlement, arising from the occupation of those lands, as Government held their only product, and, therefore, there could have been no assessment; and, as a consequence, there was no bar to an assessment whenever it might suit the Government to cease to take a salt-revenue in lieu of a land-revenue. The zamindar's right of occupation and use seems to have been deemed overridden by the exercise, at an earlier date, of the arbitrary privilege of assumption for the purposes of the salt monopoly; and the subsequent permanent settlement, in which there could be included no assets from this part of the estate, was held not to convey a title to hold without liability to enhancement. The absence of possible assets at the date of the permanent settlement, and the consequent exclusion from assessment of the lands of the profits, of which the salt monopoly deprived the zamindars, is the foundation of the right of Government, asserted in cl. 11, and it is this only that saves it from conflict with Reg. I of 1793.

If, then, as a matter of fact, I find that the lands, which form the subject of the present suit, were otherwise dealt with; that, at the settlement of the estate, the assets were calculated including income [100] from these lands, I am forced to hold that, in spite of the language of cl. 11, s. 9, Reg. I of 1824, the Government has, by its own conduct, precluded itself from now putting forward a claim to assess under that clause. It cannot both have its assessment and a right to assess on the ground of no prior assessment. It has been found by the Judge below, that the item in the assessment shown as khalari rent, is a rent of land, and, in this, I entirely concur. It could not be a profit on salt manufacture, for, excepting so far as compensation for loss of profits under the head of mushuhara was allowed, the rights and interests attaching to the possession of the salt mehal were swept away by the monopoly, and, obviously, Government would not recognize a right to levy a tax on salt manufacturers for licenses to manufacture, unless that tax could be supported on the ground that it was payment for a right of entry on, and use of, the land; or, in other words, that it was rent of land.

The mode of computation seems to me immaterial. Whether a rate per acre, leaving the Salt Agent to get what he could out of defined acres, or a rate per khalari (or centre of manufacture), under which the area was limited only by the average working capacity of a khalari, or a rate per head of manufacturers engaged, leaving them free to work where it suited them, was adopted, it was the use of land and of land only that the zamindar gave. The salt in or on the land was not his to give. Now, when the Government chooses to include a rent of land, arising out of the salt lands, in the assets of the permanent settlement of the estate, it cannot, in virtue of cl. 11, s. 9, Reg. I of 1824, override the provisions of the permanent settlement, by which it has bound itself by its own contract with the zamindar.

The clause deals with lands included in the geographical limits of a permanently-settled estate, but excluded from consideration in valuing that estate for assessment. I cannot understand how the Government can say,—

"we have paid you rent for this land ever since the beginning of the century, and we have taxed you on those payments; but we now intend to declare, that this is a perpetual rent-free occupancy tenure, and to tax it over again."

That there is any separate Government jolpai estate does not seem to be made out. The same question was raised in 1838, and decided against the Government, and it seems to have been made clear then, that the Salt Agent worked at his will without reference to the boundaries he himself gave as limiting the Government and zamindari [101] rights.* It was said that the jolpai chittas were not before Mr. Dick; but, it seems to me, that these chittas do not establish that the jolpai lands mentioned in them are exclusive of the lands for which khalaria rent was paid. On the contrary, the rent of the salt lands given up in 1863, which the Salt Agent, by his notice of 29th July of that year, declined to pay after the first May, then last past, did, as I understand, include the rents shown in the documents at page 8 of Appeal No. 239 of 1873. Reference to the quinquennial registers proves nothing. In estates containing extensive tracts of unreclaimed land, the names of mouzas afford no certain guide. The settlement was of parganas, and there is nothing to show that any parts of these parganas were excluded.

As to parganas Dakhin Mal and Bahirimutha, the settlement records show sums under the head of 'khalaria rent': in pargana Baitgarh, there is no such item. The lower Court has, in consequence, held, that this last pargana must be treated differently from the two former. Against this decision, the plaintiff has taken an objection under s. 348, Act VIII of 1859, and I think it must be allowed. There seems to be no ground for supposing that the Government was, at the same time, treating one part of the estate in one way, and one in another. The reasonable presumption is, that, in all parts of the estate dealt with at the same settlement, it treated lands of the same class in the same way. Thus, when we find, in two parganas, clear proof that the jolpai land was taken into account in making the assessment, we may assume that the same was done in the third. The absence of a rent at that time is not, under the circumstances, sufficient evidence of exclusion from consideration.

Many permanently-settled estates comprise extensive tracts which were not charged with any revenue at the Permanent Settlement, but undoubtedly included in the engagements then made. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal of the Government, and decree the appeal of the plaintiff with costs of the whole litigation, payable by Government to the plaintiff: the decree of the lower Court being extended to include an award of possession of one-half of bighas 1,208-3-3-3, the disputed lands in pargana Baitgarh."

On this appeal Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe appeared for the Appellant.

For the appellant it was argued, that the High Court had misconstrued Reg. I of 1824, s. 9, besides having erred in holding that 'khalaria' payments were rents paid by the Government for the use of the land which it was now sought to assess. It had been concluded, as a consequence of the above, that the tracts in which the making of salt had been relinquished by the Government could not now be assessed. But, due effect had not been given to the words of Reg. I of 1824; which expressly declared that the lands occupied by the Salt Department should be deemed to be held 'rent-free': in other words, held as "not being assessed to the land-revenue"; and also declared that such lands, on relinquishment by the Salt Department, should be liable to be assessed. Reg. VIII of 1793, s. 100, exempted from the Perpetual Settlement "such of the salt districts as had been held khas in the past years to facilitate the conduct of the business of the salt manufacture." Further legislation on the subject was supplied in 1824 in the Regulation now in question. The history of the salt-making by the Government, or, as it was termed in Reg. I of 1824, "the monopoly of the salt manufacture under a system established in the years 1780 and 1781," showed that the khalari payments were not rents in the sense of payments for the use of the land in the occupation of the Salt Departments, but were part of the compensation given to the zamindar on account of the loss of profit which he sustained when he ceased to hold, in farm, from the Government, the right to manufacture salt. Until then the zamindars levied a cess calculated on the number of labourers employed in the salt-works on their estates, at the rate of 1-8 per head. The khalari payments were not, in their origin, remissions made from the jumma of the zamindari; nor were they rents adjusted to any area of land; but they were fixed by a capitation. Reference was made to the report on the manufacture and sale of salt in British India by G. A. C. Plowden, Esq., 1856, Part III, Bengal Appendix Note I. Also to the same report, Appendix C, cl. 2, p. 27. The argument also adverted to the mode of paying the 'khalari' rents; and it was contended that, although the [103] payment had been made by a transfer to the Revenue Department from the Salt Department, of a credit on account of the zamindar, authorizing a deduction from the amount of land-revenue payable by him, this did not indicate that the amount credited was in its origin an item of land-revenue. Lastly, on the construction of cl. 11 of Reg. I of 1824, it was argued that its language amounted to a statutory declaration that the lands held by the Salt Department were, notwithstanding the khalari payments, held rent-free.

Sir R. P. Collier. The present appeal arises thus. The Government of India determined to relinquish the manufacture of salt in the lands the subject-matter of this suit, and, in pursuance of a power which it conceived itself to possess under Reg. I of 1824, offered, in the year 1865, to settle those lands with the plaintiff, within the ambit of whose zamindari they were situated. The plaintiff declined the offer, denying the right of the Government so to deal with them, whereupon they were temporarily settled with two other persons. The plaintiff has brought the present suit for a declaration that a moiety of the lands in question, amounting to 16,665 bighas, are part of the mal lands of his permanently-settled estate, viz., three parganas, Dakhin Mal, Bahiri-mutha, and Baitgarh, for possession of them, and to set aside the temporary settlements.

The first defendant is the Collector of the Zillah of Midnapore who represents Her Majesty's Government. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are the grantees of the temporary settlements. The fourth, the widow of Raja Koar Narain Roy, is described as a pro forma defendant, entitled to half of the land sued for.

The Judgment of the High Court was in favour of the plaintiff and from that judgment the Collector has appealed.

The Government of India has always claimed, as indeed the native Governments to which it succeeded had done, the sole right to all salt produced within its territory, and the revenue derived from salt has always been treated as quite distinct from that derived from land. Before the year 1780, the Government had been in the habit of letting the salt-pro-[104]ducing districts, which were commonly unfit for agricultural purposes, to farmers, who might or might not be the owners of the adjacent lands; and it was only in the latter part of the last century that some preferential claim to a lease of such districts was admitted on behalf of the zamindar within whose zamindari they were situated.

In the year 1780 the Government determined on assuming what is called in the Regulations a monopoly of salt, but which may be more correctly described as the exclusive right to manufacture it. They accordingly took all salt-producing lands into their own hands, working them by agents, commonly called salt agents. The zamindars, who were thus deprived of their lands, were compensated by certain remissions and allowances. To require a zamindar, from whom a portion of his land had been taken, to continue to pay rent for that portion would have been obviously unjust. So much rent, therefore, as he would probably have obtained for the land if he had kept it in his possession, and which was usually estimated on the footing of $1\frac{1}{2}$ anna per head on the men who would probably be employed in the salt manufacture, was remitted to him. The remission was thus carried into effect. He was still assessed on the whole zamindari, but the estimated rent of the 'khalari' or salt land was treated as payable by the Salt Department, and debited to them. This payment or debit was assumed to enure for the benefit of the zamindar, and he was credited with it; the effect of this arrangement being that, although he was nominally charged with the jumma due on all the land geographically within his zamindari, he was in reality charged only with so much of the jumma as appertained to that land which he retained in possession. A further allowance called mushuhara (monthly allowance) was sometimes made to him in respect of profits which he might have derived over and above rent, and sometimes a further allowance of salt itself.

In the present case we have an authenticated extract from the Decennial Settlement in 1801 of the three parganas in suit with the ancestors of the plaintiff.

It will be enough to take the entries relating to the first-named pargana, Dakhin Mal. No. 220 is described as consisting [105] of certain farms, Harripore, &c., "engaged for by the proprietor in perpetuity," and a sudder jumma of Rs. 3,012-1-19 is assessed upon them. No. 221 is described as 'khas,' without any statement that it was engaged for in perpetuity, probably in conformity with Reg. VIII of 1793, s. 100, which declares that the rules for settling with proprietors do not apply to salt districts held khas by Government, which are to continue khas and be assessed from year to year. Under the head of 'farms, &c., mohals,' there is entered 'khalari rents,' and the sudder jumma is stated as Rs. 393-11-7, which, added to the former figure, makes a total jumma of Rs. 3,405-13-6-1.

The manner in which the Rs. 393-11-7 is dealt with, appears from several purwannahs to the same effect as the following, of the 14th February 1856 relating to a portion of it.

"C.B., Salt Agent.

"To Raja Gojendro Narain Roy (minor), and Bahoo Koar Narain Roy, Zamindars.

"You are hereby informed, that this purwannah is given to you as a certificate of the fact that the rent of the khalari for the year 1262 B. S., as given below, has been duly debited in the office of this agency, and credited to your account under the Collectorate head of Zillah Midnapore, and that a statement of the same has been forwarded to the Collector of the said district. Dated 14th February 1856, corresponding with the 4th Falgoon 1263 Willaity.

Description.	Amount.	R. A. P.
"Khalari rent for kist Magh 1262, for 3 annas share of Pargana Dakhin Mal and others	232	13 5
"Total two hundred and thirty-two rupees thirteen annas and five pios only.
"Jodoonath Bose, Mohurrir."

It thus appears that the zamindar, who was treated as liable for the gross jumma, was relieved from the payment of the khalari portion of it, that portion being debited to the salt agency and credited to him. Bahirimutha is settled in exactly the same form as Dakhin Mal, but in the case of Baitgarh no khalari rent is mentioned.

[106] These being the main facts, it is convenient now to refer to Reg. 1 of 1824, s. 9, by the construction of which the rights of the parties are determined.

Clause 2 refers to the rules and regulations following for the Government of the officers of the Salt Department.

Clause 3 of the section is in these terms :—

"The principle upon which remissions were originally made from the jumma of zamindars, on account of khalari rents, or the like, upon the assumption of the salt mehal, is hereby declared to have been to relieve those to whom they were granted from an assessment upon assets which were transferred to Government on the establishment of the system of exclusive manufacture, with the rights and interests attached to the possession of the mehal."

The 4th is as follows :—

"All zamindars and others, whose claims to remission were allowed in the first instance that is, on account of rents collected by them previously to the year 1188 B.S., shall be considered to fall within the class of land renters who received an abatement of what they then ceased to collect, upon the principle above laid down; consequently, it is hereby declared that the sums remitted to them will be allowed in perpetuity."

Clause 7 :—

"The remission allowed on account of rents collected previously to 1188, will still be retained in the revenue books, and will be carried to the debit of the Salt Department."

But the further levy of such rents is discontinued.

The 11th clause, on which the Government mainly relies, is in these terms :—

"Salt-works worked by the Salt Department from the time of the assumption of the monopoly to the present day, or otherwise assumed and held before and since the perpetual settlement (although originally belonging to an estate for which a permanent settlement has been formed), shall be considered to be held by the officers of the Salt Department, free of rent, under a perpetual title of occupancy, and shall be considered to be, and to have been, liable to assessment by the Revenue Authorities, when relinquished by the officers of the Salt Department in the same manner as if they had been farmed by an individual from Government, and had been open to re-settlement on the expiration of his lease."

[107] Clause 12 runs thus :—

"Salt lands, upon which salt-works have been established, whether before or after the perpetual settlement, shall, provided they have been worked for twelve years without claim on the part of any one to receive rent or compensation for the use of the same, be deemed to be the absolute property of the Government."

The short history of the litigation is as follows :--

The case first came before Mr. Lance, the Judge of Midnapore, who dismissed the plaintiff's suit, on the ground that Reg. I of 1824, s. 9, cl. 11, gave to the Government the power which they claimed.

On appeal to the High Court, the case was remanded in order that it might be tried whether or not some portion of the land claimed was 'jolpai,' that is to say, land on which the right of the Government was to collect fuel, not to manufacture salt, and which consequently was not affected by cl. 11.

Mr. Justice AINSLIE, the Senior Judge, seems then not to have dissented from the view of the Regulation taken by Mr. Lance, and to have remanded the case only on this ground. Mr. Justice MITTER, indeed, took a different view of the clause, appearing to think that the words in parenthesis, "although originally belonging to an estate for which a permanent settlement has been formed," narrowed the meaning of the previous words, limiting it to such an estate only, and that the estate in question was not such an estate.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the words have no restricting effect, but are intended to prevent restriction, and mean that whether the salt lands worked did or did not belong to a permanently-settled estate, the same consequences would follow.

The case, on being remanded, came before Mr. Tottenham, who had succeeded Mr. Lance, and instead of confining himself to the comparatively simple question on which the case had been remanded, he re-tried it from the beginning on a number of issues, which, in their Lordships' judgment, tended rather to obscure than to elucidate it.

He gave judgment for the plaintiff with respect to the two first-mentioned parganas, mainly on the ground, as their [108] Lordships understand, that the khalaria payment was, properly speaking, rent paid to the plaintiff for the land, a subject on which there had been much controversy. He gave judgment for the defendant with respect to the third, Baitgarh, mainly on the ground that the Government had not paid rent for that.

On cross appeals the High Court affirmed the Judgment so far as it was in favour of the plaintiff, and reversed it so far as it was against him.

In their Lordships' opinion the case is resolved by giving to the words of the Regulation their plain meaning. Clause 3 clearly applies to this case, and was probably drawn with the intention of its being applicable to such cases. A salt mehal was assumed by the Government, a remission was made from the jumma of the zamindar on account of khalaria rent, in order to relieve him from assessment on an asset which was transferred to the Government. Clause 7 points to the course which the settlement paper and the purwannahs show to have been followed. The applicability of cl. 11 depends wholly on whether or not the lands in question came within the first words of it, "Salt lands worked by the Salt Department from the time of the assumption of the monopoly to the present day," the alternative which follows need not be considered, nor the parenthetical words.

Their Lordships understand the Court to have found in substance that the lands in suit (including Baitgarh) have been so worked, and they adopt this finding. This being so, the Legislature declares that they shall be considered to be held by the officers of the Salt Department, free of rent, under a perpetual title of occupancy. Their Lordships agree with Mr. Lance that, these being the words of the Regulation, it is quite immaterial whether the khalari payments are called payments, or rents, or remissions. As has been before intimated, they seem, properly speaking, remissions within the meaning of cl. 3, but their being called or treated as 'rents' would not affect the force of the Regulation, which enacts that the lands shall, in contemplation of law, be hold by the Salt Department rent-free, and when relinquished by that Department shall be liable to assessment just as they would have been if [109] held under a lease which had expired. The effect of the decisions of the Courts is to import limitations into the Regulation which are not to be found in it, and to fritter away its plain words. It may be further observed that, if there had been no 'khalari rent' or compensation, the Government would, under cl. 12, have acquired a title in twelve years. Clause 11, as distinguished from cl. 12, seems to contemplate some such rent, or payment, or remission, and it is not improbable that the words "shall be considered free of rent" were inserted with the intention of rendering impossible the contention which has been raised.

For these reasons, their Lordships are of opinion that the Government have the right which they claim to re-settle these lands. They think it right, however, to refer to the concluding words of the 4th clause,—“It is hereby declared that the sums remitted to them (the zamindars) will be allowed in perpetuity.” Their Lordships assume that the khalari allowance will be continued to the plaintiff, or, what is the same thing, that if the relinquished salt lands be settled with others she will be assessed only for so much of the taluk as was settled with her ancestor as proprietor in perpetuity in 1801, and which she retains; to assess her for land which she can no longer occupy would be clearly unjust.

For these reasons, their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the decree of the High Court be reversed, and the suit dismissed, each party to pay its own costs in the Court below. Any payment which may have been made in respect of costs to be refunded.

Appeal allowed.

should not be conceded to anything subsequently constructed, or which appears to have been constructed merely for the purpose of defeating the rights of an auction-purchaser. Subject to this reservation, it does not matter whether the improvements have been effected by the present holder or by some previous occupier.

THIS was a suit brought by the plaintiffs, who had, on the 11th of November 1876, purchased a resumed lakhraj taluq at a sale for arrears of revenue, held under the provisions of Act XI of 1859. The suit was to obtain khas possession of certain lands comprised in the taluq, and held, as alleged in the plaint, by the defendants under an etmami right, which etmami right the plaintiffs claimed to be entitled to set aside. An etmami tenure, it should be mentioned, is an intermediate one between the proprietor of the taluq and the ryots. The suit was brought against a number of defendants in respect of a total quantity [111] of land amounting to 1d. 5k. and 2g., comprised in certain daghs of the Government chitta set out in the plaint.

Three only of the defendants defended the suit. They contested it in respect of 11k. of the land in suit comprised in seven of the daghs mentioned in the plaint, which land, they alleged, was their mawasi holding in their possession as khodkast ryots, their title going back to a period anterior to the Decennial Settlement. They further pleaded, that they were at least ryots with a right of occupancy, and a further contention was, that they had upon their land a khamar, a tank, and a garden; they, therefore, claimed the benefit of the four exceptions to s. 37 of Act XI of 1859, on one or other of the grounds set forth in their defence.

The Court of First Instance held, that the defendants had made out a right of occupancy, and also that their land contained a khamar-bari, a garden, and a tank. It thereupon dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The lower Appellate Court reversed this decision, and decreed the suit, being of opinion that the defendants had failed to show what lands they held within the taluq; and that they also had failed to show a right of occupancy. The Subordinate Judge further remarked, that a "ryot's khamar or garden is not protected by the exceptions to s. 37 of Act XI of 1859. There is also no evidence that the defendants had sunk ponds and planted a garden." The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen for the Appellants.

Baboo Baikant Nath Doss for the Respondents.

The following Judgments were delivered :—

Tottenham, J. (His Lordship having stated the facts above set out, continued) :— Regard being had to the findings of fact arrived at by the Subordinate Judge upon the evidence, the appellants' pleader has confessed himself unable to press this appeal upon any but one ground,—viz., that the fourth exception to s. 37,* Act XI of 1859, protects from the operation of the section such portion of the defendants' land as may be occupied by holdings, tank, or garden; and that the lower Court was [112] wrong in supposing that a ryot cannot have the benefit of the exceptions, or that the defendants are bound to prove that they have themselves effected the improvements in question. And for this contention he has referred to the authority of this Court and of the late Sadar Court.

In the case of Bhagho Bibee v. Ramkant Roy Chowdry (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 293), the previous decisions bearing upon this point are cited, and the Court was content to follow those decisions as having unquestionably a tendency to encourage improvements on the land, and to mitigate the severity of the Revenue-sale Law. The effect of these decisions seems to be, that a person holding land which is not protected from the operation of s. 37 by any of the first three exceptions, is yet entitled to the benefit of the fourth exception in respect of any of the items specified therein which may have been established on the land, and that there seems to be nothing in the words of the exception conferring the benefit of it on tenure or under-tenure holders, and excluding the ryot from it.

We are not prepared to dissent from the rulings thus laid down, though we are not free from the doubt indicated by WHITE, J., in his judgment in Bhago Bibee v. Ramkant Roy Chowdhry (I. L. R., 3 Cal. 296). We think it clear, however, that the benefit of the fourth exception must be limited to improvements effected bonâ fide, and to permanent buildings erected, before the revenue-sale, and should not be conceded to anything subsequently constructed, or which appears to have been constructed merely for the purpose of defeating the rights of an auction-purchaser.

Subject to this reservation, we think that it does not matter whether the improvements have been effected by the present holder or by some previous occupier: and therefore the Subordinate Judge's observation that "there is no evidence that the defendants have sunk ponds and planted a garden" seems to us irrelevant.

In order that these principles may be applied to the present case, it is necessary to send it back to the lower Court. The existence of a khamar-bari, a tank, and a garden being established on the judgment of the first Court, and the fact not [113] having been displaced by the Appellate Court, it will be necessary for that Court to determine whether the khamar-bari is a permanent building; whether it, the tank, and the garden were made before or after the revenue-sale; and if before, what areas they respectively cover. The decision will be in accordance with the findings upon these points.

The present decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside, and the case will go back for a fresh decision on the points indicated. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Maclean, J.—I concur, but not without hesitation, as to the protection claimed by the defendants for the khamar-bari, tank, and garden.

Case remanded.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 19th August, 1881.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MORRIS AND MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM.

Futteh Ali.....Plaintiff

Gunganath Roy and others.....Defendants.*

Suit for contribution—Decree against several defendants jointly—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court—Appeal—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 69, 70.

A suit for contribution not founded upon contract, but in respect of money for which the plaintiff and the defendants in the contribution-suit had been by a former decree made jointly liable, is not within the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes, which cannot deal with questions of equity. A second appeal will, therefore, lie in such a suit.

Ram Bar Chittangeo v. Modhoooodun Paul Chowdhry (7 W.R., 377) followed.

Quere.—Whether a suit for contribution, where both plaintiff and defendants were liable for the money paid by the plaintiff, falls within the scope of either s. 69 or s. 70 of the Contract Act, which seems rather to contemplate persons who not being themselves bound to pay the money, or to do the act, do it under circumstances which give them a right to recover from the person who has allowed the payment to be made and has benefited by it.

ON the 14th July 1874, certain persons (the defendants No. 2 in the present suit) instituted a suit against one Futteh Ali (the [114] plaintiff) and others (who were the defendants No. 1 in the present suit), and obtained a decree, making Futteh Ali and his co-defendants jointly liable for the sum of Rs. 119. In execution of this decree they attached and obtained an order for the sale of certain property of Futteh Ali, who, thereupon, in order to save his property from sale, satisfied the entire decree.

Futteh Ali then brought the present suit for contribution against all his co-defendants in the former suit.

The Munsif determined the amount due by each of the defendants, and gave the plaintiff a decree, with interest at 6 per cent.

The defendants appealed to the District Judge, alleging that the joint decree against them was bad, each being liable only for his own share. The District Judge held, that, under the decree in the original suit, Futteh Ali was only bound to have paid his own share of the debt, and should have paid such amount into Court, or, if he desired to be in a position to proceed against his co-debtors, he should have obtained an assignment of the decree; but having taken neither of these courses, his payment of the whole debt due under the decree against all the defendants jointly must be taken to have been a voluntary payment, and he, therefore, allowed the appeal, reversing the decision of the Munsif.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Gurudass Banerjee for the Appellant.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2350 of 1879, against the decree of F. J. G. Campbell, Esq., Officiating Judge of Rungpore, dated the 28th June 1879, reversing the decree of Baboo Behary Lall Mookerjee, Officiating Second Munsif of Gaibanda, dated the 27th December 1878.

Bahoo Lall Mohun Dass and Bahoo Taruck Nath Palit, for the Respondents, took the preliminary objection, that the suit was one in the nature of a suit cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, and that the amount involved being less than Rs. 500, no second appeal would lie.

The Judgment of the Court (MORRIS and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by Morris, J.—This was a suit for contribution brought by the plaintiff (appellant) to recover from the defendants collectively [115] the amount due by them as their aggregate quotas under a decree passed against them and the plaintiff jointly, which decree had been satisfied by the plaintiff alone, on the attachment of his property in execution thereof.

The form of the suit was clearly wrong, for the plaintiff had no right to sue for a joint decree against all the defendants, although the decree passed against himself and them had wrongly made them jointly liable for the whole amount of it.

The Munsif, however, determined the amounts of the several liabilities of the defendants, and made a decree in favour of the plaintiff accordingly.

On appeal to the District Judge, the Munsif's decree was reversed, and the suit was dismissed. The findings upon which the decision of the Appellate Court was based were, that, under the decree obtained against him and the defendants jointly, he was legitimately bound for his own share only; and that his payment of the liabilities of his co-debtors must be regarded as voluntary or officious. Hence he was held to be not entitled to recover.

A preliminary objection was taken on the part of the respondents to the hearing of this second appeal against the lower Appellate Court's decision, on the ground that the suit was one in the nature of a suit cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, and that the amount involved being less than Rs. 500, a second appeal is forbidden by s. 586 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was admitted that there are two Full Bench decisions of this Court, that of Ram Bux Chittangeo v. Modhoosoodun Paul Chowdhry (7 W. R., 377) and Sreeputty Roy v. Loharam Roy (7 W. R., 384), which were delivered by Sir B. PEACOCK, in which it was held, after a very elaborate exposition of the principle which governs suits for contribution not founded upon contract, that a Court of Small Causes has no jurisdiction in such cases; but we were asked to hold with the High Court of Allahabad that the Contract Act has effected such a change in the law as to render the first cited decision obsolete, and to give to the Small Cause Court jurisdiction in contribution-suits. Reference was made to a Full Bench decision of the High Court of [116] Allahabad—Nath Prasad v. Baij Nath (I. L. R., 3 All., 66). The learned Judges in that case considered the Full Bench decision of this Court—Ram Bux Chittangeo v. Modhoosoodun Paul Chowdhry (7 W. R., 377); but came to the conclusion that, owing to the Contract Act subsequently passed, that decision was, for practical purposes, to the point under consideration, "obsolete and irrelevant." The case before them was provided for by s. 69 or s. 70 of the Contract Act. The majority of the Judges held, that it came within the scope of s. 70: that the suit was in reality one for damages, and as such, one of the nature cognizable by the Small Cause Court.

Reimbursement of person paying money due by another in payment of which he is interested.

* [Sec. 69:—A person, who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay, and who therefore pays it, is entitled to be reimbursed by the other.]

That case, however, was a totally different one from that which is now before us. It was not a suit for contribution, but a suit to recover money paid by the plaintiff under some arrangement for the benefit of the defendants' estate, the plaintiff himself being, apparently, neither interested in, nor liable for, such payment. The High Court of Allahabad may be quite right in holding that such a suit will lie in the Small Cause Court; but it does not follow that a suit for contribution in respect of money for which the plaintiff and defendants had been by a decree made jointly liable, is within the cognizance of a Small Cause Court, which cannot deal with questions of equity such as must frequently arise in suits of this kind, and with which the regular Courts only are competent to deal. We very much doubt whether a suit for contribution, where both plaintiff and defendants were liable for the money paid by the plaintiff, falls within the scope of either s. 69 or s. 70 of the Contract Act, which seem rather to contemplate persons who not being themselves bound to pay the money or to do the act, do it under circumstances which give them a right to recover from the person who has allowed the payment to be made and has benefited by it. The respondents' pleader has suggested that the case falls within s. 43, but clearly it does not, for there is no pretence here that the plaintiff and defendants were joint promisors either by express or implied agreement to pay off the amount of the decree against them.

[117] No sufficient reason having been shown to us for dissenting from the view of the law laid down by Sir B. PEACOCK in Ram Bux Chittango v. Modhoooodum Paul Chowdhry (7 W. R., 377), we decide that the present suit was not one of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, and that the second appeal does lie to this Court.

We are further of opinion that the lower Appellate Court's decree is bad in law, and cannot be sustained.

The course which the Judge suggests the plaintiff should have adopted in the former suit when execution was taken out against him, is clearly untenable. The plaintiff could not limit his payment to a sum proportioned to his particular share. Under the decree which was passed, both he and the judgment-debtors were jointly and severally liable. The fact that no such decree ought to have been passed would not relieve the plaintiff from its operation, and his property having been attached in execution of it, he could not have saved it from sale by depositing in Court what he considered to be his own fair share of the debt. He was thus compelled to satisfy the whole decree, and his payment cannot legally be held to have been voluntary or officious, such as to deprive him of a remedy.

The Judge below is also quite wrong in law when he goes on to suggest, that if the plaintiff desired to be in a position to proceed against his co-debtors, he should have obtained an assignment of the decree. The respondents' pleader properly declined to argue in support of this curious proposition which entirely ignores the last proviso to s. 232 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

* [Sec. 232 :—If a decree be transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of law from the decree-holder to any other person, the transferee may apply for its execution to the Court which passed it; and if that Court thinks fit, the decree may be executed in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as if the application were made by such decree-holder:]

Provided that where the decree has been transferred by assignment, notice in writing of such application shall be given to the transferor and the judgment-debtor, and the decree shall not be executed until the Court has heard their objections (if any) to such execution:

Provided also that where a decree against several persons has been transferred to one of them, it shall not be executed against the others.}]

The Judge, therefore, was wrong in holding that the plaintiff, by his conduct, had disentitled himself to any relief, and he was wrong in his dictum as to the means by which he could have obtained relief. There seems to us in fact to have been no course open to him but that which he adopted, viz., to bring the suit. The Judge was quite right in laying down that not only this suit, but that also which resulted in the decree satisfied by the plaintiff, ought to have been wholly unnecessary, because in the first suit of the series no joint decree should have [118] been passed; but the several liability of each defendant should have been declared, in which case no one of them would have had to pay the share of the others. But we cannot hold the plaintiff responsible for the errors of previous plaintiffs, or of the Court which gave them decrees. All that can now be insisted on is, that the plaintiff should make out the separate liability of each defendant to himself, and the extent of it. This he did to the satisfaction of the first Court, which gave him a decree accordingly. The lower Appellate Court reversed that decree on illegal grounds. We set aside the appellate decree, and restore and affirm that of the first Court, with costs of this Court and of the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 5th September, 1881.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD CARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE MORRIS.

Anarullah Shaikh and another.....Defendants

Koylash Chunder Bose.....Plaintiff.*

Fraud—Misrepresentation—Kabuliat Contract of tenancy—Rectification of Contract—Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877), s. 31.

Three plots of land were let to A under one kabuliat. A relinquished two plots, but admitted to being in possession of one, alleging that the kabuliat had been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation.

Held, that as the lease was an entire contract, one portion only could not be repudiated on the ground of fraud: but that, if the tenancy was to be avoided on the ground of fraud, it must be avoided in toto.

Where a party to a contract of tenancy desires to have it rectified or altered, the suit should be brought under s. 31 † of the Specific Relief Act.

* Appeal under s. 15 of the Letters Patent against the order of Mr. Justice FIELD, dated the 24th June 1881, in appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1220 of 1880.

† [Sec. 31 :—When, through fraud or a mutual mistake of the parties, a contract or other instrument in writing does not truly express their intention, either party, or his representative in interest, may institute a suit to have the instrument rectified; and if the Court find it clearly proved that there has been fraud or mistake in framing the instrument, and ascertain the real intention of the parties in executing the same, the Court may in its discretion rectify the instrument, so as to express that intention, so far as this can be done without prejudice to rights acquired by third persons, in good faith and for value.]

THIS was a suit brought on a registered kabuliat, dated 4th Aughran 1284 (18th November 1877), for arrears of rent for the year 1284 and 1285 (1877 and 1878).

The defendants alleged that the kabuliat was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation; and that the plaintiff had leased [119] to them by the kabuliat three plots of land, one plot of which the defendants alleged they had for a long period held possession of under a different malik.

They, before suit in the year 1284 (1877), relinquished plots 2 and 3, still, however, retaining possession of plot No. 1. The Munsif held, that, under the kabuliat, the defendants were in possession of the lands let to them by the plaintiff; and that, during the continuance of the tenancy, they could not question the title of their landlord; and that it had not been shown that the kabuliat had been obtained by misrepresentation, and gave the plaintiff a decree.

The defendants appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who held, that the fact that the defendants retained possession of plot No. 1 would render them liable for the rent for the year 1284; but he was of opinion, that the lease was obtained by fraud, and modifying the Munsif's decree, gave the plaintiff a decree for the rent for the year 1284, and disallowed the rest of the plaintiff's claim.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Field, J., reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and held, that as two of the three plots described in the kabuliat were admitted to be the plots as to which the contract was entered into, there was no fraud as defined in s. 17ⁱ of the Contract Act and no misrepresentation as defined in s. 18ⁱ of the same Act; and that as the contention of the defendants was, that the instruments as executed by them did not truly express their intention, and not that they did not execute it, their remedy was to institute a suit to have plot No. 1 removed from the instrument, and to have a plot, which they asserted they had contracted to take, inserted instead; and further, that the defendants were not entitled to relinquish a part only of the land specified in the kabuliat, which they had done.

"Fraud" defined.

* [Sec. 17:—Fraud means and includes any of the following acts committed by a party to a contract, or with his connivance, or by his agent, with intent to deceive another party there—to or his agent, or to induce him to enter into the contract. —

- (1) —The suggestion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who does not believe it to be true;
- (2) —The active concealment of a fact by one having knowledge or belief of the fact;
- (3) —A promise made without any intention of performing it;
- (4) —Any other act fitted to deceive;
- (5) —Any such act or omission as the law specially declares to be fraudulent.

Explanation.—Mere silence as to facts, likely to affect the willingness of a person to enter into a contract is not fraud, unless the circumstances of the case are such that, regard being had to them, it is the duty of the person keeping silence to speak, or unless his silence is in itself equivalent to speech.]

"Misrepresentation" defined.

ⁱ [Sec. 18:—Misrepresentation means and includes—(1) the positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it, of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true;

(2) any breach of duty which, without an intent to deceive, gains an advantage to the person committing it, or any one claiming under him, by misleading another to his prejudice, or to the prejudice of any one claiming under him;

(3) causing, however innocently, a party to an agreement, to make a mistake as to the substance of the thing, which is the subject of the agreement.]

The defendants appealed under s. 15 of the Letters Patent.

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy for the Appellants.

Baboo Bangshidhur Sen for the Respondent.

[120] The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MORRIS, J.) was delivered by Garth, C.J. --We think that the appeal should be dismissed upon this short ground. Three plots of land were let to the defendants under one kabuliati, two of these, they say, they have relinquished, but one they are now admitted to be in possession of.

Under these circumstances they have clearly no right to set up as a defence to a suit for the whole rent, that they were induced to enter into the kabuliati by the fraud of the plaintiff.

The lease was an entire contract, and the defendants have no right to repudiate one portion of it on the ground of fraud and adhere to the other portion. If the tenancy is to be avoided on the ground of fraud, it must be avoided in toto.

If they wished to set up the defence upon which they now rely, they should have relinquished the whole of the land covered by the kabuliati.

If, on the other hand, they wished to have their contract of tenancy rectified or altered, they should have brought a suit for that purpose. They would have their remedy under s. 31 of the Specific Relief Act.

But then it is said by the pleader for the appellants, that the defendants are holding the piece of land which they have retained, not under the case, but under a different title. but this does not appear upon the record, and the pleader has been unable to show us that he has any real ground for that contention.

We think, therefore, that, as a matter of law, the learned Judge was perfectly right.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

[121] APPELLATE CRIMINAL.The 1st October, 1881.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE WILSON.

In the matter of the Petition of Dhunno Kazi and another.

The Empress

versus

Dhunno Kazi and another.*

Evidence—Duty of prosecution—Inferences to be drawn on failure to call witnesses—Misdirection.

It is prima facie the duty of the prosecution to call all the witnesses who prove their connection with the transactions connected with the prosecution, and who must be able to give important information.

If such witnesses are not called without sufficient reason being shown, the Court may properly draw an inference adverse to the prosecution.

The only thing that can relieve the prosecutor from calling such witnesses, is the reasonable belief that, if called, they would not speak the truth.

No such corresponding inference can be drawn against an accused.

KHORSHEED KAZI and Dhunno Kazi were charged, the one with knowingly and dishonestly using as genuine a forged document, and the other with abetment.

The document impugned purported to be a deed of gift in favour of the accused by their father.

The facts of the case were, that one Sadarooddeen, the father of the two accused, died, leaving him surviving two sons and one daughter, who was married; that she, on her father's death, succeeded to one-fifth of the family property; and, on the 17th August 1878, sold her share to one Badarooddeen, who was prevented from taking possession of the property by the two accused. Badarooddeen then brought a suit for declaration of his title and for possession, in the Munsif's Court. The accused defended the suit, alleging that their father had executed, during his lifetime, a deed of gift, conveying his whole estate to them. The defendants were committed for trial before the Sessions Court.

In the Sessions Court the evidence relied on by the prosecution as showing that the document was false, was, that it purported [122] to be registered before a certain kazi on the 12th April 1854, under No. 32. The books of the Registration Office showed, however, no such conveyance to have been registered under that number; nor was the person purporting to seal the document as kazi, kazi during the year 1854.

Out of ten attesting witnesses to the document seven were dead, two were subpoenaed by the defence (but not called), and the third did not put in any appearance at all.

* Criminal Appeal, No. 530 of 1881, against the order of J. P. Grant, Esq., Sessions Judge of Hooghly, dated the 6th July 1881.

The Sessions Judge, in his charge to the jury, pointed out to them that the Registrar's books showed the registration of no such document as the one alleged to have been registered on the 12th April 1854; and added, that, as regards this point, "the evidence clearly showed that the document was not really attested or registered by any official kazi, and that the certificates of such attestation and registration were clearly forgeries." He thus stated to the jury, that "he thought it right to bring to their notice that the accused's pleader in the civil suit had adopted the extraordinary precaution of requiring his client to endorse on the document itself a statement that he and his brother tendered it for production in evidence, before he, the pleader, would undertake to put it in."

"That the prosecution might please themselves as to the amount of proof that they put forward, but that it was not required that they should put forward exhaustive proof, any omission on their part being a subject for the consideration of the jury."

As regarded the attestation of the document he said, that, "had the three surviving attesting witnesses been called by the defence, they might have given important evidence. If such evidence would have supported the defence, why was it not called? You are entitled to presume from this mere fact, that these witnesses, being cited for the defence, would not, if called, have supported it."

The jury found the first accused guilty under s. 471 of the Penal Code, and the second accused under ss. 191 and 109; and they were sentenced by the Court to rigorous imprisonment for five years and one year respectively.

The prisoners appealed to the High Court.

[123] Baboo Umbica Churn Bose for the Appellants.

No one appeared for the Crown.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and WILSON, JJ.) was delivered by Wilson, J. We think there must be a new trial in this case. The first accused person is charged with knowingly and dishonestly using as genuine a forged document. The second is charged with abetting that offence. The using charged, was a using of the document as evidence in a civil suit. In that suit, which was in respect of certain land, the plaintiff derived his title from the sister of the accused by right of inheritance from her father. The document put in on behalf of the accused and which forms the subject of the present charge, purported to be a conveyance of the property by the father in his lifetime to the accused.

The learned Judge appears to us, looking at his summing up as a whole, to have left the right issues to the jury, which were briefly stated, whether the document was forged, whether it was used with knowledge of that fact, and whether this was done fraudulently or dishonestly.

But in dealing with the evidence bearing upon these issues, the learned Judge seems to us to have directed the jury erroneously upon several material points.

The learned Judge says: "Then I must bring to your notice the circumstance that the accused's pleader in the civil suit adopted the extraordinary precaution of requiring his client to endorse on the document itself a statement that he and his brother tendered it for production in evidence in the suit, before he, the pleader, would undertake to put it in." Whether this conduct on the part of the pleader be usual or unusual, it is no evidence against the accused in the prosecution.

A more serious error is to be observed in the manner in which the learned Judge has dealt with the fact of the non-production of the survivors among those whose names appear as attesting witnesses to the document in question. The learned Judge points out first,—"Of the ten, only three survivors; of whom [124] two have been cited to this Court by the defence, but have not been called by them, and the third has kept out of the way in rather a marked manner." He then, after stating quite correctly that the burden of proof is on the prosecution, proceeds—"But the prosecution may please itself without dictation from any one as to the extent or amount of proof that they will put forward. If they do not put forward enough to satisfy a jury, they have, of course, only themselves to blame; but they are not required to bring exhaustive proof of their case."

He then points out correctly, as it appears to us, that the weight to be attached to the non-production of material evidence by the prosecution must depend upon the circumstances of the case. And he proceeds:—"Now this present is a very peculiar case. It is practically a sister prosecuting two brothers, and with the serious offence of forgery. You will at once understand how difficult it is for the prosecution to depend upon the evidence of the purporting attesting witnesses, who are still available. One of these has kept out of the way of both sides, the other two have been secured for the defence, and one of them is in the employ of the accused; but others have not after all been called before you by the defence." And he adds,—"You are entitled to presume from this mere fact that these witnesses, being cited for the defence, as they were, would not, if called, have supported it." Later on he says,—"The two attesting witnesses snatched from the prosecution, after it had been declared on the appeal in the previous trial by the accused that the prosecution ought to call them, might and should have been called," i.e., by the defence.

The views expressed in these passages form the foundation for a considerable part of the learned Judge's summing up; and they seem to us to convey erroneous notions of the position of prosecutor and accused in a criminal case.

The only legitimate object of a prosecution is to secure not a conviction, but that justice be done. The prosecutor is not therefore free to choose how much evidence he will bring before the Court. He is bound to produce all the evidence in his favour directly bearing upon the charge. It is prima facie his duty, accordingly, to call those witnesses who prove their connection [125] with the transactions in question, and also must be able to give important information. The only thing that can relieve the prosecutor from calling such witnesses is the reasonable belief that, if called, they would not speak the truth. If such witnesses are not called without sufficient reason being shown (and the mere fact of their being summoned for the defence seems to us by no means necessarily a sufficient reason), the Court may properly draw an inference adverse to the prosecution.

There is no corresponding inference against the accused. He is merely on the defensive, and owes no duty to any one but himself. He is at liberty, as to the whole or any part of the case against him, to rely on the witnesses of the case for the prosecution, or to call witnesses, or to meet the charge in any other way he chooses; and no inference unfavourable to him can properly be drawn, because he takes one course rather than another. In the present case, these considerations apply with peculiar force. If the witnesses referred to by the learned Judge are thought by the prosecution to be trustworthy men, the prosecution was bound to call them. If they are thought not to be so, it seems to us specially unreasonable to reproach the accused with not calling them.

On these grounds, we think that the jury has been misled in a manner that must have prejudiced the accused, and the case must be tried again.

As the case has already been twice tried, it seems to us to be better, and it will, we think, be more satisfactory to the learned Judge whose summing up we have had to consider, that it should not be a third time tried at Hooghly.

We, therefore, direct the new trial to take place at Burdwan.

The Magistrate of Hooghly will make arrangements for the attendance of the witnesses before the Sessions Court at Burdwan, after hearing from the Sessions Judge the date fixed for the trial.

Appeal allowed, and case remanded.

[126] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 19th August, 1881.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Joynath Roy.....Plaintiff

Lall Bahadour Singh and others.....Defendants.

Private partition—Butwara Proceedings under Reg. XIX of 1814—Valuation of Suit—Power of Civil Court to take partition proceedings—Second Appeal—Order returning plaint for presentation to proper Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 57, 586.

An allottee, under a private partition, sued to stay subsequent partition proceedings brought under Reg. XIX of 1814, and to have his possession confirmed. The defendants objected to the valuation of the suit and to the suit being heard by the Civil Courts, no proceedings having first been instituted before the Revenue authorities.

Held, that such a suit should be considered to be one for a declaratory decree, or for something in the nature of an injunction, and that, therefore, the plaint should not be stamped according to the value of the entire estate.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2229 of 1879, against the decree of A. V. Palmer, Esq., Judge of Shahabad; dated the 26th of June 1879, affirming the decree of Babu Lall Gopal Sen, Second Munsif of Arrah, dated the 17th January 1879.

That the question, whether the Collector would have brought the lands to partition, depended upon whether they were held "in common tenancy"; if they were not so held, the Collector would be only competent to make an assignment of the revenue in proportion to the several portions of the land held by the shareholders.

That a private partition is no bar to proceedings in the Revenue Courts under s. 30 of Reg. XIX of 1814.

A Munsif dismissed a suit, on the ground that if it had been properly valued, it would not have come within his jurisdiction. The District Judge affirmed the Munsif's judgment, and directed the plaint to be returned for presentation to the proper Court under s. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code. This was not done.

Held, that a second appeal would lie.

Ajoodhia Pershad v. Kisto Dyal (15 W. R., 165) dissented from.

THE plaintiff was a shareholder in a certain mehal, and had come into possession of his share under a private partition [127] entered into between himself and his other co-sharers. He alleged that, during his minority, some of the defendants commenced butwara proceedings under Reg. XIX of 1814, concealing the fact of the private partition, and that he having attained his majority in October 1876, brought this suit in the Court of the Munsif of Arrah to have the butwara proceedings (which were still being carried on) stayed, and possession of his share in the estate confirmed.

The defendants contended, that the Munsif's Court had no jurisdiction, as the suit had been improperly valued, the real valuation exceeding the jurisdiction of a Munsif's Court; and that a Civil Court was not competent to deal with the questions raised, which ought to have been first brought before the Revenue authorities.

The Munsif held, that the plaint should have been stamped with reference to the value of the whole mehal, and that, as this had not been done, the suit was not cognizable in his Court, and that it was clear from Beng. Act VIII of 1876, that such disputes should be decided by the Revenue authorities, and he therefore dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, who affirmed the decision of the Munsif on the question of valuation; but ordered the plaint to be returned to the plaintiff under s. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Mr. C. Gregory for the Appellant.

Baboo Chunder Muthub Ghose, Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee, Baboo Saligram Singh, and, Moonshi *Mahomed Yusoo*f, for the Respondents, contended that the District Judge's decision should be considered as an order under s. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code, against which no second appeal would lie. See s. 588 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The Judgments of the Court (MACLEAN and MITTER, JJ.) were delivered as follows:—

Maclean, J.—The plaintiff in this suit is a shareholder in [128] Mehal Nowadabin, Pargana Arrah, in the Shahabad District. He alleges that he and his co-sharers, the defendants, 105 in number, are in separate possession of the land of their respective shares under a private partition made 'centuries ago,' but that some of the defendants brought the entire estate under regular partition, according to Reg. XIX of 1814, during his infancy, which terminated in Assin 1285 F (October 1876), and the proceedings were going on when he brought this suit on the 2nd July 1878. He prays that the partition may be stayed, and his possession of his share in the estate confirmed.

Five of the defendants opposed the suit. They urged that the Munsif's Court, in which the suit was filed, had no jurisdiction, as the suit, on a proper computation, should have been valued at more than Rs. 1,000. They also alleged that the plaintiff himself was one of the applicants for partition, and they raised other objections to the maintenance of the suit.

The Munsif recorded eight issues. The first related to his competence to try the suit, on the ground that, on a proper valuation, it exceeded the jurisdiction of his Court, and he decided that, as the plaintiff asked that a stop might be put to the partition of the entire estate, the plaintiff should have valued the suit according to the value of the entire estate. On this point I think the Munsif is wrong. I think the suit should either have been considered to be one for a declaratory decree, or for something in the nature of an injunction. The case resembles the case of Ajoodhia Lall v. Gurnani Lall (2 C. L. R., 134), in which it was held, that it was unnecessary to value the suit according to the value of the entire estate.

The second and third issues dealt with the competence of the Civil Courts to deal with the matters raised in the suit, and the Munsif considered that s. 149 of Beng. Act VIII of 1876 (the law which has taken the place of Reg. XIX of 1814) was a bar to the suit.

On this point I have to notice, that the partition, having commenced in 1867, would proceed, and be completed, under the Regulation in the same manner as if the Act had not been [129] passed: see s. 2 of the Act. It has not been shown that the provisions of the Act have been applied in accordance with s. 3.

Whether the Collector could have brought the estate under partition depends upon whether it is "held in common tenancy." If it is not, as the plaintiff alleges, then the Collector would only be competent to make an assignment of the revenue in proportion to the several portions of the land held by the different shareholders. The case quoted above is authority for this view, and also for the view that the mere fact of a private partition is not a bar to proceedings in the Revenue Court under s. 30, Reg. XIX of 1814. This, however, seems to be opposed to the case of Ajoodhya Pershad v. Kristo Dyal (15 W. R., 165); but it is, I think, correct,—and I think the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to a declaration, in the event of his establishing his separate possession of the lands comprising his share,—that revenue should be assessed upon those lands without affecting his possession.

The Munsif dismissed the suit on his finding on the first three issues. The District Judge affirmed the judgment on the first issue only, holding that the suit, on a proper valuation, was beyond the Munsif's competence. He directed that the plaint should be returned for presentation to the proper Court under s. 57 of the Code of Civil Procedure. A second appeal has been filed against the decision of the Courts below, and the respondent's pleader has argued that that decision must be considered to be an order under s. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code, against which no second appeal lies. See the last words of s. 588.

But it is clear that whether the Munsif should have returned the plaint to be presented to the proper Court or not, he did not do so, and he is supported by the case of Shaikh Muzhur Ali v. Mussamut Basoo (8 W. R., 47) in the course he adopted, although that case was distinguished by the cases of Ram Gully v. Gttonomonee Debu (11 W. R., 177), M. S. Edoe v. Shaikh Hefazut Hossein (13 W. R., 358), and Kartick Nath Panday v. Roy Nundeput Bahadoor (23 W. R., 263). His decree dismissing the suit was a decree within the [130] meaning of the Civil Procedure Code, s. 2. The lower Appellate Court also dismissed the suit,—that is to say, it affirmed the Munsif's judgment dismissing the suit, and directed the return of the plaint under s. 57. This is the course declared to be proper in the case of Bai Makhor v. Bulakhi Chaku (I. L. R., 1 Bom., 538).

I have no doubt that an order under s. 57 is not appealable twice; but as this is the first appeal against the only order made under s. 57, I think we are not precluded from dealing with the case, and we are also at liberty to consider whether the rest of the Judge's decision is correct. I have stated my reasons for thinking that the claim was not undervalued, and also that the plaintiff is entitled to ask for some, though not to the exact, relief claimed. I would, therefore, reverse the decisions of the Courts below, and direct the Munsif to deal with the case in the manner laid down in the case of Ajoodhia Lall v. Guman Lall (2 C. L. R., 131),—that is to say, to adjudicate upon the plaintiff's claim to be in possession of certain lands as comprising his share in the estate, and on his succeeding in proving his claim, to declare that these lands belong to his divided share. The Revenue authorities will then deal with the partition under the law applicable to the case in accordance with the declaration which the Civil Court may make.

Mitter, J.—I agree to the order of remand. I desire to add that I express no opinion upon the question, whether the Judge was right in directing under s. 87 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the plaint should be returned. But whatever view may be entertained of that question, it is clear that an appeal lies to this Court, and therefore it is not necessary to express any opinion upon that point.

Case remanded.

[131] APPELLATE CIVIL.The 19th July, 1881.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Gunga Prosad and another.....Plaintiffs

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Alienation of ancestral property—Right of mortgage to sell Managing member.

A Hindu, governed by the Mitakshara law, mortgaged certain property to the plaintiffs. In a suit to recover the money due under the mortgage, and for a sale of the property, brought against the mortgagor, his four sons, and the purchaser of the mortgagor's right and interest at an execution-sale, the lower Court gave the plaintiff a decree against the mortgagor alone, holding that no necessity for the loan had been proved; but did not decide whether the property was the self-acquired property of the mortgagor or ancestral property. The High Court remanded the case for the trial of an issue upon this point. The lower Court found that the property was ancestral, and affirmed the original decree.

Held, that, assuming the property in dispute was ancestral, and that the mortgage was not valid against the sons, the plaintiffs were still entitled to recover the debt by the sale of the property of the father and the sons, because, supposing that the debt was contracted for personal purposes of the father, still the ancestral property in the hands of the sons was liable for the debt, it being not proved to have been contracted for immoral purposes.

Luchmun Dass v. Gurdhar Chowdhry (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 855) followed.

THIS was a suit upon a mortgage-bond, dated the 29th of March 1873, made by one Sheodyal Singh, a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law, alone in favour of the plaintiffs, and by it an eight-anna share in certain landed property was mortgaged to the plaintiffs, who now sued Sheodyal, his four sons, his wife, and one Ajudhia Pershad, who had purchased the right, title and interest of Sheodyal in the property in execution of a decree obtained by the plaintiffs and one Bindabun Pershad. The plaintiffs sought to establish their mortgage-right and for an order to sell the property, and to realize their debt out of the proceeds or from other property of the defendants. The plaintiffs contended, that there was legal necessity for the loan; [132] that it was taken by Sheodyal as kurta of the family; and further, that the property mortgaged was the self-acquired property of Sheodyal. The sons of Sheodyal contended, that as he was subject to the Mitakshara law, he could not alienate the ancestral property while he was joint in estate with them, without their consent or without legal necessity, nor could he, as guardian or manager of the family, prejudice their rights.

The Subordinate Judge found, that the plaintiffs had not proved, as they were bound to prove, that the loan was taken for the benefit of the family and under legal necessity, and he gave the plaintiffs a decree for the amount of their claim. He did not decide whether the property was the self-acquired property of Sheodyal or not.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 47 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Matadin, Subordinate Judge of Gaya, dated the 28th January 1880.

On appeal to the High Court, the case was remanded for the trial of the following issue—"Whether the property mortgaged was the self-acquired property of Sheodyal or the ancestral property of the family?"

The Subordinate Judge found that the property was not the self-acquired property of Sheodyal, and affirmed his original decree.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. R. E. Twisdale for the Appellants.

Baboo Tarucknath Sen for the Respondents.

The following Judgments of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) were delivered : --

Mitter, J. --The plaintiffs brought this suit to recover the money due under a mortgage-bond and for an order for the sale of the mortgaged premises for the satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. The bond was executed on the 29th March 1873, by the defendant Sheodyal, and the claim for the sale of the whole of the mortgaged property is resisted by some of the sons of Sheodyal.

The lower Court holding the defence valid, decreed only the sale of Sheodyal's interest. The plaintiffs appealed; and this Court, on the 7th July 1879, decided that the decision of [133] the lower Court would be right if the property mortgaged was not the self-acquired property of Sheodyal. It appears that the plaintiffs alleged that the mortgaged property had been acquired by Sheodyal alone, and therefore the sons of Sheodyal could not claim any share in it. This point was overlooked by the lower Court. Hence the case was remanded to try the issue "whether the property mortgaged was the self-acquired property of Sheodyal or the ancestral property of the family."

The lower Court has decided this issue against the plaintiffs. It was pressed upon us, that we are not bound by the decision of this Court dated the 7th July 1879.

As regards the issue directed to be tried, the facts found are these: Mouza Majhi Ilburpore, eight annas of which was mortgaged in the bond, the basis of this suit, was a lakheraj property. It was resumed by Government, and temporarily settled with one Debee Prosad for twenty years. Debee Prosad was the minahdar of the mouza, and in the settlement-proceeding he was treated as its owner. On the 3rd June 1845, Debee Prosad granted it in zurpeshgee to one Teknarain and the mother of Sheodyal, Jeet Koer. The latter, in this transaction, acted as Sheodyal's guardian, Sheodyal being then a minor. For the money due under the zurpeshgee and other mortgage instruments, and also for cash advances received, Debee Prosad again, on the 16th November 1846, conditionally sold to Teknarain and Sheodyal respectively eight-annas of the mouza in question. The equity of redemption of Debee Prosad was brought to sale in execution of a decree; and on the 10th May 1847, was purchased in the same shares by Gunga, son of Teknarain, and Sheodyal. On the expiration of the twenty-year settlement, the property was permanently settled with the purchasers in the year 1859. In this settlement-proceeding also, Sheodyal and Gunga were treated as owners in the place of Debee Prosad. The lower Court, upon these facts, finds that the property was purchased with the income of the ancestral property. In that finding I concur. Originally the zurpeshgee advance was made when Sheodyal was a minor, and the property was purchased when he had just attained majority. It is not [134] shown that Sheodyal at that time was possessed of any separate funds. Under these circumstances, it would be but reasonable to draw the inference that the purchase-money and the money advanced upon mortgage came from the income of the ancestral property, which is proved to be pretty large.

Having come to this conclusion, the lower Court holds, that the property in question comes within the category of ancestral property, in which the sons of Sheodyal are co-owners with him. In this opinion I do not concur, because, when the property was acquired out of the income of the ancestral property, none of the sons was born. Bia Singh, one of the witnesses examined by the defendants on the 5th January 1880, says: Rughu Nath Singh, the eldest son of Sheodyal, died last year, when he was twenty-five years of age. The eldest son was, therefore, born in the year 1854. Therefore the question which we have to determine is, whether, under the Mitakshara law, a son on his birth becomes a joint owner with his father in a property purchased by the father before his birth out of the income of the ancestral property. I think this question should be answered in the negative. An examination of the Mitakshara law will show that the son on his birth becomes a co-owner only in a property which was inherited by the father from his father or other lineal ancestor within three degrees.

The author of the Mitakshara, treating of the subject of equal rights of father and son, says: "In such property, which was acquired by the paternal grandfather, through acceptance of gifts, or by conquest or other means [as commerce, agriculture, or service (Balam Bhatta)] the ownership of father and son is notorious; and therefore partition does take place. For, or because, the right is equal, or alike, therefore partition is not restricted to be made by the father's choice, nor has he a double share.

"Thus, while the mother is capable of bearing more sons, and the father retains his worldly affections, and does not desire partition, a distribution of the grandfather's estate does, nevertheless take place by the will of the son.

[135] "So, likewise, the grandson has a right of prohibition, if his unseparated father is making a donation, or a sale, of effects inherited from his grandfather; but he has no right of interference, if the effects were acquired by the father. On the contrary, he must acquiesce, because he is dependent.

"Consequently the difference is this, although he has a right by birth in his father's and his grandfather's property, still, since he is dependent on his father in regard to the paternal estate, and since the father has a predominant interest as it was acquired by himself, the son must acquiesce in the father's disposal of his own acquired property; but since both have indiscriminately a right in the grandfather's estate, the son has a power of interdiction if the father be dissipating the property" (Subodhini).

It is quite clear from these passages that a son has the right to interfere with the father's alienation in properties inherited from his father; but he has no right of interference if the property is acquired by the father.

That this property was acquired, and not inherited, according to the Mitakshara, will appear from the following passages:—

"An owner is by inheritance, purchase, partition, seizure, or finding," p. 8, chap. 1, s. 1. He then explains these words thus:—

"Unobstructed heritage is here denominated 'inheritance.' 'Purchase' is well known. Partition, intended heritage subject to obstruction," etc., p. 13, chap. 1, s. 1.

'Unobstructed heritage' is defined thus,—“the wealth of the father or of the paternal grandfather becomes the property of his sons or of his grandsons in right of their being his sons or grandsons; and that is an inheritance not liable to obstruction,” p. 3, chap. 1, s. 1.

Speaking of the right of the father to make unequal partition, the author of the Mitakshara says: “When a father wishes to make a partition, he may, at his pleasure, separate his children from himself, whether one, two, or more sons.”

“No rule being suggested (for the will is unrestrained), the author adds, by way of restriction, he may separate (for this [136] term is again understood) the eldest with the best shares; the middlemost with a middle share; and the youngest with the worst share.”

“This unequal distribution supposes property by himself acquired. But if the wealth descended to him from his father, an unequal partition at his pleasure is not proper, for equal ownership will be declared.”

These passages show that the father has no right to make unequal distribution in respect of “property descended to him from his father.” But in respect of any other property he can make an unequal distribution.

The result is, that a son becomes co-owner with his father only in a property which was inherited from the father of the latter. But a property acquired out of the income of the ancestral property is not a property inherited. It is true that if a property be purchased out of such income after the birth of the son, the latter acquires a joint interest in it. But this is so, not under any especial texts of the Mitakshara, but because he is jointly interested in the profits arising out of the ancestral property after his birth. But he has no such interest in the profits of such property before his birth.

This view of the Mitakshara law, however, is contrary to the ruling in Sudanand Mohapattur v. Soorjoomonee Dayee (11 W. R., 436). We cannot, therefore, dispose of this case upon the ground mentioned above without reference to a Full Bench; but this is not necessary, as we arrive at the same conclusion upon another ground.

Assuming that the property in dispute is ancestral, and the mortgage executed by the father is not valid against the sons, the plaintiff is still entitled to recover the debt by the sale of the ancestral joint property of the father and the sons, because, supposing that the debt was contracted for personal purposes of the father, still the ancestral property in the hands of the sons is liable for the debt, it being not proved to have been contracted for immoral purposes—Luchmun Dass v. Giridhar Chowdhry (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 855).

But it has been said that this point is no longer open for decision, the remand order of this Court having decided that [137] the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree only in the event of his establishing that the mortgage-property was the self-acquired property of the father. But we find that the learned Judges who remanded the case did not express any final opinion on it. No decree was drawn up, and we are of opinion that, under the circumstances, we can deal with the case as if it came up for decision before us for the first time.

We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Court, and direct that the plaintiff shall recover the amount claimed, with interest upon the principal at the rate of 6 per cent. from the date of the suit to this date, and with further interest at the same rate upon the aggregate sum adjudged in favour of the plaintiff from this date to the date of payment, by the sale of the mortgaged premises or any other joint ancestral property belonging to the defendant. The defendants other than Sheodyal Singh shall not be personally liable. The plaintiff is entitled to recover costs incurred in both Courts from the defendants.

Maclean, J.—Although I am disposed to concur with the Subordinate Judge in thinking that the debt secured by the mortgage of 1873 was not wholly justified by necessity, I think that the answer to the first question in Luchman Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 855) is binding upon us, and governs this case. That decision was passed after the opinion of the Division Bench was pronounced in this case on the 7th July 1879, and, under the circumstances explained in my learned colleague's judgment, we are not bound by that opinion. I therefore concur in the proposed decree rendering the whole estate, ancestral or otherwise, inclusive of the mortgaged property, liable for the debt.

As to the conflict between the cases of Sudanand Mohapattur v. Bonomüller Doss (6 W. R., 256); and Sudanand Mohapattur v. Soorjoomonee Dayee (11 W. R., 436) has reference to a point which is immaterial to the case now before us, I think it unnecessary to express any opinion as to whether property purchased from the income of ancestral property and not alienated before the birth of a son becomes vested in the latter on his birth.

Appeal allowed.

[138] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 14th September, 1881.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Ram Nirunjun Singh.....Defendant

versus

Prayag Singh.....Plaintiff.

Compromise of family disputes—Hindu Law—Agreement as to succession to property—Suit to enforce the agreement—Mistake in law.

In 1859, two brothers, A and B, filed a petition in the Collectorate, by which it was agreed that the family property should be divided in certain shares. B, who had only lately attained his age of majority, acted on his own account and as guardian of his minor brothers. In a suit by A to carry out the terms of the petition, B contended that undue advantage had been taken of his youth and inexperience; that the agreement was invalid; and that there was no consideration. It appeared that, at the time of the agreement, there was a bona fide dispute as to the rights of the parties, and no evidence of fraud was adduced.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 114 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Grish Chunder Chowdhry, Subordinate Judge of Sarun, dated the 27th February 1880.

Principles upon which the Court acts in setting aside compromises considered.

There is nothing in Hindu Law which makes illegal an agreement, entered into by expectants, to divide a particular property in a certain way, on the happening of a particular contingency.

Nor is such an agreement contrary to public policy.

Wethered v. Wethered (2 Sim., 183), Hawood v. Tooke (2 Sim., 192), Hyde v. White (5 Sim., 524) followed.

IN this case it appeared that one Thakur Singh died in February 1859, leaving him surviving Prayag Singh by his first wife, who predeceased her husband, and by his second wife, who was alive at Thakur's Singh's decease, Ram Nirunjun Singh, Jung Bahadoor Singh, and Dund Singh. On the death of Thakur Singh, a dispute arose between the brothers, Prayag Singh (the present plaintiff) as the sole son of the first wife, claiming an eight-anna share of the estate, whilst Ram Nirunjun Singh (the defendant in this suit), who, according to the plaintiff, had then attained majority, contended that Prayag's [139] share according to law was a four-anna share only. This dispute was compromised by Prayag on the one hand and Nirunjun on the other (the latter also acting as guardian of his two minor brothers), filing a petition on the 28th March 1859 in the Collectorate, setting out that it had been agreed that "Thakur Singh's estate should be divided equally between the four brothers, with the exception of certain trust-land called 'Jethans,' in which Prayag was to be allowed an excess share; and that if any of the brothers should die without issue, then the surviving brothers should succeed to his heritage in equal shares, none of them having any claim or contention against the other on the score of commensality and joint tenancy."

In 1877 Jung Bahadoor died leaving no issue, and in the following year, Dund Bahadoor also died childless; Prayag and Nirunjun thereupon both filed suits for the registration of their names as holders of their brothers' property, and both of them intervened by way of objection in the other's suit. And in 1878, the Revenue Court directed Nirunjun's name to be entered in the book of the Collectorate as the owner of the lands in question, and rejected Prayag's application, and this order was upheld on appeal.

Prayag, therefore, brought the present suit against Nirunjun, claiming a half-share in his deceased brother's estate in accordance with the terms of the agreement filed on the 28th March 1859.

Nirunjun denied the genuineness of the agreement, which he stated was never filed by him; and further stated that, on the alleged date of filing, he and his brothers were minors, and that Prayag, taking advantage of their youth, caused the petition to be fabricated and filed, and that he and his two brothers, on the death of their father, were in separate possession of their three-fourths share, living as members of a joint family. The Subordinate Judge, on the strength of the terms of the agreement, gave the plaintiff a decree.

The defendant appealed to the High Court, contending that though in 1859 he had just attained majority, yet at that time he had not mature understanding, and that an unconscionable advantage was taken of his youth and inexperience, and that the [140] stipulation in the agreement was invalid in law, and was not supported by any consideration.

Baboo Doorga Pershad and Baboo Rash Behary Ghose for the Appellant.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Hurry Mohan Chuckerbutty for the Respondent.

Mitter, J. (who, after setting out the facts of the case, continued).—This is an appeal against a judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Sarun, awarding a decree in favour of the plaintiff. The claim relates to the estates left by two persons named Dund Bahadoor and Jung Bahadoor. The plaintiff is related to them as half-brother, while the defendant is their uterine brother. Under the Hindu Law of Inheritance, it is clear, therefore, that the defendant's right is superior, but the plaintiff bases his claim on a compromise embodied in two petitions, filed by himself and the defendants respectively to the Collector of the District on the 28th March 1859.

We agree with the lower Court in the findings to which it has come. It appears that, in the year 1870, the defendant and Dund Bahadoor (who had then attained majority) for self and as guardian of Jung Bahadoor, brought a suit to recover possession of the 'Jethans' by setting aside the compromise upon the self-same grounds as are taken in the written statement in this case. That case was dismissed so far as the defendant and Dund Bahadoor were concerned. The claim of the minor Jung Bahadoor was not gone into, as it was held that he was not properly represented in the suit. It was found in that case that, at the time of the compromise, the defendant was of age, and that the petition of the 28th March 1859 was signed and presented by him to the Collector. Therefore on these two points the judgment is conclusive evidence between the parties.

As regards the objection that the agreement is not binding on the defendant because an unconscionable advantage was [141] taken of his youth and inexperience, we do not find any notice of it in the previous judgment alluded to above. If the defendant did not raise it then, it is doubtful whether he is competent to raise it now. But conceding that he can, we are unable to say, on the evidence, that this defence has been substantiated; the evidence of Hiramun and Saligram, uncle and first cousin of the parties, is very clear upon this point. They have been believed by the lower Court, and it appears to us that they are thoroughly reliable in all respects. It is proved by them that, on the death of Thakoor Singh, a dispute broke out between the parties, and that it was settled through their intervention; that advice was taken from a mukhtear, a pleader, and a person who was then employed as Shorishtadar of the Judge's Court. It is evident from the evidence that, however clear the question of the respective rights of the parties appear to us now, the pretensions of the plaintiff were not then considered as wholly unfounded. The dispute appeared to the parties and also to their friends, relatives, and legal advisers as in no way being a doubtful question of law; and the terms of the compromise were considered to be a fair solution of it, and to be conducive to the interests of both. It further appears to us, that the compromise was made on the part of the defendant not with haste and precipitancy, but with due deliberation, caution, and consideration.

Then as regards the objection that the stipulation is not supported by any consideration, we are of opinion that it is not valid. The settlement of the dispute was the mutual consideration between the parties.

It has been further said that the agreement in question ought not to be enforced against the defendant, because he was labouring under a mistake of law regarding the rights of the contending parties. Mistake of law is not a ground for setting aside a contract (see s. 21² of the Contract Act) especially of a family arrangement. This proposition of law is thus laid down in Kerr on Fraud, page 335, as extracted from several decided cases cited in a foot-note at page 336.

^{*} [Sec. 21 :—A contract is not voidable because it was caused by a mistake as to any law in force in British India, but a mistake as to a law not in force in British India has the same effect as a mistake of fact.]

"Mistake in law is not a ground for setting aside a compromise, if the parties to the transaction were in difficulty and [142] doubt, and wished to put an end to disputes and to terminate or avoid litigation. If one or more parties having, or supposing they have, claims upon a given subject-matter, or claims against each other, agree to compromise these claims, and the knowledge, or means of knowledge, of each of them with respect to the mode in which, and the circumstances under which, his claim arises, stand upon an equal footing, and there is an absence of fraud or misrepresentation, the transaction is binding, although the conclusion at which the parties may have arrived is not that which a Court of Justice would have arrived at had its decision been sought. The real consideration which each party receives under a compromise being, not the sacrifice of the right, but the settlement of the dispute and the abandonment of the claim. It is no objection to the validity of the transaction that the right was really in one of the parties only, and that the others had no right whatever. If, for instance, two parties claim adversely to each other the inheritance of a deceased person, and, in order to avoid litigation, agree to divide the inheritance, it is no ground for setting aside the agreement that only one was heir, and that the other gave up the right which he really possessed. The fact that the one may have had no claim is immaterial, if he was honestly mistaken as to his claim. It is enough if, at the time of the compromise, he may have believed he had a claim, and that the parties have, by the transaction, avoided the necessity of going to law. To render valid the compromise of a litigation, it is not even necessary that the question in dispute should really be doubtful, if the parties bona fide consider it to be so. It is enough to render a compromise valid, that there is a question to be decided between them. A compromise of doubtful rights will not be set aside on any other ground than fraud."

This is the rule of law regarding compromise generally. But that the Courts go still further in favour of upholding compromises by which family disputes are settled, appears from the following passage in the same treatise, p. 364:

"The principles which apply to the case of ordinary compromise between strangers do not equally apply to the case of compromises in the nature of family arrangements. Family [143] arrangements are governed by a special equity peculiar to themselves, and will be enforced if honestly made, although they have not been meant as a compromise, but have proceeded from an error of all parties, originating in mistake or ignorance of fact as to what their rights actually are, or of the points on which their rights actually depend."

The appellant's contention upon this point must therefore fail.

The next point urged before us is, that the stipulation in question is not enforceable in law: 1st, because it lays down a special law of inheritance for the purpose of governing the rights of the parties; and 2ndly, because it is an agreement to convey an expectancy which the law does not permit.

It has been contended on behalf of the appellant that an agreement to convey an expectancy is, according to the law administered by Courts of Equity in England, ab initio void. That this proposition is not correct will appear from an examination of the cases collected in White and Tudor's Leading Cases, Vol. I, p. 534. Such contracts are not absolutely void, but are generally closely scrutinized by Courts of Equity. The principle upon which the Courts of Equity act in these cases is thus laid down in the following passages to be found at pages 537 and 538 of the same volume:—

"In the earlier cases it was held necessary to show that undue advantage was actually taken of the situation of such person; but in more modern times it has been considered not only that those who were dealing for their expectations, but those who were dealing for vested reversions also, were so exposed to imposition and hard terms, and so much in the power of those with whom they contracted, that it was a fit rule of policy to impose upon all who dealt with expectant heirs and reversioners the onus of proving that they had paid a fair price, and otherwise to undo their bargains, and compel a reconveyance of the property purchased.

"The policy of the nation to prevent what was a growing mischief to ancient families that of seducing an heir apparent from dependence on his ancestor, who probably would have supported him, and, by feeding his extravagancies, tempting him, in his father's lifetime, to sell the reversion of that [144] estate which was settled upon him, forasmuch as this tended to the manifest ruin of families."

Then it has been said that whatever might be the rule of law in Courts of Equity in England, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in two Indian cases—that of Massanut Oodey Koowur v. Massanut Ladoo (13 Moore's I. A., 585; s. c., 6 B. L. R., 283) and Kali Chandra Chowdry v. Sib Chandra Bhaduri (6 B. L. R., 501)—have laid down the law in accordance with the appellant's contention. A careful examination of these cases will show that this point was not decided. All that the Judicial Committee say is, that it is doubtful whether, under the Hindu law, the sale of an expectancy right is valid. In the most recent case in which the same point was mooted—Dooli Chund v. Brojo Bhookun Lall (unreported, decided 4th February 1880)—their Lordships make the following observations:—

"The point on which the lower Court in part proceeded, and which has only been treated as doubtful by the High Court, namely, whether such an interest could be the subject of a sale at all, is of general importance, and one which their Lordships, who do not sit here to determine abstract questions of law, would be unwilling to determine in a case in which no decree in favour of the plaintiffs can be passed. They are certainly not prepared to affirm that such an interest can be made the subject of a sale, still less that it can be made the subject of a sale, highly speculative as any such sale must be, by a guardian acting or purporting to act on behalf of an infant. The decision of this Board, which has been cited by the Judge of the lower Court, is not precisely in point; but it goes far to show that the principle of English law, which allows a subsequently acquired interest to feed, as it is said, the estoppel, does not apply to Hindu conveyances."

The case referred to here is one of those cited above, and the rule of English law alluded to has been extended to this country by s. 18 of the Specific Relief Act.

But in our opinion the clause in the compromise upon which this suit is based is neither a special rule of succession laid down by the parties, nor a conveyance of an expectant right; but it [145] is an agreement between expectants to divide a particular property in a certain way on the happening of a particular contingency. That Courts of Equity in England enforce such agreements as the present will appear from the following passage at page 538 of Vol. I of White and Tudor's Leading Cases:—

"It may be here mentioned, that a fair agreement between expectants or their heirs, to divide the property which may be left between them or to any one of them, is not contrary to public policy, and will be enforced in equity. Thus, in the leading case of Beckley v. Newland (2 Peere Wins., 182), the plaintiff Beckley and Sir George Nowland, who had married two sisters, the presumptive heirs of Mr. Turgis, a very rich man, entered into articles whereby they agreed, that whatsoever should be by will left to either of them should be equally divided between them. Mr. Turgis, who had made and revoked several wills, at length made a will in favour of Sir George Newland, whereby he left a great personal estate to Sir George. Upon a bill being filed by Beckley for a specific performance of the agreement, it was objected, that the articles to divide a man's estate while he was living, and to share that in which the parties, at the time of making the agreement, had no manner of right, and possibly might never have, were unfair, and not to be encouraged: that it was to disappoint the will of the testator, who, in all probability, would have given nothing to either of the parties to the agreement, in case he could have foreseen that his disposition would be frustrated as soon as ever he should die. However, Lord MACCLESFIELD decreed a division of the personal estate according to the articles. 'Suppose,' he observed, 'there were two daughters, and the father should have given almost all the estate to the eldest, and nothing or very little to the youngest; if there should be such an agreement as in the principal case surely it would have been no more than what every one would have wished for.' See, also Wethered v. Wethered (2 Sim., 183), Harwood v. Tooke (2 Sim., 192), Hyde v. White (5 Sim., 524)."

There is nothing in the Hindu law which makes such agreement void.

[146] From another point of view the agreement in question seems to us to be valid. It is a promise made by each of the four brothers in favour of the others to this effect: "If I die without issue, you will receive my property in equal shares." It was made upon a good consideration as already shown. Is it invalid in law? I see no reason to hold that it is invalid. It is in the nature of contingent contracts treated of in Chapter III of the Contract Act.

Suppose a man agrees to execute a conveyance of his estate in favour of another for value received after ten years if a certain event happens. It will be fully admitted that such a contract is valid, and would be enforceable against his heirs if he dies in the meantime. Is there any difference in principle between this contract and the stipulation mentioned above. The only difference I find is as to the time after which the contract is to be fulfilled; but that is a non-essential difference.

Then it has been said that this promise was made not by Dund Bahadoor and Jung Bahadoor themselves, but by a guardian on their behalf while they were minors. Whatever difficulty there might have been in the solution of the question, if it had not arisen between the plaintiff and the defendant who acted as guardian, it does not admit of any doubt in this case. It does not lie in the mouth of the guardian to say that the contract is not binding, because he exceeded his authority in entering into it.

Upon all these grounds we think that the decision of the lower Court is correct, and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

[147] APPELLATE CIVIL.The 13th September, 1881.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE MORRIS.

Kalikristo Paul.....Defendant

Ramchunder Nag and others.....Plaintiffs.*

Appeal—Letters Patent, cl. 15—Remand Order.

At the hearing of an appeal before a single Judge of the High Court, the case was remanded to the lower Court for the trial of certain issues of fact, the case being in the meantime retained on the file of the Court.

Held, that the order was not appealable under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

IN these cases, the learned Judge before whom the appeal originally came was of opinion, that the facts had not been sufficiently ascertained in the Court below ; and he remanded the cases for the trial of certain issues, retaining them in the meantime on the file of his Court. The defendant appealed under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

Baboo Mohiny Mohun Roy, for the Respondents, took a preliminary objection that no appeal would lie.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Obinash Chunder Banerjee for the Appellant.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MORRIS, J.) was delivered by

Garth, C.J.—We are of opinion that there is no appeal against the order which the learned Judge has made in this case. He has come to no decision upon the merits, nor has he given what we consider to be a judgment within cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. In point of fact he says : “I cannot give a proper judgment in the case as it stands.”

He considers that the lower Appellate Court has misunderstood the case and has not tried the proper issues ; and, therefore, professing, as we conceive, to act under the combined operation [148] of ss. 566 and 587 of the Civil Procedure Code, he has framed certain issues, and desired the lower Court to try them, and return its findings to this Court ; meanwhile the case remains on his own file.

How far the learned Judge had power to deal in this way with s. 566 on second appeal, we are not in a position now to decide ; because, in our opinion, the order which was made does not amount to a judgment within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and is therefore not appealable.

It has been suggested to us, that the lower Appellate Court will find itself in a difficulty in deciding the issues ~~that~~ have been sent down to be tried, and will be hampered by the observations which have been made by the learned Judge in sending the case back. But we do not see any difficulty in the matter. Certain issues of fact have been framed for trial ; and the lower Court has merely to come to an honest finding upon them, and submit that finding to this Court.

Another objection is, that the now appellant before us will be at a disadvantage when the case comes back to this Court ; because, if the order ought not to have been made, he may still have to contend against the finding on the new issues.

But we do not apprehend any difficulty in that respect. As Mr. Justice FIELD is now seised of the case he will dispose of it alone when the findings are returned to this Court ; and if the present appellant is dissatisfied with the decision at which the learned Judge arrives, he will have an appeal under the Letters Patent, and may then insist, as he does now, that the case should not have been remanded.

If he should prove right in this contention, the case will be decided, I presume, as if the present order had never been made. But this is a question for the future.

This appeal, at any rate, must be dismissed, as we are of opinion that no appeal lies ; and the respondents will have their costs. This decision will govern the two analogous cases.

Appeals dismissed.

[149] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 19th July, 1881.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Ram Sahye BhukkutPlaintiff
versus Lalla Laljee Sahye and others.....Defendants.*

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Mortgage by sons of an insane person—Decree and sale—Suit by Committee to recover possession—Insanity—Exclusion from inheritance.

Although a coparcener in a Mitakshara family has a right (in a suit properly framed for that purpose) to recover the whole property from an execution-purchaser, subject to the right of the latter to have the share and interest of the debtor ascertained by partition, yet this rule will not be applicable where the suit is brought by a person who has become insane subsequent to his birth, inasmuch as no decree could be passed in his favour which could contemplate a partition between himself and the purchaser of the interest of his coparceners.

It is not necessary that madness or insanity should be congenital to disqualify a person from inheritance; a coparcener, therefore, who has become insane whilst in possession will lose his share on partition.

IN this suit the plaintiff, one Ram Sahye, a person of unsound mind (adjudged to be so by inquisition), sued through his committee to recover a two-anna share of Mouza Samrahi under the following circumstances:—

The plaintiff and his brother, Sheo Sahye, owned one-fourth or four annas of the village; and in 1846, the plaintiff, being then insane, and his brother dead, the other members of the family,—viz., the plaintiff's sons, Abhilak, Dukhil, and Dilchand (who being an infant was represented by his mother Mussamut Palasee), and Sheo Sahye's sons, Ramprosad and Ramkishwar, minors, through their mother Mussamut Balgobind Kooer,—executed a conditional sale of a portion of the family property, viz., thirteen annas one pie and a fraction of Mouza Tipra, to Lala Birj Bohari Sahye and others. These persons foreclosed the mortgage, and having, in 1851, obtained a decree for possession and mesne profits against the sons of the plaintiff and other mortgagors, caused the debtors' rights and interests in Mouza Samrahi to be sold in [150] execution of the decree in 1857. One Bhogwan Lal Sahu became the purchaser. His rights and interests in turn, when in his widow's hands, were seized and sold by auction in 1863, when the defendant Laljee Sahye became the purchaser, and he took possession.

Shortly before the defendant's purchase in 1863, that is in 1861, an attempt had been made to set aside the sale of 1857 by one Kanhai Mahton, self-constituted guardian of the plaintiff, but it failed, presumably on the ground of want of qualification on Kanhai's part. In 1871, the plaintiff's grandsons were appointed his committees under Act XXXV of 1858. From this date no steps were taken to disturb the defendant till 1878, when this present suit was brought by the committee of the lunatic to recover possession of his property.

The defendant contended, that the suit for possession without a prayer to set aside the auction-sale would not lie; that the suit was barred, more than twelve years having elapsed since the auction-sale, the purchaser and his representatives having been up to the date of suit in possession; that insanity before partition is sufficient to exclude the insane from succession; and that the plaintiff, consequently, lost what rights he had when he became insane.

The Subordinate Judge held, that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to sue to set aside the auction-sale, as the plaintiff was not a party to the suit under which the execution-sale had been held; that the suit was not barred, but came under s. 7^c of Act XV of 1877; that insanity before partition did not exclude the plaintiff from succession, according to the case of Balgobind v. Lal Bahadur (S. D. A. R. for 1854, p. 244), which case, however, was opposed to s. 10, chap. ii of the Mitakshara: but that, inasmuch as the defendant had purchased the property bonâ fide, and had no notice of the plaintiff's rights, he dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Kallykissen Sen for the Appellant.

Baboo Durga Pershad for the Respondents.

Maclean, J. (who, after setting out the facts of the case, continued): -There can be no doubt that, at first sight, Dindyal's case (L. R., 4 I. A., 247; S.C., I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198) strictly applies. We have the rights and interests of some members of the family seized and sold in execution of a decree against them. The decree resulted from a mortgage of property not covered by the sale, and the sale would, under ordinary circumstances, on the principle of Dindyal's case (L. R., 4 I. A., 247; S.C., I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198), pass no more than the rights of the debtors themselves. But we also have twenty-three years' undisturbed possession by the original purchaser and his assignee, the second purchaser, the defendant Laljee Sahye: and we shall, therefore, require

*[Sec 7:—If a person entitled to institute a suit or make an application be, at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, a minor, or insane, or an idiot, he may institute the suit or make the application within the same period, after the disability has ceased, as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in the third column of the second schedule hereto annexed.

When he is, at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, affected by two such disabilities, or when before his disability has ceased, he is affected by another disability, he may institute the suit or make the application within the same period after both disabilities have ceased as would otherwise have been allowed from the time so prescribed.

When his disability continues up to his death, his legal representative may institute the suit or make the application within the same period after the death as would otherwise have been allowed from the time so prescribed.

Disability of representative. When such representative is at the date of the death affected by any such disability, the rules contained in the first two paragraphs of this section shall apply.

Nothing in this section applies to suits to enforce rights of pre-emption, or shall be deemed to extend, for more than three years from the cessation of the disability or the death of the person affected thereby, the period within which any suit must be instituted or application made.] to be satisfied in the strictest manner that the sale is one which can be invalidated after such a lapse of time. Owing to the continuing disability of the plaintiff there can be no question of limitation, but the circumstances of the conditional sale must be very closely looked into.

Turning to the deed of the 18th May 1846, we find that it was executed by all the members of Ram Sahye's family, who described him as insane. It described the property as belonging to the executants themselves, and in fact it was evidently executed under the impression that plaintiff Ram Sahye was civilly dead, or disqualified from owning the property. This position probably could not be maintained now, as it was subsequently decided in 1854 by the Sadr Dewany Adalat in the case of Balgobind v. Lal Bahadur (S. D. A., 1854, p. 244) that he was still the owner of his property, and as we find that he was not represented in the suit of 1851, we must, in strictness, hold that the sale in 1857 did not pass his interests.

The present suit is for possession of the entire two-annas share of Mouza Samrahi, which, in 1857, belonged to the plaintiff and his sons, excluding a similar share which belonged to the sons of his brother Shoo Sahye.

It has been contended that as one of the plaintiff's sons, Abhilak Bhagut, has not been made a party to the suit, it must fail for that defect. On the plaintiff's side it is urged that Abhilak [132] has disappeared, but we attach no weight to this mere assertion. There is evidence that he took a part in the institution of the suit; but, under the circumstances, the objection is one to which we should not yield, for there is no question that Abhilak's interest in the property ceased in 1857.

The next point is, that the suit for the whole two-annas share will not lie. But Dindyal's case (L. R., 4 I. A., 247; s.c., 1 L. R., 3 Cal., 198) is clear authority for the proposition that the co-parcener can recover the whole property from an execution-purchaser, subject to the right of the latter to have the share and interest of the debtor ascertained by partition. Whether this case should be decided on the above principle depends upon the rules of Hindu law applicable to a co-sharer who lies under the disability of insanity.

The law is to be found in the Mitakshara, Part II, chap. ii, s. 10.

In verse 1, the author states, that "an impotent person, an out-cast and his issue, one lame, a madman, an idiot, a blind man, and a person afflicted with an incurable disease, as well as others (similarly disqualified) must be maintained, excluding them, however, from participation."

In verse 3, quoting from Menu, "Impotent persons and out-casts are excluded from a share of the heritage: and so are persons born blind and deaf, as well as madmen, idiots, the dumb, and those who have lost a sense (or a limb)."

In verse 6, it is said,—“they are debarred of their shares, if their disqualification arose before the division of the property. But one, already separated from his co-heirs, is not deprived of his allotment.”*

* Note, that Sir W. Jones's translation is not quite the same as Colebrooke's. The former renders the text "persons born blind or deaf, madmen, idiots." The latter, "impotent persons are excluded, and so are persons born blind, as well as madmen."

Yajñavalkya—"a madman, an idiot, one born blind."

Bachaspati—ditto.

Narada—"and one insane, blind or lame from his birth."

West and Bühler do not associate "born, or from his birth" with the preceding.

Strange says,—Jagannath makes an exception as to insanity being congenital, but does not approve.

Mayukha, chap. ix, s. 11.

[153] A consideration of these texts and of other authorities quoted in Murari Gokuldas v. Parvati Bai (I. L. R., 1 Bom., 177) and of the decisions in this Court in Dwarkanath Bysak v. Mahandranath Bysak (9 B. L. R., 198) satisfies us, that it is not necessary that madness or insanity should be congenital to disqualify a person from inheritance. We have been unable to find any reported case in which a person who has become insane while in possession has lost his share on partition; but that he does lose his right to a share seems to us clear on the authority of the 6th verse quoted above. This seems to be Mr. Mayne's opinion: see s. 408, p. 423, 2nd edition of Mayne's Hindu Law.

On this view of the case it seems to us to follow that no decree could be passed in favour of the plaintiff which would contemplate a partition between himself and the purchasers of the interests of his co-parceners. Nor is it necessary to take into consideration the right of the plaintiff's sons or other heirs to be let in, for their interests have of course vested in their creditor now represented by the defendant Laljee Sahye.

The result therefore is, that the plaintiff's suit fails on every point, and we confess that it is a matter of very great satisfaction to us that we are not compelled to disturb a state of things which has lasted for about twenty-four years, and which, but for recent developments in the law as affecting creditors of a Mitakshara family, would never have been questioned.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[I. COMPETENCY OF AN INSANE PERSON TO SUE FOR FAMILY PROPERTY—

This was denied in (1882) 8 Cal. 919, an exactly similar case. But the Allahabad High Court, when the insanity is not congenital would come to a different conclusion:—28 All. 247.

II. EXCLUSION OF THE INSANE COPARCENER FROM INHERITANCE AND PARTITION—

Insanity supervening succession is no ground for divesting property already vested:—22 Cal. 846; (1890) 14 Mad. 289.

As to whether insanity, &c., should be congenital, in these cases it was held that it is a ground of exclusion if present at the time of succession or partition:—(1882) 8 Cal. 919; (1893) 4 M. L. J. 88; (1882) 6 Ben. 564; (1884) 10 Cal. 638; 8 C. L. J. 369; (1883) P. R. 149.

The Allahabad High Court, however, held otherwise in (1905) 28 All. 247 on the ground that, where it was not congenital, the property rested at the time of birth and could not be divested by subsequent insanity, &c.]

Kali Churn Chunari and others.

Evidence—Memorandum made by Police-officer—Refreshing witness' memory—Examination of witness—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), ss. 119 and 126.

A prisoner on his trial is not entitled to insist that a memorandum made by a Police officer under the provisions of s. 119* of the Code of Criminal Procedure shall, in the course of the examination of such officer, be referred to by the latter for the purpose of refreshing his memory.

Reg. v. Uttamchand Kapurchand (11 Bom. H. C. R., 120) distinguished.

IN this case it appeared that two of the witnesses for the prosecution had made statements before the Deputy Magistrate who tried the case, which, the accused alleged, were in direct contradiction to certain statements which they had previously made to the Police inspector on a preliminary investigation made by the latter into the circumstances of the case. The accused applied to the Magistrate to send for the inspector's memoranda of the statements, in order that they should be used for the purpose of refreshing the inspector's memory as to the statements made to him. The Deputy Magistrate refused, and the accused (who was convicted) appealed to the District Judge, whose judgment, so far as is material for the purposes of this report, was as follows :—

"I think the prisoners in this case were not entitled to have the sub-inspector summoned with the diaries (Police),—that is to say, they were not entitled to have the diaries produced in this way. They were at perfect liberty to summon the sub-inspector and examine him as to statements made before him, [155] and if he had the diaries containing those statements, as noted by him, and could not remember without reference to them, it would have been proper to let him refer to them. I gather, however, that when the sub-inspector was examined, the diaries were not at hand. Subsequently they were sent for and examined by the Deputy Magistrate. and it is to be regretted that they were not before him at an earlier stage; for it seems that Bangshi and Napher, two important witnesses, made very different statements in his Court to what they are represented as having made before the Police. Appellants apparently tried to prove this by the sub-inspector, but he could not remember what they had said. The evidence of these two witnesses is conflicting on one or two material points, and I think under all the circumstances it cannot be relied on."

The District Judge considered that the other evidence on the record was sufficient to convict the prisoners, and dismissed the appeal. The accused then moved the High Court to reverse this decision, on the grounds that the inspector's memoranda should have been sent for and allowed in evidence; and that the accused had been prejudiced in their defence, because the Magistrate had recorded some of the evidence for the defence before the case for the prosecution had closed.

Mr. H. C. Mendies for the Petitioners.

The Judgments of the Court (PRINSEP and WILSON, JJ.) were as follows:

Prinsep, J.—In my opinion there is no ground for our interference in this case. The objection raised is, that the Deputy Magistrate refused to require the Police officer to refresh his memory from a statement of the witness which he had recorded under s. 119 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It does not appear that this Police officer, when examined as a witness, desired so to refresh his memory. I think that the accused was not entitled to insist upon the Police officer refreshing his memory by referring to his notes, because, under s. 126, he was not entitled himself to see these notes or any papers prepared in the course of a Police investigation; and s. 119 declares that [156] such notes shall not be treated as part of the record or be used as evidence. Reg. v. Uttanchand Kapurchand (11 Bom. H. C. R., 120) is not in point.

As regards the other objection taken, I have not been shown that, in the procedure taken by the Deputy Magistrate, the accused has been any way materially prejudiced in his defence. It seems to me rather, that the Deputy Magistrate had very good grounds for examining the witnesses for the defence on the day on which they attended, rather than deferring their examination until some of the witnesses for the prosecution, who were not in attendance, had appeared, so that they might be cross-examined. The application is therefore refused.

Wilson, J. I entirely agree with Mr. Justice PRINSEP with regard to the second point. With regard to the first point, I have a very few words to add regarding the question of refreshing the memory. I entirely agree, if I may say so, with what was decided by the Bombay Court in the case cited before us. What was decided in that case was this, that where a witness comes forward at a trial and makes a statement contradicting his statements previously made to the Police, the accused or his pleader is entitled to cross-examine him with respect to his former statement: that if he denies it may be contradicted, and that one of the ways in which he may be contradicted is by calling the Police officer before whom he made the statement, who may refresh his memory from his diary. That seems to me to be the whole of the decision of the Bombay Court. But the question now before us is not, whether the witness can be cross-examined as to his previous statement, nor whether the Police officer may be examined to contradict him, nor whether the officer may refer to his diary; but the question is, whether the prisoner has a right to insist that the diary, if not in Court, shall be sent for, or if it be in Court shall be referred to for the purpose of refreshing the Police officer's memory. I think the prisoner has no such right. I know of no authority for saying that a witness can be compelled to refresh his memory from any document, unless the [157] document is either in the possession of the party who desires to put it to the witness, or is at least such as he can insist on having produced. This is a document which the law expressly declares that the defence has no right to see. Section 126 says: "Any Criminal Court may send for the Police diaries of a case under enquiry or trial in such Court, and may use such diaries to aid it in such enquiry or trial." That is the right of the Court. "Neither the prisoner nor his agents shall be entitled to call for them, nor shall he or they be entitled to see them, merely because they are referred to by the Court. But if they are used by the Police officer who made them to refresh his memory, or if the Court uses them for the purposes of contradicting such Police officer," in either of these two cases the prisoner is entitled to see them; but until this is done he has no such right. Therefore, it seems to me that the decision of the Deputy Magistrate is correct.

I guard against saying anything as to the mode in which a Court should exercise its discretion in permitting the document to be used as indicated in the section. The question as to whether in this case that discretion has been wisely used or not is not before us.

Application refused.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE WILSON.

Alangamonjori Dabee

versus

Sonamoni Dabee.

Hindu Law—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), ss. 2, 3, and 6—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 98, 99 and 101—Gift to unborn persons.

A Hindu testator, by his will made in 1872, provided, that should he never have a son, his daughters' sons, when they come to years of discretion, should receive certain properties in equal shares ; and he directed that, if his daughters have no sons, or not be likely to have sons, then that such of his daughters as should reside in the ancestral family dwelling-house should receive a certain monthly allowance. The testator died in 1873, leaving only his daughters him surviving.

[158] Held, that the will being governed by the Hindu Wills Act, the bequest to the daughters' sons was valid.

The rule of construction laid down in the Tagore case [Jatindra Mohun Tagore v. Ganendra Mohun Tagore (9 B. L. R., 377)] does not apply to wills of Hindus made since the passing of Act XXI of 1871.

The words 'create any interest,' in the last proviso to s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act, should be read as referring only to the estate or interest which can be given, without reference to the further question to whom it can be given.

IN March 1873, one Chandranath Chowdhry died, leaving him surviving a widow, Alangamonjori Dabee (the plaintiff in this present suit), his mother Sonamoni Dabee (the defendant in the present suit), three unmarried daughters (two of whom subsequently died intestate and unmarried), and three sisters.

Chandranath left a will, dated the 28th September 1872, by which he appointed the defendant and other persons his executrix and executors, and after setting out certain properties of which he was possessed, he provided for the maintenance of his family, setting aside certain Government paper for the marriage expenses of his daughters, subject to which purpose he declared that the Government paper should belong to the plaintiff without power of sale. The material part of the will was, however, as follows : -

" God forbid, but should I never have a son, in that case my daughters sons, when they come to years of discretion, shall receive (the property) in equal shares. If any daughter be childless, or become a widow, she shall receive a monthly allowance of Rs. 10 as long as she lives and resides in my ancestral family dwelling-house, and she will be able to get for her lifetime in lieu of maintenance, property yielding Rs. 120; she will not be able to sell it; and when the daughters' sons got all the said property, my mother Thakooranee and three uterine sisters shall receive property sufficient to yield them each Rs. 10, or a total of Rs. 40, for their lifetime, in lieu of monthly allowances, and they shall be at liberty to reside in the ancestral family dwelling-house; they shall not be competent to sell the properties. My wife Alangamonjori (when my daughters' sons arrive at years of discretion) shall remain sole tenant of the whole property, and according to her own judgment pay either the above-mentioned monthly allowances in cash or give property in lieu [159] thereof, and enjoy the same as long as she lives. God forbid, but should my three daughters have no sons, or not be likely to have sons, then such of those daughters as shall reside in my ancestral family dwelling-house shall receive monthly allowances of Rs. 10 a month from the Sircary estate. When my wife Alangamonjori shall consider that her mother-in-law, sister-in-law, or daughters are above trouble, and that there is no objection, then, if there are no sons of my daughters, she will be able to sell all the said property."

On the death of Chandranath Chowdhry, his mother Sonamoni took possession of the whole of his estate, she alone taking out probate of his will.

The testator's widow brought this present suit charging Sonamoni with mismanagement and misappropriation; and in particular with the pledge of the Government paper belonging to the testator's estate, and the subsequent expenditure for her own purposes of the sums advanced, and with failure to pay the annuities, submitting that the residuary gift was void and inoperative, and that she as heiress-at-law was entitled to enjoy the estate, subject to the legacies and annuities, during the term of her natural life, and praying for the construction of the will and asking for an account.

The defendant denied the charges brought against her.

Mr. T. A. Apear and Mr. R. Mi'ra for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Allen for the Defendant.

Wilson, J.—This is a suit in which the plaintiff asks to have the will of one Chandranath Chowdhry construed, and to have certain provisions of that will declared invalid, and for other relief.

The will was made in 1872. The testator died in 1873, leaving no sons but the plaintiff, his widow, three unmarried daughters, the defendant his mother, and other female relatives.

By his will he appointed the defendant and others executrix and executors, of whom the defendant alone obtained probate. He gave monthly allowances in money to various female relatives, including Rs. 4 to the plaintiff, his widow, and Rs. 2 to each [160] daughter while unmarried, which, on her marriage, was to go to the plaintiff; or if she lived elsewhere than in the family dwelling-house, Rs. 4 to the plaintiff for life. Certain Government papers he appropriated for the marriage expenses of his daughters, if necessary, and subject to this the plaintiff was to have the papers, but without power of sale, and to provide from the interest for certain poojahs. The plaintiff was also to enjoy the income of accumulations, when invested in Government paper or immoveable property, as directed by the will.

Then follow the most material parts of the will:—"God forbid, but should I never have a son, in that case my daughters' sons, when they come to years of discretion, shall receive the properties in equal shares. If any daughter be childless or become a widow, she shall receive a monthly allowance of Rs. 10 as long as she lives and resides in my ancestral family dwelling-house, and she will be able to get for her lifetime, in lieu of maintenance, property yielding Rs. 120; she will not be able to sell it; and when the daughters' sons get all said property, my mother Thakooranee and three uterine sisters shall receive property sufficient to yield them each Rs. 10, or a total of Rs. 40, for their lifetime, in lieu of monthly allowances, and they shall be at liberty to reside in the ancestral family dwelling-house. They shall not be competent to sell the property. My wife Alangamonjori Dabee, when my daughters' sons arrive at years of discretion, shall remain in sole tenancy of the whole of the property, and according to her own judgment pay either the above mentioned monthly allowances in cash or give property in lieu thereof, and enjoy the same as long as she lives. God forbid, but should my three daughters have no sons, or not be likely to have sons, then such of those daughters as shall reside in my ancestral family dwelling-house shall receive monthly allowances of Rs. 10 a month from the Sircary estate. When my wife, Alangamonjori Dabee, shall consider that her mother-in-law, sister-in-law, or daughters are above trouble, and that there is no objection, then, if there are no sons of my daughters, she will be able to sell all the said property."

The case came on for settlement of issues, and it appeared that the principal controversy was as to the validity of the gift to [161] the daughters' sons. The subsequent gifts were also said to be void as being dependent on this as the principal gift.

The important question is, therefore whether the gift is valid.

Under the Hindu law in force, prior to the Hindu Wills Act, it is clear that such a gift to unborn persons could not take effect. But the will in this case was made after the Hindu Wills Act came into operation, and is governed by it. And the question, whether such a gift is good under that Act, has not, so far as I have been able to ascertain, been the subject of judicial decision.

Section 2 of the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) applies to the wills of Hindus and others made on or after the 1st September 1870, and a large number of sections of the Succession Act. Amongst these are ss. 98, 99, 100, and 101.

Section 98 is as follows:—"Where a bequest is made simply to a described class of persons, the thing bequeathed shall go only to such as shall be alive at the testator's death. Exception.—If property is bequeathed to a class of persons described as standing in a particular degree of kindred to a specified individual, but their possession of it is deferred until a time later than the death of the testator by reason of a prior bequest or otherwise, the property shall at that time go to such of them as shall be then alive, and to the representatives of any of them who have died since the death of the testator."

Section 99 is as follows:—"Where a bequest is made to a person by a particular description, and there is no person in existence at the testator's death who answers the description, the bequest is void. Exception.—If property is bequeathed to a person described as standing in a particular degree of kindred to a specified individual, but his possession of it is deferred until a time later than the death of the testator by reason of a prior bequest or otherwise, and if a person answering the description is alive at the death of the testator, or comes into existence between that event and such later time, the property shall at such later time go to that person, or if he be dead, to his representatives."

Then s. 100 says:—"Where a bequest is made to a person not in existence at the time of the testator's death subject to a [162] prior bequest contained in the will, the latter bequest shall be void, unless it comprises the whole of the remaining interest of the testator in the thing bequeathed."

And s. 101:—"No bequest is valid whereby the vesting of the thing bequeathed may be delayed beyond the lifetime of one or more persons living at the testator's decease, and the minority of some person who shall be in existence at the expiration of that period, and to whom, if he attains full age, the thing bequeathed is to belong."

Of these sections, s. 98, which is taken from Part xi ("Of the Construction of Wills") deals, amongst other things, with the construction and operation of a gift to a class, some of whom come into existence between the death of the testator and the time when the gift takes effect. See illustrations (d), (e), (g), and (h).

Sections 99, 100 and 101 are taken from Part xii ("Of Void Bequests").

Section 99, by the exception, deals with gifts to persons described as standing in a particular degree of kindred to a specified individual; and in express terms it declares, that such a gift is to take effect, if any person answering the description comes into existence between the death of the testator and the time to which possession is deferred.

That section further deals with two cases of deferred gift,—one where the gift is deferred by reason of a prior bequest ; the second, when it is deferred otherwise. Illustrations (b), (c), (d) are examples of gifts deferred by reason of a prior gift ; illustration (e) of a gift deferred otherwise.

The section, if it stood alone, would absolutely and without restriction empower a testator to give property to unborn persons standing in any particular degree of kindred, provided those persons come into existence before the gift is to take effect in possession.

The gift now in question falls within this rule. It is a gift to the unborn children of his three daughters, to take effect when those children attain their majority.

Sections 100 and 101 embody restrictions upon the power conferred by s. 99. By s. 100, a gift to an unborn person subject [163] to a prior bequest is void, unless it be an absolute gift of the whole remaining interest of the testator. There is no prior gift in this case, so that this section does not apply.

Section 101, which is general in its terms, invalidates any bequest, which delays the vesting beyond a life or lives in being, and the minority of the donee, who must be living at the close of the last life. •

This section governs such a case as the present. But its requirements are complied with.

If, then, these sections are to take effect, it follows that the Hindu law, as established in the Tagore case, has been materially altered, and that the gift now in question is valid.

The difficulty arises from s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act. The last proviso of that section is as follows :—“ Nothing herein contained shall authorize any Hindu, Jain, or Sikh, or Buddhist to create in property any interest which he could not have created before the 1st day of September 1870.”

It was argued that the interest given to the sons of the testator's daughters is an interest created in property, that it is one which could not have been created before the Hindu Wills Act took effect, and that, therefore, it is still void by reason of the last proviso.

The meaning thus sought to be put upon the words ‘ create any interest ’ is one which, I think, they may fairly bear. But if the construction contended for be correct, then the whole of s. 99, except the first clause, is inoperative. Section 100 is entirely so. Section 101 is inoperative, because it falls far short of the restrictions existing without it. Now all these form parts of s. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act ; therefore, if the argument be sound, the Legislature has in s. 2 enacted an elaborate set of provisions, and in s. 3 it has abolished them all. And in s. 6 it has again referred to them as law, and laid down rules for their construction. If the Legislature has seen fit to legislate in this fashion, I am bound, of course, to accept the fact, and to administer the law accordingly. But I am equally bound to avoid such a conclusion if I can. I am bound to follow the rule adopted and approved by the Queen's Bench Division as a “settled canon of construction,—namely, that a Statute ought to be so construed that, if it can be [164] prevented, no clause, sentence, or word shall be superfluous, void or insignificant. See Reg. v. Bishop of Oxford, (L. R., 4 Q. B. D., 261). If, therefore, a meaning can be found for the words ‘ create any interest ’ which will give reasonable effect to those words without overruling the sections embodied in s. 2, that meaning ought to be adopted. In my opinion such a meaning may well be placed upon the words in question. Amongst the many classes of questions arising upon gifts and wills, there are most prominently questions as to the subject-matter of the gift, questions as to the estate or interest sought to be given, and questions as to the capacity of the donee to take.

Under the first head are all such questions as the power to deal with debutter property, or of a member of a Mitakshara family to take a gift.

Under the second head fall such questions as that of the power to create an estate, such as is dealt with in the Tagore case,—namely, an estate-in-tail male, the power to give an estate which shall never be descendible to any one of another gotra, or an absolute estate, but without power of partition, or without power of sale, or gift, or which shall be liable to forfeiture, if any inheritor shall marry a widow or give a widow of his family in marriage. Of some of these there are examples to be found in the books, and of all of them I have more than once met with examples in this Court.

Under the third head, the capacity of the donee, fall such questions as the validity of gifts to unborn persons.

It seems to me that the third head may properly be, and indeed logically ought to be, regarded as quite distinct from the second.

The Tagore case had not been before the Privy Council when the Hindu Wills Act was passed. But it had been before the Court of appeal; and the judgment of PEACOCK, C.J., in that case throughout took the question of the estate which may be created by will as an entirely distinct question from that of who may take a gift under a will.

The Legislature, had they intended broadly to say that no disposition by will should be valid after passing of the Hindu [165] Wills Act, which was not so before, could easily have said so in a few words as has been done with the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 149.² But they have not done so. They have, in s. 3, dealt with the property which may be bequeathed and with the interest that may be created, but have said nothing about the person to whom a bequest may be made.

These considerations tend to show that the words 'create an interest' are to be read in the narrower sense as referring only to the estate or interest which can be given without reference to the further question to whom it can be given. And as that view of s. 3 gives a meaning to the words of that section at the same time that it allows the sections embodied in s. 2 to take effect, I think it ought to be adopted.

That the objection in the present case is purely to the persons and not to the interest in the narrower sense is plain from this; that if the same gifts had been given in the same terms, but the daughters' sons had been living at the testator's death, the payments would have been good without the aid of the Statute. See the cases of Sorjemonnee Dassie v. Denobundo Mullick (9 Moore's I. A., 135), explained in Tagore v. Tagore (9 B. L. R., 377).

Saving-clause.

* [Sec. 149 :—Nothing herein contained shall—

- (a) validate any testamentary disposition which would otherwise have been invalid;
- (b) invalidate any such disposition which would otherwise have been valid;
- (c) deprive any person of any right of maintenance to which he would otherwise have been entitled; or
- (d) affect the rights, duties, and privileges of the Administrator-General of Bengal, Madras or Bombay.]

I must, therefore, decide against the plaintiff upon the question of the validity of the gifts to the daughters' sons and the other gifts said to be dependent upon such gift.

She has, however, an interest under the will in respect of her annuity, the Government paper, and the interest accumulations, which is sufficient to entitle her to an account of the testator's estate.

Until the account is taken, none of the other questions as to the present rights of the parties can usefully be dealt with.

Costs of all other questions are reserved.

[166] APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The 16th September, 1881.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM AND MR. JUSTICE BROUGHTON.

In the matter of the Empress on the prosecution of the Bank of Bengal.....Petitioners

Presidency Magistrates' Act (IV of 1877), ss. 167, 170—" Person affected by an Order"—Application for copy of Order and Depositions—Refusal—Specific Relief Act (I of 1887), ss. 7, 45.

All prosecutors whose charges are dismissed by the Presidency Magistrate are affected by the order of discharge, and are, therefore, entitled under s. 170 of the Presidency Magistrates' Act to obtain copies of the order made by, and of the depositions taken before, the Magistrate.

THIS was a rule moved for under the Specific Relief Act and under s. 170 of the Presidency Magistrates' Act, calling upon the Presidency Magistrate to show cause why he should not give to the Bank of Bengal, through their constituted attorney, Mr Macnair, copies of the depositions of the witnesses and the orders recorded in the matter of the Bank's complaint against one Dinonath Roy, who had been discharged by the Magistrate.

Mr. Bonnerjee showed cause against the rule.—The Court has no right to issue an order of this sort under the Specific Relief Act. Section 7 says, that specific relief cannot be granted for the mere purpose of enforcing a penal law. Section 45 does not give power to the Court to compel a Magistrate to give copies. Before an order can be made under chap. viii certain conditions referred to therein must be complied with. The words 'property, franchise,' &c., in section 45 refer to civil, not criminal, matters. Nine chapters out of the ten composing the Specific Relief Act relate to civil matters. The absurdity of such an order as is now asked for is shown by s. 48, which says, that "every order under chap. viii shall be executed, and may be appealed from, as if it were a decree [167] made in the exercise of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court." Can it be said that this order, if granted, could be appealed against by the Magistrate? The words "personal right," in s. 45, refer to civil matters. The Bank is clearly not entitled to an order under the Specific Relief Act. Nor can the Bank be said, under s. 170 of the Presidency Magistrates' Act, to be a person affected by an order under the Act, and therefore entitled to be furnished with a copy of the order and depositions. Sections 167—182 deal with the question of appeals. Section 170 allows a person affected by the order to obtain copies of the order and copies of depositions on payment of costs. Taking the position of the sections, "the person affected" is the person who only is affected by the order of the Magistrate. Section 180 says, "that there shall be no appeal from any order of a Presidency Magistrate except in the cases provided for by this Act, or by any law for the time being in force." Here a complaint is made against the Magistrate; he has been asked under s. 170 to give copies, and he has refused: there is no power to appeal against such an order of refusal. Nor is the Bank of Bengal "a person affected by the order"; no order for compensation has been made against the Bank; the right to set the Local Government in motion in order to get an appeal does not make the Bank "a person affected."

* Criminal Miscellaneous Case, No. 27 of 1881, against the order of P. J. Marsden, Esq., Chief Presidency Magistrate, dated the 10th September 1881.

[BROUGHTON, J.—If, Mr. Advocate-General, you can show us that the Bank is "a person affected by the orders," we shall have no difficulty in applying the Specific Relief Act.]

The Advocate-General (The Hon. G. C. Paul) in support of the rule.—Comparing s. 170 of the Presidency Magistrates' Act with s. 276 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it appears that, so far as orders of Criminal Courts go, a copy is furnishable to a person affected by the order of the Court. Section 276 of Act XI of 1874 does not apply to Calcutta; but s. 170 of the Presidency Magistrates' Act has evidently been taken from that section. There is no public prosecutor in this country. Section 276 lets in the prosecutor, and therefore s. 170 of the Presidency Magistrates' Act ought to have the same effect. We could move the Local Government under s. 167 to allow us to [168] appeal. How can any person bring a suit for malicious prosecution, unless he can obtain the order of discharge and the depositions? We are, therefore, affected by the refusal to give us copies.

The Judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and BROUGHTON, JJ.) was delivered by Broughton, J.—The Chief Presidency Magistrate has been called upon to show cause why he should not give to the Bank of Bengal copies of the depositions of the witnesses and the orders recorded in the matter of their complaint made against Dinonath Roy, who has been discharged by the Magistrate.

This rule is moved for under the Specific Relief Act and under s. 170 of the Presidency Magistrates' Act.

Two questions arise in this matter: first, whether, under s. 170 of the Presidency Magistrates' Act, the Bank of Bengal, as the prosecutor in the case, have a right to the copies; and second, whether, supposing that they have a right, and this right has not been acceded to by the Magistrate, the High Court can proceed, under s. 45 and the following sections of the Specific Relief Act, to order the Magistrate to fulfil his duty.

Although the rule has been moved for under the Specific Relief Act, it appears to us to be beyond doubt that the provisions of s. 15 of the High Courts Charter Act enable the Court to make the order upon the Magistrate, if it ought to have been made. But we think that s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act is wide enough in its terms to apply to a case like this. Section 7 of the Specific Relief Act has been referred to as showing that "specific relief cannot be granted for the mere purpose of enforcing a penal law." It cannot be said, however, that an application to the Magistrate to grant copies of depositions and orders is an application "for the mere purpose of enforcing a penal law." Copies may be required for many purposes.

Then the application must "be made by some person whose property, franchise, or personal right would be injured by the forbearing or doing (as the case may be) of the said specific act." If the prosecutor has a right to the copies, his personal [169] right would be injured if they were refused. And it does not appear that the applicant has any other specific and adequate legal remedy.

Then the question is, whether, under s. 170 of the Presidency Magistrates' Act, the applicant is entitled to copies of the depositions and order. Section 170 enacts that,—"If any person affected by an order passed under this Act desires to have a copy of such order, or of any deposition or other part of the record, he shall, on applying for such copy, be furnished therewith, provided that he pay for the same, unless the Magistrate, for some special reason, thinks fit to furnish it free of cost." It is contended that this does not apply to a prosecutor, because the Crown is the prosecutor, and not the private individual. There is no doubt that, technically, the Crown is the prosecutor. But supposing we were to say, that on that ground the private individual cannot apply for copies of depositions, the consequences may be very serious. It is said it would be very inconvenient if the Magistrate were to be called upon to furnish those copies in every case. However great the inconvenience may be, it would be a much more serious thing if he were justified in refusing an application for copies. As far as the inconvenience goes, it has not been shown that it would be very great in any case, as the section provides that copies are to be furnished on payment of costs for the same, unless the Magistrate specially directs copies to be furnished without payment. But supposing the prosecutor, having failed in his prosecution, is not allowed to get copies of the depositions, the consequences may be most serious to him. Take for instance the case in which a prosecutor charges the accused with defamation, or with bringing some charge against him which seriously affects his character, and suppose for some reason which left the character of the prosecutor perfectly clear and untainted, the accused person were to be discharged, then, if the prosecutor were unable, under this section, to get copies of the depositions, it might be said that he had prosecuted a man for charging him with an infamous crime, and yet that the accused had been acquitted, and people would conclude that the prosecutor had been guilty of the crime imputed to him. We think this [170] single instance would show that the consequences of refusing copies would be most serious. No distinction can be made between such a case as this and any other case; the section is perfectly general. A prosecutor who charges another with dishonesty, as in this case, if he cannot sustain the charge, might suffer an unjust imputation, unless by producing a true record of the proceedings he could show that his action was bonâ fide. No distinction ought to be made between the prosecutor in one case and in another. All prosecutors whose charges are dismissed by the Magistrate are, in our opinion, affected by the orders dismissing them, and are entitled under s. 170 to copies of the order and depositions.

The rule will be made absolute.

We direct that the copies be given to Mr. Macnair, attorney of the prosecutors.

Rule made absolute.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 15th December, 1881.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE WILSON.

Buddree Doss and another
versus

Hoare, Miller, & Co.

Application to add a defendant Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1887), ss. 28 & 32- Judicature Act, Order xvi, Rules 3 and 6.

The plaintiffs brought a suit to recover certain sums of money from the defendants, due to them under certain contracts which they alleged had been entered into by themselves, and one A D, as agent of the defendants, and asked for an account.

The defendants, in their written statement, contended that there was no privity of contract between themselves and the plaintiffs, and denied the alleged agency of A D.

The plaintiffs, before the hearing, applied to the Court to have A D added as a party-defendant under ss. 28 and 32 of Act X of 1877, asking to be allowed to amend their plaint so as to pray for relief in the alternative against the original defendants or the said A D, or both against the original defendants and the said A D.

[171] Held, that, under s. 28, they were entitled to the order on the authority of the case of Child v. Stenning (L. R. 5 Ch. D., 695).

ONE Buddree Doss, and his son, a minor, through Buddree Doss, instituted a suit against the firm of Hoare, Miller, & Co. to recover the sum of Rs. 8,441, and for an account.

The plaintiffs stated that they carried on business as merchants and bankers under the name of Buddree Doss Bungshidhur, and had business transactions with Hoare, Miller, & Co., in the course of which transactions they contracted to sell, and sold and delivered to the defendants, various goods, and received various sums of money for such goods, both plaintiffs and defendants agreeing to pay any damage occasioned by any breach of contract on their respective parts; that such transactions were carried out, as far as the defendants were concerned, by and through the instrumentality of one Aushotosh Dutt, who acted as agent in all purchases made by the defendants, and in all matters concerning their contracts, —the last of such transactions being the sale and delivery by the plaintiffs to the defendants of 1,800 tons of Cawnpore wheat at Rs. 2-14 per bazar maund: that the plaintiffs found difficulty in obtaining payment of the balance of the price of the wheat, and also of a sum of Rs. 17,876, the balance of the price of certain other goods sold and delivered to the defendants; and that, in February 1881, the plaintiffs and the defendants, through Aushotosh Dutt, adjusted accounts, and it was found that a sum of Rs. 8,441 was due to the plaintiffs, which amount included a sum of Rs. 1,200, being damages in respect of a contract under which they, the defendants, had, on the 3rd March 1880, agreed to take the delivery of 200 tons of wheat from the plaintiffs, and to pay the sum of Rs. 18,637 to a firm, of which the plaintiffs, together with one Bhingraj, were the only members, and which contract had been transferred by the last-mentioned firm to the plaintiffs' firm.

The plaintiffs, therefore, brought their present suit against Hoare, Miller, & Co., for the purposes above mentioned.

The defendants put in a written statement, alleging that, in the several transactions mentioned by the plaintiffs, Aushotosh [172] Dutt had not acted as their agent, but as principal, there being no privity of contract between the plaintiffs' firm and themselves in respect of such transactions; that the course of business between them had been that the defendants ordered goods, and Aushotosh Dutt supplied them, the latter making such arrangements with bazar dealers as he thought fit; and they further denied the adjustment of account.

Before the suit came on for final hearing, the plaintiffs applied to the Court to make Aushotosh Dutt a party-defendant to the suit, and to amend their plaint by praying for relief in the alternative against the original defendants, or against Aushotosh Dutt, or both against the defendants and Aushotosh Dutt.

At the hearing of the motion, the plaintiffs stated that the transactions mentioned in the plaint had been carried on by themselves and the defendants, through the latter's agent, Aushotosh Dutt, who had been for ten years the head assistant of the native establishment of Hoare, Miller, & Co.

Mr. Bonnerjee in support of the Plaintiffs' application.

Mr. Stokoe against the application. —This application is made under ss. 28 and 32 of the Code. Now s. 28 of the Code corresponds with rule 3, order xvi of the Judicature Act, with the addition of the words "in respect of the same matter." The case of the Honduras Railway Co. v. Lefevre (L. R., 2 Exch. D., 301) points to the fact, that rule 3 relates to the joinder of defendants in the original writ, and although a similar application to the present was in that case granted, it was granted under rule 6 of order xvi. There is no section in the Civil Procedure Code which answers to rule 6. [WILSON, J. —There is the case of Child v. Stenning (L. R., 5 Ch. D., 595), which is decided expressly on rule 3.] Section 32 of the Code authorizes the addition of parties whose presence is necessary to enable the Court to adjudicate and settle all questions involved in the suit. Section 28 states who may be joined as defendants in the original writ. Unless it can be shown that the presence of Aushotosh Dutt is necessary [173] before the suit can be decided, he cannot be added; see Mahomed Badsha v. Nicol Fleming (1. L. R., 4 Cal., 355).

Wilson, J.— I think there is no doubt whatever that the order ought to be made. The application is made under ss. 28 and 32 of Act X of 1877.

As a general rule, if the plaintiff applies in proper time, he is entitled to have a person added as a defendant, if he had been entitled to join him originally. But, under s. 28, "all persons may be joined as defendants against whom the right to any relief is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative, in respect of the same matter." Here the claim is against Hoare, Miller, & Co. If the facts turn out that Hoare, Miller, & Co. were the principals for whom Aushotosh Dutt, whom it is sought to add, was acting, they can claim to have their remedy in the alternative.

I should have said so without authority, but there is express authority in the case of Child v. Stenning (L. R., 5 Ch. D., 695).

I think, therefore, that the order should be made as asked for. Costs should be costs in the cause.

Application granted.

Attorney for the Plaintiffs : M. Camel.

Attorney for the Defendants : Bishnauth Dutt.

[174] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 25th August, 1881.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Protap Chunder Doss.....Judgment-Debtor

versus

Peary Chowdhrair.....Decree-Holder.

Execution of decree Mode of execution Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) ss. 235 and 260.

Upon an application under s. 205 of Act X of 1877 (Civil Procedure Code) for the execution of a decree, which directed the judgment-debtor forthwith to pull down and remove such portion of a wall as had been erected by him upon the wall of the decree-holder, the mode in which the assistance of the Court was required to be given was stated in column (j) of such application to be by giving the decree holder possession of his wall by pulling down the wall erected thereon. The Court directed an order to issue to the Nazir to remove the judgment-debtor's wall from the top of the decree-holder's wall.

* Appeal from Appellate Order, No. 181 of 1881, against the order of R. Rampini, Esq., Officiating Judge of Dacca, dated the 28th May 1881, affirming the order of Baboo Jodoo Nath Ghose, Sudder Munsif of that district, dated the 2nd April 1881.

Held, that the decree-holder's application could not be granted in that form, and that he should have asked the assistance of the Court to be given in the way provided for by s. 260* of Act X of 1877, by the imprisonment of the judgment-debtor, or the attachment of his property, or both.

Held also, that the Court was wrong in passing the order it had, but that it should have pointed out to the decree-holder the manner in which he should have asked the assistance of the Court to be given and the remedy to which he was entitled; and that, upon such amended application being made, the proper course to pursue was to serve a notice on the judgment-debtor, directing him to comply with the order contained in the decree within a time to be fixed by such notice; and that if he failed to comply with such order within the time so limited, the Court might then, at the instance of the decree-holder, make an order, either for the judgment-debtor's imprisonment, or for the attachment of his property, due regard being had to the provision of s. 260 in the latter case.

Held further, that the High Court, in special appeal, should not vary the order for execution which had been passed in such a way as to give the decree-holder that relief for which he did not ask.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the judgments.

[175] Mr. Branson and Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen for the Appellant,
The Advocate-General (The Hon. G. C. Paul) and Baboo Bussunt Coomar Bose for the Respondent.

The Judgments of the Court (PRINSEP and FIELD, JJ.) were as follows:—

Field, J. The facts of this case are briefly as follows:—

There are two properties, named Rungmehal and Tripuli. Rungmehal was first in existence as a one-storied building. Tripuli was subsequently erected in the form of a two-storied house. The original eastern wall of Rungmehal was built, as many native walls are built in this country, receding inwards gradually from the basement or foundation. When the Tripuli building was erected, the western side wall of the Tripuli house followed this recession or inclination of the eastern wall of the Rungmehal building, so as to lean upon this and rest partly over the original site thereof, that is upon the top of the one-story, of which the Rungmehal building originally consisted. From that point, the western side wall of the Tripuli building receded gradually inwards towards the east, so that the top of this side wall of the upper story of the Tripuli building lay somewhat to the east of the bottom of the same wall, where it rested upon the top of the wall of the lower story. Subsequently, Rungmehal and Tripuli, which had originally belonged to one and the same owner, passed into the hands of separate proprietors, and the Rungmehal proprietor proceeded to erect a second story on the top of the Rungmehal building, which (as already stated) was originally a one-storied building. In erecting the eastern side-wall of this upper storey, the Rungmehal owner followed the line of inclination of the upper story

* [Sec. 260:—When the party against whom a decree for the specific performance of a contract, or for restitution of conjugal rights, or for the performance of any other particular act, has been made, has had an opportunity of obeying the decree or injunction and has wilfully failed to obey it, the decree may be enforced by his imprisonment, or by the attachment of his property, or by both.

No attachment under this section shall remain in force for more than one year, at the end of which time, if the judgment-debtor has not obeyed the decree, the property attached may be sold and out of the proceeds the Court may award to the decree-holder such compensation as it thinks fit and may pay the balance, if any, to the judgment-debtor on his application.]

of the Tripuli house. The effect of this was, that the eastern side-wall of the Rungmelhal building dovetailed into, infringed, and rested upon the western side-wall of the Tripuli building. The Tripuli proprietor then brought an action denying the right of the Rungmelhal owner to rest the side-wall of his upper story upon the Tripuli side-wall; and [176] the result of that litigation was, that the Tripuli owner obtained a decree in this Court. The essential part of that decree, for the purposes of the matter now before us, is this, that "the defendants do forthwith pull down and remove such portion of the wall as has been erected by them upon the west wall of the plaintiff's house." An application was made for execution of that decree, and in column (j) of the application made under s. 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the mode in which the assistance of the Court was required was stated to be by giving them possession of the western wall of the Tripuli house by pulling down the wall erected thereupon.

Now, we are clearly of opinion, that the assistance here required was a form of assistance which could not be granted in the terms in which it was asked, regard being had to s. 260 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section provides, that when the party against whom a decree for the performance of, or abstinence from, any particular act has been made has had an opportunity of obeying the decree, and has wilfully failed to obey it, the decree may be enforced by his imprisonment, or by the attachment of his property, or by both. However, that application was received and acted upon in the form in which it was made, and out of this error has arisen the whole of the proceedings which form the subject of appeal now before us. The Munsif made the following order: "Order will accordingly be issued to the Nazir to remove the judgment debtor's wall off the top of the decree-holder's wall of the first story, according to the directions in the High Court's judgment." We think that this was an improper order. In the first place, it was an order not warranted by the law, and it is exceedingly undesirable that the Nazir of a Civil Court should be sent out to perform an act of the kind, for the performance of which he cannot be supposed to be fitted, which, if resisted, might lead to an unseemly breach of the peace and serious subsequent consequences. An appeal was preferred against the Munsif's order, and the District Judge confirmed it on appeal. We think that the course which should have been pursued was this. It should have been pointed out to the decree-holder that the provisions of s. 260 of the Code of [177] Civil Procedure, contain the procedure to be followed for executing a decree of this kind; and it should have been explained to him that the application presented under s. 235 should have asked that particular assistance which, under the provisions of s. 260, could have been granted. It is now pressed upon us by the learned Advocate-General, that we ought ourselves to make the order in the terms of s. 260. Section 577 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, that the judgment in an appeal may be for confirming, varying, or reversing the decree. We think however in this case that, as the decree-holder did not ask for that assistance which he might have had under the provisions of the Code, we ought not to vary the order for execution in such a matter as to give him that for which he did not ask. We think that the proper order to make is to set aside the order made by the Munsif and affirmed by the District Judge, and to remand this case to the lower Appellate Court with this direction, that he allow the decree-holder, within a time to be fixed by the Judge, to amend his application for execution so as to bring it within the terms of s. 260. In order to prevent further difficulty, we deem it right to point out, that the proper course to be pursued, under this section, is to serve a notice upon the judgment-debtor, calling upon him to comply, within a time to be fixed by such notice, with the order contained in the decree; and if the judgment-debtor, within such time, fails to comply with such order, the Court can then, at the instance of the decree-holder, make an order either for the judgment-debtor's imprisonment or for the attachment of the property, due regard being had to the provisions of the section in the latter case. We think, therefore, that the order of the Munsif must be set aside, and this case remanded in order that these directions may be complied with.

Prinsep, J.—The decree passed in this case contained an order to the defendant to perform a certain act,—that is, to pull down a wall to the extent to which he had erected it upon the plaintiff's wall. The decree-holder and the lower Courts have misunderstood that order so as to justify the Court of Execution acting itself to carry out the terms of the decree on the failure of the judgment-debtor, defendant, to perform the act which he [178] was ordered to perform. The alternative however, is, as declared by s. 260 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that if, after sufficient notice, the party against whom the decree has been passed fails to perform the particular act ordered, the decree may be enforced by the imprisonment of the judgment-debtor, or by the attachment of his property, or by both. In the present instance it is impossible to execute this decree in the manner in which the decree-holder has sought to execute it, and inasmuch as the lower Courts should have corrected the error of the decree-holder in his original application to execute the decree by requiring him to amend that application, I think that we may fairly now allow such amendment to be made so as to bring the application within the terms of s. 260.

Appeal allowed and case remanded.

The Official Trustee of Bengal.

Attempt to enforce deed—Limitation (Act IX of 1871), sched. ii, cl. 93—Wasilat.

In a suit in which the plaintiff had obtained a decree and the defendant had appealed to Her Majesty in Council, a third party applied to be added as a respondent, on the ground that, by registered deed, the plaintiff had conveyed to him a share of the property decreed. The defendant objected that the deed was a forgery; but an order was made that the applicant should be joined as a respondent, without deciding whether the deed was or [179] was not genuine, and “without prejudice,” in the words of the order, “to any action or proceeding by the defendant.

Held, that the setting up the deed and insisting upon it for this purpose constituted “an attempt to enforce” it, and that a suit brought, more than three years after the making of that order, by the appellant against the party so joined as a respondent, to have the deed set aside as being false and fabricated, was barred by limitation under Act IX of 1871, sched. ii, cl. 93.*

* [Art. 93:—

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time when period begins to run.
To declare the forgery of an instrument issued, or registered, or attempted to be enforced.	Three years ...	The date of the issue, registration or attempt.]

A decree declared the plaintiff entitled to the possession of land with wasilat from a date named, directing "the amount thereof to be ascertained on local enquiry," and to bear interest from the date of its ascertainment until payment, without saying more.

Held, that the decree-holder was entitled to wasilat until the date of delivery of possession to him.

Semble.—It was not necessary for the judicial officer who made the enquiry to hold a Court on the spot.

THE first of these appeals was from a decree of a Divisional Bench of the High Court, L. S. JACKSON and TOTTENHAM, JJ. (28th May 1878), upholding a decree of the Judge of the Furreredpore District (31st December 1877). The suits in which these were appeals rose out of the acquirement by Nicholas Peter Pogose, deceased, now represented by the respondent, of rights over the estate of Najamun Nissa Begum, the deceased wife of Fakharuddin Mahomed Ahsan Chowdhry, the appellant. Najamun Nissa, who died in December 1864, obtained a decree, dated 27th July 1864, against her husband, for the possession of zamindari lands and patni mahal in the Furreredpore District, together with wasilat. Questions in execution of decree as to the amount of the latter caused the first of these appeals.

On the 17th of July 1864, Najamun Nissa executed to N. P. Pogose a deed of hibbabil-e-waz, or gift for consideration, granting him a six-anna share in the property for which that decree was, in the same month, obtained. A question, whether limitation barred a suit disputing the execution of this deed, occasioned the second appeal.

On the death of Najamun Nissa, her husband, as a sharer according to the Mahomedan law, took one-fourth of her estate; and thus, to the extent of two and-a-half annas of the property decreed in her favour on 17th July 1864, the decree was satisfied. Her only son, Kafiluddin, took one-half of the residue, [180] or three annas and fifteen gandas of the decree, a share which, on his death in 1867, devolved on his heirs, of whom one was his father, Fakharuddin. His sisters, Kamarun Nissa and Samsun Nissa, took each one-fourth of the residue, or one anna seventeen and-a-half gandas of the decree. From Kamarun Nissa, N. P. Pogose bought her interest in the decree; and he purchased further rights over the estate of Najamun Nissa by attaching, bringing to sale in execution of a decree, and buying a decree made against her in 1860 (appealed to the Privy Council; see 12, Moore's L. A., 65). In the execution-proceedings taken thereupon there came before the Court, Aluminissa, widow of Kafiluddin, and the heirs of his sister Samsun Nissa, who had died, besides Fakharuddin; and questions as to the regularity of these proceedings formed the subject of the other, the third, or consolidated appeal.

By an order of the High Court, dated 28th February 1866, N. P. Pogose was admitted to appear as respondent with the heirs of Najamun Nissa on the proceedings then being taken in appeal to Her Majesty in Council against the decree of the 27th July 1864. That appeal was dismissed on the 20th December 1873.

On the 9th August 1876, N. P. Pogose executed a deed, whereby he assigned all his property, including his interest in the decree of the 27th July 1864, to the Official Trustee of Bengal, in trust for his creditors, with a reversionary trust for his own estate. In October 1876, N. P. Pogose died; and, in the further proceedings in the above matters, the Official Trustee represented him.

The questions in the first appeal were --Whether the respondent, as holder of the decree of the 27th July 1864, was entitled to wasilat down to the time of the delivery of possession under the decree, or only for the period for which it had been estimated in the schedule of the plaint filed in the suit; and whether, if due for the whole period, it had been properly assessed.

After referring to the words of the decree, which were, that "the plaintiff be declared entitled to possession of the land mentioned in the kabinnama, together with wasilat from the commencement of Srabun; the wasilat to be ascertained by [181] local inquiry, and to bear interest at twelve per cent. from date of the ascertainment of the amount due to date of payment," L. S. JACKSON, J., said: "On referring to the answer of the defendant in the suit of 1864, in that suit it appears that, in fact, he did not deny the correctness of the sum alleged by the plaintiff to be due as wasilat for the specific period there mentioned. That being so, and the plaintiff and the defendant, therefore, not being really at issue as to that particular amount, it is clear that there was nothing to be enquired into or ascertained in execution, if the Court only meant to give wasilat for the particular time mentioned in the plaint. I think that what the Court intended was to give wasilat from the date of dispossession down to the date of the recovery thereof. This interpretation of the decree had already been come to by Mr. Geddes, the District Judge, before whom the execution-proceedings first came. It was impugned before myself and my brother WHITE on a former appeal, and we, though not formally, certainly by implication, expressed our approval of that construction, and after a full consideration of the point my present colleague and I now see no reason to arrive at a different conclusion. I think, therefore, that the decree of this Court, which reversed the decree of the Court below in the original suit, was not silent as to mesne profits, and that the Court intended to exercise, and did exercise, the discretion vested in the Courts by s. 196 of the repealed Code of Civil Procedure, and allowed the plaintiff mesne profits in continuation of what she had claimed in the plaint down to the time of the recovery of possession. It is conceivable and probable that the learned Judges who delivered judgment on that occasion desired to save the parties further endless litigation; and we can see from the concluding words of the Judicial Committee in Sadasira Pillay's case (15 B. L. R. 383 : s. c., L. R., 2 Ind. App., 219), how extremely unwilling their Lordships would be that a just claim should be defeated upon an objection thought of at a late period of the proceedings,—namely, upon an objection of limitation brought forward at that time. On the first of these points, therefore, we are distinctly against the appellant.

[182] "The second question is as to the amount of wasilat. Now, what we have before us is the case of a defendant against whom judgment has been given for possession of immovable property with wasilat. That judgment was given by the High Court so long ago as the year 1864. He knew full well that he had this liability for mesne profits hanging over his head, but at the same time he retained in his possession a large share of the same property as to which the plaintiff had obtained a decree. In that state of things he tells the Court that, except accounts for the past five years, every fragment of accounts and materials for arriving at a conclusion as to the value and profits of this large property has entirely disappeared. He has, in every way, not only withheld information, but resisted attempts to obtain information. Having taken that course, he now asks us to set aside on appeal a decision as to the assessment of mesne profits arrived at by the Court below, on what appears to me to be unusually good and ample materials. In cases where the decree-holder has had far less materials to lay before the Court than the Official Trustee has laid before us in the present case, we have constantly held that everything must be presumed against the wrong-doer, and that it does not lie in his mouth to object to the insufficiency of materials which he might, if he had chosen, have rendered more complete. We think that there were ample and trustworthy materials to enable the Court below to come to the conclusion at which it has arrived, and we decline to open the question of calculation. The appeal is dismissed with costs."

On this appeal Mr. J. F. Leith, Q. C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., Mr. R. V. Doyne, and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe for the Respondent.

For the appellant it was argued: First, that as the Court executing the decree of 1864 had no power to execute it for wasilat, except so far as the decree itself might authorize such execution, and as that decree had stopped short of awarding wasilat down to the date of possession delivered, the High Court had erred in allowing execution for wasilat up to the latter date. The powers of a Court in execution of decree had been exceeded. [183] Reference was made to Mosoodun Lal v. Bhekaree Singh (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 602; s. c., 6 W. R., Mis. Rul., 109), and Sadasiva Pillai v. Ramalinga Pillai (15 B. L. R., 383; s. c., L. R., 2 Ind. App., 219). Secondly, the enquiry as to wasilat had not been duly carried out; and there had not been a local enquiry as directed in the decree.

For the respondent it was contended, that as the High Court, under s. 196 of Act VIII of 1859, had power to make an order for wasilat to be paid up to the time of re-delivery of possession, and had in the decree used language showing that it meant to do full justice in its award in this respect, the construction put by the High Court upon the decree should prevail. The more limited construction would be forced and incorrect. Reference was made to Dhurm Narain singh v. Bundhoo Ram (12 W. R., 75), and Bunsee Singh v. Mirzu Nuzuf Ali Beg (22 W. R., 328); and also to the order made in Raja Lilanand Singh v. Maharaja Luckmesser Singh (13 Moore's I. A., 490, at p. 496).

Mr. J. F. Leith, Q. C., having replied, their Lordships postponed judgment till after the hearing of the other appeals.

The second of these appeals was preferred against a decree of the same Divisional Bench (27th May 1878), upholding a decree of the Judge of the same district (28th March 1877).

The suit in which this appeal was made was brought in the year 1875 by Fakharuddin Mahomed Ahsan Chowdhry against Pogose to set aside, as false and fabricated, a deed of hilibabil-ewaz alleged to have been granted by the plaintiff's wife, who died in December 1864, to the defendants, on the 17th July 1864.

On the merits there was no decision, the defendants having relied on the defence that Act IX of 1871, sched. ii, cl. 93 barred the suit, in consequence of an "attempt to enforce," within the meaning of that clause, having been made in 1864. The facts of the case and the judgment, which was the subject of this appeal, are reported at page 209 of the Indian Law Reports, 4 Calcutta Series.

[184] Mr. J. F. Leith, Q. C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe for the Respondents.

For the appellant it was argued, that the proceedings taken by N. P. Pogose, in order that he might be added as a respondent in the appeal heard by the Judicial Committee in 1873, did not constitute "an attempt to enforce," within the meaning of Act of 1871, sched. ii, cl. 93.

Their Lordships did not call on the counsel for respondents; and postponed judgment till after the hearing of the third appeal.

The last two appeals (which were consolidated and heard as one) were preferred from two decrees which proceeded on one judgment of the same Divisional Bench (8th May 1878), upholding the orders of the Subordinate Judge of Furrceepore (3rd September 1877).

The appellants in each of these appeals had, by petition to the Subordinate Judge of Furrceepore, objected to the validity of auction-sales of their property on the 21st February 1876. The sales had taken place on the application of N. P. Pogose, who, having died in 1876 after conveying his estate in trust to the Official Trustee of Bengal, was represented by the latter. N. P. Pogose having brought the property to sale had himself become the purchaser.

The appellant in one suit represented Kafiluddin, the son of Najamun Nissa; and the appellants in the other, were two sons and a daughter of Samsun Nissa, her second daughter, abovementioned. The separate appeals of these appellants, who were dissatisfied with the order of the Subordinate Judge, were rejected by one judgment of the High Court. The Judges of the High Court were of opinion, that the objectors had not shown that substantial injury had been caused to them by reason of a material irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale.

On this appeal Mr J. F. Leth, Q.C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon appeared for the Appellants.

[185] Mr. T. H. Coore, Q.C., Mr. E. V. Doyle, and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe for the Respondents.

Their Lordships' Judgment in all the appeals was delivered by Sir R. P. Collier.—The circumstances which give rise to these appeals are as follows:—Najamun Nissa Khatun, a Mahomedan lady, in 1861, brought a suit against her husband for the purpose of obtaining possession, together with mesne profits, of certain lands which she alleged to have been conveyed to her by her husband by a deed described as a kabinnama in lieu of prompt dower. The first Court decided against her. The High Court, on the 27th of July 1864, reversed that decision, and gave her what she claimed. She describes her suit as brought "to obtain possession of the zamindaries and patni talooks mentioned in the schedule given below, and the mesne profits thereof," claiming mesne profits in a very general manner. It is true that, subsequently, valuing the suit, and for that purpose describing her claim in the schedule, she speaks of her claim for mesne profits for the period of dispossession,—that is to say, some eighteen months before the institution of the suit,—as amounting to 48,400 rupees. The High Court, in giving judgment in her favour, on the 27th July 1864, observed:—"It is unnecessary to make further comment on the case of the plaintiff, which I think fully proved to the extent of the factum of the kabinnama and her right to the absolute possession of the lands therein mentioned, together with wasilat and interest from the commencement of Srabun 1267, when she was taken from her husband's house." The decree is drawn up in pursuance of that judgment, and is in these terms: "It is ordered and decreed by the said Court, that the decree of the lower Court be, and the same is, hereby reversed, and the plaintiff is declared entitled to possession of the land mentioned in the kabinnama with wasilat from the commencement of Srabun 1267; the wasilat to be ascertained by local inquiry, and to bear interest at twelve per cent. from date of the ascertainment of the amount due to date of payment." From that judgment and decree of the High Court, the husband, Ahsan Chowdry, appealed to this Board; but that appeal [186] did not come on for hearing till the year 1873. In the meantime, the lady being dispossessed, and probably being in pecuniary difficulties, had recourse to a money-lender; and on the 17th July 1864, ten days before the written judgment, but after an oral judgment had been pronounced, she executed a hibbanama, or deed of conveyance, to Pogose, a money-lender, of a six-anna share in the decree, in consideration of an advance by him, which probably, among other reasons, she would require for the protection of her interest in the appeal. In 1865, Pogose applied, upon the strength of this hibbanama, to be admitted as a respondent in the appeal. That application was opposed by Ahsan Chowdry, but finally an order was made in 1866, permitting Pogose to be added as a respondent, but declaring it to be open to Ahsan Chowdry to bring an action or any proceeding he might think fit, at any time, for the purpose of setting aside this hibbanama, which Ahsan Chowdry disputed.

The appeal then came on before this Board in 1873, and the judgment of the High Court was affirmed. In 1875, Pogose appears to have taken some steps to obtain execution of the decree; but he made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and, having died not very long after, he was and is still represented in this suit by the Official Trustee, who is now the respondent. The Official Trustee, in 1876, applied for execution, claiming to be put into possession of a seven-anna share and a little more, and subsequently claiming to be put into possession of a thirteen-and-a-half-anna share.

It requires to be explained how the rights of Pogose had grown from the six annas to the thirteen-and-a-half-anna share. It appears that the lady, the original plaintiff, had died; thereupon her property devolved upon her heirs, being her husband, two daughters, and a son. Pogose, in 1874, bought, by private contract, the share of one of the daughters; he further bought a decree against the mother, which bound her property, and on the strength of that decree he applied for a sale of that portion of it to which the son and the daughter were entitled as heirs of their mother; and under that decree the property was put up for sale in February 1876. Objections were made to the sale on the part of those who then represented the son and the [187] daughter, on the ground of various irregularities. The first Court found there was no irregularity; but the High Court found there was, and remitted the case to the Court below for the purpose of ascertaining whether the plaintiffs had proved that they had sustained material damage on account of this irregularity, which it was necessary for them to prove in order to set aside the sale. Both Courts have found that no such damage was proved. An appeal has been brought from the decision of the High Court upon that question, and it is the subject-matter of the third appeal.

The second appeal arises in this way: Ahsan Chowdhry, in 1875, brought a suit for the purpose of setting aside the hibbanama of 1864, whereby Pogose claimed the six annas which were by it conveyed to him. The Official Trustee appeared as defendant in that suit, and he was satisfied to rest his defence upon two points of law, one limitation, and the other res decisa. The latter point has been decided against him; but both Courts have decided in his favour on the question of limitation, and that is the subject of the second appeal.

The subject of the first appeal is this: It has been decided by the High Court that the plaintiff, representing Pogose, who claimed in right of the original plaintiff, Najamun Nissa, was entitled to wasilat or mesne profits up to the time of the delivery of possession, it being contended by the defendant that he was only entitled in this suit to wasilat up to the time of the commencement of the suit; further questions have been raised as to the amount of the wasilat, and whether there ought not to have been a local inquiry other than that which was instituted. These questions are the subject-matter of the first suit.

Such being the circumstances giving rise to the appeals, it appears to their Lordships convenient to take the last suit first. The only question in that suit, —viz., whether or not those who sought to set aside the sale have proved that they have been materially injured by any irregularity which occurred in the notification of it, —is a pure question of fact. It has been decided by both Courts, and their Lordships, on looking through the judgments of those Courts, have come to the conclusion, that no evidence of a satisfactory character was adduced on [188] the part of the objectors to the sale, proving, what it lay upon them to prove, that they had sustained any material damage or injury. In the absence of any such proof the judgments are right, and their Lordships are of opinion that that appeal should be dismissed.

The question in the second appeal arises on the Statute of Limitation, and the point is a narrow one. The deed sought to be set aside, and which is impugned as a forgery, was executed in the year 1864. The suit to set it aside was brought in the year 1875. The question is, whether the suit was in time or not. The Act bearing upon this matter, which was in force at the time of the institution of the suit, namely, in 1874, is Act IX of 1871, and the part of the second schedule referring to the subject-matter is cl. 93, which is in these terms: —“Description of suit: To declare the forgery of an instrument issued or registered or attempted to be enforced;” for which the period of limitation is three years. This suit, undoubtedly, was a suit of that description, for in the plaint the plaintiff declares that the deed was false and fabricated. The words applicable to such a suit are: —“Time when the period begins to run; the date of the issue, registration, or attempt.” “Registration or attempt” must be construed with regard to the words in the former paragraph, that is, the date of the registration, or the date of the attempt to enforce the deed. Both Courts have held, and their Lordships think rightly, that when Pogose, in the year 1865, set up this deed, and insisted upon it for the purpose of being made a respondent in the suit, and when that application was opposed by Ahsan Chowdry, and, the parties being heard, Pogose succeeded in his attempt to become a respondent, without prejudice in the words of the order, to any action or proceeding to be brought by Ahsan Chowdry, that was an attempt to enforce the deed, and from that date limitation ran. Their Lordships observe further, that the words of the section refer also to “the date of registration”: and looking at the deed, they find it was registered two days after it was made. It was made on the 17th, and registered on the 19th; and, therefore, it seems to their Lordships that the Statute of Limitation doubly applies. On these grounds, [189] therefore, they will advise Her Majesty that the judgment in this case be affirmed.

The plaint has been already read in the first case, and their Lordships are of opinion that it is at all events open to the construction that the plaintiff intended to claim wasilat up to the time of delivery of possession, although, for the purpose of valuation only, so much was valued as was then due; but be that as it may, they are of opinion that, under s. 196 of Act VIII of 1859, it was in the power of the Court, if it thought fit, to make a decree which should give the plaintiff wasilat up to the date of obtaining possession. Section 196 is in these terms: —“When the suit is for land or other property paying rent, the Court may provide in the decree for the payment of mesne profits or rent on such land or other property from the date of the suit until the date of delivery of possession to the decree-holder, with interest thereupon at such rate as the Court may think proper." The words of the judgment are: "The plaintiff is declared entitled to possession of the land mentioned in the kabinnama, with wasilat from the commencement of Srabun 1267; the wasilat, to be ascertained by local inquiry," and so on. Wasilat, by law, is demandable up to the time of possession; and the question is, whether the Court intended to give to the plaintiff that amount of wasilat to which he was undoubtedly entitled by law in this action, or whether they intended to cut his claim for wasilat into two, and to give him in this suit so much only as accrued up to the time of the commencement of the suit, and to leave him to bring a separate suit for the rest. According to that interpretation, they could not have intended to give him wasilat up to the time of the decision, which was three or four years after the commencement of the suit. It appears to their Lordships that the more reasonable construction of this document—which undoubtedly might have been clearer—is, that the Court, with a view to carrying out the object of the legislature, namely, the prevention of unnecessary litigation and multiplication of suits, intended in this suit to give, with possession, that wasilat which was by law claimable up to the time of possession. The view which their Lordships take of the decree is much confirmed by [190] the two cases—Dhurm Naram Singh v. Baidhoo Raur (12 W. R., 75), and Bunsee Singh v. Mirza Nuzuf Ali Beg (22 W. R., 328), to which their attention has been called, wherein it would appear that the High Court have, dealing with words identical or extremely similar, given them the interpretation that 'possession with wasilat' means wasilat up to the time of possession being delivered. Their Lordships cannot but fear that, if they were to hold the contrary, they would throw doubt upon many cases which have been decided and acted upon in India.

Their Lordships do not feel at all pressed by the authority of several cases to which their attention has been called, the doctrine of which has been affirmed by this Board,—namely, that where a decree is silent on the subject of interest or of wasilat, interest or wasilat cannot be added in the course of execution. But here the decree is not silent on the subject of wasilat. On the contrary, it is expressly mentioned; and the term "possession with wasilat" appears to them reasonably to bear the construction which has been put upon it by the High Court, not only in this, but in many other cases. Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that the High Court were right in deciding as they did, that wasilat is claimable up to the time of delivery of possession.

The course of litigation in this case was this: Some time after the claim for execution on behalf of Pogose, the matter came before Mr. Geddes, a local Judge, who took the view of the judgment which has been expressed. An appeal was preferred against his ruling to the High Court, and it was confirmed by the High Court. Subsequently, Mr. Peterson, who had succeeded Mr. Geddes as local Judge, took the opposite view,—namely, that wasilat was only claimable up to the time of the institution of the suit. The matter was sent back to Mr. Peterson, and he was directed to ascertain the amount of wasilat up to the time of the delivery of possession; and his judgment, giving upwards of seven lacs of rupees, was affirmed by the decision now under appeal. The High Court in their judgment state:—"The questions which we are called upon to determine in this appeal are two: Firstly, whether the decree-[191] holder,—that is to say, the person who now stands in the shoes of the original plaintiff, in whose favour the decree has been made,—is entitled to recover mesne profits upon the estate which was the subject of dispute down to the period of obtaining possession, or only for the precise period for which wasilat is estimated in the schedule attached to the original plaint: and the second is, whether, supposing that the decree-holder is entitled to wasilat for the whole period, the Court below has assessed it upon a proper principle and upon sufficient materials." With regard to the second question there are two concurrent findings of Mr. Peterson, the Subordinate Judge, and that of the High Court: and under those circumstances, their Lordships have come to the conclusion, that the finding cannot be disturbed. However, a third point has been taken before their Lordships, which, as far as appears from the judgment of the Court, was not taken in the argument below, although it is raised in the grounds of appeal. That point is, that although wasilat may be due and obtainable in this suit up to the time of delivery of possession, and the calculation of the amount may be right, still, inasmuch as the decree directed the calculation to be made by a local inquiry, and there has been no local inquiry,—that is to say, an inquiry held by a Judge or an amin sitting within the boundary of the land, the judgment cannot stand. Whether the judgment is to be reversed upon that ground, or the case is to be sent back for another local inquiry, has not been very clearly put before their Lordships; but they are of opinion that there is nothing in the point. The judgment of the High Court undoubtedly directs that the wasilat should be ascertained by local inquiry. An inquiry was instituted by the Judge of the district. The Judge made an order that Alsan Chowdry should appear before him, and should produce his jumma-wasil-baki papers, which would show the amount of his receipts and expenditure with regard to this property, and would be the best possible evidence, if trustworthy, which could be obtained, and worth more than the examination on the spot of any number of ryots. He appealed against that order to the High Court, but he made it no ground of appeal that the Judge ought to have gone to the spot, or have sent [192] a commissioner to the spot, or that he ought to have sat on some portion of his land. He made no objection of that kind, and it appears that he attorned, as it were, to the jurisdiction, and sent in certain papers (which were deemed highly unsatisfactory), thereby taking his chance of a decision in his favour by the Judge. It would be, therefore, too late for him to object to the inquiry being conducted as it was, if he could ever have objected. Their Lordships infer from the judgment that no such point was seriously argued before the High Court, probably because the counsel in India felt it to be untenable.

For these reasons, their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss this appeal, together with the other appeals, with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 8th September, 1881.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Hubibul Hossein and others.....Defendants

versus

Mahomed Reza and others.....Plaintiffs.*

*Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), cl. 5, sub-cl. (a) of s. 7*
Subordinate tenure-holder—Assessment of court-fee in suit for possession of a fractional part of an estate—Rejection of plaint—
Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 54.

The assessment of the court-fee in a suit by a subordinate tenure-holder to recover possession of a definite portion of an entire estate paying a permanently settled annual revenue to Government, should be made under the first part of sub-division (a), cl. 5 of s. 7 of the Court Fees Act.

A plaint can only be rejected under s. 54 of Act X of 1877 before it is registered.

THIS was a suit to recover possession of nine dams twelve kanees of land out of an entire estate recorded as No. 3305, the [193] Government revenue of which was Rs. 36-12. The estate No. 3305 represented eighteen dams and a fraction of another larger estate consisting of sixteen annas, and the plaintiffs sought to recover this share on the strength of their mokurari title, stating that they were not the proprietors of a definite fractional share of the estate, but were simply mokuraridars under the proprietor of such a share. The value of the land, which was the subject-matter of dispute, was stated in the plaint to be Rs. 400; but the court-fee paid upon the plaint was assessed upon an amount which was ten times the proportionate Government revenue payable for the definite share of the estate. The plaint was registered without any objection. The defendants, in their written statement, took an objection that the court-fee paid was not sufficient; and that the plaintiffs were bound to pay the court-fee upon Rs. 400, which was the market-value of the land as stated in the plaint.

Several issues were framed by the Munsif, and evidence was taken upon all of them; and when the case was finally taken up for disposal, the Munsif held, that the court-fee paid was not sufficient under the Court Fees Act, and that the plaintiffs were bound to pay the court-fee upon the full market-value of the subject-matter of the suit, namely, Rs. 100, and ordered the plaintiffs within two days to pay the court-fee on the sum of Rs. 400 after deducting what they had already paid. The plaintiffs refusing to make up this deficiency, the Munsif rejected the plaint under s. 54 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Against this order an appeal was preferred by the plaintiffs, and the District Judge reversed the order of the Munsif, holding that the plaintiffs had paid the court-fee required under the Court Fees Act, and directed the plaint to be received, remanding the case to be tried on the merits.

Against the order of the District Judge the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Sandel for the Appellants.

Baboo Saligram Singh for the Respondents took the preliminary objection, that a second appeal against the order of the District Judge would not lie.

[194] The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J. (who, after stating the facts, continued as follows) : It seems to be doubtful whether the order in question falls within the definition of the word 'decree' in s. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 2 says : "'Decree' means the formal expression of an adjudication upon any right, claim, or defence set up in a Civil Court, when such adjudication, so far as regards the Court expressing it, decides the suit on appeal." The only way in which the order of the District Judge may be brought within the definition is by holding that it is an adjudication on the right of the plaintiffs to have their suit heard upon the plaint with the court-fee which they have paid, and that it was that right which was determined by the District Judge. But it seems to me that it would be a strained construction of the words of the definition given above. However, without expressing a decided opinion on this point, it seems to us that the appeal must fail on the merits.

The law with reference to the payment of the court-fee in a case like this is to be found in cl. 5, s. 7 of the Court Fees Act. That clause says : "In suits for the possession of land, houses, and gardens, according to the value of the subject-matter; and such value shall be deemed to be, where the subject-matter is land," and so on : the several sub-divisions of the clause show how different kinds of land are to be assessed for the purpose of the court-fee. Looking to those sub-divisions it appears to us that the present case comes within the first part of sub-division (a), which is to the effect, that "where the land forms an entire estate, or a definite share of an estate, paying annual revenue to Government, and such revenue is permanently settled, then the stamp-fee is to be assessed on ten times the revenue so payable." It is contended on behalf of the appellants that as the suit was not brought by the proprietor himself but by the mokuraridars, this clause does not apply. We are of opinion that there is no force in this contention. If it was the intention of the Legislature, that where a suit is not brought by a proprietor of an entire estate but by subordinate tenure-holders, such as mokuraridars, &c., there should be a different way of [195] assessing the court-fee, that would have been clearly expressed in one of the clauses of this section. Referring to all the clauses, it is evident that there is no separate provision for a suit like the one which is now under our consideration, that is, a suit by a subordinate tenure-holder. Therefore, it is clear that the present case comes within sub-division (a) of clause 5, s. 7 of the Court Fees Act. It cannot be said that this is not a claim for land which forms a definite share of an estate paying annual revenue to Government, such revenue being permanently settled. All that is said in support of the order of the Munsif is, that the suit is not brought by the proprietor himself; but that is no ground for holding that the claim does not come within s. 7.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the order of the District Judge is correct. In conclusion, we would remark that the Munsif was clearly in error in directing the plaint to be rejected after having registered it and taken evidence upon the issues recorded by him. A plaint can only be rejected under s. 54 before it is registered.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The 6th September, 1881.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

In the matter of the Petition of Radonath Shaha.

The Empress
versus Radonath Shaha.

*Excise Act (Beng. Act VII of 1878 ss. 53, 59, and 64 Beng. Act IV of 1881),
s. 2 -Selling spirituous liquor without license -Reasons for finding of Magistrate in case of conviction to be recorded Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 227, cl. (h).*

A Magistrate, in cases where no appeal lies, is bound to record a brief statement of his reasons for convicting an accused.

[196] Where a person is arrested, and certain charges are entered against him in the Police book, he should not, on the day of trial, be called upon to meet other charges without previous intimation being given to him of the additional charges.

ONE Radonath Shaha was arrested on the 12th July 1881, and charged with selling (under s. 53 of Beng. Act VII of 1878) and having in his possession (under s. 64) imported spirituous liquors without a license.

The prisoner was released on bail, and the case postponed until the 25th July 1881, when the Magistrate tried him summarily on the following charges :—

- 1st.—Refusal to produce license (s. 59).
- 2nd.—Illegal sale of imported liquors (s. 53).
- 3rd.—Illegal possession of imported liquors (s. 64).
- 4th.—Breach of condition of license (s. 59).

The prisoner pleaded not guilty, but was found guilty under ss. 53 and 59, and fined Rs. 100.

*Criminal Motion, No. 223 of 1881, against the order of Major W. Hopkinson, Cantonment Magistrate of Barrackpore, dated the 25th July 1881.

No statement, however, of the grounds for his conviction was recorded, as required by s. 227, cl. (h) of Act X of 1872. The prisoner applied to the High Court under the revisional section.

Baboo Jadub Chunder Seal for the petitioner contended, that the conviction under s. 61 was bad, as that section had been repealed by s. 2 of Beng. Act IV of 1881; and that the whole conviction was illegal, no grounds having been given for the conviction as required by s. 227, cl. (h), of Act X of 1872.

The Judgments of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) were as follow :—

Mitter, J. -The petitioner, it is said, owns a wine-shop in the village of Chundun Pookur, within the jurisdiction of the Police station of Barrackpore. On the night of the 12th July he was arrested by Inspector A. H. Prichard, and taken to the Police-station. There the Inspector entered a charge against him for selling and having in possession English liquor without a license. He was released on bail, being directed to appear before the Magistrate of Barrackpore the next day, the 13th July, to answer these charges. On his application, [197] the case was postponed to the 25th July, on which date the Magistrate tried him summarily for the following offences:—

- 1st. -Refusal to produce license (s. 59).
- 2nd. -Illegal sale of imported liquors (s. 53).
- 3rd. -Illegal possession of imported liquors (s. 64).
- 4th. -Breach of condition of license (s. 59).

The petitioner pleaded not guilty to all the charges. But he was found guilty under ss. 53 and 59 of the Act, and fined Rs. 100. It is not stated by the Magistrate whether both the charges under s. 59 were established, or only one of them. Under cl. (h) of s. 227 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate is required to make a brief statement of the reasons for the conviction. But no such statement has been recorded. The trial has been indeed too summary, the record and the register kept under s. 227 furnishing no information as to the ground upon which the conviction is based.

Now, as far as the charges one and four are concerned, we think the Magistrate should not have tried the petitioner for them. He was arrested, and a charge was entered against him for selling and having in his possession imported liquor without a license. He would, therefore, be prepared to meet these charges alone. It does not appear that, between the 12th of July and the 25th of that month, when the trial took place, the petitioner had any intimation that he would be called upon to meet other charges. In our opinion, therefore, he should not have been tried for the first and the fourth charges mentioned above.

As to the charge under s. 61, probably the Magistrate was not aware that that section has been repealed by Act IV of this year, s. 2. There remains the charge under s. 53 for the sale of imported liquor without a license. In the absence of the reasons for the conviction, it is impossible for this Court to judge how far this conviction is legal. From the explanation submitted by the Magistrate, it does not appear that there was any evidence of the sale of imported liquor. Be that as it may, we think that, under the circumstances of this case, the conviction should be quashed on the ground that the Magistrate omitted to record briefly the reasons for his finding which he is required to do under s. 227 of the Criminal Procedure Code. We accordingly set it aside, and direct a re-trial of the petitioner [198] for the alleged offence of selling imported liquor without a license under s. 53. The question, whether the petitioner will be entitled to the refund of the fine or not, will depend upon the result of the re-trial.

Maclean, J.—The proceedings as recorded in the register kept under s. 227, Act X of 1872, are not sufficient to indicate that the conviction is supported by proper evidence. The brief statement of the reasons for conviction required by cl. (h) is entirely wanting, and the explanation contained in the Magistrate's letter of 19th August is not satisfactory.

In the first place it appears, that the accused, so far from not producing a license, produced two. They were, however, for sale of country spirits. It is not alleged that the accused had a license himself for sale of imported liquor. So he could not be punished for not producing it.

The next charge is for selling imported liquor illegally. The record does not show how this charge was proved. But it appears that one Dwarkanath Ghose produced a license, and stated that the accused was his servant. This the Magistrate says he does not believe, having regard to something that passed in his Court in May last. That record is not evidence in this case; but if it were, the presumption is, that the quarrel that occurred there has been followed by an alliance between the two men. If Dwarkanath is selling spirits at two shops under score of one license, he should be proceeded against for any offence he thus commits; and the accused, if he abets that offence, may also be proceeded against as an abettor.

Possession of imported liquor must be dealt with under some section other than s. 64, which has been repealed by Beng. Act IV of 1881.

The last charge is of a breach of the condition of his license. The record does not specify the condition broken.

Lastly, the conviction should have stated which of the offences was punished, and by what amount of fine, as the penalty under s. 59 cannot exceed Rs. 50 for one offence.

I concur in setting aside the conviction and directing the Magistrate, if he thinks necessary, to re-try the accused.

Conviction set aside.

[On Appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.]

Hindu Law—Alienation of impartible estate—Family custom.

Impartibility of an inheritance does not, as a matter of law, render it inalienable.

The owner of an estate which descends as an impartible inheritance is not, by reason of its impartibility, restricted to making grants or gifts enuring only for his own life. The power of alienation resting upon the general law, inalienability, if existing, must depend upon family custom in this respect, and of such custom proof is required.

Unnud Lal Singh Deo v. Maharaj Dheraj Guru Narain Deo (5 Moore's L. A., 82) followed.

In the case of a titular raj, of which the lately deceased Raja had made a mokurari patta, or grant in perpetuity, of part of the zamindari lands thereto belonging, in favour of a younger son, it was found, that the only custom proved was, that the raj estate descended to the eldest son to the exclusion of the other sons, and that there was no proof of a custom prohibiting such an alienation as that made by the grant.

Held, that the mokurari grant was not invalidated by reason of the raj estate being by custom impartible.

APPEAL from a decree of a Divisional Bench of the High Court (8th April 1879), affirming a decree of the Officiating Judicial Commissioner of Chutia Nagpur (6th May 1878), affirming a decree of the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum (30th July 1877).

The zamindari and titular raj of Patkum, in Zilla Manbhum, in Chutia Nagpur [subject to the provisions of Reg. X of 1800] was an ancient principality, descending [200] as impartible inheritance by primogeniture.

The late Raja having died in 1873, the raj was held by his eldest son, the appellant, with whom was joined as a party Paresnath Ghose, the manager of his raj estate, appointed under "The Chutia Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, 1876."

The respondent was the younger half-brother of the appellant, and to him the deceased Raja, his father, had, in 1868, made a grant of certain villages belonging to the raj estate. This grant gave rise to the question now in dispute.

Two instruments, of which the genuineness was not questioned, were executed by the Raja, one on the 30th April, and the other on the 30th November 1868. The first was a pon-baha mokurari patta, or permanent grant for consideration, from generation to generation, in consideration of Rs. 1,200 paid, granting to the respondent two villages in the pargana of Patkum, whereof one was stated to have been previously granted to him for his maintenance. The second was a khorposh mokurari patta, or permanent grant for maintenance (lit. for food and raiment). Both are set forth in their Lordships' judgment.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by the appellant to set aside those grants, on the ground that they were contrary to the custom of the family, which was, that younger brothers (called 'hakim' and 'konwar,' and the rest 'lals,' according to the order of their birth) should receive suitable maintenance from their eldest brother, the Raja, for the time being, and not by the gift of the parent Raja, deceased. It was also alleged that any grant for a longer period than the life of the Raja could be set aside by his successor.

The defence insisted on the validity of the grant. The first part of the custom above stated was established, and no question arose on this appeal as to the second, or 'khorposh' patta; three Courts in India having concurred in finding that, by the custom of this family, any property of the raj estate so granted by a father for maintenance was resumable by the succeeding Raja. As to so much of the decree as was based on this finding, no appeal from the decision of the High Court was preferred.

* A Regulation for preventing the division of landed estates in the Jungle Mehals of the zillah of Midnapur and other districts. Section 2 enacts, that "Reg. XI of 1793 shall not be considered to supersede or affect any established usage which may have obtained in the Jungle Mehals of Midnapur and other districts by which the succession to landed estates (the proprietor of which may die intestate) has hitherto been considered to devolve on a single heir to the exclusion of the other heirs of the deceased."

[201] With regard, however, to the 'pon-baha' mokurari patta of 30th April 1868, the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum found that the granting of it was not contrary to family custom. And, although he was of opinion that the alleged consideration of Rs. 1,200 had not passed, he was at the same time of opinion, that the right to alienate land belonging to the Patkun Raj had been proved; and he, therefore, held this patta to be valid.

- The plaintiff, accordingly, obtained a decree for possession of the villages comprised in the 'khorposh' mokurari patta; and his claim for the two villages granted by the 'pon-baha' mokurari patta was dismissed.

Both parties appealed to the Judicial Commissioner of Chutia Nagpur, who confirmed the decree of the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum.

A Divisional Bench of the High Court (Mr. Justice BIRCH and Mr. Justice MITTER) dismissed the appeals preferred by both parties against the decision of the Judicial Commissioner.

The Judgment of the High Court is reported in the Indian Law Reports, 5 Calcutta Series, p. 118.

On this appeal,

Mr. T. P. Leith, Q.C., and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe appeared for the Appellants.

The Respondent did not appear.

For the appellants it was argued that the pon-baha mokurari patta of the 30th April 1868, was, in substance, a grant by the Raja for the maintenance of a younger son; consequently, to maintain this grant would be to permit a mere evasion of the family custom which had been upheld in dealing with the other patta. The impartibility of the Patkun Raj, and the custom in regard to the maintenance of younger brothers, having been established, there was no authority shown for the act of the late Raja in alienating part of the Raj estate. Reference was made to Anand Lal Singh Deo v. Maharaja Dheraj Guunaram Deo (5 Moore's I. A. 82), Bebee Panchum Koomar v. Maharaja Guunaram Deo (6 S. D. A. Sel. Cal. 140), Musst. Soelee Koonm v. Purnoo Roy (6 S. D. A. Sel. Cal., 154) and Maharaja Guunaram Deo v. Anand Lal Singh (6 S. D. A. Sel. Cal., 282).

Sir A. Hobhouse. In this case the only appellant—the other plaintiff in the suit being the manager of the estate of the first plaintiff—is the Raja of Patkun, in Chutia Nagpur, and he is the son and successor of Raja Shatrooghun. The raj is admittedly an impartible raj, and one in which the custom of primogeniture exists. There is also a custom that the younger sons of the Raja are entitled to maintenance, the second being called 'hakim,' the third, 'konwar,' and the fourth and subsequent 'lals'; but the maintenance given according to this custom ceases with the life of the grantor, and has to be renewed upon a succession to the raj.

The late Raja Shatrooghun, during his lifetime, executed two instruments, —one being called a 'pon-baha' mokurari patta, or permanent lease at a fixed rental granted in consideration of a bonus or fine; and the other a 'khorposh' mokurari patta, or permanent maintenance grant. The pon-baha mokurari patta was the first, being dated the 30th April 1868, and is in these terms: "This mokurari patta, on payment of bonus, is executed. Within my zamindari of Purgana Patkum, appertaining to the sub-district of Division Manbhum, the entire Mouza Kallianpore (being one mouza) as per boundaries given below, was previously fixed for your maintenance. Now, excluding it from that maintenance, I make a mokurari settlement of the above entire Kallianpore (one mouza) and jhimri (one mouza), with all rights appertaining thereto, in all two mouzas, with you, by means of a mokurari patta, and on receipt of a bonus of Rs. 1,200, and at an annual mokurari rental of Rs. 85-10-2-2-2." Then, after some further passages, it says : - "Neither I, nor my heirs, shall have any other right in those two mouzas beyond the above fixed mokurari rent."

The other instrument is dated the 30th November 1868, and is in these terms : - "This mokurari patta for maintenance is executed. My second son and the future hakim, Keshub Lal Aditya Deb, deceased, having died, and you being at present the second of my sons, you will, according to the special rule of our rajdhani, become the hakim on my death. [203] A gift was, therefore, made to you before of one Mouza Doodri, one Mouza Chamda, one Mouza Laya, one Mouza Kallianpore," -and so on, naming other mouzas, in all eight--"without any title-deed, and for your maintenance as hakim, and you are in possession of those mouzas. Now, considering it proper to execute a deed in respect of seven of the above mouzas except Kallianpore, I execute a deed for the remaining seven mouzas aforesaid with the exception of one Mouza, Kallianpore. You shall continue to possess and enjoy the rights appertaining to the seven mouzas aforesaid, lying within the following boundaries, by right of maintenance, during your lifetime." Then after some other passages : - "I made a gift of Mouza Kallianpore for maintenance. I have excluded that Mouza Kallianpore, and granted you a mokurari settlement of the same along with Mouza Jhimri by a separate deed, and on another date, i.e., the 19th Bysack of the present year." These two instruments were given to the respondent, who was the half-brother of the appellant, and had been the third son of Raja Shatrooghun ; but, in consequence of the death of his brother, had become, when the instruments were executed, the second son and the future hakim.

It is to be observed here with reference to the intention of these instruments, that Kallianpore had, as is stated in the latter, been originally given for maintenance, but it is withdrawn from that gift and is included in the other mokurari with the Mouza Jhimri, showing that Kallianpore was no longer intended to be for maintenance, and that the instrument of the 28th April 1866 was not intended by the Raja to be of the nature of a maintenance grant, but was intended to be a gift, or, as he thought it would be safer to make it on the face of it, a mokurari for consideration.

The suit is brought by the eldest son, the present Raja, to set aside both these instruments, and for possession of the mouzas included in them. The lower Courts have found that the instrument of the 30th November 1868, which is described as being a mokurari patta for maintenance, ceased to have effect on the death of the grantor, Raja Shatrooghun ; and there is now no question with reference to that part of the decision of the lower Courts.

[204] The question in this appeal arises upon the instrument of the 30th April 1868, and it is contended that the estate being impartible was inalienable as their Lordships understand the argument by reason of such impartibility ; and further that, there being the custom to give maintenance, this instrument was in reality for the purpose of maintenance, and consequently subject to the limitation, which is part of the custom, that it could not remain in force beyond the life of the grantor.

Now it is important to see what has been found by the lower Courts upon this subject. The Deputy Commissioner has said:—"With regard to the mokurari patta, I hold that plaintiff has failed to prove that the granting of it was contrary to family custom. An attempt has been made to show that the deed should be thrown out, because it is more than doubtful whether the consideration recited in it ever passed; but I agree with the defence that such shifting of the plaintiff's claim cannot be allowed. I have not a shadow of a doubt that the late Raja did grant the deed to the defendant; plaintiff himself does not deny it. But whilst I cannot allow the shifting of the claim, I hold that the fact, if fact it be, and I believe it to be a fact, that the consideration of Rs. 1,200 did not pass, is a valuable piece of evidence. If no consideration passed, does it not prove that the late Raja was not sure of his ground? It seems to me he felt that he was going somewhat near a breaking of a family custom which the Courts might possibly not allow, and therefore he wished to give a business look to the transaction and pretend to take a consideration. If I am right, what was the family custom? I think that referred to by Reg. X of 1800, that a zamindar, such as plaintiff unquestionably is, succeeds to all that his father cannot by such custom alienate. So far as the evidence goes, I am of opinion that even if Shatrooghun had made on paper, what I believe he made in fact, a present of the mokurari lease to the defendant, the plaintiff could not have set the deed aside." This shows the Deputy Commissioner considered that, although it had not been proved that the consideration passed as stated in the instrument, a gift of the lease was in fact made to the defendant. Further on he says:—"It appears to me that the right to alienate land in Patkum has been proved, and [205] therefore that the mokurari grant must stand. The granting of a mukurari is a favour on the part of the grantor, the obtaining of maintenance is a right on the part of the grantee; and the Courts of this district have been in the habit of laying down what maintenance any particular member of a zamindar's family shall be entitled to recover." Here, therefore, we have two distinct findings: one that this was intended to be a present to the defendant, the respondent; and the other that there was a right in this raj to alienate land.

The case then went by way of appeal to the Judicial Commissioner, and he agreed with the Deputy Commissioner in the finding as to the consideration. He says: "There is no doubt whatever, as the lower Court holds, that the receipt of the Rs. 1,200 by the grantor is a complete fiction, and that the transaction was not a business one, but a simple gift to defendant. But then the question arises what was there to prevent the Raja from making a mokurari to the defendant in the same way as he might to a stranger, even if no pun (consideration) passed?" Further on he says:—"I think I ought to confirm the decision of the Deputy Commissioner. The general power of alienation on the part of the late Raja being, I think, established, and the mokurari patta being undoubtedly genuine and registered, it lies with the plaintiff to show its invalidity; and this he has attempted to do by maintaining that it is contrary to family custom." And in a later paragraph he says,—"That custom has not, I think, been shown to be opposed to the mokurari." Therefore, the Judicial Commissioner quite concurs with the Deputy Commissioner in the findings of fact.

When the case came before the High Court, the Judges pointed out that it was necessary for the plaintiff, in order to succeed, to show that there was some custom which would prevent the operation of the general law which would give a power of alienation; and they said that the only custom proved was, that the estate descends to the eldest son to the exclusion of the other sons, and that, instead of there being proof of a [206] custom against alienation, what evidence there was, showed that alienations had been made.

Upon those findings the question whether the mokurari patta is valid or not seems to be concluded. It could only be impeached either upon the ground that it was really intended to be a maintenance grant, and so would cease at the death of the grantor, or that, either by law or by a family custom, there was no power to alienate any part of the raj. It seems that there have been some decisions in India in which it was considered that there was not a power of alienation in zamindari of this kind. But one of those decisions came before this Board in the case of Anand Lal Singh Deo v. Maharaj Dheraj Guru Naran Deo (5 Moore's L. A., 82), and there their Lordships considered that the inalienability of the zamindari was a matter to be proved; and as it appeared to them that it had not been sufficiently established, they proceeded to consider whether or not the grant that had been made was for maintenance. They certainly did not consider that, as a matter of law, the impartibility of the raj made it inalienable, but their Lordships treated the question of inalienability as one depending upon family custom, which would require to be proved. Here the findings are very distinct, that there is no such custom in existence with reference to this raj; and their Lordships, therefore, are of opinion that the judgment of the High Court is a correct one, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm it and to dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Excise—Sale by servant—Breach of condition of license—Benq. Act VII of 1878, ss. 41, 42, and 59.

The conviction of servants of a licensed vendor of spirits for a breach of the license is not necessarily illegal.

* Criminal Motion, No. 269 of 1881, against the order of P. J. Marsden, Esq., Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 7th September 1881.

In re Ishur Chunder Shaha (19 W. R., Cr. Rul., 34) followed.

The Empress v. Nuddiar Chand Shaw (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 832 : S.C., 8 C. L. R., 152) dissented from.

Two servants of a licensed vendor of spirits were charged with having committed two breaches of the conditions of the license, and the maximum fine for each breach was inflicted.

Held, that the Magistrate was competent to punish each of the servants separately in this manner.

The excise officer, to whom a licensed vendor of spirits is bound to produce his license, must be an excise officer of the higher grades, not any Police officer who may be exercising the powers of an excise officer.

THE petitioners in this case were charged before the Chief Presidency Magistrate with having, on the 6th September 1881, at No. 85, South Collingah Street, sold two bottles of imported spirituous liquor without an additional license in contravention of s. 53, Beng. Act VII of 1878 ; and they were further charged with committing two breaches of the sixth and twelfth conditions of their license under s. 59 of Beng. Act VII of 1878.

The petitioners were convicted and sentenced each to a fine of Rs. 100,—viz., Rs. 50 each for two breaches of license.

Baboo Surendra Nath Bannerjee for the Petitioners.

The Officiating Standing Counsel (Mr. Bannerjee) appeared to support the conviction

[208] The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by

Prinsep, J.—The petitioners in this case are two servants of a licensed vendor of spirits, who have been convicted, each of them, for having, in breach of their license, firstly, sold a bottle of brandy which was carried off and not drunk on the premises ; and secondly, for having refused, on the demand of the Police Inspector, to produce their license.

As regards the first breach, an objection is taken, that the master, the licensed vendor, was alone liable, and not the servants. Two judgments of this Court have been considered by us on this point :—In re Ishur Chunder Shaha (19 W. R., Cr., Rul., 34), and the other, recently delivered by Mr. Justice PONTIFEX and Mr. Justice FIELD—The Empress v. Nuddiar Chand Shaw (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 832 : S.C., 8 C. L. R., 152). These decisions are in conflict. Our opinion inclines to the decision in In re Ishur Chunder Shaha (19 W. R., Cr. Rul., 34) ; and having regard to the fact that that decision was not brought to the notice of the Judges who decided the more recent case, we think that we are justified in following it. We accordingly hold, that the conviction of the servants is not necessarily illegal.

The next objection taken is, that, inasmuch as there was only one breach of license in this respect there should have been only one penalty inflicted ; whereas by reason of the maximum fine having been imposed on each of the servants, the penalty has been doubled. It appears to us that the Magistrate was competent to punish each of the servants separately in the manner he has done, if he found, as he apparently has found, that each of them committed a breach of the license. Section 59 of Beng. Act VII of 1878 no doubt declares that the amount may be recoverable from the master ; but it does not necessarily follow that the servants may not be liable for the full amount prescribed by the law, although, possibly, the master may reasonably object to be saddled with more than one full penalty for the carelessness or neglect of his servant. We, therefore, think that the convictions and fines imposed, as regards this breach of the license, should be sustained.

[209] As regards the other penalties for breach of license, in consequence of refusal to produce the same on demand of the Inspector Fitzgerald, we are of opinion that the convictions and fines must be set aside. It has been argued by the learned Standing Counsel, who appears to support the convictions, that, reading ss. 41 and 42 together, the officers empowered under s. 42, among whom the Inspector in the present case is, must be regarded as excise officers within the terms of the Act, and that it would be impossible for a Police-officer, so acting as an excise officer, to discharge his duties, if he had not power to demand the production of a license. But, although he might properly demand the production of the license, and on refusal to produce it, proceed to arrest or to confiscate as allowed by the Act, it would not necessarily follow that such refusal would render the license-holder or his servants liable to fine under s. 59 for breach of the license, unless it were expressly provided that he or they were bound to produce it. The condition contained in the license is to the following effect: "That he" (the license-holder) "produce for inspection, on demand of any excise officer above the rank of a head constable or chuprasi, his license and accounts," &c.

Now, if the term the 'excise officer' had alone been used in that clause of the license, we should not be disinclined to hold that it should be interpreted to mean an excise officer within the meaning of the Abkari Act; and therefore a Police-officer like Inspector Fitzgerald was duly empowered under s. 42 of the Act. Inasmuch as that clause of the license proceeds to declare that the excise officer must be above the rank of a head constable or chuprasi, we are of opinion that it was the intention of those who drew up this form of the license that the excise officer should be an excise officer of the higher grades; such an officer only and not any Police-officer who may be exercising the powers of an excise officer. In this view of the terms of the license, we think that the conviction as regards the second breach must be set aside, and the fines, if paid, refunded.

The 6th January, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PONTIFEX.

Joogulkishore.....Plaintiff

versus

Jotendro Mohun Tagore.....Defendant.

Appeal to Privy Council -Value of suit - Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 596.

A and B purchased the same properties, deriving title through different persons. The value of the properties with mesne profits was over Rs. 10,000. B granted two patni leases of the properties to different persons. A was, therefore, obliged to bring two suits for the recovery of the properties, and the value of the subject-matter in each suit was less than Rs. 10,000.

Held, that an appeal would lie to the Privy Council.

THIS was an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council.

The facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment.

Mr. Branson for the Appellant.

The Advocate-General (the Hon'ble G. C. Paul) and Bahoo Nilmadhab Bose for the Respondent.

Pontifex, J.—I have already given my opinion in several cases as to the construction of the second clause of s. 596 of Act X of 1877, which relates to a decree indirectly involving some claim or question to property of like amount or value, when the same title applies to other property as to which litigation might arise. In this case the plaintiff purchased two properties for a certain value, deriving his title from the reversionary heir of one N. C. Roy. The Tagore defendant purchased exactly the same properties, deriving their title through the widow of N. C. Roy. The question between the plaintiff and the Tagore defendant is, which has the better title to these two properties under the circumstances. The Tagore defendant has put in an affidavit, from which it appears that the value of the two properties with mesne profits would be over Rs. 10,000. [211] The predecessors of the Tagores gave one of the properties in patni to one set of persons, and gave a patni of the other property to another set of persons, and the plaintiff was obliged, therefore, to institute two suits for the recovery of the two properties. If the predecessors of the Tagore defendant had not executed the patnis, there need only have been one suit and appeal, which would have been valued at upwards of Rs. 10,000. According to what I consider to be the proper construction of this clause therefore, the petitioner is entitled to appeal to Her Majesty in Council in both these cases, otherwise the act of the respondent's predecessors might invalidate the plaintiff's right of appeal. Let, therefore, the usual certificates be given.

Application granted.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PONTIFEX AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

In the matter of the Petition of Samiruddin.

The Empress

versus

Samiruddin.

Evidence—Dying statement—Presence of accused—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 300—Frame of charge.

The dying statement of a deceased person must be taken in the presence of the accused ; if not so taken, the writing cannot be admitted to prove the statement made. The statement may be proved in the ordinary way by a person who heard it, and the writing may be used for the purpose of refreshing the witness' memory.

A prisoner was charged with "causing the death of A by inflicting a wound on him with a 'chheni,' with the intention of causing bodily injury, such as was sufficient, in the course of nature, to cause death, or which he knew to be likely to cause death."

Held, that the charge was defective and inexact as regarded the second and third clauses of the definition of murder in s. 300 of the Penal Code. With reference to the second clause it should have run "likely to cause the death of A, the person to whom the harm was caused." With reference to the third clause, it should have said "ordinary course of nature."

ONE Samiruddin was charged with "causing the death of one 'Baul Mir' alias 'Baber Ali' by inflicting on him a [212] wound with a 'chheni' with the intention of causing bodily injury such as was sufficient, in the course of nature, to cause death, or which he knew to be likely to cause death."

The dying statement of the deceased had been recorded by the Deputy Magistrate as a deposition, but it did not appear that the deceased had been examined in the presence of the accused ; this evidence was, however, admitted at the trial before the Sessions Judge, although the Deputy Magistrate had not been called to prove the writing taken down by him.

*Criminal Appeal, No. 59 of 1881, against the order of F. J. G. Campbell, Esq., Officiating Sessions Judge of Furreredpore, dated the 14th November 1881.

The medical evidence at the Sessions trial consisted of the deposition of the native doctor taken before the Magistrate; but no evidence was given to show that the injuries were sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death.

The Sessions Judge, concurring with the Assessors, found the prisoner guilty under s. 302 of the Penal Code, and sentenced him to death. The sentence was sent up to the High Court for confirmation; and the prisoner also appealed.

No one appeared for the prisoner.

The Judgment of the Court (PONTIFEX and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—In this case one Samiruddin has been convicted of murder by the Sessions Judge of Furrceepore sitting with Assessors, and has been sentenced to death. This sentence has been referred for confirmation; and the prisoner has appealed at the same time.

In referring the case the Sessions Judge forwards a copy of a letter received by him from the Civil Surgeon, and expressing an opinion as to the nature of the wound inflicted upon the person of causing whose death the prisoner has been convicted. We cannot receive, or in any way act upon, this extra-judicial matter. The only opinion of the Civil Surgeon which can be considered in judicially dealing with the case, is an opinion expressed by him when examined as a witness under the usual tests to which witnesses are subjected.

The Assessors were of opinion that the prisoner should be convicted of murder. But the value of this opinion is very [213] much diminished when we find that some important matter which should not have been admitted as evidence, was admitted to influence their minds.

The piece of evidence to which this observation relates is the dying statement of the deceased Baber Ali. This was recorded by the Deputy Magistrate as a 'deposition'; but it does not appear that Baber Ali was examined in the presence of the accused Samiruddin, and unless he were so examined by the Deputy Magistrate exercising judicial jurisdiction, the writing made by such Magistrate could not be admitted to prove the statement made by the deceased. This statement must have been proved in the ordinary way by a person who heard it made. If the Deputy Magistrate had been called to prove it, he might have refreshed his memory with the writing made by himself at the time when the statement was made.

The prisoner was charged with "causing the death of one Baul Mir, alias Baber Ali, by inflicting on him a wound with a 'chheni' with the intention of causing bodily injury such as was sufficient, in the course of nature, to cause death, or which he knew to be likely to cause death." This charge was probably intended to refer to the second and third clauses of the definition of murder contained in s. 300 of the Penal Code. But it is defective and inexact as regards both clauses. With reference to the second clause it should have run thus "Likely to cause the death of Baber Ali, the person to whom the harm was caused." With reference to the third clause it should have said "ordinary course of nature."

The medical evidence in the case is the deposition of the native doctor who was not examined in the Court of Sessions, as we think he should have been. This deposition goes to show that deceased "died from gangrene of the left lung and pleura brought on by" the injuries observed on his body. The native doctor further says, that the wound inflicted on the deceased was sufficient to bring on gangrene.

There is no evidence that the injuries were sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death. There is no evidence that gangrene was a likely or probable result of the injuries inflicted, or that death was a likely or necessary result of gan-[214]grene. The native doctor was not even asked, and did not say, whether the injuries inflicted were likely to cause death.

Upon the evidence on the record we think that the prisoner cannot be convicted of murder or of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Upon his own confession and the evidence of the witnesses Palon Mandal and Holodhur Das we are satisfied that he wounded or injured the deceased with a 'chheni,' and we think that he ought to be convicted under s. 326 of the Penal Code of causing grievous hurt by a dangerous weapon. We set aside the conviction and sentence for murder; and convicting the prisoner Samiruddin under s. 326 of the Indian Penal Code, sentence him to ten years' rigorous imprisonment.

Construction of Act—Beng. Act VII of 1878, ss. 15, 17, and 61—Specified quantity of Spirits—Maximum amount.

Penal Statutes must be construed strictly, —i.e., nothing is to be regarded as within the meaning of the Statute when it is not within the letter and clearly and intelligibly described in the very words of the Statute itself.

Where, under s. 15, 1 Beng. Act VII of 1878, the Chief Commissioner of Assam, exercising the powers of the Board of Revenue, fixed, by a Circular order, the limit at six quart bottles

* Criminal Reference No. 298 of 1881 from the order made by C. Donovan, Esq., Deputy Commissioner of District Kamrup, dated Gauhati, the 27th October 1881.

†[Sec. 15 :—The sale of any excisable article in a larger quantity than is specified below shall be deemed to be a sale by wholesale, and the sale of any other quantity shall be deemed to be a retail sale : Provided that the Board may, from time to time, by rule, fix any larger quantity as a limit for a retail sale of any excisable article :
Wholesale and retail sale.

Spirituous or fermented liquors imported by sea, two imperial gallons, or twelve reputed quart bottles ; other spirituous or fermented liquors excepting tadi and pachwai, one seer, or one reputed quart bottle ; tari or pachwai, four seers ; ganja, siddhi, or bhang, or any preparation or admixture of the same, one quarter of a seer ; charas or any preparation or admixture of the same, five tolas weight.

of country spirit as allowable for retail sales, and an accused was charged under s. 17 with possessing more than that quantity, but the amount he had was less than the amount stated in s. 15,—

Held, that he was not guilty of any offence under s. 61, and that no lesser quantity than that specifically mentioned in s. 15 of country spirits which might have been declared to be the maximum quantity by any such order made under the provisions of s. 15 could be deemed to be the quantity specified in s. 15 within the meaning of s. 61.

THIS was a case referred to the High Court by the Deputy Commissioner of Kamroop. The facts were as follows :—

[215] The accused were sent up, on the 4th October 1881, by the Police, on a charge of having in their possession a quantity of distilled country spirits at Sonapur, within the area for which the right of manufacture and sale of native spirits had been farmed out to one Gura Diyal Mohalder, the quantity being four quart bottles and one large pot of liquor found to contain ten quart bottles of spirits.

The Extra Assistant Commissioner, not being satisfied as to what quantity each of the accused had, and being of opinion that, under s. 61, Beng. Act VII of 1878, any person could lawfully have in his possession twelve quart bottles, directed the accused to be discharged. It appeared, however, from the statement of the accused themselves, that one of them at least was in possession of the pot containing ten quart bottles full.

It also appeared that Beng. Act VII of 1878 was extended to Assam by the Chief Commissioner with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council, and that, under the power contained in the Act to that effect, the Chief Commissioner, who has the same powers as the Board of Revenue, by Circular No. 2E, dated the 12th June 1880, fixed the limit for retail sales of country spirits at six quart bottles.

Upon these facts the Deputy Commissioner, considering that there had been a failure of justice, referred the case to the High Court, on the ground that the Extra Assistant Commissioner was wrong in holding that the quantity of spirits specified in s. 15, Beng. Act VII of 1878, was, for the purpose of the case under consideration, to be considered twelve quart bottles, but that he should have taken it at the amount mentioned in the Circular of the Chief Commissioner, viz., six quart bottles.

No one appeared on the reference.

The Judgments of the Court (PONTIFEX and FIELD, JJ.) was as follow:—

Field, J.—The question in this case is concerned with the construction of ss. 15 and 16 of the Beng. Excise Act, VII of 1878. Two persons were charged under s. 61 of this Act with "being in possession of a certain excisable article, to wit six quart bottles of native spirits, being a quantity in excess [216] of the quantity specified in s. 15." Now s. 15 is as follows:—

No licensed wholesale vendor shall sell by retail, and no licensed retail vendor shall sell wholesale. Under this section a sale of an assortment of spirituous or fermented liquors in the quantity specified above, or in less quantity, by a licensed wholesale vendor, and a similar sale of such liquors in greater quantity than is specified above by a licensed retail vendor, are prohibited.

The Board may by rule define what shall be held to be an assortment for the purposes of this section.

The Board may also determine what shall be a retail sale of any article from time to time declared by the Local Government to be included in the definition of intoxicating drugs under this Act.]

"Unless the Board shall otherwise specially direct, the sale of any excisable article in a larger quantity than is specified below shall be deemed to be a sale by wholesale, and the sale of any other quantity shall be deemed a retail sale: Spirituous or fermented liquors, two imperial gallons, or twelve quart bottles." The Chief Commissioner of Assam, exercising the powers of the Board of Revenue, made an order under the provisions of s. 15, declaring that six quart bottles shall be the maximum amount; and the question is, whether any lesser quantity so declared to be the maximum quantity by the Board of Revenue under the powers conferred by s. 15 of the Act can be taken to be the quantity specified for each article in s. 15 within the meaning of s. 61. Now, it is a rule that a penal Statute must be construed strictly. The meaning of this rule is, that nothing is to be regarded as within the meaning of the Statute which is not within the letter--which is not clearly and intelligibly described in the very words of the Statute itself. It was said in the case of Lord Huntingtower v. Gardiner (1 B. and C., 297, at p. 299) that "effect must not be given to a penal Statute unless the offence charged comes within the very words of it;" and in that case of Rex v. Bond (1 B., and All., 390, at p. 392), ABBOTT, J., said, that "it would be extremely wrong, that a man should, by a long train of conclusions, be reasoned into a penalty when the express words of the Act of Parliament do not authorize it." Again, WILLIAMS, J., said, in the case of Britt v. Robinson (L. R., 5 C. P., 503, at p. 513), that criminal enactments are not to be extended by construction, and that "when an offence against the law is alleged, and when the Court has to consider whether that alleged offence falls within the language of a criminal Statute, the Court must be satisfied not only that the spirit of the Legislative enactment has been violated, but also that the language used by the Legislature includes the offence in question, and makes it criminal." Applying this rule of construction to the present case, we think it impossible to say that any lesser quantity of country spirits which may have been declared to be the maximum quantity [217] by any rule or order made under the provisions of s. 15 of the Act can be deemed to be "the quantity specified in s. 15 within the meaning of s. 61." A thing specified is a thing definitively mentioned or designated; and that can scarcely be said to be specified which depends on a rule or order to be made at some future time, and which may never come to the notice of the class of outside persons with which s. 61 of the Act is concerned. For s. 15 is applicable to licensed vendors who would naturally know of any alteration made by the Chief Commissioner as to quantity under that section; but s. 61 applies to the general public who would have no general knowledge of any such alteration. It may be possible that the intention of those who promoted the Act was different; but if this were so, we can only say that adequate language has not been used to effectuate that intention. We think that the order of the Assistant Commissioner was correct, and we decline to interfere.

Pontifex, J. I am of opinion that the order of the Assistant Commissioner is correct, and that we cannot interfere with it.

The charge was under s. 61 of the Beng. Excise Act. The Assistant Commissioner held, that the persons charged were not subject to a fine, unless they were in possession of a larger quantity of native spirits than that actually specified in s. 15 of the Act.

Section 15 enacts as follows :—“ Unless the Board shall otherwise specially direct, the sale of any excisable article in a larger quantity than is specified below shall be deemed to be a sale by wholesale: spirituous or fermented liquors, two imperial gallons, or twelve quart bottles.”

This section applies only to the sale of liquor by licensed manufacturers and vendors.

The language by which legislative authority is deputed to the Board to vary the quantity is peculiar; and as at present advised, it seems to me questionable whether the legislative authority so deputed empowers the Board (or in this case the Chief Commissioner) to lessen the quantity which is to constitute a wholesale sale even with respect to the licensed manufacturers and vendors mentioned in the section. And apart from the peculiar language by which this legislative authority [218] is deputed, it would seem, on general grounds, questionable. For though the Legislature might reasonably depute its authority for the purpose of relaxing the penal obligation of its own Act, it is scarcely reasonable to suppose that it would, even if it could, depute its authority to render its Act more stringent, to impose severe restraints without debate, and after having itself carefully considered and specified what quantity should be deemed to constitute a wholesale sale.

But however this may be, I can find no authority deputed to vary the quantity so as to affect the general public under ss. 17 and 61, and to render them liable to a penalty for possessing a smaller quantity than that actually specified by the Legislature in s. 15.

According to the well-known rule, a Statute imposing penalties must be construed strictly; and the Assistant Commissioner was therefore, in my opinion, right in refusing to impose a fine in this present case.

Execution of an order of Privy Council—Limitation Act, (XV of 1877), sched. II, art. 180—Order in Council confirming a decree.

Although an order of Her Majesty in Council may confirm a decree of the Court below, that order is the paramount decision in the suit; and any application to enforce it is, in point of law, an application to execute the order and not the decree which it confirmed.

Such an application is governed by art. 180,† sch. II of Act XV of 1877.

THIS was a reference to a Full Bench made by MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ., in an appeal against an order of the Judge of [219] Gya, dated the 4th January 1881, in which the latter rejected an application for execution of an order of Her Majesty in Council, dated the 26th June 1873, on the ground that it had not been made within three years from the date of the order in Council, and was, therefore, barred under art. 179,† sch. II of Act XV of 1877.

The order of reference fully sets out the facts, and was as follows:—

MACLEAN, J. This is an execution-case. The original suit was decided by the First Court on the 31st July 1868, and by the High Court on the 24th January 1870. This last decree was affirmed on appeal to England, the order in Council being dated the 26th June 1873.

* Full Bench Reference in appeal from original order, No. 105 of 1881, preferred from an order of G. E. Porter, Esq., Judge of Gya, dated the 4th January 1881.

† [Art. 180.—

Description of application.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
-----------------------------	-----------------------	---------------------------------------

To enforce a judgment, decree or order of any Court established by Royal Charter in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, or an order of Her Majesty in Council.

When a present right to enforce the judgment, decree or order accrues to some person capable of releasing the right:

Provided that when the judgment, decree or order has been revived, or some part of the principal money secured thereby, or some interest on such money has been paid, or some acknowledgment of the right thereto has been given in writing, signed by the person liable to pay such principal or interest, or his agent, to the person entitled thereto or his agent, the twelve years shall be computed, from the date of such revivor, payment or acknowledgment, or the latest of such revivors, payments or acknowledgments, as the case may be.

Application for execution was made to the Judge of Gya on the 13th December 1875, but it was dismissed, on the authority of Jou Narain Ghree v. Goluck Chander Mytee (22 W. R., 102), on the ground that application had not been made to the High Court under s. 19, Act VI of 1874. This order was made on the 5th May 1877.

On the 7th May 1880, application was made to the High Court under s. 610,* Civil Procedure Code, and then the order in Council having been sent down, application was made to the District Judge on the 9th July 1880.

The District Judge has now rejected the application, on the ground that, not having been made within three years from the 26th June 1873, it is barred by Act XV of 1877, sch. ii, art. 179. The present appeal is against the District Judge's order.

The question for decision is, whether art. 179 or art. 180 of the 2nd schedule of Act XV of 1877 governs an application to enforce an order of Her Majesty in Council affirming a decree of the High Court on its Appellate Side.

The former article applies to decrees or orders of any Civil Court not provided for by the latter, which applies to decrees of Courts established by Royal Charter in the exercise of their original civil jurisdiction or to orders of Her Majesty in Council. The last eight words were added to art. 169† of

*[Sec. 610: -Whoever desires to enforce or to obtain execution of any order of Her

Procedure to enforce orders of Queen in Council. Majesty in Council shall apply by petition, accompanied by a certified copy of the decree or order made in appeal and sought to be enforced or executed, to the Court from which the appeal to Her Majesty was preferred.

Such Court shall transmit the order of Her Majesty to the Court which made the first decree appealed from, or to such other Court as Her Majesty by her said order may direct, and shall (upon the application of either party) give such directions as may be required for the enforcement or execution of the same; and the Court to which the said order is so transmitted shall enforce or execute it accordingly, in the manner and according to the rules applicable to the execution of its original decrees.

When any moneys expressed to be payable in British currency are payable in India under such order, the amount so payable shall be estimated according to the rate of exchange for the time being fixed by the Secretary of State for India in Council, with the concurrence of the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, for the adjustment of financial transactions between the Imperial and the Indian Governments.]

Description of application.	Period of limitation.	Time when period begins to run.

[220] Act IX of 1871 (the law in force when the order in Council was passed) by s. 21, Act VI of 1874, and I believe it has generally been considered, since then at least, that twelve years was the limitation for enforcement of an order in Council. It has also been conclusively established that a decree of the High Court made on appeal from the District Courts is subject to the three years' rule of limitation—Ram Charan Bysack v. Lakhikant Bannik (7 B. L. R., 704; s.c., 16 W. R., F. B., 1), approved in Kristo Kinkur Roy v. Raja Burrodacant Roy (14 Moore's I. A., 465; s.c., 10 B. L. R., 101). At that time (1872) there was no express rule for limitation of execution or enforcement of orders in Council; but the Judicial Committee considered the question and threw out a tolerably strong hint in Kristo Kinkur Roy v. Raja Burrodacant Roy (14 Moore's I. A., 465; s.c., 10 B. L. R. 101), that an order of Her Majesty in Council was not a decree of any Court. At the same time they affirmed, or rather expressed no dissent from, the ruling of this Court, that whether the decree of the lower Court is reversed, or modified, or affirmed, the decree passed by the Appellate Court is the final decree in the suit.

These remarks of their Lordships left it somewhat doubtful whether they would apply the same rule to orders in Council, but a recent decision of the Privy Council throws some light on this question, and as I understand the decision, it leaves very little doubt that the order in Council becomes in fact the decree or order of the Appellate Court—see Pitts v. La Fontaine (L. R., 6 App. Cas., 482): “when a decision of this Board has been reported to Her Majesty, and has been sanctioned and embodied in an order of Council, it becomes the decree or order of the final Court of Appeal, and it is the duty of every subordinate tribunal to whom the order is addressed to carry it into execution.”

We next find that, in Lethbridge v. Raja Saheb Prohlud Sen (19 W. R., 301), PHILAR, J., laid down that “the Privy Council order affirming the previous decrees must comprehend and embrace these decrees for they fall to be executed with the Privy Council order; in other words, the judgment-creditor [221] is unquestionably entitled in executing the ‘decree or order’ of the Privy Council to get the benefit of the decrees or orders which that Privy Council order affirmed.”

Then followed the addition to art. 169 of the Limitation Act of 1871 of the words “or any order of Her Majesty in Council” by s. 21, Act VI of 1874.

The 19th section of the Act clearly refers to Courts subordinate to the High Court; though it probably includes the High Court in its Original Civil jurisdiction, and it is therefore extraordinary to find that, in s. 21, an addition is made to an article of the Limitation Act of 1871, which had otherwise no application to the Appellate Side of the High Court.

The present Limitation Act, XV of 1877, art. 180,* is in the same terms as art. 169† of Act IX of 1871, after the words referred to were added.

Two decisions have, however, been passed comparatively recently, which appear to me to throw doubts upon the applicability of those words to orders in Council on appeal from the Appellate Side of the High Courts.

In Narsingh Dass v. Narain Dass (I. L. R., 2 All., 763) it was held, that the words ‘appeal’ and ‘Appellate Court’ in art. 179 (19 W. R., 301), sch. ii, Act XV of 1877, include an appeal to Her Majesty in Council. The point for decision in that case was, whether the limitation for execution of a High Court decree affirmed by Her Majesty in Council ran from the date of the decree of the High Court or from the date of the order in Council, and it was no doubt correctly decided that limitation ran from the last-mentioned date.

* [q. v. supra, 8 Cal. 218.]

In that case, however, the learned Judges were not dealing with an application to enforce an order in Council, nor were they called on to consider whether art. 180 would apply. The principle laid down by PHEAR, J., in Lethbridge v. Raja Sahib Prohlud Sen (19 W. R., 301), which is usually followed in the Courts subordinate to this Court, was not called in question, and the application under consideration was made within three years from the date of the order in Council. The case, therefore, though good [222] authority for the proposition that limitation does not begin to run under art. 179 until the date of the order in Council, where such has been made, really does not touch the question whether the period for which it runs is also governed by art. 179, or is governed by art. 180.

But this question has been directly dealt with in the case which I shall now quote.

In Mohunt Buldraj Dass v. Mohunt Taponuldu Gin Gossain (Mis. App., No. 293 of 1877), JACKSON and MITTER, JJ., ruled, that "application must be made to execute the decree of the Court which grants the relief within three years from the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court, and if the period of three years is allowed to elapse, the applicant will not be permitted to avail himself, where the Appellate Court has been the tribunal of Her Majesty in Council, of the twelve years, which apply to the enforcement of a decree of that Court.

This case is not reported, but it is clear authority for the proposition that arts. 169, Act IX of 1871, and 180, Act XV of 1877 do not apply to execution of orders in Council on cases decided by this Court in its Appellate jurisdiction.

In this state of the authorities, it seems to me that, in all cases where there has been an appeal to England and an order in Council has issued on it, it is the latter which has to be enforced, and on this point I find no conflict of authority: but then the question arises, whether, if an application be made to enforce an order of Her Majesty in Council affirming a decree of the High Court in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction (as I think the application before us must be considered to be), art. 179 or art. 180 would apply. Upon this point I am disposed to think that the latter article would apply, and I am therefore unable to concur in the case last quoted. My learned colleague, I find, entertains some doubts as to the correctness of the decision in that case, and as I think the question is sufficiently important to be submitted to a Full Bench, I propose to send up the following question for decision:—

Whether an application to enforce an order of Her Majesty in Council, affirming a decree of the High Court in the exercise [223] of its appellate jurisdiction, is governed by art. 179 or by art. 180 of the 2nd schedule of Act XV of 1877?

MITTER, J.—I entirely concur with my learned colleague that the application out of which this appeal has arisen must be treated as one made to enforce the order of Her Majesty in Council confirming the decree of this Court, dated the 24th January 1870. As to the period of limitation applicable in this case, I am free to confess that, although I took part in the decision cited, I entertain now grave doubts as to the correctness of our conclusion. I agree to refer the question proposed for the determination of a Full Bench.

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey for the Appellants.

Mr. R. E. Twidale and Baboo Durga Pershad for the Respondents.

The Opinion of the Full Bench was delivered by

Garth, C.J.—We are of opinion that the application in question is governed by art. 180 of the 2nd schedule of the Limitation Act.

Although an order of Her Majesty in Council may confirm the decree of the Court below, that order is undoubtedly the paramount decision in the suit, and any application to enforce it is, in point of law, an application to execute the order, and not the decree which it confirmed: see Pitts v. La Fontaine (L.R., 6 App. Cas., 182).

The test of this is, that before the decree-holder can obtain execution, he must apply to the High Court under s. 610 of the Code to transmit the order of Her Majesty to the Court whose duty it is to issue execution, and it is clear from the language of that section, that the Court to which the order is transmitted has to execute, not its own decree, but the order itself. If this were not so there would seem no necessity for applying to the High Court at all.

As the application, therefore, in this case was to execute the order of Her Majesty, it comes directly within the scope of art. 180 of the Limitation Act.

Forfeiture.*

A Hindu widow, under an arrangement with her deceased husband's cousin, was in possession for life of a share of ancestral property of her husband's family, in which he, jointly with the cousin, had held a share in his lifetime. This share she sold as if she had held an absolute interest, and the purchaser's name was entered, instead of hers, in the revenue records; but no change of possession took place till her death.

To a suit brought by the cousin's heirs to recover the property purchased from the widow, more than twelve years after the sale, but less than twelve years after the widow's death, the defence was limitation under Act IX of 1871, sch. ii, cl. 111,* commencing from the date of the sale, there having been, it was alleged, "a breach of condition or forfeiture" within the meaning of that clause.

By the terms of the arrangement contained in a solanama, the widow was to have no power to alienate; and after her death her share was to belong to the cousin.

Held, that these terms prohibited only such an alienation by the widow as would prevent the cousin's succeeding after her death, and the alienation made was good for the widow's lifetime. There was no condition against such an alienation; and if there had been, there was neither any rule of law, nor anything in the words used in the solanama, attaching forfeiture to the breach of such a condition. Held, accordingly, that cl. 111 did not apply, and the suit was not barred by limitation.

THE first two appeals, which were consolidated and heard as one, were preferred against two decrees of a Divisional Bench of the High Court (14th and 15th June 1877), affirming two decrees (27th September 1875) of the Subordinate Judge of Mozufferpore, Zilla Tirhoot.

[225] The third appeal was preferred from a decree of the High Court (21st June 1877), affirming that of the same Subordinate Judge (27th September 1875).

The suits, out of which these appeals arose, were instituted in 1874 to recover possession, with mesne profits, of a four-anna share of Mouza Athur, and of an eight-anna share of Mouza Nazirpur, villages in the Tirhoot district.

The appellant was sued as heiress of one Fattedehchand Sahu, deceased, who purchased the property in question in 1845. The plaintiffs, respondents in the first two appeals, were the representatives of Kuldip Ram, who died in 1852, and the object of the suits was to recover property purchased from the widow of his cousin, Mehtab Ram, who died in 1822. After the death of Mehtab Ram, his widow Mainan Koer, disputes having occurred between her and Kuldip Ram as to what estate she took, joined in a solanama with him, embodying a compromise, under which she was entitled to a share for life in the family property. She died in 1862, having in 1845 effected the sales in question.

The Subordinate Judge of Mozufferpore decreed in favour of the plaintiffs. This was affirmed by a Divisional Bench of the High Court on all the questions raised; the only one remaining on this appeal being, whether or not limitation barred the suit. On this point the judgment of the High Court was, that regard being had to the mode in which the parties had dealt with the property, holding separately their respective halves of the estate, Kuldip Ram could not have obtained anything by a suit, even if he had sued immediately upon the sales to Fattedehchand, beyond a declaration of the invalidity of the sales as to all interest greater than for the widow's life. The twelve years' limitation did not commence till her death. Accordingly, the suits were held not to be barred.

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time when period begins to run.
Like suit, when the plaintiff has become entitled by reason of any forfeiture or breach of condition.	Twelve years ...	When the forfeiture was incurred or the condition broken.

In the first appeal Mr. J. F. Leith, Q.C., and Mr. R. V. Doyle appeared for the Appellant.

In the second appeal Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the Appellant.

Mr. J. H. W. Arathoon for the Respondents in both appeals.

For the appellant it was argued, that it being the fact (as [226] it had been contended by the plaintiffs and found by the Court of First Instance) that the widow had no power of alienation over the property in suit, it followed that her attempted alienation was an unauthorized and unlawful act. This amounted to a "breach of condition and a forfeiture" within the meaning of Act IX of 1871, sch. ii, cl. 144. This was enough to bar the suits; but it was also maintainable that the possession of the vendor after the sales, being on account of the purchaser, was adverse from their date to Kuldip Ram, who was bound to sue, if the sales were to be set aside, within twelve years from their date.

For the respondents it was argued, that the cause of action only accrued on the death of the widow; and these suits having been brought within twelve years from the date of her death were within time.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir A. Hobhouse. The question raised by this appeal may be disposed of very briefly. There are two suits, each of which is the subject of an appeal; but the appeals have been consolidated for the purpose of argument here. Taking the earlier suit, No. 253 of 1871, it is brought by the respondents to recover a four-anna share of a mouza called Athur, which the defendant, who is the appellant, claims to be rightfully possessed of under a sale executed to her ancestor in the year 1845 by a widow of the name of Mainan Koer.

The position of the property was this: The Mouza Athur appears to form part of the ancestral property of a family, who, in the year 1826, were represented by Kuldip Ram and this widow Mainan Koer, she being the widow of Kuldip Ram's first cousin, Mehtab Ram. The two parties were in litigation. Kuldip Ram claimed to be entitled to the whole property, subject only to such maintenance as the widow might be entitled to. The widow claimed the whole during her life or widowhood as representing Mehtab Ram. Under these circumstances, the parties came to a compromise in the year 1826, and that compromise was carried into effect in the suit which was then pending for the purpose of settling this question as to the ancestral property. The compromise provides for several different things [227] as to payment of debts and so forth, but the only material provision which we need now consider is that which relates to the interests given in the immoveable property to Kuldip Ram and Mainan Koer respectively. As regards that property, the first clause of the solenama executed by Kuldip Ram is, that all the villages, whether ancestral or acquired by purchase, which lie in certain districts, and which were held by Roy Mehtab Ram deceased, "shall, during the lifetime of the aforesaid Mussamat"—that is Mainan Koer—"remain in equal shares in the joint possession and enjoyment of me the declarant and the aforesaid Mussamat, but the aforesaid Mussamat shall have no power to alienate the moveable or immoveable properties; and after her death all the moveable and immoveable properties, and the outstanding of the time of Roy Mehtab Ram and the said Mussamat, shall be the right of me the declarant." Then there are provisions for a mutation of names in the rent-roll of the Collector's office, so that the name of Kuldip Ram should appear with that of Mainan Koer; and also provisions for the parties being represented each by their own agents. A corresponding solenanna was executed by Mainan Koer.

That compromise was carried into effect by the decree, which does not throw any further light upon the question, because it only orders that the two parties, Kuldip Ram and Mainan Koer, "do hold possession and occupation of all the properties left by Roy M htab Ram conformably to the conditions laid down in the deeds of compromise, having had their names entered in the office of the Collector as regards the villages in question." Accordingly, the two parties appear to have entered into possession, and to have remained in such possession until the sale, which is the subject of the present suit.

That sale took place on the 5th of June 1845, and by the deed of sale Mainan Koer purports to convey to the ancestor of the appellant four annas of the Mouza Athur in question, the family property consisting of eight annas of that mouza. It then appears that a mutation of names took place, by which the grantee under that sale put his name in the place of Mainan Koer; and it is stated by the appellant, in her written statement in the Court below, that her ancestor, and after him she [228] herself, continued in possession and occupation of a moiety, to wit four annas, and the plaintiffs and their ancestors in possession of the other four annas, of the mouza in dispute, that is the Mouza Athur.

Nothing else appears to have been done to alter the position of the property. Kuldip Ram died some time in the year 1852, and Mainan Koer died on the 12th October 1862. The respondents, who are the heirs of Kuldip Ram, did not bring any suit for the recovery of the property until nearly twelve years after the death of Mainan Koer, but they did bring a suit just in time to save the Statute of Limitations, if the starting point of the Statute was the death of Mainan Koer.

The suit being brought, a great many issues of fact were raised, which appear to have been of considerable difficulty; but those have all been disposed of by the Courts below, the two Courts finding all the issues of fact in the same way in favour of the respondents, and they are not in question here. The single question now remaining is, whether the suit is barred by the Statute of Limitations, and that depends again upon the question whether the Statute began to run on the 5th June 1845, when Mainan Koer sold her interest in Mouza Athur to the ancestor of the appellant, or on the 12th October 1862, when she died.

The appellant contends, first, that the case falls within head 144 in the second schedule to the Limitation Act, IX of 1871. Head 144 is this: "For possession of immoveable property, when the plaintiff has become entitled by reason of any forfeiture or breach of condition: twelve years from the time when the forfeiture was incurred or the condition broken." Then she says that the effect of the compromise of 1826 was to give Mainan Koer an interest in the property on condition that she should not alienate; that by her attempt to alienate she broke the condition; that the entirety of the property then vested in Kuldip Ram; and that the time of limitation began to run from that moment.

Their Lordships are of opinion that no such condition attached to Mainan Koer's life-estate, and therefore that there was no forfeiture of it.

[229] The terms of the compromise are, that the property shall remain in equal shares in the joint possession and enjoyment of the two parties; but the Mussamat Mainan Koer shall have no power to alienate the moveable or immoveable properties, and after her death those properties shall be the right or Kuldip Ram. There are no words of forfeiture, and it would be a very strong thing and a very unusual thing to import a forfeiture where the parties have not provided for one, and where there is no rule of law attaching forfeiture to a particular act. But in point of fact the language of the deed of compromise points to quite a different result. There is every indication that Mainan Koer was to have just as full an enjoyment of her interest in the property during her lifetime as Kuldip Ram was to have in his, and there is no reason whatever on the face of the deed why she should not deal freely with her interest. And where it is said that she shall have no power to alienate the property, that prohibition is coupled closely with the statement that, after her death, the property shall go to Kuldip Ram. The inference to be drawn from that is, that when the parties spoke of alienation they were thinking of alienation in perpetuity, and the thing they desired to prohibit was such an alienation as would prevent Kuldip Ram taking the succession immediately upon Mainan Koer's death. That being so, the alienation of Mainan Koer was perfectly good for her lifetime; there was no adverse possession until she died, and the suit is brought within twelve years from that time.

Mr. Doyne argued that the case might fall within head 143 of the same schedule. That head refers to a suit for possession of immoveable property, where the plaintiff, while in possession of the property, has been dispossessed or has discontinued the possession, and it allows twelve years from the date of the dispossession or discontinuance. But in order to bring the case under that head of the schedule, he must show that there has been a dispossession or discontinuance; and the passage which has been read from the appellant's written statement distinctly shows that there was no dispossession or discontinuance of Kuldip Ram.

Those considerations are sufficient to dispose of the case as [230] to Mouza Athur. The second suit, No. 262 of 1874, relates to another mouza called Nazirpur, and to eight annas of that mouza, which were the subject of another sale by Mainan Koer, but the questions are precisely the same, and therefore there is no need to repeat with reference to Nazirpur what has been said with regard to Athur.

The result is, that their Lordships entirely concur with the view taken by both the Courts below, and think that the appeals should be dismissed with costs.

The appeal of Lutchman Sahai Chaudhri v. Rai Jang Bahadur (No. 61 of 1877) should also be dismissed with costs.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty in accordance with this opinion.

Appeals dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 25th August, 1881.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Koylashbashiny Dossee.....Defendant

Gocoomoni Dossee.....Plaintiff.*

Sale for arrears of revenue — Auction-purchaser, right of — Beng. Act VII of 1868, s. 12—Lakheraj grant — Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sched. II, cls. 121, 130, 149 — Resumption — Assessment—Onus probandi.

A person seeking to obtain the benefit of s. 12, Beng. Act VII of 1868, must give some prima facie evidence to show that the incumbrance which he seeks to avoid is an incumbrance falling within the terms of the section, that is, an incumbrance imposed on the tenure by some one who previously held it.

The law relating to lakheraj grants reviewed and explained.

[231] If a person, claiming under a badshahi lakheraj grant made before the 1st of December 1790, can show that he has held the land as lakheraj since the 1st of December 1790, this will be a conclusive bar to a suit for resumption, whether brought by the Government, or by a purchaser at a revenue-sale, or by any other person. That is, in order to prove a grant anterior to the 1st of December 1790, it is sufficient to give evidence of possession dating back to the 1st of December 1790.

Snusteedhur Sawant v. Romanath Rokhat (6 W. R. 58) cited.

Discussion of the law of limitation as applicable to the resumption and assessment of lakheraj lands.

A person seeking to resume lakheraj land must give prima facie evidence to show that rent has been paid for that land at some time since the 1st of December 1790.

IN this case the plaintiff alleged that, on the 22nd of January 1878, one Gopal Chunder Mookerjee purchased the land in dispute with other land at a sale for arrears of Government revenue; that Gopal Chunder having obtained possession of this land sold it to the plaintiff, who thereupon acquired a right to the property free from all incumbrances; that the defendant, who was in possession, had no right to remain on the land; and the plaintiff asked for possession by ejecting the defendant. The suit was, in the first instance, brought against Khetter Mohun Das, who filed a written statement, alleging that the land in dispute was the lakheraj land of one Koylashbashiny Dossee. The plaintiff then made Koylashbashiny a defendant, who filed a written statement, denying the plaintiff's right, and claiming the land as her lakheraj.

The Court of First Instance framed the following issues: (i) Whether or not the plaintiff has a cause of action against the defendant Koylashbashiny? (ii) Is the plaintiff's claim barred by the law of limitation? (iii) Are the allegations of the plaintiff and her vendor's purchase true? (iv) Is the disputed property included in Government khas mehal, holding No. 123, and does it form a portion of the revenue-paying [232] estate, or is it rent-free? (v) Has she, the defendant Koylashbashiny, been in undisturbed and adverse possession of the property without payment of rent for upwards of twelve years; if so, will that protect her from ejectment? The Court of First Instance dismissed the suit, and the plaintiff appealed.

The lower Court framed five issues, of which it decided the first, third, and part of the fourth in favour of the appellant. Those now remaining for decision on appeal are the second part of the fourth and the fifth, and the questions are: Is the property in dispute a portion of a revenue-paying estate, or is it rent-free; and secondly, has the respondent Koylashbashiny been so long in uninterrupted adverse possession that she is protected from disturbance by the law of limitation?

The appellant complains in the first paragraph of the grounds of appeal, that the suit has been treated as a suit to set aside an incumbrance, and it was treated by the Munsif as governed by s. 121 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act. I am distinctly of opinion that the suit is more correctly described by cl. 111 as a suit to obtain possession of immoveable property, and that the plaintiff's cause of action arose from the date of the auction-purchase by her predecessor, for whatever rights were obtained by the auction-purchaser passed to the present appellant by the subsequent private sale.

About 1846 there was a survey, in which holding No. 123 is recorded as mal land; and, as is admitted, the Government received revenue for that land from 1847 to 1877, when it was sold for arrears of revenue. The defendant's first plea was, that this disputed property was not included in No. 123 holding, and obstacles were placed in the way of the measurement, which was proposed in order to settle this, by the respondent Koylashbashiny and her son-in-law Nilmoni Dey. When it became evident that the measurement would be enforced, they admitted that the land was included in No. 123, but contended that it was lakheraj within that holding. This was for the respondent to prove—see Woomesh Chunder Goopto v. Raj Narain Roy (10 W. R., 15)—and she has entirely failed to prove it.

The lower Court has assumed that this tenure, No. 123, was first created in 1846, on Mr. Crow's survey, and I think that assumption is entirely erroneous. Mr. Crow calls it nathau; and the Munsif takes [233] this as if it meant that Mr. Crow could not decide whether it was mal or lakheraj. After going through the proceedings recorded by Mr. Crow, it appears to me that it was found by him to be mal land, and that nathau meant merely that he was unable to discover who was the person to be considered as owner of the tenure. I think that the onus of proof was on the respondent, and that she has failed to give sufficient proof that the land was lakheraj.

* [q. v. supra 8 Cal. 224.]

If the land was not lakheraj, then Koylashbashiny's claim is gone, unless she has acquired a title from long continued adverse possession. In my opinion, it cannot be said that her possession was such as to give her this title. The Government was in the receipt of revenue, and as soon as the payment stopped, the tenure was put up to auction as against Government. Koylashbashiny was a mere trespasser, and therefore the auction-purchaser acquired by his purchase a right to oust her. His right commenced from the date of the purchase, and passed to the present appellant, who is well within the time for bringing the suit. For the reasons above given, I consider that the appellant was entitled to a decree. The appeal is decreed with costs.

Mr. Branson and Baboo Saroda Churn Mitter for the Appellant.

Baboo Mohony Mohan Roy, Baboo Kashi Kant Sen, and Baboo Surjinath Doss for the Respondent.

For the appellant it was argued, that the onus had been wrongly placed on the defendant, as it lay on the plaintiff to give prima facie evidence that the land was mal; that the plaintiff's tenure was shown by the evidence to have been created in 1847, and therefore, long subsequent to the defendant's title, which could not, therefore, be considered an incumbrance imposed upon it after its creation, and was not, therefore, within the provisions of s. 12, Beng. Act VII of 1868; and that the suit was barred by limitation. Mussamat Banno v. Modrie Amceerooddeu (23 W. R. 24), Mussamat Chandrabullee Debia v. Luckhee Debia Chowdhrao (10 Moore's L. A. 214), and Heera Lall Pramanick v. Brikunnissa Bibee (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 501) were cited.

Field, J. In this case the plaintiff is an auction-purchaser at a sale for arrears of Government revenue. He purchased a holding No. 123, which consists of some five bighas odd. He has brought the present case to eject certain persons who hold some three bighas of this holding under an alleged lakheraj title. The plaint has been framed in very wide language. The plaintiff alleges the fact of the purchase at a revenue-sale by her assignee. She then alleges that the right acquired by this revenue-sale was a right to hold the property purchased free of all incumbrances; and she concludes the plaint with a prayer that the defendant may be ejected, that khas possession may be given to her, and that she may be declared entitled to hold the land free of all incumbrances.

Now, at one part of the argument it was contended, that this is really a suit to avoid an incumbrance, and is based upon the statutory right conferred by s. 12 of Beng. Act VII of 1868, but we think it would not be fair to tie up the plaintiff and limit the construction of the prayer in her plaint by regarding it as merely a prayer to avoid an incumbrance under this section just referred to. That section declares that "the purchaser of any tenure sold under the provisions of s. 11 of this Act shall acquire it free from all incumbrances which may have been imposed upon it after its creation or after the time of settlement, whichever may have last occurred, and she be entitled to avoid and annul all under-tenures and forthwith to eject all under-tenants." Now, it has been decided, that a person seeking to take the benefit of this statutory enactment must give some prima facie evidence to show that the incumbrance which he seeks to avoid is an incumbrance falling within the terms of the section,—that is, an incumbrance imposed upon the tenure by some person who previously held it. In this case we think there is no such evidence, and that if the plaintiff were seeking to rely merely upon the statutory right of avoidance conferred by the section, her suit must fail. But we think there is another view which may fairly be taken of the case upon the plaint and the written statement of the defendant, [235] and that is, that this is really a suit to resume lakheraj land. The defendant sets up a lakheraj title, and what really occurred in the lower Courts was a trial of the validity of this title. The issues framed by the Munsif were, in our opinion, not sufficiently satisfactory, regard being had to the allegations of the defendant; and we think that, in consequence, it will be necessary to remand this case to have certain inquiries made which were not made owing to the informal nature of the issues framed in the Court of First Instance. In order to guide the lower Court as to the course to be pursued upon the remand, it will be necessary to refer briefly to the law concerned with the subject of lakheraj grants. Now badshahi lakheraj grants were of three kinds: Firstly, grants made before the 12th August 1765; secondly, grants made after the 12th August 1765, but antecedent to the 1st December 1790; and thirdly, grants made subsequently to the 1st December 1790. As to the first two classes, it is only necessary to remark, that if a person claiming to hold under a grant falling within either of these two classes can show that he has held the land as lakheraj since the 1st December 1790, according to the law as it at present stands, this will be a conclusive bar, whether the suit to resume is brought by the Government, by a purchaser at a revenue sale, or by any other person. In order to prove a grant anterior to the 1st December, it is thus sufficient to give evidence of possession as lakherajdar dating back to 1790: see the case of Sristeedhur Sawant v. Romanath Rokhit (6 W. R. 58). Then as to the third class, that is, grants made after the 1st December 1790, the old Regulation enacted that such grants whether exceeding or not exceeding 100 bighas, shall be null and void. It, therefore, follows that, apart from the law of limitation, the Government or an auction-purchaser or a zamindar is entitled to resume any lakheraj grant made subsequent to the 1st December 1790. Then we must apply the law of limitation. In the case of Government or any person claiming under Government, art. 149 of the Limitation Act provides the period of sixty years; and it therefore follows that the Government or an auction-purchaser claiming under the Government must sue within [236] sixty years after the cause of action arose to resume lakheraj land, even although held on a grant alleged to have been made after 1790. In the case of a mere auction-purchaser, arts. 121 and 130¹

to Government. In other words, if the period of sixty years expired before the expiry of the twelve years' period in any case in which the purchaser would be subject to the sixty years' rule, such purchaser would only have so much of the twelve years' period as was also covered by the sixty years' period. In the case now before us, the defendant alleged that the land was lakheraj. It is not distinctly stated that the lakheraj was created prior to 1790, but we think that we may fairly assume that that was intended, as otherwise an allegation of a lakheraj title created since 1790 would be no answer to the suit, unless that lakheraj title were created after 1790, and before a date sixty years before the institution of this suit. The Munsif dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The Additional Judge reversed the decision of the Munsif, and was of opinion that the burden of proof was upon the defendant. We think in this view the Additional Judge was in error. According to the Full Bench decision in Parbati Charan Mookerjee v. Itajkrishna Mookerjee (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 162), the burden of proof is upon the zamindar who seeks to resume lakheraj land, alleging that such lakheraj is invalid by reason of its having been created since 1790. We think that, upon the pleadings in this case, we must take it that the plaintiff here seeks to resume lakheraj land, and that she seeks to resume it on the only ground upon which, in the present state of the law, she can resume it; on the ground, namely, that the grant is void by reason of the lakheraj tenure having been created since the 1st December 1790. We may refer to the cases of Sonatan Ghose v. Moulti Abdul Farar (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 109) and Hurryhar Mookhopadhyay v. Madhub Chunder Baboo 14 Moores L.A. 152; s.c., 8 B. L. R., 566). What then must be done in this case is as follows:—The plaintiff must give prima facie evidence to show that rent has been paid for this land at some time since the 1st December 1790. If she gives such evidence, it will then lie upon the defendant to rebut that evidence by proving, if she can, a valid lakheraj grant. We do not express any opinion upon the value of the evidence supplied by the proceedings of Mr. Crow. The value of that evidence is a question solely for the consideration of the Judge below. We will only observe that, in order to estimate properly the value of that evidence, the Judge ought to inform himself as to the nature of the proceedings in which Mr. Crow was engaged and as to the nature of the jurisdiction he was exercising.

Then it is contended, that the defendant has succeeded in showing that this land has been held as lakheraj for the last sixty years, and that, under art. 149* of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, this is a complete answer to the case. We think that if the defendant is able to show that the land has been held as lakheraj for the last sixty years, this is a good defence, and it will relieve the defendant from rebutting the plaintiff's case by evidence of a valid grant, or of possession extending back to 1790; if the defendant has to rely upon such evidence of possession merely, and is not able to give proof of the original lakheraj grant, the decree of the Additional Judge will be reversed. The case will be remanded to the lower Appellate Court to be dealt with in accordance with these directions; and the costs of this Court will follow the result.

Appeal allowed, and case remanded.

[238] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 29th July, 1881.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Lodai Mollah.....Defendant

Kally Das Roy.....Plaintiff.*

Rent-suit Title of third party alleged by defendant—Parties— Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877, s. 28.)

Per FIELD, J. Where a person sued for rent sets up the title of a third party, and alleges that he holds under, and pays rent to him, such third party ought not to be made a party to the suit so as to convert a simple suit for arrears of rent into one for the determination of the title to the property in respect of which the rent is claimed.

Such a suit raises only two issues, viz.

- (1) Does the relation of landlord and tenant exist between the plaintiff and defendant?
- (2) Are the alleged arrears of rent due and unpaid?

And these are questions in which the plaintiff and defendant are alone concerned, and no third party claiming a title adverse to the plaintiff can properly be made a party to the trial of these issues.

Section 28 of the Civil Procedure Code is not imperative, but allows a discretion to be exercised; and in such a suit it is better, both in the interests of Government and for the proper adjudication of the question of title, that it should be tried by a competent Court in a suit directly framed and brought for that purpose.

THIS was an appeal in one of a number of rent-suits, which, being analogous, were, by consent of the parties, tried together in the Court of First Instance. The defendant denied that any rent was due, and stated that the relation of landlord and tenant did not subsist between him and the plaintiff, and that the lands in respect of which the rent was claimed did not lie within the plaintiff's taluq as alleged, but formed portion of a nim-howla belonging to one Tarini Churn Biswas, to whom the defendant paid rent.

The Munsif, in dealing with the suit, declined to add Tarini Churn Biswas as a party defendant, though the pleaders for [239] the plaintiff urged, that the proper issue to frame was as to who had been in receipt of rents from the defendant, and that the question of title ought to be raised in the suit; and after having heard the evidence and dealt with it, found that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties, and accordingly dismissed the suit.

* Appeal from Appellate Decrees. Nos. 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, and 586 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Nuhur Chunder Bhutto, Officiating Second Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, dated the 30th December 1879, reversing the decree of A. Perroux, Esq., Officiating Third Munsif of Barrisal, dated the 24th March 1879.

On appeal the lower Appellate Court reversed the decision of the Munsif, holding that a prima facie case had been made out by the plaintiff, which should have been rebutted by the defendant, and as that had not been done, the plaintiff was entitled to the decree he prayed for. The Subordinate Judge further held, that Tarini Churn ought to have been a party of his own accord, or been made so at the instance of the defendants, as he was directly interested in the subject-matter of the suit, and that the Court had power to add him suo motu under s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Against this decree the defendant now appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Kali Mohun Dass for the Appellant.

Baboo Bungshedhun Sen for the Respondent.

The Judgments of the Court (PRINSEP and FIELD, JJ.) were as follows:—

Field, J.—The plaintiff in these cases sued a number of ryots for rent. Their defence was substantially this, that no relation of landlord and tenant existed between them and the plaintiff. They alleged that the lands held by them are not situate within Taluq No. 3039, as alleged by the plaintiff, but form a portion of a nin-howla belonging to one Tarini Churn Biswas and situate within Taluq No. 3051. They further said that Tarini Churn Biswas is their landlord, and that they pay their rents to him.

The Munsif, in a careful judgment, dealt with the question whether the relation of landlord and tenant exists between the parties, and having carefully examined the evidence, came to the conclusion that this relation has not been established; and he, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

[240] The cases then came on appeal before Baboo Natar Chunder Bhutto the Officiating Second Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, and this gentleman, in a long judgment, which contains a large amount of irrelevant matter expressed in stilted and high-flown language, reversed the decision of the Munsif for reasons which we think cannot be supported. The Munsif, very properly, and in accordance with a number of decisions of this Court, declined to try, under the guise of a suit for rent, a question involving the title to a considerable property. With reference to this course of procedure, the Subordinate Judge says:—"Tarini ought to have been a party of his own accord or at the instance of the defendants, as he was directly interested in the subject-matter of the suits,—namely the arrears. The Court itself had, under the circumstances, the power suo motu to make him a defendant under s. 32 of the Procedure Code. But at all events it was the duty and interest of the defendants to move the Court in the matter in order to protect themselves from similar demands of Tarini, in case of an adverse decision and for better making out of their own case primarily." We think that these observations of the Officiating Subordinate Judge indicate a misconception of the real nature of a rent-suit, as well as a want of acquaintance with a number of cases decided by this Court and published in accepted reports, in which it has been held that, when persons sued for rent set up the title of a third person, such third person ought not to be made a party to the case so as to convert a simple suit for arrears of rent into a suit for the determination of the title to immoveable property. See Bressur Paurey v. Jogendro Chunder Deb (24 W.R., 261), Auluck Monee Debee v. Dino Nath Ghose (24 W.R., 421), and Dayal Chand Sahay v. Nabin Chandra Adhikari (8 B. L. R., 180). In this last case AINSLIE, J., said (p. 193):—"We do not think it can be contended, that a person who is out for possession, has the right to come to the Court and ask for a decree for rent with the view of bringing in a third party and having tried, under color of a rent-suit, all questions of title between himself and that party."

[241] A suit for the recovery of arrears of rent raises two questions:—

I. Does the relation of landlord and tenant exist between plaintiff and defendant?

II. Are the alleged arrears of rent due and unpaid?

I. The first question may have to be decided under one of two possible cases, —

(i) Where the plaintiff has let the defendant into possession of the land.

(ii) Where the plaintiff is not himself the person who let the defendant into possession, but claims under a title derived from the person who did.

(i) Now, in the first of these two cases the relation of landlord and tenant may have been created in some one of the following ways:—

(a) by written contract, and where there is a written contract, if it be necessary to prove the terms of the tenancy, such written contract must be produced and proved; see the cases of Brewer v. Palmer (3 Esp., 213) and Ramsbottom v. Mortley (2. M. & S., 445);

(b) by an oral contract;

(c) there may have been no express contract, written or oral, but the relation of landlord and tenant may be inferrible from circumstances; for example, from the payment of rent, from submitting to a distress; see the cases of Panton v. Jones (3 Camp. 372), Allason v. Stark (9 A. and E., 255), Doe d. Harvey v. Francis (2 M. & Rob., 57), Bance Madhub Ghose v. Thakoor Doss Mundul (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 588) and Obhoy Gobind Chowdhry v. Beejoy Gobind Chowdhry (9 W. R., 162).

When the case falls under (a), there may be the following defences:— The execution of the contract may be denied. The actual execution may be admitted, but it may be contended that the contract is invalid, because it was obtained by fraud, force, undue influence, etc. The defendant may show that the plaintiff's title has expired, or has been defeated by a title paramount; as for example, that the plaintiff's tenure has been [242] avoided by sale for arrears of revenue; but the defendant cannot deny that the plaintiff had a title at the time when the defendant was let into possession; see s. 116 of the Evidence Act. The defendant may also plead that he was not put into possession of, or that the plaintiff has evicted him from, the land demised or a portion of it, or he may show that the demise was for a term which has expired, and that the occupation has been given up.

When the case falls under (b) the defendant may deny the contract, or may set up its invalidity, or show that the plaintiff's title has expired, or been defeated; or may allege that he has never been put in possession of the land demised, or that he has been evicted by his lessor; or may allege that the tenancy has been determined.

When the case falls under (c), the defendant may deny the circumstances from which the plaintiff alleges that the tenancy is inferrible or has been created by implication. He may show that plaintiff's title has expired, or been defeated: may allege that he has been evicted by the plaintiff, or that his occupation has been determined by relinquishment.

The questions raised by these pleas, where the plaintiff originally let the defendant into possession of the land, are questions with which the plaintiff and defendant only are concerned and no third party claiming a title adverse to the plaintiff can properly be made a party to the trial of these questions.

(ii) Let us now turn to the class of cases where the plaintiff's title is derivative. The following are the most usual ways in which it is derived:—

- (a) by assignment, including gift, sale, devise, lease;
- (b) by inheritance, including adoption amongst Hindus.

As between the defendant and the person from whom plaintiff's title is derived, the relation of landlord and tenant may have been created in any of the ways specified under head (i); and therefore the defendant may make any of the defences which have been specified above under this head (i). The observation just made as to making a person claiming a title adverse to the plaintiff a party to the case, is here equally applicable where some one or more of these defences only are [243] set up, and there is no denial of the facts which constitute the derivation of the plaintiff's title. But it is clear that, in cases falling under this head, there may be a further defence; there may be a denial of the facts which constitute the derivation, or denial of the assignment, or of the adoption, or of the validity of either; or of the plaintiff being the heir of the original person from whom he professes to derive title by inheritance. It is clear that it is only as regards this further matter of defence that the rights of third parties can come into question. The effect of an assignment, or of an adoption, or of a claim founded on inheritance, may be to deprive of the property, and so of the rents and profits, of some other person who, but for such assignment or adoption or claim founded on inheritance, would be entitled thereto. This class of cases may be further divided into (a) cases where the defendant has attorned to the plaintiff: and (b) cases where the defendant has not attorned to the plaintiff. (a) Where the plaintiff claims by a derivative title, and the defendant has attorned to him, the defendant is not thereby stopped from showing that the title is really not in the plaintiff but in some other person: see the cases of Rogers v. Pitcher (6 Taun., 202), Clardye v. Mackenzie (4 M. and G., 143), and Gregory v. Doidge (3 Bing. 474). In this last case a person had occupied lands under A. Upon A's death this person entered into an agreement to pay rent to D, and paid one shilling as an acknowledgment of D's title, being ignorant that D had no title to the property. It afterwards turned out that D had no title, and it was held, that such person might show in answer to a suit for rent that D had really no title. Ordinarily, a tenant who had attorned would not set up this defence unless some person had satisfied him of a better title and prohibited him from paying rent to the plaintiff. There is no plausible reason why this third person should be made a party to the suit for rent, and it is really for his own interest that he should not be a party. If he is a party, he will be bound by the adjudication upon the question of title, and this adjudication may be based upon scanty materials and insufficient investigation, which are not uncommon when the subject-matter of the claim itself is inconsiderable. If he is [244] not a party, he has the chance of the tenant's plea being successful, and so of himself stepping into the place of landlord without personal litigation. If the tenant's plea is unsuccessful, he can litigate the question of title himself with better preparation and with experience gained from the contest at which he looked on without being a party. (b) Where there has been no attornment, the plaintiff must prove his title as a condition precedent to establishing the relation of landlord and tenant between himself and the defendant; and if there be none of the other defences already referred to, this may be the only point to be decided. In England this constantly happens in actions for use and occupation, which resemble in all essential particulars suits for rent in these provinces. I do not find that persons who claim adversely to the plaintiff have been made parties to these suits, or that such a course has even been contended for: see the cases of Hickman v. Nachin (4 H. and N. 716), Fursdon v. Clogg (10 M and W., 572), Cornish v. Searell (8 B. and C., 171), Phillips v. Pearce (5 B. and C., 143), Steele v. Mart (1 B. and C., 272), Rawson v. Eicke (7 A. and E., 151), and Selby v. Browne (7 Q. B. 620). In some cases the plaintiff's title may be so clear, and the defence may be so palpably obstructive and unfounded, that the Court will be justified in dealing with the question of title in the rent-suit and as between the plaintiff and defendant. Again, there may be cases in which this question of title, is raised bonâ fide necessitating lengthy and intricate inquiries and involving property worth a large amount, while the actual matter in dispute may be only a few rupees. Section 28 of the Code of Civil Procedure enacts, that "all persons may be joined as defendants against whom the right to any relief is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, in respect of the same matter." Now let A be the person claiming by a derivative title an estate and the right to receive the rent thereof, let B be another bonâ fide claimant, and let C be a tenant holding a jamma in the estate. We assume that C has never attorned to A. In order to entitle A to receive rent, he must prove his title in the rent-suit. [245] Now, if B is not made a party to this suit, any decree therein against C will not affect B. The remarks already made as to the advantage to B of watching the rent-suit and awaiting the result are here equally applicable. B cannot be injured by adopting this course, for the decree against C does not affect him; and if he afterwards recover the estate in a suit brought for that purpose, he will receive in the shape of mesne profits any rent which A may have recovered from C under the rent-decree. No doubt A and B may both be made defendants under the provisions of s. 28: but these provisions are not imperative. If the property in dispute is worth some thousands or lacs of rupees, and if B is made a party, there will be, in a suit for rent involving a few rupees only, a trial of the question of title to property of large value: and, as the law now stands, if this question of title is decided in the rent-suit, B being made a co-defendant with C, the decisions will have the effect of res judicata between A and B; and this decision may be had upon a court-fee stamp of small amount and before a judicial officer who would not have jurisdiction to try the title to the property in a suit instituted with this direct object. As has been already said, the provisions of s. 28 are not imperative; they allow a discretion, and in a case of this kind, both in the interests of the Government revenue and for the convenience of a proper adjudication, it is much better that the question of title should be tried in a suit directly framed and brought for this purpose.

There is a class of cases very common in this country,---i.e., where rent-suits are brought merely for the purpose of asserting or making a title to the land occupied by ryots. A and B are proprietors of adjoining estates. A claims some lands as part of his estate: B, on the other hand, asserting that these lands belong to his estate. Instead of at once suing B and raising the question of title, A commences operation by suing for rent the ryots in occupation of the disputed lands. If these lands have always formed part of B's estate, the ryots ought to have no difficulty in showing that they were not let into possession by A, or that they never attorned to A. If, however, A succeeds by fictitious kabuliats and manufactured evidence, [246] B, if not a party to the rent-suits, is not affected and can prove his title by independent evidence, and he is much wiser to hold aloof from the rent-suits than to run the risk of an adverse decision on the question of title, which will forever conclude him, although arrived at upon scanty materials and insufficient enquiry. Where the disputed lands are new chur, and the ryots who have occupied and cultivated have not attorned, the proprietor who first sues them for rent will have to prove his title, and his adversary has the advantage of watching and preparing himself. In this last class of cases, for reasons already given, it is not desirable that the essential question of title as between proprietors claiming adversely should be raised and tried in a petty rent-suit.

II. Then, as regards the other question which may be raised in a rent-suit,—namely, is the rent claimed due and unpaid? the defences upon this issue may be—

- (a) payment ;
- (b) set-off ;
- (c) deposit under the provisions of the Rent Act ;
- (d) limitation, &c. :

and it is clear that, in order to the trial of any of the questions so raised, it is unnecessary to make third persons parties to the suit.

Under these circumstances, we think the suits for rent should not be complicated by bringing in third persons who claim adversely to the plaintiff, and raising, as between such third persons and the plaintiff, questions of title which involve not merely the right to a small amount of arrears of rent, but also the right to a large and valuable property. In this case it appears that there were alleged to be certain kabuliats said to have been executed by the defendants in the plaintiff's favour. These kabuliats were not produced: and as to their non-production, we think that the remarks made by the Munsif are reasonable and proper. Then the Subordinate Judge remarks upon the fact of the Munsif not having allowed a registered document to be proved for the purpose of showing that the boundaries of the plots given therein described those plots as belonging to the plaintiff's share of the taluq. We think that [247] the Munsif was here correct, and that the Subordinate Judge was in error in supposing that this document, being a document between third parties, could be evidence against the defendants under s. 7 of the Evidence Act. With reference to the observation in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that it is the boast of the Narail Baboos to bring refractory ryots to their senses, we are not shown that this question was raised, or that there is any evidence on the record to establish this fact; and we think that an observation of a personal nature like this is out of place in the judgment of a Court of justice. The Subordinate Judge having relied upon a considerable portion of documentary evidence, to a part of which he has assigned much greater weight than it deserves, and part of which, for example the registered kabuliat, is inadmissible in evidence, then passes on to consider the effect of the oral evidence. He commences thus:—"Then came a whole host of respectable witnesses, who proved payment of rents by the defendants in 1280 and 1281 partly." Having examined this evidence, he concludes his judgment thus:—"For all these reasons taken together I hold that the plaintiff started a strong prima facie case which the defendants were bound to rebut, but did not think it fit to rebut by proving their own case." It appears to us that the conclusion at which the Subordinate Judge here arrives is a conclusion based upon the whole of the evidence, documentary and oral, taken together; and as we have pointed out that part of this documentary evidence has been improperly received, it follows that a conclusion based upon materials an essential portion of which was irrelevant cannot be sustained. We must, therefore, remand this case in order that the lower Appellate Court may come to a conclusion upon the evidence, excluding that which we have shown to be irrelevant, upon the question whether the relation of landlord and tenant has been established as between the parties to these suits. We desire to say that it lies upon the plaintiff not merely to start a strong prima facie case, but in the first instance to bear the whole burden of proof. Having regard to the serious errors committed by the Officiating Subordinate Judge, we direct that these appeals upon remand be taken up and disposed of by the District Judge. [248] The costs will abide the result.

Prinsep, J. --I agree in remanding this case for retrial by the District Judge, because there has been a mis-trial by the Subordinate Judge both in his manner of dealing with the case and in admitting as evidence what is not legal evidence.

Appeal allowed and cases remanded.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 8th December, 1881.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MORRIS AND MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP.

Lutful Huq.....Judgment-debtor

versus

Sumbhudin Pattuck.....Decree-holder.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sched. ii, art. 179, and s. 15—Application for execution of decree—Order staying execution.

The plaintiff obtained an ex parte decree on 7th February 1876, of which he applied for execution on the 31st May 1876. Thereupon the defendant applied to set aside the decree, on the ground that he had had no notice of the suit, and an order was made staying the execution of the decree. The defendant's application was rejected on the 15th November 1876, and an appeal by the defendant, pending which the stay of execution was continued, was dismissed on the 19th December 1877. Previously, viz., on the 21st February 1877, the execution-case had been struck off the file. Held that, notwithstanding the application was made more than three years after the decree, and the plaintiff was not entitled to any deduction of the time during which the execution was stayed by order of Court, an application for execution made on the 10th December 1880 was, under art. 179* of Act XV of 1877, not barred, the decree not being final until the order dismissing the appeal on the 19th December 1877.

SUMBHUDIN PATTUCK obtained an ex parte decree against Lutful Huq on the 7th February 1876. He applied for execution on the 31st May 1876, and thereupon the judgment-debtor applied to revive the suit, on the ground that he had had no notice of it, and an order was made staying execution of the decree. That application of the defendant was rejected on the 15th November 1876, and against the order of rejection an appeal [249] was filed on the 13th January 1877, and the Judge ordered that execution should not be proceeded with until the appeal was decided. The appeal was dismissed on the 19th December 1877; but previously, viz., on the 21st February 1877, the execution-case had been struck off the file. On the 18th December 1880 the present application was made for execution of the decree.

The lower Court held that, as the decree-holder was completely stopped by the order staying execution from taking any steps to execute the decree between the 13th January and 19th December 1877, he was entitled to make the application within three years from the last-mentioned date, and therefore the application was not barred.

The Judgments of the Court (MORRIS and PRINSEP, JJ.) were delivered as follows :--

Morris, J.—We affirm the order of the lower Court allowing execution to proceed, though upon grounds different from those on which the Judge bases his order. The facts of the case are as follow :—A decree was passed on the 7th February 1876. The decree-holder applied for execution on the 31st May following. On the 15th November of that year, the judgment-debtor made an application to revive the suit, on the ground that he had no notice of it. This application was rejected on the 15th November 1876, and an appeal by the judgment-debtor against this order was dismissed on the 19th December 1877. But previously to this, that is, upon the entertainment of the application to revive the suit, the Court directed the execution-proceedings to be stayed; and on the 21st of February 1877, that is, before the final order on appeal, on the application to revive the suit, was passed, the Court, of its own motion, struck the execution-case off its file. It thus happens that the judgment-creditor did not make a second application for execution to issue until the 18th December 1880, and it is contended that this application is out of time, it having been made more than three years from the date of the decree. But it seems to us, that this case is met by [250] the 2nd clause of art. 179, sch. ii, Act XV of 1877. The application to revive the suit really kept the decree open, and that decree did not become final until the order of the Appellate Court was passed on the 19th December 1877. The result is, that the second application is within time as being “made within three years of the final order of the Appellate Court,” and execution must, therefore, now follow.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Prinsep, J.—Execution of the decree now before us was stayed by an injunction issued by the Subordinate Judge. The decree-holder has applied to execute his decree within three years from the removal of that injunction, but it is contended that execution is barred under art. 179, sch. ii, Act XV of 1877, and it has been brought to our notice that, under the terms of s. 15 of that Act, a decree-holder would not be entitled to any exclusion of time during which execution was suspended by an injunction in calculation of the period allowed by the Law of Limitation. It might thus happen that, if the injunction remained in force for three years, execution could be absolutely barred. This appears to be the present state of the law. Fortunately it does not operate prejudicially in the present case, because we are able to treat the order passed by the Subordinate Judge, which had the effect of withdrawing the injunction, as the final order of the Appellate Court in the suit; but injustice may arise in another case owing to s. 15 applying only to suits and not to other proceedings.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[The Limitation Act, 1908, extended the operation of sec. 15 to applications for the execution of a decree. This sets at rest the previous conflict of decisions on the subject.

*Admission of an appeal after time Limitation Act (XV of 1877),
s. 5, sched. 1—Power of High Court to rectify such an error.*

The High Court, sitting on second appeal, has power to look into the grounds which a Judge has given for admitting an appeal after the lapse of the period allowed by the Limitation Act.

Morri Bewa v. Surendranath Roy (2 B. L. R., A. C., 184, note; s. C., 10 W. R., 178,) followed.

THIS was a suit to recover from the defendants certain arrears of rent for four bighas of land; the defendants contended that they used to pay the rent claimed, but that they paid it for a larger area of land than that in respect of which rent was now claimed; the Munsif, on the 29th June 1874, decided the case in favour of the plaintiff. On the 28th June 1875, the defendants brought a regular suit for a declaration that they held possession of eight bighas of the plaintiff's land, which suit was eventually, on the 5th February 1879, decided by the High Court, the Judges holding that the question of area had been already decided in the rent-suit, and could not be re-opened. On the 5th March 1879, the defendants applied to be allowed to appeal from the decree of the 29th June 1874, stating that they had instituted and prosecuted the regular suit on the belief that the rent-suit was no bar to it, claiming the relief under s. 5^d of the Limitation Act.

The District Judge recorded on the order sheet the following order: "The appeal is admissible under the provisions of s. 5, cl. 2, of Act XV of 1877, read with s. 14, cl. 1, of the same Act," and sent the appeal to the Subordinate Judge of the district for disposal.

[252] The Subordinate Judge held, that ignorance of the law on the part of the defendants was no sufficient reason for the delay in the presentation of the appeal: and that, moreover, twelve times the period of limitation allowed by law had expired before they instituted the regular suit, so that s. 5, cl. 2, of Act XV of 1877 could not apply. He therefore dismissed the appeal.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Sreenath Banerjee for the Appellants.

Mr. R. E. Twidale and Baboo Aukilchunder Sen for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MORRIS and PRINSEP, JJ.) was delivered by Morris, J.—What has occurred in this case is, that the District Judge, after admitting the appeal, which was long out of time, sent the appeal for decision to the Subordinate Judge. On the hearing of the appeal, after hearing both sides in the matter, the Subordinate Judge threw out the appeal on the ground that it was inadmissible. It is contended before us in special appeal, on the authority of the case of Jhotee Sahoo v. Omesh Chunder Sircar (1. L. R., 5 Cal., 1), that the Subordinate Judge could not override the order of the District Judge admitting the appeal, and that he had only jurisdiction to hear the appeal on its merits. We have referred to the original order passed by the Judge. He does not in express words say that the appeal is admitted. He only says that it is 'admissible.' A doubt arises whether, by this order, the Judge did not intend that the appeal should be entertained subject to hearing objections to its admissibility when both sides were before the Court. However, assuming that the Judge did admit the appeal, and that, under the authority of the case quoted, the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to overrule the District Judge's order of admission, it seems to us that we ought to deal with this matter in special appeal as a case in which the District Judge has exercised so bad a discretion as to amount to an irregularity in law. The record shows that the subject of dispute between the parties [253] was decided by the Munsif so long ago as the 29th June 1874, and that order became final as the defendants preferred no appeal against it. For

* [Sec 5:—If the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal or application expires on a day when the Court is closed, the suit, appeal or application may be instituted, presented or made on the day a whole year the defendants slept over their rights, and then, by means of a suit for declaration of right, they sought a form of relief which the High Court eventually, in 1879, declared to be closed against them. Foiled in this attempt, the defendants have attempted to re-open, by means of appeal, the question which was determined by the Munsif in June 1874. It seems to us that the District Judge, in admitting this appeal, has overlooked the fact that, for a whole year, that is, long after the period prescribed by the Law of Limitation for appeal had expired,—the defendants allowed the decision to stand, and that it is entirely owing to their laches that this long delay occurred. The District Judge, too, has done this without having before him material sufficient in law to enable him to come to the conclusion that the delay was justified. We follow as an authority in this matter the case of Mowri Bewa v. Surendranath Roy (2 B. L. R., A. C., 184, note; S. C., 10 W. R., 178), in which a Division Bench of this Court held, that “it is competent for the High Court, sitting on special appeal, to look into the grounds which a Judge has given for admitting an appeal after the lapse of the period limited for the purpose by the Procedure Code.” We consider that the Judge has exercised an improper and unwarrantable discretion in admitting this appeal: and we therefore affirm in substance, though on an entirely different ground, the order of the Subordinate Judge disallowing the admission of the appeal.

We give no costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

[254] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 17th September, 1881.

PRESENT:

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE,
MR. JUSTICE MORRIS, AND MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM.

In the matter of a reference from the Board of Revenue under s. 46 of the General Stamp Act.

Ex parte Hill and others

Stamp Act (1 of 1879), s. 3, cls. 12, 13; s. 7, para. 2.—Stamp-duty—
Lease—Patta—Mortgage.

By an instrument which recited that A was indebted to B in the sum of two lacs of rupees and that A had taken a fresh loan of Rs. 2,59,000 from B, the former leased certain monzas to the latter for a term of twenty years, at a yearly rental of Rs. 1,40,000. It was provided that, from the rent of each year, a portion should be deducted in payment of A's debt to B; so that in this way the whole debt should be paid by a series of instalments extending over the term of the lease. The instrument also contained the usual clauses found in pattas. On the question, what was the proper amount of stamp-duty leviable on the document,—

* Reference from the Board of Revenue, No. 977 B. of 1881, made by A. Forbes, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Board of Revenue, L. P., dated the 13th September 1881.

Held, that though the arrangement intended to be effected was partly a lease and partly an usufructuary mortgage, yet the instrument came within the provisions of s. 7, para. 2 of the Stamp Act, and should be stamped as a mortgage only.

IN this case the question was as to the stamp-duty chargeable on an instrument called a patta, granted by the Rajah of Bettia to Messrs. Hill & Co., the proprietors of the Turkowlia factories. The instrument is as follows :—

“1, Maharajah Rajendra Kisore Singh, Bahadoor, malik of Parganas Majhawa, Semraon Sarkar, Chumparun, and of villages in the districts of Sarun, Mozufferpore, and Gorakhpore, &c., do hereby declare that Mouzas, Turkowlia, etc., are in thika to Turkowlia Indigo Concern, at a yearly rental of Rs. 1,26,892-6, on receipt of a security deposit to the amount of a year's rental (jamina) and of a patowa^{*} loan on interest as stipulated in the lease dated the 8th February 1873, for the term of fifteen years up to 1294 Fuslee; and Mouzas Bijulpore, &c., at an annual rental (jamina) of Rs. 12,344-12, on [255] receipt of a year's rental as deposit without interest, and of a patowa loan on interest extending the term of years for different villages up to 1306 Fuslee; and Khap Koosahar and Khap Chatia, at a yearly rental of Rs. 43, on receipt of a deposit of Rs. 8-12 without interest. The total amount of the yearly rental of the abovesaid villages being Rs. 1,40,280, and the total amount of deposit received being Rs. 1,40,245-14. On deducting the yearly receipts up to 1207 Fuslee by the thikadars from the leased villages in liquidation of the loan as per stipulation of the patowa lease, the Raj still owes to the said Indigo Concern an amount of Rs. 2,01,406-13 on account of loan and deposits made by the proprietors of Turkowlia Concern. I have now taken another new loan of Rs. 2,58,393-3 on interest at annas 8 per cent. per month from Messrs. Henry Hill & Co., proprietors of Turkowlia factories, etc., through their Manager Dr. James H. G. Hill, by drafts on Messrs. Begg, Dunlop & Co., of Calcutta, which being added to the old, amounts to Rs. 4,59,800. Now it has been agreed with my free will and consent, with the concurrence of my son Maharaj Kumar Harendra Kisore Singh Bahadoor, and of Messrs. Henry Hill & Co., proprietors of Turkowlia indigo factories, etc., through the mediation of Mr. F. M. Gibbon, C.I.E., Manager of my estate, and of Dr. James H. G. Hill, Manager of Turkowlia Concern, that, in supersession of all the abovesaid leases, the terms of which have not yet expired, another new lease for Mouzas Turkowlia, etc., be given for a term of twenty years, commencing from 1288 Fuslee, and during the first nineteen years of the term, the amount of the principal debt due by me, together with interest at 8 annas per cent. per month, be liquidated from the yearly rental of the villages given in lease according to sadhawa patowa (conditional usufructuary mortgage) system. Out of Rs. 1,40,245-14 received as deposit under old leases, I will repay in cash just at the time of the execution of this deed Rs. 39-10 to the said thikadars, keeping the balance of Rs. 1,40,206-4, equivalent to one year's rental, as deposit under this new lease, which amount will be accounted for as rent for the year ending with the term of this lease. On the above agreement, I do hereby lease to the said Company the villages Turkowlia, etc., named at the bottom of this document, and which are still in their possession by virtue of the former leases for the term of twenty years from 1288 Fuslee to 1307 inclusive, by taking due kabuliats from them and transferring to them the same zamindari rights and privileges as they had heretofore with the exception of Mehal Neemakxayer, Khori saltpetre refineries, Mokharikhap and jagir [236] lands given by the Raj, jalkar mehal of Tappa Khadda, and other items prohibited by Government. - the amount of the yearly rental of all the villages given now in lease being the same as before, with a small deduction of Rs. 376 as mojarai, and with the addition of Rs. 302-2, being the rent of Mehal Charsa, which is now transferred to the said thikadars under the lease, and thereby the total amount of the yearly rental under the lease being Rs. 1,40,206-4 as detailed below. It is hereby required that the said thikadars, their heirs, and their executors should remain in possession as they were heretofore under former leases, appropriating the produces and income of the villages, and satisfying their demands of debt due from me, together with interest, out of the yearly rental of the villages till 1306 Fuslee, according to the kist given below, and the amount of deposit, Rs. 1,10,206-4, as stated above to have been received by the Raj, should be kept as deposit without interest in like manner, as it was before, with the condition that it will be accounted for as rent of the villages due to the Raj for the year ending with the term. It is also required that the thikadars, after satisfying the annual kist of their dues with interest out of the yearly rental, shall pay the balance every year in four kists, as stated below, in the treasury of the Raj, taking due receipts from the maliks, or the manager for the time being. In default of paying the above four kists or one year's rent, I, the malik, my heirs, or my manager for the time being, shall have the rights reserved to us to deduct from the amount of deposit, the arrear rent due to the Raj with 12 per cent. interest thereon, and to break this lease after repaying the unliquidated portion of the loan to the thikadars, their heirs or executors, and to make resettlement of the villages with any other person. The thikadars should not cut themselves, or allow others to cut, the trees belonging to assamis or gayari (unclaimed) trees; nor should plant any tope, establish any hat, bazar, or gola; dismiss any registered patwari without my and my manager's sanction. In case the thikadars like to get their work done by their own motsaddi, they can do so on giving copies of village papers to the registered patwari by taking due receipt from him. No claim for remission in jamma on account of diluvion shall be heard or accepted, nor the Raj shall claim any excess jamma on account of alluvion. The thikadars should take proper care of the gayari (unclaimed) bamboos, and supply annually by their own carts 2,289 bamboos and 476 bundles of thatching grass during the term of the lease to the chawnis of Chitowni and Motihari; in default, the cost of the same, at the rate of 10 [237] per cent., will be deducted from the amount of the rent paid by the thikadars. It is also required that the thikadars should not grant patta to any assami at a low rate of rent. The orders of Courts and Police should be executed by the thikadars. The thikadars should take care of the boundaries of the villages under this lease, that a dhooz of land may not go out of their possession. Should any dispute regarding boundary arise between them and other thikadars of the Raj, they should settle it on referring to the Government thakbust map of 1845, or to any settlement done by the Raj, the expenses being borne by themselves; but should such dispute arise in the Civil Court between them and other maliks, the Raj would conduct the case and bear the cost. The village charges and salaries of patwaris, as a custom, should be paid in by the thikadars, and during the term of this thika, the thikadars should not grant leases at a low rate to their relatives or protégés; and if during the term of the lease the thikadars purchase any ryot's rights of occupancy, they shall have, after the expiration of the terms, no claim to such purchase or right of possession. The thikadars should submit copies of decrees they may get in cases of dispossession, etc., other than rent cases. The thikadars should take utmost care of the sayers and property of the Raj, and protect ryots. The road, public works, and embankment cesses, etc., should be paid in by the thikadars in addition to the jamma paid by them, they having every right to realise such cesses from the ryots by the virtue of this deed. If they deviate from any of the above terms or conditions after repeated takeoeds given to them, this lease shall be considered null and void. On the above terms or conditions this sadhawa patowa patta is written."

Then followed a schedule containing in the first column the years, in succession, of the term for which the patta was granted: in the second column, opposite each year, the total yearly rental, namely, Rs. 1,40,000-4-0; in the third column, the proportion of this total rental to be given in each year to the lessor; and in the fourth column, the proportion of this total rental retained by the lessee. From this schedule it appeared that the whole debt would be paid off by the last year of the term.

The only question was as to the amount of stamp-duty payable on this instrument.

Mr. P O'Knealy argued, that the document amounted to a lease for the time stipulated, with a power to the lessee to [258] appropriate a part of the rent, as it should become due, in paying off his lessor's debt. Had the power been written on a separate piece of paper, the remainder of the document would clearly have been a lease. What difference can it make that the lease and the power are in the same document? [GARTH, C.J.—It is not a mere power. The lessee could not sue for his debt during the term of the lease.] Then the power at most amounted to an agreement which would require an additional eight-anna stamp. It is impossible to put this document higher than a lease with an agreement for payment of the debt superadded. Taxing Acts must be construed strictly—The Port Canning Land Company, Ltd. (16 W. R., 208) and Cor v. Rabbits (L. R., 3 App. Cas., 473, at p. 478). This is no mortgage, as there is no intention to mortgage and no equity of redemption reserved—Mashook Ameen Sazzada v. Marem Reddy (8 Mad. II. C. Rep., 31) and Macpherson on Mortgages, pp. 8, 9.

The Advocate General Mr. (G. C. Paul) for the Government.—This instrument is a lease, and it is also a mortgage; it should therefore be stamped as a lease and as a mortgage. [TOTTENHAM, J. Are you not governed by the second clause of s. 7?] No, the instrument relates to two distinct matters, the lease and the security, and should be stamped as such. Mashook Ameen Sazzada v. Marem Reddy (8 Mad. II. C. Rep., 31), is not consistent with the decisions of this Court.

The Opinion of the Court (GARTH, C.J., MORRIS, J., and TOTTENHAM, J.) was delivered by Garth, C.J.—We think that the instrument in question should be stamped as a mortgage only.

The arrangement which it is intended to effect is partly a lease and partly a usufructuary mortgage. In consideration of the former loan being allowed to continue, and of the additional loan being now made by the proprietors of the Concern, the Maharajah grants a lease of the properties for twenty years, upon terms which secure to the lessees the repayment of the [239] whole sum with interest by yearly instalments and at the same time secure to the Maharajah a very substantial share in the usufruct of the property. It seems clear to us, that, under these circumstances, the loan is the consideration for the lease and the lease is the consideration for the loan; and that neither part of the arrangement would have been complete without the other.

We, therefore, think it impossible to say, that the instrument relates to two distinct matters within the meaning of the first clause of s. 7 of the General Stamp Act. That clause, in our opinion, relates only to transactions so distinct in their nature as to be capable of being carried out by two or more instruments instead of one, whereas here the contract is essentially one transaction. On the other hand we think, that the case falls within the second clause of s. 7, the instrument being one which answers two of the descriptions in the first schedule, and which is therefore chargeable with the highest duty which can be imposed on an instrument of either description.

It has been suggested that, in this point of view, a large proportion of the rental would in effect pay no duty, because that share of it only would be charged which the lessees are empowered to retain in payment of the mortgage-debt, and no duty would be charged upon the share which is payable to the Maharajah. This, however, is a contingency, which might arise in many other cases, and for which the Stamp Act, so far as we can see, appears to have made no provision.

Stamp Act (I of 1879), —ss. 37, 40 - Arbitration—Award—Reading payment of stamp-duty.

Six persons acted as arbitrators in a dispute between two of their fellow-villagers, and delivered their award in writing. Subsequently, the award was [260] filed in evidence by one of the disputants in a civil suit in the Court of the Munsif of Cuttack, who, on the ground that the document bore no stamp, impounded it and forwarded it to the Collector, who ordered the writer to be prosecuted. The Deputy Magistrate, to whom the case was referred, summoned the six persons who had acted as arbitrators, and fined them Rs. 25 each. On a reference to the High Court by the District Magistrate,—

Held, that the conviction was illegal, and should be set aside.

Criminal Reference, No. 218 of 1881. from the order made by R.H. Pawsey, Esq., Magistrate of Cuttack, dated the 12th November 1881.

Held also, that the procedure laid down in s. 37 of the Stamp Act must be strictly followed; and that, before a prosecution can be instituted under s. 40, the Collector is bound to form an opinion as to whether the offence was committed with the intention of evading payment of the proper duty.

IN this case the accused were six persons who had acted as arbitrators in a dispute between two of their fellow-villagers respecting a plot of land, the value of which was not above Rs. 50. One of the disputants having afterwards filed the award in the Court of the Munsif of Cuttack, that Judge held, that the stamp payable was Rs. 5, which with the penalty amounted in all to Rs. 55. This sum not having been paid, the Munsif, on the 20th June 1881, impounded the document, and sent it to the Collector, who ordered a criminal prosecution. The Deputy Magistrate, to whom the case was referred, summoned the six members of the punchayet, and fined them Rs. 25 each. The case was referred by the Magistrate to the High Court.

The Judgments of the Court (PONTIFEX and FIELD, JJ.) were delivered as follows:—

Field, J.—In this case six persons have been convicted under s. 61 of the Indian Stamp Act, I of 1879, under the following circumstances: These six persons were members of a punchayet, who decided a matter relating to a small piece of land, acting as arbitrators or umpires between two of their fellow-villagers. This decision, or arbitration, was reduced into writing, but the writing was not stamped. One of the persons at whose instance it was made having subsequently resorted to the Civil Court, this written award was filed in the suit. This paper may possibly have been an award within the meaning of art. 10, sched. I of the Stamp Act, and as it had not been stamped, the Munsif, before whom it was filed, proceeded to impound it; and subsequently, in accordance with the provisions of s. 35 of the Stamp Act, he forwarded the paper to the Collector. The Collector upon this made an order that the writer of the document be sent to the Deputy Magistrate for trial under the Criminal Code. The Deputy Magistrate upon this summoned the six persons who had acted as arbitrators, and imposed upon them a fine of Rs. 25 each, making a total of Rs. 150.

It appears to us, that this conviction is illegal, and must be set aside. When the Munsif forwarded the award to the Collector under the provisions of s. 35 of the Stamp Act, the course which the Collector ought to have pursued was that laid down by s. 37 of the Act, the language of which section is imperative: "He shall adopt the following procedure." If the Collector was of opinion that the instrument was chargeable with duty and was not duly stamped, his course was to require the payment of the proper duty, or the amount required to make up the same together with a penalty (see cl. (b) of s. 37). If this duty and penalty had been paid, then, according to the provisions of s. 40, such payment would not have been a bar to the prosecution of any person who appeared to have committed an offence against the stamp law in respect to the instrument under the proviso to s. 40; a criminal prosecution could not have been instituted unless it appeared to the Collector that the offence was committed with an intention of evading payment of the proper duty. It appears to us to be clear from the provisions referred to, that it was the intention of the Legislature in the first place to compel the payment of the stamp-duty together with a penalty. By the payment of the stamp-duty, the revenue would be protected from loss; and the exaction of a small money penalty would be a sufficient punishment in the large majority of cases in which the omission to stamp at all, or stamp duly, arises from negligence, inadvertence, or ignorance of the provisions of the stamp law. The severer proceeding of a criminal prosecution is intended for those cases only in which there is an intention to evade the stamp law; and before a criminal prosecution can be instituted, it is incumbent upon the Collector to form an opinion whether it appears to him that such intention existed. Now, in the [262] present case the Collector did not adopt the procedure provided by the Act. He did not call upon the parties concerned to pay the stamp-duty together with the penalty prescribed by cl. (b), s. 37. Had he done so, there is no reason to suppose that it would not have been paid. The penalty required by the Munsif was apparently higher than it should have been under the Stamp Act; and it may well have been that the Collector would have required a smaller sum, and that this smaller sum would have been paid by the parties concerned. Thus, if the duty, as assessed by the Collector, together with the penalty, had been paid, a criminal prosecution could not have been instituted, unless it appeared to the Collector that there had been an intention of evading the proper duty. It is quite possible that the Collector might have been satisfied that no such intention existed, and that the exaction of the stamp-duty and the stamp penalty may have appeared to him a sufficient vindication of the interests of the public revenue. We may observe that, as the arbitrators did not claim any benefit under the award, and could receive no advantage from the non-payment of the stamp-duty, it is not easy to see how they could have had an intention of evading the stamp law. The Stamp Act is a fiscal enactment, and must be strictly construed; and before any person can be punished for an offence relating to the stamp revenue, the procedure prescribed by the Act must be strictly followed. "If," said Lord Mansfield in Hartley v. Hooker (2 Cowper, 523), "a new offence is created by statute, and a special jurisdiction out of the course of the common law is prescribed, it must be followed. If not strictly pursued, all is a nullity and coram non jure." We are, therefore, of opinion that, as the course of procedure prescribed by the Act was not followed in this case, the prosecution before the Deputy Magistrate was unwarranted, and the conviction is bad in law. We reverse the conviction and direct that the fines, if paid, be refunded.

Pontifex, J. -I am of the same opinion.

NOTES.

[As regards the intention to evade duty, see also 7 Bom. 82; 7 Mad. 537.  [263] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 3rd September, 1881.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

In the matter of the Petition of Mahomed Busheerul Hossein.

Bibee Munghur and another
 Mahomed Busheerul Hossein.*

Appeal—Lunatic—Act XXXV of 1858, ss. 3, 4, 22—Notice.

On an application made by the wife and son of Tajamul Hossein, an alleged lunatic, under the provisions of Act XXXV of 1858, s. 3, the daughters of the alleged lunatic, who were served with a notice under s. 1† of the same Act, appeared at the hearing of the application and cross-examined the witnesses examined in support of the application. The Judge found that Tajamul Hossein was of unsound mind, and appointed his wife, Mussamut Latifan, to be the guardian of his person. The daughters appealed to the High Court.

Held (on an objection being taken that the appellants had no locus standi) that the daughters were entitled to appeal under the provisions of s. 22, Act XXXV of 1858.

Sherman v. Schorn (21 W. R., 121) referred to.

Quære—Whether a right to sue to recover a property would be sufficient to confer jurisdiction under Act XXXV of 1858 ?

THE facts of this case are sufficiently set forth in the Judgment of the Court.

Mr. Sandel for the Appellants.

Baboo Saligram Singh for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge of Patna, adjudging one Tajamul Hossein, a lunatic under Act XXXV of 1858, and appointing his son, [264] the respondent before us, the manager of his estate. The appeal has been preferred by the daughters of the alleged lunatic. When this appeal was first argued before us, we adjourned it for a time to allow the alleged lunatic to prefer an appeal if he was so advised; but on the expiration of the time allowed no such appeal having been preferred, this appeal of the daughters was heard.

An objection in limine has been taken by the pleader on behalf of the respondent, that this appeal ought to be rejected on the ground that the daughters have no locus standi. We do not think this objection is valid.

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 138 of 1881, against the order of H. Beveridge, Esq., Officiating Judge of Patna, dated the 4th March 1881.

† [Sec. 4 :—When the Civil Court is about to institute any such enquiry as aforesaid, it shall cause notice to be given to the alleged lunatic of the time and place at which it is proposed to hold the enquiry. If it shall appear that the alleged lunatic is in such a state that personal service on him would be ineffectual, the Court may direct such substituted service of the notice as it shall think proper. The Court may also direct a copy of such notice to be served upon any relative of the alleged lunatic.]

*The proceedings in the District Judge's Court at Patna were initiated by an application made by the respondent under s. 3 of Act XXXV of 1858. It was alleged in that application, that the alleged lunatic was then residing at Patna with the applicant, his son, and the applicant's mother, his wife. It was alleged that Tajamul Hossein is a resident of the district of Gya. A notice under s. 4 was ordered to be stuck up at the house of the lunatic in the district of Gya. A general notice was also issued inviting objections from persons interested. Therefore the daughters, appellants before us, appeared and opposed the petition. They were treated as parties to the proceeding, being allowed to cross-examine the witnesses examined in support of the application.

Under the circumstances stated above, we are of opinion that the daughters of the alleged lunatic have the right of appeal to this Court under s. 22 of Act XXXV of 1858. Although an absence of appeal on the part of the alleged lunatic raises some presumption in favour of the correctness of the lower Court's order, yet a relative interested in the personal welfare of the alleged lunatic, and in the preservation of his estate, may appeal against the adjudication by the lower Court, if he was a party to the proceedings. In Sherman v. Schorn (24 W. R., 121), a relative of an alleged lunatic was allowed to appeal against an order adjudging him a lunatic under the Act in question. The provision in s. 4 of the Act, that "the Court may also direct a copy of such notice to be served upon any relative [265] of the alleged lunatic," shows that it was the intention of the Legislature to confer the right of appeal upon such relatives who are made parties to the proceeding, or who are entitled to appear as such. We therefore overrule the preliminary objection.

Upon the merits it is quite clear to us that the enquiry in this case was quite insufficient. The petitioner and another witness were examined, and it is not satisfactorily established upon their evidence that Tajamul Hossein is of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs. The District Judge mainly relies upon two medical certificates which have not been regularly proved in this case. But putting aside that defect in the procedure, the medical opinions expressed in those two documents do not show that the alleged lunatic is of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs. The order of the lower Court, therefore, cannot stand, and we reverse it accordingly. The appellants are entitled to recover from the respondent the costs of this proceeding in this as well as in the lower Court. We assess the hearing fees at Rs. 50.

It may be noted here that the appellants before us objected to the jurisdiction of the lower Court to entertain the application in question on two grounds, viz., (i) that Tajamul Hossein was not residing within its jurisdiction, and (ii) that he was not possessed of any property. As regards the first objection, it appeared to us that the District Judge has too readily assumed jurisdiction without sufficient inquiry. The other objection raises a difficult question of law. The District Judge is of opinion that a right to sue for the recovery of a property would be sufficient to confer jurisdiction under the Act. The question is not free from difficulty. However, it is not necessary for us to express any opinion upon it, as we reverse the decision of the lower Court upon the merits.

Appeal allowed.

In the matter of the Petition of Kashi Chunder Sen.

Kashi Chunder Sen.*

Act IX of 1861—Jurisdiction—Marriage—Custody of minor—Injunction.

The paternal uncle of a female Hindu minor, whose father was dead, applied to the District Judge, under Act IX of 1861, for the custody of the minor, and for an injunction to prevent the mother of the minor from carrying out a projected marriage. On the 8th of March 1881, the Judge issued an ad interim injunction. When the application came on for hearing, it appeared that the marriage had taken place before the order of injunction had reached the parties. The District Judge found that though the mother was entitled to the custody of the minor, yet the petitioner was entitled to give the minor in marriage in preference to the mother. The District Judge also found that the marriage had not in fact been validly performed. On appeal to the High Court, it was contended that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to determine the right of any party to give an infant in marriage on an application under Act IX of 1861, or to grant an injunction; and it was also contended that the Magistrate was wrong in entering into the question of the factum of the marriage.

Held that, under the provisions of Act IX of 1861, the District Judge had jurisdiction

Held also, that for the purpose of deciding whether the injunction should issue, the Judge was justified in entering into the question of the factum of the marriage, though his finding on that point would have no effect in determining its validity.

THIS was an appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Hooghly, dated the 23rd of April 1881. The case made and the issues settled are thus set out in the Judgment of the Court below :—

“ In this case the uncle of a female minor has applied to this Court to restrain the mother from giving the girl in marriage [267] without his sanction, and to make over the person of the girl to his guardianship under Act IX of 1861. A temporary injunction prohibiting the celebration of the marriage was issued. The father of the intended bridegroom has represented by petition that the marriage had been celebrated before the order reached the parties. He also alleges that the mother has a prior title to the custody of the minor. The mother also represents that the marriage has been completed, and that, by her husband's permission, she had the right to sanction the marriage. The petitioner denies that a marriage in due form has been celebrated.

“ The following issues were framed : (i)—Has an uncle authority to give in marriage his deceased brother's daughter, or to forbid the giving of the girl, in marriage by her mother? (ii)—If there has been a de facto marriage of such girl, is the uncle entitled to obtain her custody directly or otherwise in preference to her mother? (iii) Has the marriage of Shoshee Mukhi been celebrated? (iv)—Is the plaintiff entitled to any and what relief?"

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 162 of 1881, against the order of T. F. Bignold, Esq., Judge of Chittagong, dated the 23rd April 1881.

A preliminary objection was taken that the case did not come within the scope of Act IX of 1861: this the Judge overruled, and then proceeded to consider the issues. The Judge found the first issue in favour of the uncle, citing Vyavastha Darpana, 651; Ex parte Junky Persaud Angurwallah, In re Moonce Beebe (2 Boulnois, 114); and Namasevayam Pillay v. Annammai Unmul (4 Mad. II. C. R., 339). The second issue was found in favour of the mother. On the third issue the Judge found that there was not a valid marriage (referring to Tagore Law Lectures for 1878, p. 94, et seq), and then went on to say:—"I therefore issue an injunction to the mother forbidding her to give the girl in marriage without the uncle's consent. If the uncle arranges a suitable marriage for the girl, who is already nine years old, within the current year 1881, and desires the custody of the minor to effect the marriage, the Court will, if the uncle has duly consulted the mother, and if the marriage be a suitable one, be disposed, on application at the time, to arrange for the custody of the minor with a view to such marriage. But if the uncle neglect to arrange [268] a suitable marriage within the current year 1881, the Court will be disposed, on application, to authorize the mother to contract the girl in marriage without reference to the uncle."

The mother appealed to the High Court, on the grounds that nothing, except a mere right to the custody of the infant, could be determined on an application made under Act IX of 1861: and further, that the learned Judge was wrong in his finding as to the factum of a valid marriage; and that, admitting his finding to be correct, he had no right to enter into that question.

Baboo Kali Prasanna Dutt and Baboo Troilukhyanath Mitter for the Appellants.

Baboo Gurudas Banerjee and Baboo Rashbehary Ghose for the Respondent.

The Judgments of the Court (TOTTENHAM and BROUGHTON, JJ.) were delivered as follows:—

Tottenham, J.—This was an application made by one Kashi Chunder Sen to the District Judge, praying under Act IX of 1861 for the custody of a minor, his niece, and also for an injunction restraining the minor's mother and one Gopee Mohun Ghose from carrying out a marriage between the minor and the son of Gopee Mohun.

The marriage was at first fixed for the 10th of March 1881, being two days after the petition was presented. The Judge accordingly issued an injunction on the 8th of March, and fixed a day for the disposal of the petition. When the petition came on for hearing, it was objected that, before the Judge's injunction reached the parties, the marriage had been performed. It was therefore contended that the applicant Kashi Chunder Sen had no more locus standi under Act IX of 1861. The Judge at once found that the mother of the minor was by law the person entitled to the custody of her daughter so far as the bodily custody was concerned, and that point appears to have been practically undisputed. But in order to satisfy himself whether he should give a permanent injunction or not as prayed by the petition, the Judge thought it necessary to investigate the question whether the marriage alleged to have been per- [269] formed had been performed according to the shastras, and whether it was a valid marriage or not: for, as he says, if the marriage turned out to be not a valid one, the uncle would be entitled to an injunction prohibiting the mother from giving the girl in marriage without his consent. Besides the undisputed point as to the right of the mother to the bodily guardianship, it was also found, and was undisputed, that, as regards the minor's disposal in marriage, the uncle, being her father's brother, had a superior right to that of the mother. It was for this reason that the Judge laid down that if the ceremonies gone through did not amount to a marriage, the uncle would be entitled to an injunction prohibiting the mother from giving the girl in marriage without his consent. The result of this enquiry was, that the Judge was satisfied that the proceedings shown to have taken place between the minor and the son of Gopee Mohun did not amount to a marriage, and upon this finding the Judge finally ordered the issue of an injunction to the mother prohibiting her from giving the girl in marriage without the uncle's consent. The order further provides, that in the event of the uncle arranging a suitable marriage for the girl within the current year 1881, the Court would interfere to arrange for the proper custody of the minor with the view of giving effect to such marriage of the minor. The order further provides, that if the uncle neglect to arrange a suitable marriage within the current year 1881, the Court will be disposed, on application, to authorize the mother to contract the girl in marriage without reference to the uncle.

The mother and Gopee Mohun (whose have appealed to this Court against the District Judge's order. It is contended on their behalf that Act IX of 1861 does not allow the District Judge to determine the right of any party to give an infant female in marriage, or to allow any party to obtain an injunction in respect of a proposed marriage. It is contended, that the application ought to have been dismissed upon the first finding that the mother was lawfully entitled to the custody of her daughter. An objection also has been taken to the decision of the Judge against the validity of the marriage which took place. We agree with the Judge in thinking that the application [270] made does come within the scope of Act IX of 1861, as that Act provides for "any claim" in respect of "the custody or guardianship" of a minor. We think that a claim to be guardian for the purpose of marriage does come within the scope of the Act. If a person can, under the Act, claim the guardianship for marriage, we think it quite clear that he is entitled to ask under the Act an injunction to restrain any other person from contracting an improper marriage between the infant and another. So far, therefore, as the Judge went into the question as to the petitioner's right to an injunction, we think he was correct. It is equally clear to us, that under Act IX of 1861 the Judge could not decide as between the parties the question whether the marriage actually performed was a valid marriage or not. We think that in this case the Judge only meant to go into that question, so far as it was necessary to satisfy his own mind, as to whether there was still time or necessity for him to issue an injunction. He could not have intended his finding on this point to be binding upon any of the parties. It certainly could not bind the parties, who most are interested in the question, —viz., the alleged bride and the bridegroom, as they were not parties to the proceedings. We have been asked to set aside this part of the Judge's decision altogether. But it seems to us unnecessary to do this, as it is sufficient that we should record that the finding, such as it is, is not a judicial declaration in the sense of its being binding upon anybody. It leaves the question of the validity of the marriage still an open question, and when that question is disputed, it must be settled by a regular suit.

As to the injunction issued by the District Judge, we think that, in the view he took of the positions of the parties, he was right in issuing it: and we do not think it right for us to set it aside. If the marriage has already been validly performed, that injunction of course hurts nobody. If, on the other hand, the marriage has not been validly performed, the injunction still remains in force, and will be of very great use.

On the whole, it appears to us that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Broughton, J.—I agree in thinking that the Judge has no [271] power to determine the question of marriage so as to bind the minors who are not parties to the proceedings; and I think that he cannot and did not intend to determine the question except for the purpose of satisfying himself whether he should or should not issue an injunction. If a valid marriage has taken place, the injunction would not affect anybody; if, on the other hand, a valid marriage has not taken place, then the injunction is a very useful thing for the interests of the minor. The question of marriage or no marriage is for all purposes still an open question. I think the Judge had jurisdiction under Act IX of 1861 to determine whether he ought to issue an injunction on this application, and I do not think that the Act is confined merely to questions that relate to the custody of the person of an infant. In fact, it clearly appears from the Act itself that it relates to the custody or guardianship. The alternative expression is to be found in several of the sections. And this is a case which shows the necessity of a summary mode of interference when the interests of the minor are put in jeopardy by the conduct of those people who are immediately about her. I think our decision accords with the decision of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Balmakund v. Janki (I. L. R., 3 All., 403), that the question of marriage cannot be enquired into in a summary proceeding like this with regard to the issuing of our injunction; there is no doubt that the same object might be obtained by instituting a civil suit. But the fact that that is so, does not prevent action being taken under a special Act of the Legislature. The Act does not create any new right or liability, but it simply provides for a special remedy for a right or liability already existing. That being the case, parties might resort either to the ordinary form of a suit or resort to the special form given by the Act. This I understand to be the law laid down in several cases which have been applied to this country—see the case of the Wolverhampton Waterworks Co. v. Hawkesford (28 L. J. (N. S.), C. P., 242), and the cases referred to by Sir B. PEACOCK in the case of The Collector of Pubna v. Ramanath Tagore (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 630). [272] If the minor in this instance has suffered any injury, it is clearly due to the conduct of those who are about her. The parties knew well enough, at least their conduct sufficiently shows that they were perfectly aware, that an application was being made in a Court of Justice for the protection of the child's interest. In the face of that, even if they did not know that an injunction had issued, it was their duty to stay their hands, and not, as they did, to hurry on the marriage two days before the day originally fixed for it, in order to avoid any order that the Court might make. If the girl has suffered any injury, I say, it is owing to the conduct of the people who are about her, and they are solely to blame.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[Dr. Trevelyan (Minors, 1912 IV Edn., p. 191) suggests that under the Guardian and Wards Act, VIII of 1890, sec. 25 whereof does not contain the word guardianship, the Court could not decide the right to give in marriage. APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 23rd January, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Ashruffunnissa and another.....Defendants

Lehareaux.....Plaintiff.*

Non-appearance by defendant—Application to defend refused—Ex parte decree against defendants—Right of defendants to appeal without taking steps to set aside the decree— Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 101, 108.

Defendants who put in no appearance at the original hearing, and who have subsequently been refused leave to appear and defend, are at liberty, where an 'ex parte' decree has been passed against them, to appeal to a higher Court, without previously taking any steps to have the 'ex parte' decree set aside under s. 108 of Act X of 1877.

THIS was a suit brought for arrears of rent upon a kabuliati against three defendants. The 7th of June was originally fixed for the trial. Upon that date there was no proof of the kabuliati adduced; and in order to afford the plaintiff an opportunity of adducing this proof, an adjournment was granted till the 6th of July 1880. On the 6th July a petition was presented by two out of the three defendants, asking, under the provisions of s. 101 of the Code of Civil [273] Procedure, to be admitted to defend the case; averring that no summons had been served upon them, and also alleging other matters.

This petition was not verified, nor was it supported by affidavits, and was rejected by the District Judge, because "no sort of good cause was forthcoming"; and he, therefore, without allowing the petitioners to be heard, proceeded to hear the case 'ex parte,' and made an 'ex parte' decree in favour of the plaintiff.

The defendants took no steps under s. 108 of Act X of 1877 to have the 'ex parte' decree set aside, but appealed direct to the High Court.

Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen and Baboo Chunder Mudhub (those for the Appellants.

Baboo Doorga Mohun Dass for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J. (who, after setting out the facts as above stated, continued):— It appears to us that we cannot say that the District Judge was wrong in rejecting a petition of this kind, which was not supported by affidavit and which was not even verified by the defendants on whose behalf it was presented.

Now, the first question that has been raised before us is, whether, under the circumstances, the defendants are entitled to appeal against the 'ex parte' decree without having first resorted to the procedure laid down in s. 108. It appears to us that they are entitled to appeal. Section 101 is as follows:—" If the Court has adjourned the hearing of the suit 'ex parte,' and the defendant, at or before such hearing, appears and assigns good cause for his previous non-appearance, he may, upon such terms as the Court directs as to costs or otherwise, be heard in answer to the suit." It appears to us that what the Legislature here intended was, that the defendant might be admitted to defend the suit merely upon a petition, and without any evidence being gone into to prove [274] the truth of the facts stated in that petition. The section contains no provision for, and does not appear to contemplate, taking such evidence. If, however, the Court does not admit the defendant to defend the suit upon such a petition, he then has a further remedy under s. 108. He can, under this section, claim to satisfy the Court that the summons was not duly served or that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing. If he can satisfy the Court on any of these matters, the result will be, that the ex parte decree will be set aside, the case will be reheard, and the defendant will have an opportunity of producing his own evidence and cross-examining the witnesses produced on the part of the plaintiff. Now, in this case the defendant has not taken this course, and the question is raised can he, without taking this course, appeal against the ex parte decree? Section 119 of the old Code (Act VIII of 1859) provided as follows:—"No appeal shall lie from a judgment passed ex parte against a defendant who has not appeared, &c." There is no such express prohibition in the present Code: and we think that the reasonable conclusion to be drawn from the omission of this express prohibition, and from the amended definition of the term decree in s. 2 of the present Code is, that the Legislature intended to allow an appeal against an ex parte decree, and it appears to us that this is just and reasonable, because there may be many cases in which, although the defendant is unable to satisfy the Court that he was not served with summons or that he was, by some other sufficient cause, prevented from appearing, yet, upon the evidence given by the plaintiff, he may be able to satisfy the Appellate Court that the decree is one which cannot be supported. If a defendant, instead of resorting to the procedure provided by s. 108, appeals direct against an ex parte decree, he of course lies under this disadvantage that he has no evidence of his own to depend upon. He has not the advantage which he might have obtained by cross-examining the plaintiff's witnesses, and his contention on appeal must be limited either to questions of law or to such arguments as arise upon the evidence which the plaintiff has placed on the record. In the [275] present case it appears to us that there are no grounds for interfering with the decree of the Court below. We think that there was sufficient evidence to prove the execution of the kabuliati, and also to prove that the arrears of rent for which this suit was instituted were, as a matter of fact, due. This appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 228 of 1880, against the decree of F. McLaughlin, Esq., Judge of Nonkhally, dated the 8th July 1880.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[The order rejecting the application to appear and defend is itself appealable:—C. P. C. 1908, O. 43; r. 1 (d).]

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE BOSE.

Bhugirath Patoni and others.....Defendants

versus

Ram Lochun Deb and others.....Plaintiffs.

Suit for arrears of rent—Evidence—Ex-parte decree.

In a suit for arrears of rent of a half-share of land, the plaintiffs relied upon an ex parte decree for rent at a certain rate, which they had obtained in 1869 against the tenants of this share. The defendants relied upon a subsequent decree in a contested suit by the plaintiffs against the tenants of the other half-share, in which a lower rate of rent had been given. No other evidence than the decrees was produced on either side. It did not appear whether the ex parte decree had ever been executed.

Held, that it was open to the defendants to dispute the rate of rent claimed, and that the plaintiffs were bound to prove that they were entitled to recover it.

Nilmoney Singh v. Heera Lall Dass (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 23) followed.

Baboo Busunt Coomar Bose for the Appellants.

Baboo Grish Chunder Chowdhry for the Respondents.

THE facts of the case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and BOSE, JJ.) which was delivered by Prinsep, J.—In the year 1869, the plaintiffs sued the present defendants and those who represent the half-share of the tenure [276] for arrears of rent and obtained an ex parte decree in the Court of the Deputy Collector at the rate of Rs. 37-4 per annum for the half-share now in dispute. In the year 1870, they sued the tenants of the other half-share at the same rate. That suit was contested and was dismissed, but in appeal a decree was given at the rate admitted by those defendants, namely, Rs. 15, for that half-share.

In the present case the plaintiffs rely on the ex parte decree of 1869. The defendants, on the other hand, produce the decree in the suit of 1870 against the tenants of the other share, and claim to be treated in the same way. There is no evidence on the record except these two decrees. The lower Appellate Court, setting aside the judgment of the first Court, considered that, inasmuch as the defendants in the present suit had not obtained a reversal of the ex parte decree, it was conclusive against them, and held that the rent, Rs. 37-4, was the rent decreed in that ex parte case. It is not stated before us that that ex parte decree has ever been executed so as to become final. (As it was passed in 1869 it cannot now be executed). We therefore consider that it is not binding against the defendants, and that it is open to them to dispute the rate of rent claimed, and that the plaintiffs were bound to prove that they were entitled to receive it. In dealing with the case in this manner we follow the decision in the case of Nilmoney Singh v. Heera Lall Dass (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 23).

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 6 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Nobin Chunder Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 7th October 1879, reversing the decree of Baboo Grish Chunder Roy, Munsif of Ghosegaon, dated the 12th June 1879.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court must, therefore, be set aside, and that of the first Court restored. The plaintiffs will pay the cost of this Court and also of the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed.

[277] APPELLATE CIVIL

Parties—Suit for arrears of rent—Co-sharers—Appeal, amendment on.

In a suit for arrears of rent of the plaintiff's share of a taluq, it appeared that, in the year 1279, a batwara was effected of the zamindari in which the defendant's taluq was situated, and that the taluq ceased to be held exclusively by the plaintiff, and was divided between him and certain other persons, who were not made parties to the suit.

Held, that all the co-sharers should have been joined as parties, and that, as this had not been done, the suit was bad.

Held also, that the plaint could not be amended by making the co-sharers parties at the hearing of the appeal.

Mr. Bell, Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy, and Baboo Ishur Chunder Chuckerbutty for the Appellant.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdry and Baboo Sreenath Dass for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and BOSE, JJ.), which was delivered by

Prinsep, J.—It is sufficient for the purposes of this appeal to describe the position of the parties briefly, by stating that the defendants are the proprietors of a certain taluq for which they were paying rent to the plaintiff, the plaintiff also being a co-sharer with others in the estate of which the taluq formed a part. A batwara took place of the estate, and it would seem that this taluq ceased to be held exclusively by the plaintiff, and was divided between the plaintiff, Bimola, and others. On the strength of that batwara, the plaintiff has now sued the defendants for arrears of rent of the share stated to have been given to him under that batwara, and he claims rent at a higher [278] rate in consequence of certain agreements said to have been entered into by the defendants with him when the taluq was his sole property.

The first objection taken in special appeal is, that the lower Appellate Court should not have held that the suit was bad, because Bimola and others, who are co-sharers, were not made parties to it. It appears to us that, under the terms of the Full Bench decision in the case of Iswar Chunder Dutt v. Ram Krishna Dass (I. L. R., 5 Cal. 902; s.c., 6 C. L. R. 421), the order of the lower Appellate Court in this respect is correct. The judgment of the Full Bench declares, that if the purchaser of a share desires to effect a severance of the tenure and an apportionment of the rent, he must give the tenant due notice to that effect; and then, if an amicable apportionment of the rent cannot be made by arrangement between all the parties concerned, the purchaser may bring a suit against the tenant for the purpose of having the rent apportioned, making all the other co-sharers parties to the suit. The judgment further proceeds: "No real injustice will be done to the tenant under such circumstances, because the possibility of the severance of the tenure by batwara, sale or otherwise is only one of those necessary incidents of the property which every tenant is, or must be presumed to have been, aware of when he took his lease." Now, in this case, we think that the defendants, tenants, were entitled to insist upon Bimola and others, in fact all persons concerned in the taluq, being made parties to the suit, before the plaintiff's suit could be decreed. Mr. Bell, for the appellant, however, contends, that, inasmuch as the first Court decided this point in his favour, and the lower Appellate Court decided it adversely, the Court was bound to do justice in the case by adding Bimola and others as parties to the suit. It appears to us, that if the plaintiff has insisted upon his right to bring an action in the absence of his co-sharers, he must abide by the result; and that it is too late, at this stage of the case, for him to ask to be allowed an indulgence of which he did not avail himself when it was available.

A second point is raised, that, inasmuch as, in the present case, the plaintiff did not sue for enhancement of rent, but [279] claimed a higher rent on an agreement said to have been entered into between the parties, the Court should not have proceeded to consider whether, upon the general grounds taken, the defendants were protected from enhancement. This ground, however arguable it might be, is not one which fairly arises out of the terms of the petition of appeal to us. The fourth ground, within which it is stated to fall, clearly refers to a different point altogether, and that is whether the lower Court was right in holding that the tenure was created before or subsequent to the Permanent Settlement, and not whether the Court was right in proceeding to consider the point at all. In this view of the case, we must dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

*Limitation—Execution of decree—Res judicata—Act VIII of 1859, s. 246—
Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 278.*

* In the course of certain execution-proceedings in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, the decree-holder attached a tenure belonging to the judgment-debtor, who, pending the attachment, sold it to A, on the 21st March 1869. A then applied, under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, for an order to release the tenure from attachment; but the application was dismissed, on the ground that the alienation had been made pending the attachment. In 1877, the heirs and successors in title of the decree-holder abovementioned obtained another decree for arrears of rent against the same defendant, and in execution thereof again attached the tenure. A applied under s. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the property released, but his application was rejected on the 3rd of May 1879. In a suit brought by A, on the 6th of May 1879, to establish his right to, and confirm his possession of, the tenure, the lower Courts dismissed the suit, on the ground that it ought to have been brought within one year from the 21st of March 1869. On appeal to the High Court,—Held, that the suit was not barred by limitation, nor as res judicata.

[280] THE facts of this case are as follows:—In 1869, Rohini Dossee, one of the defendants, held a tenure, comprising 32 bighas of land, within a zamindari belonging to the ancestor of the Sen defendants. Some time previously, the then zamindar, Biressur Sen, had obtained a personal decree for arrears of rent of the tenure against Rohini, and in execution of that decree he attached the tenure in question. While the tenure was under attachment, and on the 21st of March 1869, Rohini sold it to the plaintiff's mother (his predecessor in title), who thereupon applied under s. 246 of the Old Code of Civil Procedure, Act VIII of 1859, to have the attachment removed. This application was rejected, on the ground that the sale to the applicant had been made pending attachment. Subsequently, and before any further process in execution was taken, the judgment-debtor, Rohini, paid up and satisfied Biressur Sen's decree. In 1877, the Sen defendants got another personal decree against Rohini for arrears of rent of the tenure, which they attached in execution in the following year. The plaintiff applied under s. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877), to have the attachment removed; but the application was rejected, on the 3rd of May 1879, in consequence of his delaying to furnish security to the amount for which the execution was taken out. The plaintiff then brought the present suit on the 6th of May 1879, "to establish his right to, and confirm his possession of, the land in suit," and for costs.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1168 of 1880, against the decree of S. H. C. Taylor, Esq., Judge of Beerbhoom, dated the 31st March 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Kanti Chunder Bhaduri, Munsif of Bholepore, dated the 29th August 1879.

The Court of First Instance dismissed the suit with costs. On appeal, the District Judge said :—"The plaintiff is clearly out of Court. His predecessor in interest preferred a claim to the property in dispute when it was attached in execution of a decree against a third party, and that claim was disallowed. The present suit has not been brought within one year from the date of the rejection of the claim. The fact that the decree in execution of which this property was attached was paid off by the judgment-debtor, makes no difference whatever."

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Taruck Nath Sen for the Appellant.

Baboo Nil Mudhab Sen for the Respondents.

[281] The Judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and CUNNINGHAM, JJ.) was delivered by Tottenham, J. The lower Appellate Court, confirming the order of the first Court, has dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that it is barred by limitation. The Judge has applied the rule of one year, and has held that, because the suit was not brought within one year from 1869, when the claim to this property preferred in the execution department by the plaintiff's mother was rejected, the present suit is barred.

It seems that, in 1869, when, in execution of a rent-decree, this tenure was attached as belonging to one Rohini Dossee, the plaintiff's mother preferred a claim under s. 246 of the Old Code of Civil Procedure, alleging that she had purchased the tenure from Rohini Dossee, and the Court found that the purchase had been made after the attachment had taken place, and that, therefore, the alienation was void, and accordingly rejected the claim. But it appears that no sale was held, because the judgment-debtor paid off the amount of the decree. The effect of that was, that the attachment ceased, and any right which the plaintiff's mother acquired by purchase, even though pending the attachment, became valid, and nothing having occurred to injure her right, if any, she had no occasion to bring any suit. The Judge of the Court below says, that the fact that the decree in execution of which the property was attached was paid off by the judgment-debtor makes no difference whatever. In this view, we think that he is mistaken. The payment by the judgment-debtor of the decretal amount did away with the necessity for a sale, and the attachment being withdrawn, the purchased right of the plaintiff's mother stood good.

The respondents' pleader contends, that the finding of the Court, in 1869, that the conveyance was void, because it was effected while the property was under attachment, is now res judicata; and that the plaintiff's right derived from that conveyance was then and there done away with for ever, because he, or his predecessor in title, neglected to bring this suit within one year. But the finding of the Court in the execution department [282] that the sale was invalid, only meant that the sale was invalid as against the judgment-creditor, and as against any purchaser who might purchase at a sale held in execution following that attachment. When the judgment-creditor was paid off, he had no further claim. The present suit has arisen out of a subsequent decree and subsequent attachment. On this occasion the same tenant having been sued by the representatives of the former zamindar, and the tenure having been attached in execution, the plaintiff put in a claim under s. 278 of the present Code, but omitted to fulfil certain conditions imposed on him by the Court, and the Court declined to register his claim or to adjudicate upon it. He brings his suit to establish his right; and we think it clear, under the circumstances, that he is entitled to have his suit tried.

The judgment of the lower Appellate Court must, therefore, be set aside and the case must go back to that Court to be tried on the merits.
Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed and case remanded.

Binja Ram and another.....Plaintiffs

Stamp Act (I of 1879), sched. i, cl. 1 -Suit for goods sold and delivered—

Parol evidence—Acknowledgment—Hatchitta.

In a suit, which was brought for the price of goods sold and delivered, the plaintiff swore to the fact of the sale, and tendered in evidence a written admission of the defendant, that the goods had been supplied to him. The writing was rejected as unstamped, and the suit was dismissed.

Held, that the Judge should have allowed the plaintiff an opportunity of proving by oral testimony the delivery of the goods sold, and their value.

Whether an account signed by a debtor in the books of his creditor amounts to an acknowledgment within the meaning of the Stamp Act (I of 1879), sched. i, art. 1, is a question depending in each case upon the form and intention of the entry.

[283] THIS was a reference under s. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure, from the Munsif of Cuttack, the terms of which are as follows :—

“ The plaintiffs brought this suit to recover Rs. 21-11-6, due upon certain entries made by the defendant in a book, which does not appear to me the account-book of the plaintiffs' shop as contemplated by s. 34 of the Indian Evidence Act, but appears to be one kept for the express purpose of such entries of acknowledgment by debtors. One of the plaintiffs also gave his evidence to prove the entries, and duly attested them. The document relied upon being then evidently an acknowledgment of debt over Rs. 20 in the hand-writing of the debtor, and not being stamped with an adhesive stamp of one anna as required by art. 1, sched. i of the Stamp Act, the suit, on the ground of inadmissibility of the documentary evidence, has been dismissed, subject to the opinion of the Hon'ble High Court.”

* Civil Reference under s. 617 of Act X of 1877, No. 12 of 1881, by the First Munsif of Cuttack.

On the trial, before the Munsif, the plaintiff, Gunesh Ram, gave the following evidence:—"I am plaintiff in the suit. About three years ago defendant had purchased from me clothes of Rs. 21-11-6 worth, and entered the purchases in my book with his hand. After the institution of this suit he paid me Rs. 6." (Then witness attests the entries.)

The judgment of the Munsif was as follows:—"I am of opinion that the claim should be dismissed, as the document on which it is based is inadmissible in evidence by reason of its not bearing the adhesive stamp of one anna with which it should have been stamped, being an acknowledgment of debt over 20 rupees in the handwriting of the debtor."

No one appeared for either party.

The Opinion of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by Garth, C. J.—It is difficult to decide a case of this kind satisfactorily without being furnished with an exact copy of the so-called 'acknowledgment.' If the defendant subscribed his name to the entry as an admission that he owed the plaintiff the sum or sums mentioned in it, there is no doubt that the Munsif is right in excluding evidence of the acknowledgment on [284] the ground that it was not duly stamped. But whether an account thus signed by the defendant amounts to such an acknowledgment or not, depends in each case upon the form and intention of the entry.

Apart, however, from this admission, it would seem that, in this case, the plaintiff expressly stated that he sold clothes to the defendant to the amount of Rs. 21-11-6. If he did, there would appear to have been ample evidence, especially if uncontradicted, to establish the plaintiff's claim without resorting to the admission. If the Munsif has any doubt upon this point, he should certainly give the plaintiff an opportunity of proving by oral testimony the delivery of the goods and their value. It is needless to say, that although a written admission may have been made by the defendant, which is inadmissible for want of a stamp, the plaintiff has a right to prove his case in any other available way.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE McDONNELL.

Gisborne & Co.....Plaintiffs

Stamp Act (XVIII of 1869)—Bond—Agreement with covenant sounding in damages.

An instrument containing a covenant to do a particular act, the breach of which is to be compensated in damages, is not a bond, and requires an eight-anna stamp only.

Remedies on such an instrument, and on a bond discussed.

ON the 7th December 1874, one Subal Bowri entered into an engagement with Messrs. Gisborne & Co., agreeing, in consideration of certain advances, to cultivate indigo on twenty bighas of land for ten years, and to deliver the indigo at the factory to Messrs. Gisborne & Co. at a certain fixed rate. The 11th clause in the document, in which the terms were embodied, was as follows :—“ I do further stipulate and agree that, if within the term of this patta [agreement] I neglect to cultivate, or do not at all cultivate, the whole of the said twenty bighas of land according to your orders, from the month of Kartick up to 15th [283] Bysack, or at any other time of any year or years, or neglect to sow indigo thereon at the usual or proper time of any year or years after you have measured, marked out, and selected the land, then, under all circumstances, I will pay to you, as I hereby bind myself and agree to do, a yearly sum of Rs. 200 as damages ; that I shall be precluded from taking any objection to the amount so fixed as compensation for any loss that you may sustain in consequence of my non-compliance with stipulations contained in this paragraph, in the event of your bringing a suit against me for payment of the same, and that it will be in your power to sue me to recover damages for any loss that may be caused to you on account of the breach, on my part, of any of the conditions of the agreement.”

This document was stamped with an eight-anna stamp. Subal Bowri, in 1879, placed under cultivation five bighas only, whereupon Messrs. Gisborne & Co. sued him to recover Rs. 150 as damages.

The Munsif was of opinion, that the 11th clause of the agreement was in the nature of a bond, and that the document should have been stamped as a bond, and called upon the plaintiffs to pay the extra stamp-duty required, and also the penalty under s. 34 of the Stamp Act of 1879, and on the plaintiffs' refusing to do this, he dismissed their suit.

The plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge, who was of opinion, that the document required a bond stamp, but did not consider that the Munsif was justified in dismissing the suit ; but that he should have entered into the merits of the case, and have awarded a sum not exceeding 100 rupees, the amount covered by a bond for which the stamp-duty is eight annas, if the plaintiffs should have been found entitled to a decree. But inasmuch as there were conflicting rulings as to the correct denomination of agreements containing damage clauses, he referred the following questions to the High Court under s. 617 of Act X of 1877 :—

First.—Whether considering the nature of the agreement it required a bond stamp?

Second.—Whether the Court was, under the circumstances, justified in dismissing the whole suit?

[286] No one appeared for the parties in the High Court.

The Opinion of the Court (GARTH, C.J. AND McDONELL, J.) was given by Garth, C.J.—I am of opinion that the instrument in question is not a bond within the meaning of the Stamp Act of 1869; and that it requires (so far as I can see) an eight-anna stamp only.

The definition of a bond in s. 5 of the Act is precisely what we understand by a bond in England, and it is an obligation of a different character from a covenant to do a particular act, the breach of which must be compensated in damages.

Whether a penal clause is attached to such a covenant or not, the remedy for the breach of it is in form and substance a suit for damages; and by s. 74 of the Indian Contract Act, the English rule with regard to liquidated damages is abolished, and the plaintiff in such a suit has no right under any circumstances to claim the penalty itself as such. He can only recover such compensation, not exceeding the amount of the penalty, as the Judge at the trial considers reasonable; but he is entitled to that compensation, whether he proves any actual damages or not.

The remedy upon a bond is very different. The plaintiff in the case of a simple money-bond recovers the sum named in the bond, or in the case of a bond conditioned for the performance of covenants, he recovers the actual damage which he can prove that he has sustained. In either case not only is the bond a contract of a different form and nature from a covenant with a penal clause, but the remedy upon it, and the amount recoverable for the breach of it, is also different.

I therefore agree with Mr. Justice PHEAR's judgment in the case of Robert and Charriot v. Shircore, (7 B. L. R., 510); and with all deference to the majority of the High Court of Allahabad, in the Full Bench case of In the matter of a Reference by the Board of Revenue, N. W. P. (I. L. R. 2 All., 654), I think that the view taken by the learned Chief Justice in that case was the correct one.

If the majority of the Court were right, it would seem to follow that every covenant or agreement containing a penal [287] clause must be a 'bond' within the meaning of the Stamp Act.

In that particular case, it is clear that if the Mittra defendants had been guilty of any breach or breaches of their contract, the Collector could not have sued for the Rs. 5,000, but only for such reasonable compensation as the Court thought fit to allow.

If the Legislature had intended that the word 'bond' should include a covenant with a penal clause, I presume that they would have said so. As it is, we can only deal with the definition according to its ordinary and legal meaning.

I think, therefore, that the case should go back to the Court of First Instance, with directions, that the plaintiffs are entitled to such compensation for the defendant's breach of contract, not exceeding Rs. 200, as the Munsif may consider reasonable, and that such compensation may be given, although the plaintiffs are unable to prove any actual damage.

Case remanded.

CIVIL REFERENCE.

The 8th December, 1881.

PRESENT:

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE McDONELL.

Ratan Krishen Poddar.....Plaintiff

versus

Raghoo Nath Shaha and others.....Defendants.*

Mofussil Small Cause Courts Act (XI of 1865), s. 21—Practice—Notice—New trial—Review—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 623.

The notice-clause in s. 21, Act XI of 1865, is applicable only to those cases where a new trial cannot be applied for within seven days after the judgment, in consequence of there being no sitting of the Court. Where the application is made within seven days, the notice is unnecessary.

If the grounds upon which the new trial is moved are proper grounds for granting a review, the applicant is entitled to proceed under s. 623 of the Code of Civil Procedure without resorting to Act XI of 1865.

THIS was a reference, under s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code, from the First Munsif of Sudharam, the terms of which are as follows:—

"This is an application for a new trial of suit No. 209 of 1881, which was governed by the Small Cause Court Procedure and was decided on the 1st of August 1881 against the plaintiff. [288] The application was made on the 5th August 1881, i.e., within seven days of the disposal of the suit, but without any such notice to the Court as is prescribed by s. 21 of the Small Cause Court Act, XI of 1865. The plaintiff argues that, as this Court is the Court of a Munsif vested with powers of a Small Cause Court Judge up to Rs. 50, it has no regular sittings (like those of a regular Small Cause Court Judge constituted under Act XI of 1865) fixed and published in the Gazette by the Judge himself; and so the provisions of s. 21 of Act XI of 1865, so far as they relate to "notice to be given to the Court at its next sitting," do not apply to it; and that, granting notice is necessary, it is dispensed with in this case by the application itself, which was made within seven days of the decision of the suit. He further argues that, as s. 623 of the Civil Procedure Code, which relates to reviews, applies to Small Cause Courts also, he is at liberty to apply for a review, or rehearing, or new trial (whatever term we may apply to it) according to the provisions relating to reviews, which do not prescribe any notice to be given to the Court. The argument of the plaintiff thus resolves itself into the following points:— (i) whether notice under s. 21 of the Small Cause Court Act is necessary in an application for a new trial of a suit decided by a Munsif with powers of a Small Cause Court Judge, when the suit is governed by the Small Cause Court Procedure? (ii) whether any such notice is necessary in an application for a new trial sought on any of the grounds mentioned in s. 623 of the Civil Procedure Code, which applies to Small Cause Courts also? (iii) whether, where the application is made within seven days, any such notice is necessary?

“ With reference to the first point I am of opinion that, according to s. 14 of Act XI. of 1865, it is only where any Judge is the Judge of two or more Courts of Small Causes that he is required to fix and publish in the Gazette the dates of his sittings in the several Courts of which he is the Judge; but as this Court is a Small Cause Court Judge sitting only at the sadar station of the district, it is not required to fix and publish in the Gazette the dates on which it will take up Small Cause Court cases. According to the practice of this Court, Small [289] Cause Court cases are taken up every Monday, though for special reasons one or two cases are sometime postponed to some other day of the week; but as s. 14 of the Small Cause Court Act does not apply to it, this Court is not bound to fix and publish in the Gazette any particular day for the trial of Small Cause Court cases. Section 21 of the Small Cause Court Act seems to be a general section, and applies equally to different Small Cause Courts presided over by a single Judge, and also to a Small Cause Court Judge holding Court at one place only. The application of this section has nothing to do with the fact that this Court is a Munsif with powers of a Small Cause Court Judge; when this particular suit is governed by the Small Cause Court Procedure, s. 21 must apply to it.

“ As regards the second point I am of opinion that, as it has been held in the case of Shumsher Ally v. Kurkut Shah (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 236), that both the procedures, prescribed by s. 623 of Act X of 1877 and s. 21 of Act XI of 1865, are still in force, a plaintiff, applying for a review of the decision of a case governed by the Small Cause Court Procedure, can do it under s. 623 of Act X of 1877 without any notice prescribed by s. 21 of Act XI of 1865. This state of things presents an anomaly no doubt, and it is very probable, as remarked by the Chief Justice in that reference, that, at the time when the provisions relating to reviews were extended to Small Cause Courts, the operation of s. 21 of Act XI of 1865 did not receive sufficient attention.

“ As regards the third point I am of opinion that, if an application for a new trial of a suit be made within seven days of its decision, the application itself serves as a notice to the Court and no additional notice is necessary.”

Neither party appeared on the reference.

The Opinion of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by Garth, C.J.—In this case, I think that the Munsif has taken a correct view of both points.

[290] The notice-clause in s. 21 of Act XI of 1865 appears to me to be applicable only to those cases where a new trial cannot be applied for within seven days after the judgment, in consequence of there being no sitting of the Court. Where the application itself is made within seven days, the notice appears quite unnecessary. Then again, if the grounds upon which the new trial is moved are proper grounds for granting a review, I agree with the Munsif that the plaintiff has a right to apply under s. 623 of the Civil Procedure Code without resorting to the Act of 1865. In that case no notice would be required.

Damages for neglect to pay road Cess or public works Cess. -Beng.

Tenants are liable in damages for neglect to pay road and public works cesses.

THIS was a suit to recover damages for failure on the part of the defendants, who held certain land from the plaintiffs under a mourasi tenure, to pay road and public works cesses. The Munsif gave the plaintiffs a decree for the amount claimed. The lower Appellate Court reversed this decree, holding that the plaintiffs were not entitled to damages on account of the arrears of road cess and public works cess at all. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Taruck Nath Dutt for the Appellants.

Baboo Saroda Churn Mitter for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and BOSE, JJ.) was delivered by Prinsep, J.—In our opinion the Subordinate Judge sitting in appeal is clearly wrong in holding that the plaintiffs [291] were not entitled, under any circumstances, to recover damages on account of arrears of road and public works cesses due from the defendants. The terms of s. 25 of Beng. Act X of 1871 are clear on this point, and permit the zemindar, or the holder of an estate or tenure, to recover such cesses in the same manner and under the same penalties as if the same were arrears of rent in respect of land in respect of which such sums were payable. Under s. 44 of the Rent Law damages would have been payable had the claim been for arrears of rent, and, therefore, the present claim being for cesses, the defendants are liable to pay such damages.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2831 of 1879, against the decree of Baboo Jibun Kristo Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Pubna, dated the 28th August 1879, modifying the decree of Baboo Moti Lal Haldar, Munsif of Shazadpore, dated the 25th June 1879.

It has been pressed upon us by the respondents' pleader, that we ought to remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for a finding as to the amount at which damages should be assessed; but the terms of the decision of the first Court, which have not been displaced in any way by the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, coupled with the admission of the defendants in their written statement, that, on a previous occasion, they were made by this Court to pay damages on account of arrears of the very same cesses, leave no doubt in our minds that the order of the first Court was perfectly correct, and that we should not be justified in putting the parties to the expense of further proceedings.

We set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, restore that of the Munsif, and direct that the defendants do pay costs both of this Court and of the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed.

Sale in execution of decree Setting aside sale—Irregularity.

At a sale in execution of decree certain property was knocked down to a bidder, who made default in payment of the purchase-money. Subsequently the Judge again put the property up for sale, and resold it at a lower price. The decree not being satisfied, the Judge put up other property which had [292] been advertised for sale with the property abovementioned without getting from the defaulter the difference between the price obtained at the second sale and that obtained at the first. On an application by the judgment-debtor to have the sale of the second property set aside,

Held, that no sufficient cause was shown for setting aside the sale.

Khiroda Mayi Dasi v. Golan Abardari (13 B. L. R., 114; C.S., 21 W. R., 149) followed.

THE facts of this case are stated in the judgment of the lower Court, which is as follows:—"This is an application by the judgment-debtor, under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code, for the setting aside of the auction-sale of Hat Jogodal, belonging to him, on the allegation that no sale-proclamation was served upon it, and that, in consequence, it has fetched a very low price. From the evidence of the serving-peon and the other circumstances in this case, I am perfectly satisfied that the sale-proclamation was duly served upon the property.

It is in evidence in this case, that the hat in dispute, together with several other jamas situated in village Rupoty, were advertised for sale together, and that the sale-proclamation was served at a place which was adjoint both to Rupoty and Jogodal. It also appears that the hat in question had been advertised for sale twice, that the judgment-debtor's gomasta, Gobind Chunder Bose, was all along present in Court during the sale, and that many men of the judgment-debtor's village bid at the sale. Hence I have no doubt that the sale-proclamation was duly served, and that intending purchasers had due notice of the sale. As regards the judgment-debtor's objection as to low price, I have to say that he has no evidence in this case to substantiate it. A hat is a property of a very fluctuating income, and it appears in this case that it has been sold at eleven times its annual rent. Hence I am of opinion that the price of Rs. 1,000, at which it has been sold, is not inadequate. For these reasons I hold, that the petitioner has failed to make out his case, and that he has falsely put in this petition with the object of frustrating the execution of this decree."

The judgment-debtor appealed on the following grounds:—(i) that the lower Court ought first to have sold the property [293] which was previously put up for sale, and then, if the proceeds of each sale had been inadequate, to have sold the property in dispute; (ii) that the property in dispute ought not to have been put up for sale before trying to realize the amount of the previous sale from the defaulting purchaser; (iii) that the lower Court was wrong in saying there was not sufficient evidence to sustain his objections as to low price; (iv) that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the sale-proclamation had been duly served.

Baboo Surendranath Motilal for the Appellant.

Baboo Grija Sunker Mozoomdar for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—In this case the two points which appear to have been raised before the Munsif were: first, that no sale-notification had been published upon the property sold; and secondly, that because the jama had been originally put up to sale and default made in payment of the purchase-money, the Court was bound, having ordered the resale of the jama upon such default, to carry out such resale and to recover the difference between the amount bid upon the sale and the amount bid upon the resale from the defaulter before the decree-holder could proceed to sell the other property, viz., the hat. A third point is now taken before us, viz., that the publication of the sale-notification was insufficient, because such notification was not posted upon any place in the hat itself or adjacent thereto; and it is said that the place where the notification was published was a mile-and-half distant from the hat.

As to the first ground taken before the Munsif we think that his decision is correct. As to the additional point raised before us, we think that the appellant cannot be permitted to raise this point, which was not raised specifically in the Court below. It remains to deal with the third point. The facts appear to be these. The jama and the hat were attached under the original application for execution. On the 15th January, the jama was sold for Rs. 350, which amount was sufficient to satisfy the [294] decree. The person who was the successful bidder at this sale having made default in paying the balance of the purchase-money, a re-sale of the jama was then directed. On the 17th March the jama was put up for resale, and the highest bid was Rs. 15. This amount being insufficient to satisfy the decree, the hat was then sold for Rs. 1,000. It appears that the sale of the jama was then cancelled.

It has been said in the course of argument, that of this fact there is no evidence upon the record; that this was done out of kindness to the judgment-debtor, inasmuch as the price bid for the hat was sufficient to satisfy the decree. Now, it is contended in the first instance that, until the difference between the 15 rupees, which was bid for the jama on the resale, and Rs. 350, the amount for which the defaulter purchased at the sale, was realized from the defaulter Dhanunjoy, the decree-holder was debarred from proceeding with the sale of the other property, which had been attached upon the original application. In support of this contention the case of Joy Chunder Biswas v. Kali Kishore Dey Sircar (8 C. L. R., 41) has been quoted. It does not appear from the report whether the sixteen annas of the property sold in that case upon the second occasion, instead of the five gandas sold upon the first occasion, were included in the original application for execution and were attached under that application. It is therefore not possible for us to say that that case is on all fours with the present case. There is, however, a decision in the case of Khiroda Mayi Dasi v. Golam Abarduri (13 B.L.R., 114; s.c., 21 W.R., 149), which is exactly on all fours with the present case, for there both properties were attached under the original application for execution. We think that we ought to follow this last-quoted case, which, we may further add, is in accordance with our view of the law. Were it otherwise, we think that, inasmuch as the appellant did not make to the Munsif any application under the second part of s. 293 to have the difference between the proceeds of the sale and the resale recovered from the defaulter, he ought not to be allowed to succeed upon the point which he has raised upon this appeal; and we may further observe that, [295] in the petition of objection which he put in before the Munsif, he silently acquiesced in the cancelment of the resale of the jama. The effect of canceling that sale was to preclude the recovery from the defaulter Dhanunjoy of the difference between the amounts bid at the sale and resale. On all these grounds we think that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mesne profits—Amount claimed in plaint—Larger amount found due by Ameen—Objection under Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 244—Execution of decree.

Where a plaintiff, in bringing a suit for possession and for mesne profits, approximately estimates the amount of such mesne profits at a certain sum, and obtains a decree which leaves the amount due as mesne profits to be ascertained in execution, he is not bound down to the amount claimed in his plaint; but if more is found due to him, he is entitled on payment of further court-fees to recover the larger amount so found due.

Baboojan Jha v. Bijnath Dutt Jha (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 474) distinguished.

A Court, in execution-proceedings, cannot look behind the decree when the decree does not limit the amount of wasilat to be awarded.

JADOOMONY DABEE and others brought a suit to obtain possession of certain properties and to obtain mesne profits, stating in their plaint that the amount of such mesne profits amounted approximately to Rs. 1,200. The court-fee paid as the valuation was sufficient as the suit was then framed.

The plaintiffs obtained a decree for possession, and the question of mesne profits was left to be determined in execution. In execution of this decree the Court Ameen, who had been deputed to determine the amount of mesne profits, found, that the amount due to the plaintiffs from the date of their dispossession up to the date of their recovery of possession was Rs. 9,214. The judgment-debtor objected to the plaintiffs obtaining an [296] amount larger than that claimed in their plaint, and stated the amount found due by the Ameen to be exorbitant.

The Subordinate Judge held that the Ameen's computation was correct, but that the decree-holders were not entitled to get a larger amount of wasilat than they had claimed in their plaint, and awarded to them Rs. 1,200.

The decree-holders appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Mohiney Mohun Roy and Baboo Kishory Mohun Roy for the Appellants.

Baboo Sreenath Doss and Baboo Jogesh Chander Roy for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MORRIS and PRINSEP, JJ.) was delivered by Morris, J.—The plaintiffs, in their plaint, stated Rs. 1,200 as approximately the amount of the mesne profits to which they were entitled, and paid court-fees on that amount. The decree for possession and mesne profits which they obtained left the determination of the amount of the mesne profits to be settled in execution without referring to the amount specified in the plaint or in any way limiting plaintiffs' claim.

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 238 of 1881, against the order of Baboo Jibun Kristo Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Purnea, dated the 7th May 1881.

The Subordinate Judge in execution has refused to allow plaintiffs anything beyond the amount stated in their plaint.

Baboo Sreenath Doss for the respondent, by an ingenious calculation, endeavours to show that the rate per annum was definitely settled by the plaintiffs, and that the word 'approximately' (annumanik) used in the plaint, in connection with the estimated amount of claim, had reference only to the duration of the suit and the interval which might elapse before possession was obtained. We are not inclined to adopt this view, which is purely conjectural.

The case of Baboojan Jha v. Byjnath Dutt Jha (1. L. R., 6 Cal., 474), on which the Subordinate Judge relies, seems to us to be not in point, and to differ in a very essential particular from this case. In that case, as appears from the judgment delivered, the annual rent [297] of the land which formed the measure of mesne profits was 'deliberately claimed,' in the plaint; whereas here it is only estimated approximately. The plaintiffs having, therefore, obtained a decree which left the amount due as mesne profits to be ascertained in execution, would not be limited by the amount stated in their plaint, and as pointed out by DWARKANATH MITTER, J., in the case of Pearee Soondree Dossee v. Eshan Chunder Bose (16 W. R., 302), the Court in execution of a decree cannot look behind the decree when that decree does not limit the amount of wasilat to be awarded. In this view, as we understand the lower Court to agree with the Ameen who made the local enquiry that the actual mesne profits of the period in question amount to Rs. 9,214-1, and this is not a matter in dispute in this appeal, we give a decree in favour of the appellants, declaring them entitled to the sum of Rs. 9,214-1-0, but in accordance with s. 11 of Act VII of 1870, execution for the realization of this sum cannot be taken out until the decree-holders pay into Court the fee which the law requires upon the difference between the mesne profits now ascertained and determined and the mesne profits originally claimed by them upon which court-fees have been paid. The plaintiffs will then be allowed to realize in execution the full amount of Rs. 9,214-1. The order of the lower Court is, therefore, amended and modified accordingly. Appellants are entitled to their costs in this Court.

Order amended and modified.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 2nd November, 1881.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MORRIS and MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP.

Dewan Ali.....Decree-holder

Soroshibala Dabee.....Judgment-debtor.*

Execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 230 — ‘Passing of the Act’—Meaning of the expression ‘granted’ in s. 230.

Under s. 230 of Act X of 1877, an application for execution is said to be ‘granted,’ when it is made regularly and formally. The expression, ‘granted’ is equivalent to the expression ‘admitted’ as used in s. 215.

[298] Where, therefore, an application for execution under s. 230 of Act X of 1877 is not ‘granted,’ a subsequent regular and formal application under the same section may be allowed if made within time.

ONE Dewan Ali obtained a decree against Soroshibala Dabee on the 29th May 1865, which decree was affirmed on appeal on the 9th December 1865. The decree-holder applied for execution of this decree in September 1877, before the Civil Procedure Code of 1877 came into force. This application, it appears for some reason, was not granted, and the decree-holder applied again on the 30th January 1880; but this second application was rejected as being informal. The decree-holder again applied for execution on the 11th September 1880. The judgment-debtor then contended that the application was barred by limitation under s. 230 of Act X of 1877; the words used in that section ‘passing of the Act’ having reference to the time at which the Act received the assent of the Governor-General in Council, viz., on the 30th March 1877. The District Judge held that time commenced to run from the 30th March 1877, and refused to grant the application.

The decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Ankil Chunder Sen for the appellant contended that, under the provisions of s. 3 of Act X of 1877 and the General Clauses Act, s. 230 of the Code had no application to the case; that the words the ‘passing of the Act’ in that section meant the time at which the Act came into operation, viz., the 31st October 1877, and that there had been no previous application for execution under Act X of 1877, which had been granted, and, therefore, s. 230 did not apply. And further that the present application was merely a continuation of the previous application for execution made within two years from the time when Act X of 1877 received the assent of the Governor-General in Council.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

Prinsep, J.—The objection taken against the order of the [299] District Judge, disallowing the application for execution of decree, is, that s. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code, under the last paragraph of which the Judge has acted, does not apply. The facts have not been stated by the Judge in his judgment, but, as represented by the decree-holder's pleader, they appear to be as follows :—

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 144 of 1881, against the order of F. Rees, Esq., Officiating Judge of Noakhally, dated the 8th February 1881.

The decree was passed on the 29th May 1865, and was confirmed on appeal on the 9th December of the same year.

The previous application for execution was made in September 1877, that is before the Code of 1877 came into force. The next application for execution was made on the 30th January 1880, but from the order passed on that application it would seem that it was not admitted, but rejected, because it was informal. The present application, which was made on the 11th September 1880, was, under such circumstances, not a second application within the meaning of the section (230) of the Code. That section provides, that if an application for execution has been made under that section and granted, no subsequent application to execute the same decree shall be granted after the expiration of twelve years from (in the present case) the date of the decree. Taking the facts in the present case to be, that the only application which has been made under s. 230 is the application of the 30th January 1880, it seems that, although that application was made under s. 230, it was not granted so as to render the subsequent application now before us an application within the terms of that section. The expression "granted" in the 3rd paragraph of s. 230 would seem the equivalent to the term "admitted" as used in s. 245,—that is to say, when the application has been found to be formal and regular, it is admitted or granted and made the basis of proceedings towards execution of the decree.

The order of the lower Court must, therefore, be set aside.

The decree-holder will be at liberty to continue the proceedings in execution on the application which is now before us.

The appellant is entitled to his costs.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[STATUTORY CHANGE.—

In the C. P. C. 1908, sec. 48, the words 'and granted' in the previous Codes were omitted ; thus making the rule in the new section applicable whether the previous application for execution was made under it or not and whether the application was granted or not.

In (1889) 16 Cal., 744 it was pointed out, that the word 'granting' included the issue of a process for execution of the decree.]

[300] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 20th January, 1882.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

In the matter of the Petition of Radhabullubh Sil :

Presidency Banks (Act XI of 1876), s. 4 -Act XXVII of 1860—Registration of guardian as proprietor of shares—Power to negotiate.

A, the mother and guardian of a minor, obtained a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860. Part of the property of the minor consisted of shares in the Bank of Bengal. A obtained power under her certificate to draw the dividends due upon the shares. After the passing of the Presidency Banks Act, 1876, I applied under s. 4 of that Act to be registered as proprietor of the shares. The Bank refused to register her name as proprietor, and I then applied to have her certificate amended by empowering her to negotiate the shares.

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 213 of 1881, against the order of J. P. Grant, Esq., Judge of Hooghly, dated the 21st April 1881.

Held that she was not entitled to have such a power inserted in the certificate.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.), which was delivered by Field, J.—The appellant in this case, Oomamoni Dasseo, is the guardian of her minor son Radhabullubh. She holds a certificate under Act XL of 1858, and she has also obtained a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860. It appears that certain Bank of Bengal shares form a portion of the property belonging to the minor, and the appellant obtained power, under the certificate granted to her under Act XXVII of 1860, to draw the dividends falling due upon those shares. After the passing of the Presidency Banks Act, XI of 1876, she applied to be registered under the provisions of s. 4 of that Act. The portion of this section, which is material to the present case, is as follows:—

“The several persons who are then proprietors and shareholders of each of the present Banks of Bengal and Madras, or executors or administrators of such proprietors and shareholders respectively, shall be entitled to be registered as proprietors and holders of a like quantity of stock and a proportionate number of shares, as is or are then registered in their [301] names respectively, or in the names of the persons whom they represent respectively in the books of each of the said present Banks of Bengal and Madras.”

It appears that the appellant applied to the Bank of Bengal to have the name of her deceased husband or her own name registered under these provisions. The Bank refused to register the name of her husband on the ground that deceased persons cannot be registered as proprietors of shares. The bank also refused to register her name, and we think properly, seeing that she is neither a proprietor, nor a shareholder, nor the executor or administrator of a proprietor or shareholder. She then applied to the District Judge of Hooghly to have the certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 amended by giving her power to negotiate the shares. Having regard to the fact that these shares belonged not to Oomamoni Dasseo, but to her son, we think that the District Judge rightly refused to give her authority to negotiate the shares, more especially as we do not find that any proposal was made to give security for the corpus of the estate, which, if this prayer had been granted, would have come into her hands without any check upon the exercise of her responsibility.

Then it is further contended that this power of negotiation was necessary in order to obtain the registration of her name under the provisions of the section above quoted. We think that the insertion of a power of negotiation in the certificate granted under Act XXVII of 1860 would not have had the effect of converting the appellant into a proprietor or share-holder or the executor or administrator of a proprietor or shareholder: and we therefore are of opinion that the District Judge was right in refusing the application made to him. We must therefore dismiss this appeal without costs, no one appearing for the respondent.

Padmakumari Debi Chowdhurani and another.....Plaintiffs

versus

The Court of Wards (Representing Jagatkishor Acharjia Chowdhry) and another.....Defendants.

[On appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Port William in Bengal.]

Adoption—Termination of authority to adopt—Succession of adopted son to collaterals in gotra not that of father by adoption.

An instrument of permission (anumatī patra) to a Hindu wife to adopt should she be left a widow, provided that "dattaka (adopted) son shall be entitled to perform your and my shraddh and that of our ancestors, and to succeed to the property." The husband and wife had a son born, who survived his father, succeeded to the property, and died before his mother, leaving a widow, who, as heir, took possession of it for her widow's estate. The mother then professed to exercise the above power, and in the suit arising thereupon - Mussamut Bhoo. bunnoyee Debia v. Ramkishore Acharj Chowdhry (10 Moore's I.A., 279)—it was decided that the son's widow, having acquired a vested interest, a new heir could not be so substituted for her.

Held, that although such a substitution might have been disallowed without the adoption being held invalid for all other purposes, the above decision had determined that, upon the vesting of the estate in the widow, the power of adoption was incapable of execution, and was at an end; and that this would have been the conclusion if the question of the validity of the power had been raised without any previous decision upon it.

An adopted son occupies the same position in the family of the adopter as natural-born son, except in a few instances, which are accurately defined both in the Dattaka Chandrika and Dattaka Mimamsa, governing authorities in the Bengal School.

An adopted son succeeds not only lineally, but collaterally to the inheritance of his relations by adoption.

Sumblockunder Chowdhry v. Naraini Debch (3 Knapp. P.C. 55; s.c., 1 Suth. P. C. Judgments, 25) referred to and followed.

Held in this case, that the adopted son of the maternal grandfather of the deceased, though the gotra into which he was adopted was not the same as the latter's, was an heir nearer to him than such maternal grandfather's grandnephew.

APPEAL from a decree of the High Court (6th May 1879), affirming a decree of the Second Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh (10th August 1876).
[303] The principal questions on this appeal related to two adoptions by widows, either of which, if held good, would defeat the claim of the appellant Padmakumari. She claimed as the widow of the grandnephew (deceased since the commencement of this suit in which he was a plaintiff) of the maternal grandfather of Bhowanikishor who died in 1840. The estate in dispute was the ancestral property of Gourkishor Acharjia Chowdhry, a zamindar of the Acharjia family of Muktagachia, in Zilla Mymensingh, who died in 1821, leaving a widow, Chandraboli, and one son, Bhowanikishor abovenamed. Gourkishor, in his lifetime, had executed to Chandraboli an 'anumati patra,' empowering her to adopt a son, which power she professed to exercise in 1844 by adopting the late Ramkishor Chowdhry, whose son, Jagatkishor, a minor, was represented by the Court of Wards, the first respondent on this appeal.

The other of the adoptions now questioned had been made by the widow of the father of Chandraboli as far back as 1810, when Gogunchandra, the second respondent on this appeal, was adopted. He, accordingly, was wife's brother to Gourkishor, and maternal uncle to Bhowanikishor.

In reference to the adoption made by Chandraboli, it was questioned whether her power remained in force after the succession of Bhawanikishor, followed by that of his widow, had altered the state of things in the family. And, in connection with this, the correctness of the construction placed by the High Court on the judgment in Mussamut Bhoobunmoyee Debia v. Ramkishore Acharj Chowdhry (10 Moore's I. A., 279) was disputed.

As to the other adoption, the principal question was, whether the adopted son of the maternal grandfather of the deceased, not having been adopted into the gotra of the latter, but into the gotra of his mother's father could succeed as an heir nearer than the maternal grandfather's grandnephew.

The Judgments given by the High Court (L. S. JACKSON, McDONELL, and MITTER, JJ.), upholding the dismissal of the suit by the first Court, the Second Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, are given in the report of the case before the High Court (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 615) where the facts of the case also fully appear.

[304] Mr. J. F. Leith, Q. C., Mr. R. V. Doyne, and Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the Appellants.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe for the Respondent, the Court of Wards.

Mr. J. D. Mayne for the respondent Gogunchandra Chowdhry.

For the appellants it was argued, that the correct construction had not been put upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Mussamut Bhoobunmoyee Debia v. Ramkishore Acharj Chowdhry (10 Moore's I. A., 279) in the judgment of the Court below. Padmakumari, as widow of Jaikishor, was the nearest heir to Bhowanikishor, living at the time of the death of his widow, Bhoobunmoyee, and was entitled to succeed him, unless either Ramkishor or Gogunchandra could be shown to have had a valid title. This could not be done in the case of either of them. As to Ramkishor, his adoption had been already successfully impugned. Although the judgment in the case above cited, having been given between parties other than those concerned in this appeal, was in one sense not binding on the appellants, yet, in so far as it established a principle, it was conclusive against there having been an adoption by Chandraboli. Properly construed, it decided, that the power to adopt, given to the widow Chandraboli could not last indefinitely. All spiritual as well as temporal purposes for which the power had been given were fulfilled by the natural-born son, on whose death the estate vested in his widow. Thereupon the power to adopt was invalidated for all purposes. As regards the other adoption alleged, Gogunchandra, as the adopted son of Krishnanath, to whom he was adopted by Doyamoyi, was adopted into a gotra different from that of Bhowanikishor. This was the objection to his title; and to the latter he could not be heir. Though he might be a bandhu, he was not a sagotra bandhu: he was an asagotra bandhu, and by Hindu law could not be heir.

On the position of the adopted son, reference was made to Menu's Institutes, IX, 158; Dayabhaga, chap. X, paras. 7, 8, 9; Mitakshara, chap. i, s. 11;

Dattaka Chandrika, s. 5; [305] Macnaghten's Hindu Law, Vol. I, chap. vi, 'of adoption'; Vol. II, 'of adoption,' prececl. xiii, p. 188; Strange's Hindu Law, chap. iv, division 4; and the cases of Gunga Mia v. Kishen Kishore Chowdhry (3 Sel. Rep., S.D.A., 128), Uma Sanker Moitra v. Kalikomul Mozumdar (1 L. R., 6 Cal., 256) and Chinnara Makristna Aggar v. Minatchi Ammal (7 Mad. H. C. Rep., 245). On the question whether an adopted son can succeed to relations outside the gotra into which he has been adopted, Shammachurn Sircar's Vayavashtha Darpana, vayavashtha 632, 633 were cited; also Naraini Dibeh v. Hurkishor Rai (1 Sel. Rep., S.D.A., 39), Shamchunder v. Naraini Dibeh (1 Sel. Rep., S. D. A., 209), Sambhoochunder Chowdhry v. Naraini Dibeh (3 Knapp. P. C., 55; s.c., 1 Suth. P. C. Judgments, 25), Gourhurree Kubraj v. Massamat Rutnasuree Dibia (6 Sel. Rep., S. D. A., 203), Lokenath Roy v. Shamsoonduree (S. D. A., 1858, p. 1863), Kasheshuree Debia v. Greeshchunder Lahoree (W. R. for 1864, p. 71), Kishennath Roy v. Hureegobind Roy (S. D. A., for 1859, p. 18), and Teenconree Chatterjee v. Dinonath Banerjee (3 W. R., 49).

For the respondent, the Court of Wards, representing Jagatkishor, it was contended, that the decision in Bhoobunmoyee's case (10 Moore's L. A., 279) had only determined that no new heir could be substituted for her by adoption so as to defeat the estate vested in her. It had not been held that the adoption made in 1844 by Chandraboli was an act invalid for all purposes. Now that there was no longer any estate vested in Bhoobunmoyee, there could no longer be any question of substituting another heir for one already existing. So that the adoption of Rankishor, although it might have been ineffectual for the purpose of ousting the widow, was not, therefore, invalid for the purpose of securing his succession after her death. For this it had been a valid adoption. Reference was made to Mayne's Hindu Law, 161, Raja Vellanki Venkata Krishna Row v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi Narsayya (L. R., 4 L. A., 1; I. L. R., 1 Mad., 178), Bykant Monee Roy v. Kisto Soonduree Roy (7 W. R., 392), [306] Ramsoonder Singh v. Surbanee Dossee (22 W. R., 121) and Kalpirossunno Ghose v. Gocoolchunder Mitter (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 295).

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the Respondent Gogunchandra Chowdhry, was not called upon; nor were counsel for the Appellants called upon to reply in respect of Rankishor's adoption.

On the 12th of November 1881, their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by Sir R. Couch. - The suit in this case was brought by Jaikishor Surma Chowdhry against Rankishor Acharjia Chowdhry and Gogunchandra Chowdhry, for the possession of certain zamindari, taluks, and other properties mentioned in the schedules to the plaint, which formerly belonged to Bhowanikishor Acharjia Chowdhry, who died without issue on the 28th of August 1840, leaving a widow Bhoobunmoyee. Jaikishor having died during the suit, his widow, the first appellant, was made a party to it in his place.

The property in dispute originally belonged to Gourkishor, who died in 1821, leaving Bhowanikishor, his only son, and a widow, Chandraboli, the mother of Bhowani. Chandraboli was the daughter of Krishmanath and granddaughter of Ranchandra Chowdhry. The plaintiff, Jaikishor, was the great-grandson of Ranchandra, and he claimed to succeed as the heir of Bhowanikishor on the death of Chandraboli, who had succeeded to the estates on the death of Bhoobunmoyee in 1867, and died in April 1870.

In 1808, Gourkishor, being then childless, executed a deed of permission to Chandraboli to adopt a son. Bhowanikishor was born in December 1817, and in November 1819, Gourkishor executed another deed of permission. On the death of Bhowanikishor an instrument was set up as being his will, by Chandraboli and Bhoobunmoyee, by which power to adopt a son was given to the latter, and until such adoption, the income of the estates was given to Chandraboli and Bhoobunmoyee. The two ladies took possession of the estates and remained in enjoyment of them for nearly four years.

[307] In December 1843, Bhoobunmoyee professed to exercise the power alleged to be given to her by the instrument already referred to, and adopted a boy called Rajendrokishor. Thereupon Chandraboli alleged that the supposed will of Bhowanikishor was a forgery, and had not been made till after his death, and that Bhoobunmoyee had no power of adoption; and in May 1844 she adopted, or professed to adopt, Ramkishor, the first original defendant, as the son of Gourkishor, her late husband. The first of the now respondents is his minor son.

The second defendant and respondent Gogunchandra Chowdry, it is now admitted, is the adopted son of Krishnanath by an adoption made by his widow Doyamoyee, having been given in adoption to her by his father Gokulkishor and his mother Hurrosundari Debi. It will be seen, therefore, that the plaintiff cannot succeed if either Ramkishor or Gogunchandra has a valid title by adoption. Both the lower Courts have held that Ramkishor and Gogunchandra were heirs of Bhowanikishor in preference to Jaikishor, and the plaintiffs' suit has been dismissed. Their Lordships will first consider the case of the former.

Bhoobunmoyee, on behalf of Rajendrokishor, her adopted son, having obtained possession of all the property of Bhowani, a suit was brought in 1862 by the next friend of Ramkishor, on his behalf, against them and other persons, the plaintiff claiming, as the adopted son of Gourkishor, the whole property, ancestral and acquired, of Bhowani. To this suit Chandraboli was made a defendant. It was dismissed by the Sadr Amin, and there was an appeal from his decision to the Sadr Dewany Adalat at Calcutta. The case was heard upon several different occasions. Finally, the Judges were unanimously of opinion that the adoption of Rajendro was invalid, and that the will of Bhowani, purporting to give the power of adoption, was a forgery. They were also unanimous in holding that the deed of permission by Gourkishor was a genuine and valid instrument, and that if the power to adopt continued at the time when Chandraboli professed to execute it there had been a valid adoption. One of the Judges was of opinion that the power was gone, and that the adoption [308] was invalid. The other two were of opinion, that the power existed at the time of the adoption, and a decree was made, therefore, in favour of the plaintiff as to the ancestral property of Bhowanikishor, but not as to his self-acquired property.

From this decree there was an appeal to Her Majesty in Council, and the question in this appeal as regards Ramkishor is what was then decided. The judgment of this Committee on that occasion is not and cannot be relied upon in this suit as binding the parties to it, the now plaintiff not being a party to the former suit; but it is treated as a decision upon the law which should be considered as binding.

In that judgment their Lordships say:—

“The next question is as to the validity of the adoption of Ramkishor. We see no reason to dissent from the opinion of the Court below upon the facts of the case, viz., that the anumati patra of Gour is a genuine instrument, and that supposing the powers given by it to have been in force when the adoption under it took place, the adoption was good; but we think it unnecessary to examine into the genuineness of this instrument, as we are of opinion that at the time when Chandraboli professed to exercise it, the power was incapable of execution."

The judgment then, after stating the words of the instrument, and saying that it was not of a testamentary character, but merely a deed of permission to adopt, proceeds—

"How, then, is the deed to be construed when we regard it merely as a deed of permission to adopt? What is the intention to be collected from it, and how far will the law permit such intention to be affected? It must be admitted that it contemplates the possibility of more than one adoption; that it shows a strong desire on the part of the maker for the continuance of a person to perform his funeral rites, and to succeed to his property: and that it does not in express terms assign any limits to the period within which the adoption may be made. But it is plain that some limits must be assigned. It might well have been that Bhowani had left a son natural-born or adopted, and that such son had died himself leaving a son, and that such son had attained his majority in the lifetime of Chandraboli. It could hardly have been intended that, after the lapse of several successive heirs, a son should be adopted to the great grandfather of the last taker, when all the spiritual purposes of a son, according to the largest construction of them, would have been satisfied.

[309] "But, whatever may have been the intention, would the law allow it to be effected? We rather understand the Judges below to have been of opinion that if Bhowani had left a son, or if a son had been lawfully adopted to him by his wife under a power legally conferred upon her, the power of adoption given to Chandraboli would have been at an end.

"But it is difficult to see what reasons could be assigned for such a result which would not equally apply to the case before us."

After saying that, on the death of Bhowani, his wife succeeded as heir to him, and would have equally succeeded in that character in exclusion of his brothers, if he had any, and that she took a vested estate as his widow in the whole of his property, their Lordships say:—

"The question is, whether the estate of the son being unlimited, and that son having married and left a widow his heir, and that heir having acquired a vested estate in her husband's property as widow, a new heir can be substituted by adoption, who is to defeat that estate, and take as an adopted son what a legitimate son of Gourkishor would not have taken.

"This seems contrary to all reason, and to all the principles of Hindu law, as far as we can collect them."

The substitution of a new heir for the widow was, no doubt, the question to be decided, and such substitution might have been disallowed, the adoption being held valid for all other purposes, which is the view that the lower Courts have taken of the judgment, but their Lordships do not think that this was intended. They consider the decision to be that, upon the vesting of the estate in the widow of Bhowani, the power of adoption was at an end, and incapable of execution. And if the question had come before them without any previous decision upon it, they would have been of that opinion. The adoption intended by the deed of permission was for the succession to the zamindari and other property, as well as the performance of religious services, and the vesting of the estate in the widow, if not in Bhowani himself, as the son and heir of his father, was a proper limit to the exercise of the power. The words at the end of the instrument are "that dattaka (adopted) son shall be entitled to perform your and my sradh, etc., and that of our ancestors, and also to succeed to the property." Their [310] Lordships are therefore of opinion that Ramkishor had no title.

They have now to decide upon the title of Gogunchandra Chowdhry.

It may here be stated that Chandraboli, after the death of Bhowani, and whilst she was in possession of the property, executed a deed of relinquishment in favour of Ramkishor, dated the 10th of September 1869, and put him in possession. And by a deed, dated the 30th of December 1869, reciting this, Gogunchandra agreed that neither he nor any of his heirs or representatives should be able to advance any manner of claim against Ramkishor's right, and against any of the conditions of the aforesaid deed of relinquishment of rights. It is not necessary in this suit to determine what is the effect of this deed. If Gogunchandra is entitled, the plaintiff cannot succeed.

Gogunchandra, it has been stated, is the adopted son of Krishnanath, the maternal grandfather of Bhowani, and is not of the same gotra as Bhowani, whose gotra is that of his father Gourkishor; and it is objected that, although Gogunchandra as an adopted son may inherit collaterally, it must be in the same gotra, and consequently he is not heir to Bhowani. This was held by the Subordinate Judge, who quoted a gloss upon a text of Manu by Kalluka Bhatta as his authority. The High Court has held the contrary, and one of the learned Judges (Mr. Justice MITTER) said of the gloss in question, which is to be found in Colebrooke's Digest, Book 5, ch. 4, s. 1, art. 178: -

"In the original, phrase 'gotra-dayada' stands for 'heirs to collaterals.' 'Dayada' is equivalent to heirs, and 'gotra' to family name. It is said that 'gotra-dayada' means heirs of the persons bearing the same family name. It may be that this would be the meaning of the phrase above alluded to if the letters are strictly adhered to. But it appears to me from the context that these words are intended to include all the collateral members of the family who stand in the relation of sapinda, etc., to the adopted son. But granting that the literal construction should be adhered to, does the text in question support the conclusion of the lower Court? It lays down simply that the first six kinds of sons are heirs to the kinsmen sprung from the same family. It is not necessarily implied thereby that any one of these six descriptions [311] of sons is not entitled to inherit to the estate of kinsmen sprung from a different family."

The limitation of the right of an adopted son to succeed to his collateral relations now contended for is contrary to the whole theory of the Hindu law of adoption. An adopted son occupies the same position in the family of the adopter as a natural-born son, except in a few instances, which are accurately defined both in the Dattak Chandrika and Dattaka Mimamsa, the authorities that govern the decision of questions of adoption arising in the Bengal school. And no text has been produced to show that an adopted son cannot succeed to the estate of such relatives of his father as are sprung from a different family. The author of the Dattaka Chandrika, after referring to the contradictory doctrines on the subject of the adopted son being heir to his father's kinsmen, and stating his way of reconciling them, says, s. 5, para. 24: "Therefore, by the same relationship of brother and so forth, in virtue of which the real legitimate son would succeed to the estate of a brother or other kinsmen, where such son may not exist, the adopted son takes the whole estate over." The doctrine in the Dayabhaga, ch. 10, v. 8, that adopted sons are not heirs of collateral relations (sapindas, etc.), which is in opposition to the text of Manu, was considered by this Committee in Sunbhoochunder Chowdhry v. Narain Dibe (3 Knapp's P. C., 55; S. C., 1 Suth. P. C. Judgments, 25), and it was held that an adopted son succeeds not only lineally but collaterally to the inheritance of his relations by adoption. And it has been pointed out by the High Court, and has not been disputed before their Lordships, that Gogunchandra and Bhowanikishor are related to one another as sapindas.

For the above reasons their Lordships are of opinion that Gogunchandra is a preferential heir of Bhowanikishor to Jaikishor, and that, on this ground, the decree of the High Court affirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge, who dismissed the suit, is right. And their Lordships will, therefore, advise Her Majesty to affirm that decree and to dismiss this appeal. The costs will be paid by the appellants, [312] one set of costs only to be allowed by the Registrar on taxation.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the Respondent, the Court of Wards: Mr. H. Treasure.

Solicitors for the Respondent Gogunchandra: Messrs. Barrow and Rogers.

NOTES.

[I. POWER TO ADOPT TIME LIMIT TO ITS EXERCISE

1. An adoption is invalid when the estate had vested in any person other than the adopter, as an estate once vested cannot be divested. — 10 M. L. A. 279; (1884) 9 Bom., 91; (1887) 11 Bom., 381; (1890) 11 Bom., 163; (1894) 19 Bom., 331; (1896) 22 Bom., 416.

2. An exception is the case of joint families: — 1 Mad., 174.

3. The power of adoption comes to an end for all purposes—even if by the adoption the widow should divest no estate—but her own, the estate having since been vested in her; (1906) 33 Cal., 1306; 11 C. W. N. 12; 1 C. L. J. 357—in all cases where she is not the immediate heir to the last male owner (as his mother or his widow), and it is not revived.

It makes no difference whether the power to adopt makes express provision for such a contingency or whether such power is conferred by the husband (1905) 32 Cal., 861; 1 C. L. J., 270; (1906) 33 Cal., 1306; 12 C. W. N. 12; 1 C. L. J., 357; or by the Sapinda (1887) 10 Mad. 205 P.C. 14 L. A. 67 on appeal from 7 Mad. 101; 33 Mad., 228; or by the law, (1892) 17 Bom., 161; (1884) 9 Bom., 94; (1887) 11 Bom., 381; (1894) 19 Bom., 331; (1896) 22 Bom., 416; 32 Bom., 199 (applied to Jains—contra, (1889) 17 Cal., 518, which is erroneous); (1902) 26 Bom., 526.

4. Where the adopter is not the immediate heir, and the estate had vested in such other person (i.e., other than the adopter or her son, natural or adopted, as the case may be), the adoption is invalid whether it had been made before its vesting in such adopter (8 Cal., 302 P. C.) or after it (33 Cal., 1306).

5. The consent (valid otherwise) given by the full owner may, it was suggested in the earlier Bombay cases, operate to validate an adoption which was invalid by the operation of the above rules:—(1898) 23 Bom., 250, 327; (1895) 21 Bom., 319, etc.

But this is not the correct view. — (1909) 34 Mad., 228; 8 M. H. C., 108; (1902) 26 Bom., 526; (1904) 28 Bom., 161; 6 Bom., 1 R., 161; (1905) 29 Bom., 400.

6. Effect of the son having married and dying a widower—this makes no difference where the mother is the immediate heir on his death:—(1900) 25 Bom., 306; 27 Bom., 492.

II. RIGHTS OF INHERITANCE AS REGARDS ADOPTED SON—

1. An adopted son is, as regards inheritance, on the same footing as an aurasa son (except in competition with 17 Mad., 122, or as regards the share in the presence of an aurasa son:—Vasishtha's Text).

2. Thus, he succeeds to:—(1) his adoptive father's relations whether lineal or collateral, 2 Knapp., 55; 6 Cal., 289; 9 C. L. R., 379;

(2) his adoptive mother and her relations. — 1 B. H. C., A C., 191; 1 All., 256; 6 Cal., 265; 10 Cal., 232; 1 C. L. R., 538, 9 Cal., 70, 33 Cal., 917 (reversed on another point, 35 Cal., 896);

See also the doubts expressed by Sir G. D. Banerjee in his Marriage and Stridhan as regards stridhan;

(3) he loses his rights in his natural family except such as had been vested in him before his adoption:—1 C. W. N., 121; 29 Mad., 137 (right in joint family property which vests at birth is an apparent exception—he suffering a civil death in his natural family).

3. And, conversely, all those relations are heirs to the adopted son:—12 M. L. J., 64; 33 Bom., 404; 23 Mad., 1, 5 C. W. N., 20; 8 All., 319; 2 Mad., 91.

4. An adopted son cannot renounce his status as such:—19 Bom., 239.

5. The status as member of the adoptive family extends to those sons (natural or adopted) who were born after his adoption:—1 C. L. J., 388; but not to those born before his adoption:—33 Bom., 669.]

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 13th January, 1882.

PRESENT :
MR. JUSTICE WILSON.

Miller

versus

Nasmyths Patent Press Company, (Limited).

Lien for work done on goods—Entire contract - Wharfinger's lien—

Contract Act (IX of 1872) ss. 170, 171.

Where a person does work under an entire contract with reference to goods delivered at different times such as to establish a lien, he is entitled to that lien on all goods dealt with under that contract.

Chase v. Westmore (5 M. & S., 180) followed.

The fact that a manufacturer has a wharf upon which he receives goods brought to him by customers, does not entitle him to claim a lien as a wharfinger upon such goods.

THIS was a suit by the Official Assignee, as the assignee of the estate of Messrs. Rushton Brothers, for the recovery of certain jute which, at the time of the insolvency, was in the possession of the defendant Company, and which the defendant Company declined to give up to the plaintiff; or, for the recovery of Rs. 15,000 in lieu thereof; and for compensation for such loss and damage as the plaintiff might have sustained by the detention of the goods.

On the 10th March 1881, the date of the insolvency of Rushton Brothers, there were some 600 bales of jute on the premises of the defendant Company, which had been delivered to them for the purpose of being baled. It appeared that Messrs. Rushton Brothers had been the Secretaries of the [313] defendant Company, and that they also dealt with the Company, and furnished the Company with jute to bale. Prior to the beginning of 1881, the Company had been baling jute for Rushton Brothers on terms which it is not necessary to state. Subsequently an agreement was made, which was embodied in certain entries in the Minute Book of the Directors of the Company. The first entry, which was made by Messrs. Rushton Brothers on the 13th January 1881, was as follows: "We have a chance of working some jute, provided the Company can undertake it at an all-round rate of Re. 1-2-6 per bale." On behalf of the Company the Directors replied: "Before accepting or stating any rate, please state quantity likely to be screwed and name of person or firm offering." On the 14th January Rushton Brothers noted: "We cannot state the exact quantity. It depends entirely on the market. It will probably be about 5,000 bales. A reply is required to-day, as otherwise the work cannot be put through. The offer is made by our firm." The answer to that was—"With a guarantee of at least 4,000 bales I agree to accept Re. 1-2-6 for jute and Re. 1-4-6 for cuttings. If below that quantity the rates of the season to remain in force." The final acceptance dated the 20th January was as follows: "Messrs. Rushton Brothers accept the rate, and if the quantity does not reach the 4,000 bales, will pay the old rate for the work done."

In pursuance of that arrangement a large quantity of jute was sent to the screw-house of the defendant Company to be baled. Part of it was baled before the insolvency, and remained baled, and part unbled, in the possession of the defendants at the time of the insolvency.

The Official Assignee claimed the unbaled jute, but the defendant Company refused to deliver it, on the ground, at first, that they had a general lien over the goods for the amount due to them from the insolvents' firm for their baling charges, not only for the goods in their hands but also for other goods which had been baled and delivered to the insolvents' firm, and afterwards on the ground that these particular goods formed part of a larger quantity which had been pressed by the Company under the above stated agreement, and that the Company [314] had a particular lien over these particular goods in respect of the balance due to them for the entire quantity pressed under the agreement. They also set up a claim for a lien as wharfingers.

The Official Assignee contended that the defendant Company was entitled to a lien on the goods in question only for their charges for work done to those goods, and ultimately tendered to the Company the sum of Rs. 655-8-6, the amount of such charges. This tender was refused.

Mr. Hill and Mr. Trevelyan for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Phillips and Mr. Stokoe for the Defendant Company.

The facts being undisputed, the defendants began.

Mr. Phillips. The defendants claim a lien under s. 170 of the Contract Act as artificers, and under s. 171 of the same Act as wharfingers. The plaintiff admits a lien for screwing charges on particular bales; the dispute is, whether the lien extends to the whole of the jute baled under the contract of the 13th January 1881. It was an entire contract, and the lien attaches in respect of the whole balance Blake v. Nicholson (3 M. & S., 167), Chase v. Westmore (5 M. & S., 180). A wharfinger has a lien on goods brought to his wharf for the balance of a general account Naylor v. Manques (1 Esp., 109), Spears v. Hartly (3 Esp., 81). The balance of a general account means everything in account between the parties. He also referred to Holderness v. Collinson (7 B. & C., 212).

Mr. Hill for the Plaintiff.—The claim for lien as wharfingers cannot be supported. There is nothing in the Memorandum or Articles of Association which authorizes the Company to carry on the business of wharfingers, and the fact that they have erected a wharf for the convenience of their customers does not make [315] them wharfingers as to the claim for a general lien. The goods must be given for purposes for which such lien can attach. If for special purposes, a general lien does not attach; for example, if special monies are deposited with a banker for a special purpose, in such a case his general lien does not attach. —Brandao v. Barnett (3 C. B., 519, at p. 531). These goods were not deposited to be kept in a warehouse, but to have special work done upon them. A factor can only claim a lien for his general balance, upon goods which come to his hands as factor Dixon v. Stansfeld (10 C. B., 398). The goods were not received by the Company as wharfingers, but as balers of jute. A general lien can only attach upon goods deposited under an entire contract. There was no such contract in this case.

Wilson, J. (after stating the facts of the case, continued as follows):—The question is, what lien are the defendants entitled to. The Official Assignee contends, that they are only entitled to a lien on each bale of jute for costs of baling of that specific bale. The defendants first claim a general lien under s. 171 of the Contract Act, on the ground that they are wharfingers. To me it

*[Sec. 170:—Where the bailee has, in accordance with the purpose of the bailment, rendered any service involving the exercise of labour or skill in respect of the goods bailed, he has, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, a right to retain such goods until he receives

due remuneration for the services he has rendered in respect of them.]

seems clear that they are not wharfingers. They have a wharf as an accessory to the screw-house. Occasionally jute is brought to the screw-house in carts. All that is purely ancillary to the pressing business, and they are not wharfingers. They are not entitled to a general lien in that sense.

They further contend that they are entitled to a lien on all jute delivered under the agreement of January 1881 for charges on jute baled and delivered under the agreement. In that contention I think they are right. The case of Chase v. Westmore (5 M. & S., 180) appears to me an express authority for the proposition that where a person does work under an entire contract with reference to goods delivered at different times, such as to establish a lien, he is entitled to that lien on all goods dealt with under that contract. The head-note correctly states the case: "a workman, having bestowed his labour upon a chattel in consideration of a price fixed in amount by his agreement with the [316] owner, may detain the chattel until the price be paid, and this though the chattel be delivered to the workman in different parcels and at different times, if the work to be done under the agreement be entire." The word 'entire' seems to me to mean 'under one contract.' What Lord ELLENBOROUGH says is this: "This case was argued before us last term and stood over for our consideration upon the single question whether a workman, having bestowed his labour upon a chattel, in consideration of a price or reward fixed in amount by his agreement with the owner, at the time of its delivery to him, can by law detain the chattel until the price be paid or must seek his remedy by action, no time or mode of payment having been appointed by the agreement. We were all of opinion, upon the argument, and still are, that if a right to detain exists in the general case that I have mentioned, the present defendants have all right to detain the goods in question for the money due to them for grinding all the wheat; because we consider the whole to have been done under one bargain, although the wheat was delivered in different parcels and at different times."

That case seems to me precisely on a par with this. That was a case for the grinding of wheat delivered in different vessels at different times. The decision was that the goods could be detained till the work done was paid for.

Here a series of parcels of jute were delivered at various times to be baled, but under one contract. The lien attaches to all. The case has never been questioned, and is strictly in accordance with common sense. The law here is not different from what it is in England. Section 170 of the Contract Act is as follows:—"Where the bailee has, in accordance with the purpose of the bailment, rendered any service involving the exercise of labour or skill in respect of the goods bailed, he has, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, a right to retain such goods, until he receives due remuneration for the service he has rendered in respect of them."

It appears to me the law is the same here as in England, and the defendants have a right to retain their lien on all goods in their hands delivered to them under the agreement of January 1881 for charges in respect of any of the goods delivered under [317] that agreement. Of course, if it appears that any goods came to their possession otherwise than under that agreement, the lien will be in respect of each bale of such goods for work done on each such bale. The parties can by reference to the books tell what these goods are, and if any difficulty arises the case can be mentioned again.

Defendants to have their costs on scale 2. Costs to come out of insolvents' estate.

PRESENT:

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE PONTIFEX.

In the matter of the Indian Companies Act.

In the matter of the Petition of Luchmee Chund and another.

Luchmee Chund and another

versus

The Bengal Coal Company.

Companies Act (X of 1866), s. 34—Blank transfer—Right of transferee under blank transfer to registration—Discretion of directors—Discretion of the Court to refuse to hear the case under s. 34—Power-of-attorney—Option of holder to refuse to appear in suit against principal.

The power given to the Court by s. 34 of the Indian Companies Act of 1866 is discretionary, and the Court will not order a transfer to be registered, where the alleged transferor is not before the Court, and there is any real doubt as to the validity or bona fides of the transaction.

A person holding a power-of-attorney, even if authorized by the power to appear and defend suits on behalf of his principal, is at liberty to refuse to accept service of summons and appear in a suit brought against his principal, but may either act upon the power or not as he may think proper.

APPEAL from an order made by Mr. Justice CUNNINGHAM, dated the 29th August 1881, in an application under s. 34 of Act X of 1866.

An application was made under s. 34 of the Indian Companies Act (X of 1866) by two persons, named Luchmee Chund and Konnyloll, on a petition verified by their Gonnasta, to have their names entered on the register of the Bengal Coal Company, Limited, as the owners of two shares in the Company.

[318] It appeared that, on the 25th September 1880, one Colonel Mowbray Thomson had deposited these shares with Messrs. Nicholls and Co., for safe custody, and had given to them a power-of-attorney authorizing them, amongst other things, to deal with all or any of his shares generally.

On the 17th December 1880, George Augustus Thompson (one of the members of the firm of Nicholls and Co.), under this power-of-attorney, transferred to Luchmee Chund and Konnyloll these shares under a blank deed of transfer, in the body of which neither the names of the transferor or transferee, the consideration, the number and designation of the shares or the date of the transfer appeared, although the transferor's name was signed at the foot of the instrument.

On the 10th February 1881, Messrs. Nicholls and Co. were adjudicated insolvents; and on the same day Luchmee Chund and Konnyloll requested the Company, to register the transfer. The Company, however, refused to recognize the transfer on account of the insolvency of Nicholls and Co., whereupon Messrs. Watkins, and Watkins who were the attorneys of Luchmee Chund and Konnyloll, filled in the blank transfer deed under instruction given by the Gomasta of Luchmee Chund and Konnyloll, making it appear thereby, that the transferee was one "Luchmee Chund and Konnyloll," and sent it, together with the bill acknowledging receipt of the consideration-money, to the Company, calling upon them to register. Several letters then passed between Messrs. Watkins and Watkins and the Company, the result of which was that the Company refused to register the shares, on the grounds (i) that the shares and transfer deed were not presented for registration till after the failure of Messrs. Nicholls and Co.; (ii) that the transfer, when first presented, bore no date; (iii) that the transfer deed purported to transfer the shares to one "Luchmee Chund Konnyloll," which was not the name of any single individual, whereas Messrs. Watkins and Watkins had in filling up the transfer styled 'Luchmee Chund Konnyloll' as being a single individual, 'a banker of great respectability'; (iv) that no proper transfer deed had been presented for registration; (v) that the Company had received a notice from Messrs. Grindlay [319] and Co. (the then agents of Colonel Thomson) requesting them not to register any transfer of the shares in question.

The Superintendent of the Company stated in his affidavit that the Directors had been informed and believed that although there was a firm of the name of "Luchmee Chund Konnyloll," there were no persons, members of that firm, named "Luchmee Chund and Konnyloll."

Under art. 31 of the Articles of Association of the Bengal Coal Company, the Company were not obliged to register the name of any transferee, unless such transferee should be approved of by the Directors.

Luchmee Chund and Konnyloll, on a petition verified by their Gomasta, although it did not appear that he had obtained leave to verify the petition, applied to the Court under s. 34 to compel the Company to register, on notice of motion to the Coal Company and to Grindlay and Co. (Notice to the latter, however, was served on an assistant in the office, who gave no acknowledgment on the original notice).

Mr. T. A. Apear and Mr. Trevelyan for the Applicants.

Mr. Allen and Mr. P. O'Kinealy for the Bengal Coal Company.

Cunningham, J.—This is an application under s. 34 of the Indian Companies Act of 1866.

The question raised "is as to the right of two persons, Luchmee Chund and Konnyloll, trading as bankers under the style of 'Luchmee Chund Konnyloll,' to be registered as the transferees of two shares, Nos. 94 and 95, in the Bengal Coal Company, Limited, in virtue of a transfer purporting to have been effected on the 17th December 1880 by Colonel Mowbray Thomson, through his attorney, George Augustus Thompson, to Luchmee Chund Konnyloll, his executors and representatives."

This transfer was, the petitioners say, executed in blank, the signature of George Augustus Thompson, as attorney for Colonel Mowbray Thomson, attested by H. Phillips, and of the petitioner's firm unattested, being affixed to a document in which neither the names of transferor or transferee, the [320] consideration, the number, and designation of the shares, or the date of the transfer, appeared.

Early in February 1881, the petitioners requested the Company to register the transfer, and on the Company's refusal on the 10th February, instructed their attorneys, Watkins and Watkins, to obtain registration. Watkins and Watkins accordingly filled in the names of the transferor and transferee, the consideration, the number and designation of the shares, but not the date, they also supplied the attestation of the Nagree signature to the document which was before unattested, and on the same day, 10th February 1881, presented the transfer-deed, then filled up, to the Company for registration. On the 12th February, the Superintendent of the Company addressed Messrs. Watkins and Watkins, declining, with reference to the insolvency of Nicholls and Co., which occurred on the 10th February and appeared in that day's Exchange Gazette, to register the transfer; thereupon Messrs. Watkins and Watkins' clerk filled in the date "17th December 1880," this date being entered with reference to a receipt purporting to have been given by Nicholls and Co., to the petitioners for the purchase-money on that date; and on the 15th February, Watkins and Watkins again asked for registration, pointing out that the sale took place on December 17th, 1880, and producing the receipt to that effect.

On the 18th February 1881, the Company in reply pointed out that the date had been added since the transfer was first sent to the office, and must be initialled either by Colonel Mowbray Thomson or the Official Assignee of Messrs. Nicholls and Co., and inquired who Luchmee Chund Konnyloll was, the Company not being obliged to register a transferee unless he should be approved of by the Directors.

To this Messrs. Watkins and Watkins reply, "Luchmee Chund Konnyloll is a banker having his residence" etc., and repeated the demand for registration.

On the 26th March, Messrs. Grindlay and Co., as agents for Colonel Mowbray Thomson, addressed the Company, saying that the certificates of the two shares were left with Messrs. Nicholls and Co., for safe custody; that they could not be [321] found among their effects, and requesting the Company not to register any transfer without further communication.

On the 14th May, the Superintendent, in reply to an enquiry of Messrs. Watkins and Watkins, informed them that the Directors based their refusal to register not only on the objection raised by Colonel Mowbray Thomson's agents, but on the grounds—(i) that the shares and transfer were not presented for registration till after Nicholls' insolvency; (ii) that the transfer-deed, when presented for registration, was undated; (iii) that the transfer purported to be to "Luchmee Chund and Konnyloll, having his place of business in Rammohun Mullick's Street," and that no such person could be found.

To this Messrs. Watkins and Watkins reply that the sale took place on the 17th December 1880; that Luchmee Chund and Konnyloll are both merchants of great respectability, and demanded registration in their names.

There have been some differences of opinion in the English Courts as to the duties and power of the Court under s. 35 of the English Act, which corresponds to our s. 31. The observation of COLERIDGE, C.J., in Ex-parte Shaw (L. R., 2 Q. B. D., 463, at p. 478), in reviewing the rulings on the jurisdiction conferred by s. 35 of the English Act, makes it, I think, clear that, under s. 34 of the Indian Act, the Court has jurisdiction to make an order in a case where there is a dispute not only between the Company and an alleged shareholder, but in a case in which there are two rival claimants to be shareholders, and according to L. J. Brett, as a matter of judicial discretion, where there is a real dispute, and the amount depending is large, or if the facts are complicated, or any general principle involved, the Court, instead of proceeding in a summary way at once, should direct an issue or some other proceedings.

In the same case it was laid down that the mere non-production of the transfer, in a case in which it was proved that a sale had been completed and the transfer executed, could not be taken advantage of by the Company as a ground for refusing to register. Following that case, I think that I have jurisdiction [322] to go into the question of the real ownership of the shares, and that the mere absence of the transfer would not be fatal to the transferee's claim, provided I am satisfied that it ever was executed, and that a bonâ fide sale took place, and that if, when a prima facie case has been made out, any point still requires elucidation I ought to frame an issue upon it.

This would certainly be necessary before the petitioners' claim could be allowed. The whole case is redolent of fraud. G. A. Thompson is a fraudulent bankrupt, and has decamped with the plunder which the misguided confidence of his constituents placed within his reach. The transfer is never completed or presented for registration till after his bankruptcy. If it was a bonâ fide transfer, why did not the petitioners take steps to establish their title by registration during the period from December 7th to February 10th, the very day on which Nicholls' insolvency was declared. The inference is, that they knew the alleged transfer to be fraudulent, and concealed it till the very last moment, and till a moment when G. A. Thompson having escaped, its exposure would no longer do him any harm. This violent presumption of fraud would have to be rebutted by irresistible evidence of their bona fides, of consideration having really passed, and of the transaction having been in every particular regular and valid. There are, however, two considerations which make any such issues unnecessary.

The case of Ex-parte Shaw (L. R., 2 Q. B. D., 463) has been much relied on as corresponding with the present, and it resembles it in so far that there was in each a fraudulent agent who bolted with the proceeds. It differed from it in two important respects: first, there was in that case no doubt at all of the purchaser having 'bonâ fide' bought the shares and paid the purchase-money to the vendor's agent, or as to vendor and purchaser having executed the transfer.

If the present case, there was never any such transfer, Thompson and the vendees' Gomasta signed a blank from which the alleged vendees' attorney has subsequently filled up, but there is nothing to show the Gomasta's authority so to sign, nor was the document in any sense of the word such a transfer as is [323] required by art. 9, table A, in the schedule to the Act, before registration can be demanded.

But the present case differs from Ex parte Shaw (L. R., 2 Q. B. D., 463) in another important respect. There it does not appear (see p. 466) that the Articles of Association reserved to the Directors any discretion as to the approval of new transferees; no reference at any rate to any such discretion is made throughout the whole argument. In the present case the Company is not obliged (art. 31) to register the transferee "unless he be approved by the Directors."

Now the discretion thus conferred on Directors is no mere form.

In the Gresham Life Assurance Society (L. R., 8 Ch. App., 446, at p. 449), Lord Justices JAMES and MELLISH laid down that where a settlement-deed provided that no transfer should be made except to a person approved by the Directors, before the Court could interfere with the discretion exercised by the Directors, it must be made out that the Directors have been acting from some improper motive or arbitrarily or capriciously. Lord Justice MELLISH observing that the fact that the Directors declined to give their reasons for refusing was no ground to infer that they are acting arbitrarily. If, therefore, it be shown that the Directors have fairly considered the matter, the Court will not sit in appeal on the propriety of their decision, nor will it compel them to disclose the grounds on which it rests.

In the present case the Directors' objections to the proposed transferees may be summed up by saying, that they do not approve of them. Much reliance was placed by Mr. Allen on the contention that a firm could not be a transferee of a share; but here the two individuals composing the firm are disclosed, and it is clear from the Registers 46 and 47 of table A, sched. i of the Act, that several persons may be jointly interested in a share or shares. The Directors, however, disapprove of Luchmee Chund Konnyloll as transferees, and it appears to me, that, in the absence of evidence, that they are acting capriciously or malà fide, I cannot examine into the propriety of their decision. Excellent reasons at once present themselves if it were necessary for their conduct. They may have suspicions as to their solvency or not without reason of their [324] honesty, both excellent reasons for not admitting them as shareholders; but highly inconvenient to be publicly alleged. In any case, the Directors have a perfect right, in my opinion, to refuse to register the transfer, if they disapprove of the transferee, and no one has a right to contest the propriety of their disapproval except by showing that it is capricious or malà fide, which is not attempted here. On this ground, I think, that the petition must be refused, and that it is unnecessary to frame issues on the various points, which, supposing the petitioners to be entitled to insist on registration as transferees, would have to be established before their claim as bonà fide purchasers could be admitted. The petition is dismissed with costs.

From this judgment the petitioners appealed, and the Bengal Coal Company at the same time filed the following objections to the judgment under s. 561 of Act X of 1877—(i) that the Judge had erred in holding the petitioners to be the only members of the firm of Luchmee Chund and Konnyloll; (ii) that he should have held, that the application for registration did not disclose the names of all the persons, members of the firm; (iii) that the Company were not bound by law to register the name of a firm.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Ticevlyan for the Appellants.—The case of Walker v. Bartlett (18 C. B., 815), is an authority to show that a transferee has power to fill up a blank form of transfer. Where an owner of shares borrows money on share certificates and deposits the shares, and the transfers signed by him, leaving the date and the name of the transferee in blank, the lender has implied power to fill up the blanks, and the transfers will pass the legal interest, if the Articles of Association do not require a deed. In re Tahiti Cotton Company Ex-parte Sargent (L. R., 17 Eq., 273); see also Davies's case, In re Tees Bottle Company (33 L. T., 834), where the instrument of transfer was unstamped and in blank, and in precisely the same position as our present transfer. [PONTIFEX, J.—Under the Act the Court may determine matters between you and Colonel Thomson, but Colonel Thomson is out of the country, and has not therefore appeared in this [325] application under the summary procedure allowed by s. 31. Is it reasonable that the Court should allow the summary procedure to be carried out under these circumstances, instead of letting the parties bring a regular suit to have their rights established?] There is not much difference between the summary procedure and an ordinary suit: in the former Colonel Thomson could answer by affidavit, in the latter by written statement. The summons was served upon Grindlay and Co., who are Colonel Thomson's constituted attorneys, and they have not appeared. [GARTH, C.J.—The fact that Grindlay and Co. stated that they were Thomson's attorneys is no evidence against Thomson; it does not follow that they had power to appear for Thomson in suits; and the attorney is not bound to appear and answer, although he may have power to do so; and moreover the summons was not signed by Grindlay and Co. [PONTIFEX, J. —Even supposing Grindlay and Co. had a full power-of-attorney enabling them to appear, or even supposing Colonel Thomson were present, it is in either case discretionary in the Court to allow the summary procedure to be used, and in all the cases you have cited, the person in the position of Colonel Thomson was before the Court.]

Mr. Phillips, Mr. Evans, and Mr. P. O'Kinealy, who appeared for the Bengal Coal Company, were not called upon.

The Judgment of the Appellate Court (GARTH, C. J., and PONTIFEX, J.) was as follows :—

We think that the appeal should be dismissed. Without going into the grounds upon which the Court below disposed of the application, we think that, in the exercise of our discretion, we ought not to order the Bengal Coal Company, under s. 34 of the Indian Companies Act, to register the transfer. That transfer was made in the absence from this country of Colonel Mowbray Thomson, who was the registered owner of the shares. It was made by a Mr. Thompson, a member of the firm of Nicholls and Co., who held a power-of-attorney from Colonel Mowbray Thomson: and it is conceded, that not only was the transfer made in blank, but that the Company knew it. It was made, moreover, by Mr. Thompson very shortly before [326] Messrs. Nicholls and Co., became insolvent: and it was brought to the Company to be registered on the very day when the insolvency took place.

The Company were then served with a notice by Messrs. Grindlay and Co., on behalf of Colonel Mowbray Thomson, not to register the transfer, and there appears to be a question between Colonel Mowbray Thomson and the transferee of the shares, whether the transfer was bona fide, whether Thompson had a right to make it, and whether it was valid as against the Colonel. That gentleman is not before the Court: and, under such circumstances, we think we ought not to make the order in his absence. It appears that in all the cases to which our attention has been called by the appellants, both parties to the transfer, as well as the Company, were before the Court.

Mr. Bonnerjee contends, that because Messrs. Grindlay and Co., may hold a general power-of-attorney from Colonel Mowbray Thomson, we ought to give the applicants an opportunity now, at this stage of the case, to call upon Messrs. Grindlay and Co. to produce that power-of-attorney; and not only so, but to order Messrs. Grindlay and Co. to accept service of the process of the Court for Colonel Mowbray Thomson, so as to make him a party to the proceedings.

It is possible, no doubt, that Messrs. Grindlay and Co., may have such a power-of-attorney. We do not know whether they have or not. But even if they have, we think that we ought not, at this stage of the proceedings, to allow Mr. Bonnerjee's client to do that, which he ought to have done, if at all in the first instance.

But apart from this objection, we think, as at present advised, that if Messrs. Grindlay and Co. do hold a power-of-attorney, they would be at liberty, if they thought fit, to refuse to appear in this suit; or, in other words, they might act upon the power or not, as they might think proper.

We think, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed with costs on scale No. 2.

[327] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 31st January, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE BOSE.

Hamidoolla.....Plaintiff

versus

Faizunnissa.....Defendant."

Mahomedan Law—Divorce by wife.

Under the Mahomedan law, a husband may give his wife the power to divorce herself from him according to the form proscribed by that law for divorce by the husband.

BY an instrument of kabinnama executed by the plaintiff upon his marriage with the defendant, the plaintiff agreed to allow the defendant to be taken to her father's house four times a year, and to erect a house for the defendant and live with her there, should any disputes arise between her and the persons living in the same mess with the plaintiff. He also agreed not to beat or ill-treat the defendant, and also agreed to pay her Rs. 400 on account of dower-money on demand. The agreement further stipulated that, if the plaintiff violated any of the conditions contained in it, the defendant should have the power of divorcing herself from him. This power the defendant exercised, alleging ill-treatment and a refusal to pay the dower-money. The plaintiff now sued for restitution of conjugal rights. The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree, considering that the Mahomedan law did not give the wife the power of divorce. This decree was reversed by the Subordinate Judge, who, on the authority of Mir Ashruf Ali v. Mir Ashraf Ali (16 W. R., 260) and Badarunnissa Bibi v. Mafiattala (7 B. L. R., 442), held, that a Mahomedan husband can vest his wife with the power of dissolving the marriage. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Munshi Serajul Islam for the Appellant.

Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen for the Respondent.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 358 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Mothura Nath Gupto, First Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, dated the 28th November 1879, reversing the decree of Baboo Donesh Chunder Roy, Munsif of Hathazari, dated the 5th August 1879.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and BOSE, JJ.) was delivered by Prinsep, J.—The plaintiff in this case sues for restitution of conjugal rights. The defendant, his wife, pleads that, under [328] the conditions of the kabinnama, which was entered into between herself and her husband before marriage, she received the power to divorce her husband under certain contingencies, and that, on their occurrence, she has exercised that power, and duly divorced him under the Mahomedan law.

In second appeal it has been argued by Munshi Serajul Islam, who appears for the husband, the plaintiff, that the delegation of such power by the husband to the wife is contrary to Mahomedan law. We are unable to find any authority for this contention. The Mahomedan law on the subject which has been laid before us provides for the delegation of the power of divorce by the husband to the wife on certain occasions by word of mouth, but it in no way, so far as it has been laid before us, limits the exercise of that power to those occasions. It would seem rather that, by providing how the wife should act, it recognizes her power to divorce her husband, if he should give her the power to do so. All the occasions specially provided for are what I may term casual. We are aware of no reason why an agreement entered into before marriage between parties able to contract under which the wife consented to marry on condition that, under certain specified contingencies, all of a reasonable nature, her future husband should permit her to divorce herself under the form prescribed by Mahomedan law, should not be carried out. We may observe, too, that the conditions under which it is stipulated that this power should be exercised by the wife are certainly not opposed to the Mahomedan law on the subject.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[MAHOMEDAN LAW—DIVORCE BY WIFE—

Sir R. K. Wilson (Muhammadan Law (1908) III Ed., p. 141) is of opinion that it is immaterial whether such an agreement as in this case is ante-nuptial or post-nuptial. The Calcutta High Court has however drawn the distinction, and is of opinion that the texts of the Muhammadan Law relating as they do to post-nuptial contracts, do not, at any rate, necessitate the exercise by the wife, of the option of divorce, on the first occurrence of the contingency stipulated for in the ante-nuptial contract.—(1908) 36 Cal., 23; 12 C. W. N., 907; see also 3 C. L. J., 19. As regards when such agreements are void, see (1905) 7 Bom. L. R., 602. See I.L.R. (1872-1873) Vol. I, 206.]

Suit to set aside sale for arrears of Government Revenue—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sched. ii, art. 12.

A suit to set aside a sale for arrears of Government revenue must be brought within one year from the date when the sale becomes final and conclusive.

THIS was a suit to annul the revenue-sale of a share in a certain taluq. The sale took place on the 30th of July 1877. No appeal was preferred to the Commissioner within the sixty days prescribed by s. 2 of Beng. Act VII of 1868; and under s. 27 † of Act XI of 1859, as modified by s. 4 of Beng. Act VII of 1868, the sale became final and conclusive on the 27th of September 1877. The plaintiffs instituted their suit on the 10th of February 1879, alleging fraud, and also that no portion of the revenue payable in 1877 on account of the taluq was in arrear. The Munsif dismissed the suit, holding that it was barred under Act XV of 1877, sched. ii, art. 12,† and this decision

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 333 of 1880, against the decree of H. W. Gordon, Esq., Officiating Judge of Pubna, dated the 29th November 1879, affirming the decree of Babu Shumbhoo Chunder Nag, Munsif of Seragunge, dated the 8th July 1879.

† [Sec. 27 : - All sales of which the purchase money has been paid up as prescribed in section XXIII of this Act, and against which no appeal shall have been preferred, shall be final and conclusive at noon of the thirtieth day from the date of sale, reckoning the said day of sale as the first of the said thirty days. And sales against which an appeal may have been preferred, and dismissed by the Commissioner, shall be final and conclusive from the date of such dismissal, if more than thirty days from the date of sale, or if less, then at noon of the thirtieth day as above provided.]

‡ Art. 12 :

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
To set aside any of the following sales :— (a) Sale in execution of a decree of a Civil Court ; (b) Sale in pursuance of a decree or order of a Collector or other officer of revenue ; (c) Sale for arrears of Government revenue, or for any ; demand recoverable as such arrears ; (d) Sale of a patni taluq sold for current arrears of rent.	One year	When the sale is confirmed or would otherwise have become final and conclusive had no such suit been brought.
Explanation :— In this clause ' patni ' includes any intermediate tenure saleable for current arrears of rent.

was affirmed by the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Bahoo Lall Mohun Doss for the Appellants.

Bahoo Kally Churn Banerjee for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and BOSE, JJ.) was delivered by Prinsep, J.—In both the lower Courts this suit has been dismissed, on the ground that it was barred by limitation, being a suit to set aside a sale for arrears of Government [330] revenue, and not being brought within one year from the date on which the sale became final.

We are of opinion that, having regard to the terms of the plaint and the case that was made before the lower Courts, the suit has been rightly dismissed. The learned pleader who appears for the appellants, has attempted to show that the plaintiffs were entitled to relief on the ground of fraud, and next he has attempted to maintain, on the authority of the judgment of the Full Bench case of Baijnath Sahu v. Lala Sital Prasad (2 B. L. R., F. B., 1), that the suit does not come within cl. 12 of the 2nd schedule of the Limitation Act of 1877, because it being alleged that no arrear of revenue was due, the proceeding of the Collector was ultra vires, inasmuch as the sale was not properly held under Act XI of 1859, and that the suit was governed by another provision of the Law of Limitation.

It appears to us, that both these points are untenable. They are entirely new points set up here for the first time, and no part of the case made in the lower Courts. The circumstances of the case as disclosed by the proceedings seem to show that the plaintiffs have suffered considerable hardship, and we should have been glad to have been able to direct a trial of the suit on the merits, but unfortunately the plaintiffs, by their own laches, have placed it out of our power to do so.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Escape from custody while being taken before a Magistrate—Subsequent conviction for such escape—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 224, 225.

An escape from custody when being taken before a Magistrate for the purpose of being bound over to be of good behaviour, is not punishable under either s. 224 or s. 225 of the Penal Code.

ONE Shasti Churn Napit was arrested preliminary to being brought up before a Magistrate for the purpose of being bound over under s. 505 of the Criminal Procedure Code to be of good behaviour. Before he was produced before the Magistrate he escaped from custody.

He was, however, re-arrested and tried before the same Magistrate for this escape, and was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment under s. 224 of the Penal Code.

The Magistrate of the District was of opinion that the conviction was illegal, inasmuch as s. 224 was not applicable, the man not being in custody for 'an offence'; and that s. 225 would not apply, as the custody was only preliminary to asking for an order to furnish security. He, therefore, referred the matter to the High Court.

The Opinion of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was given by Mitter, J. The conviction seems to be illegal. Assuming that Shasti Napit was legally arrested under s. 94 of the Criminal Procedure Code, he was not lawfully detained in custody for any offence, and could not therefore be punished under s. 224 of the Penal Code; nor could he have been punished under s. 225A, as he had not failed to furnish security for good behaviour.

The conviction must be set aside and the warrant for his imprisonment cancelled.

Conviction set aside.

(On appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.)Interest on mesne profits—Execution of decree—Practice—Costs—Grounds of appeal.

The term 'mesne profits' means the amount which might have been received from the land deducting the charges for collection; and does not include damage resulting from their not having been paid as they became due, or loss of interest year by year.

A decree stated that mesne profits were to be recovered, "with interest from the date of their ascertainment." Held, that the Court executing this decree had no authority to allow interest year by year, upon the collections which ought to have been received.

If grounds of appeal which are absolutely untenable are joined with grounds which are tenable, in order to bring a case within the rule as to the value authorizing an appeal as of right, this matter may be considered in regard to the question of costs.

APPEAL from a decree of the High Court (22nd November 1878), dismissing an appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Mymensing (8th April 1878), and allowing a cross-appeal from the latter.

The question raised on this appeal was as to the allowance of interest on mesne profits, to which the respondent was entitled under a decree of the High Court of the 27th March 1872, affirming, on appeal and cross-appeal, a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Mymensing in favour of the present respondent's husband, against Kalichandra Chowdhry, whose estate was represented in this suit by the present appellant, as his widow, and as the guardian of his minor son. The decree of 1872 awarded possession of a ten-anna share of seven mehals of zamindari land in Mymensing, with mesne profits to be ascertained in execution of decree, and to be calculated from the 1st Assin 1273, corresponding to the 16th September 1866, to the date of delivery of possession, with interest on such pro [333] fits from the date of ascertainment at the rate of six per cent. per annum. An appeal to Her Majesty against the above decree was dismissed on the 13th November 1875, and in execution took place the proceedings out of which this appeal arose.

On the 10th March 1878, after several intermediate proceedings, an Amin was deputed to inquire and report as to the amount of the mesne profits. After objections to his report had been heard, the Subordinate Judge, on 17th June 1878, made his final order in execution, fixing Rs. 13,359 as the amount of mesne profits, which he allowed with costs.

On an appeal, the judgment of the High Court (MORRIS and PRINSEP, JJ.) disposed of two objections: the first, against the assessment of mesne profits as being excessive, and on a contention that the Subordinate Judge should have allowed the appellant more time to produce her papers; and the second, that the mesne profits should have been calculated only down to July 1873, when, as the appellant insisted, the respondent obtained possession. Both these objections were held untenable. The respondent had not obtained possession till July 1874—a delay owing to the objections of those whom the appellant represented.

On the respondent's cross-appeal the judgment of the High Court will be found reported in I. L. R., 4 Cal., 674.

As the result, by the decree of the High Court, the present appellant was ordered to pay to this respondent the aggregate sum for principal and interest of Rs. 19,104-3-2, of which Rs. 13,359-4-7 was for principal, and Rs. 5,744-14-7 for interest. This appeal was thereupon preferred against the whole decree.

Mr. T. H. Coote, Q.C., and Mr. H. Cowell appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. R. V. Dwyne for the Respondent.

For the appellant it was argued, that the High Court was wrong in ordering, in execution, interest upon each year's mesne profits up to the date of the decree of the lower Court. There was no authority for giving 'rests' which could only be [334] derived from the decree. The cases cited in the judgment of the High Court did not apply. Sadasiva Pillai v. Ramalinga Pillai (I. R., 2 I. A., 219; s.c., 15, B. L. R. 383) was referred to.

For the respondent it was contended that the expression mesne profits, or wasilat, 'with interest thereon,' used in the decree, was sufficient to authorize the interest that had been allowed on the collections.

Reference was made to Hogg v. Dinonath Srimani (8 W. R., 447). Also to the decrees made by the Sadr Dewany Adalat in Bamundus Mookerjee v. Mussamat Tarini (7 Moore's I. A. 169), and Raja Lelaland Singh v. The Government of Bengal (9 Moore's I. A., 479).

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir B. Peacock.—The respondent in this case was the plaintiff in the Court below. She sued the husband of the present appellant to recover possession of certain lands, together with the sum of Rs. 3,617-10-9, the estimated amount of mesne profits for two years ten months and twenty days, from the 1st Assin 1273 to 20th Srabun 1276. In that suit a decree was made for the plaintiff to recover possession of the lands, and also the mesne profits, not from a time previous to the date of the suit, as claimed, but from the date of the suit to the date of recovery of possession, to be ascertained by inquiry at the time of the execution of the decree, with interest from the date of the ascertainment at six per cent. per annum. From that decree there was an appeal to the High Court. The High Court, by its decree, amended the decree of the lower Court by giving the mesne profits from the 1st Assin 1273 to the 20th Srabun 1276, in addition to those which had been awarded by the lower Court. The High Court also stated that the mesne profits were to be recovered, with interest from the date of ascertainment. Therefore, according to both decrees, the mesne profits were to carry interest only from the date of ascertainment. It is clear that the Court, in executing the decree, could not vary or add to it by awarding anything beyond that [335] which was originally decreed. When the decree came to be executed it was referred to an Amin to ascertain the amount of mesne profits, and he ascertained what was the rent which might have been obtained from the estate. That he treated as the mesne profits of the estate, but he added no interest year by year upon the amount. The mesne profits so ascertained amounted to Rs. 13,359 and some odd annas, and the lower Court made an order in execution for that amount. Upon that there was an appeal to the High Court by both parties, first, on the ground that the assessment was excessive; and secondly, on the part of the plaintiff, that, in assessing the mesne profits, the Court below ought to have allowed interest year by year upon the amount which could have been collected and further interest upon the aggregate amount from the date of its order. The High Court, upon that appeal, having heard the argument of counsel, thought that the lower Court was wrong in not having allowed interest upon the rental year by year, upon the ground that the decree-holder was entitled, not merely to the rental loss the collection charges, but also to interest thereon year by year as compensation for the loss he had sustained by not having the use of his money during the period he was kept out of possession. The question is, whether the High Court, which by its decree was merely executing the original decree of the High Court, did not, by giving that interest, really add to and alter the decree which was to be executed. Now that depends really upon the question what was the meaning of the term 'mesne profits.'

In their Lordships' opinion, the amount which might have been received from the land, deducting the collection charges, was the profits of the land. The loss of interest year by year upon those profits was merely damages sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of her having been prevented from receiving the profits as they became due. But the original decree did not award those damages, and the High Court, by awarding them, added to the decree which was in the course of execution.

Several cases were cited to show that the High Court was right in giving interest year by year, and several of those cases were referred to by the High Court themselves in their judgment. Amongst others the cases of Protap Chunder Borooah v. Rance Surnomoyee (14 W. R., 151) was cited. When that case comes to be examined, it will be found that it was not an appeal from a decree in execution, but from a decree in an original suit; and in that appeal it was contended that the lower Court ought, in the original suit, to have given the plaintiff a decree, not only for the mesne profits, but for interest upon those mesne profits to be calculated from year to year. The High Court in that case thought that, under certain circumstances, a plaintiff might be entitled to interest upon mesne profits from year to year; but they said that, inasmuch as that interest had not been claimed in the suit, they could not interfere in the case, and the plaintiff merely recovered the mesne profits without interest. That is a very different case from the present. There it was contended that the original decree of the Court ought to be altered; here it is contended, not that the original decree of the Court ought to be altered by awarding interest year by year, but that the decree of the High Court in the execution of the case, in awarding such interest, was in accordance with the original decree. The case cited, however, is an authority to show that it was not so: for in that case the mesne profits and the interest thereon were treated as two distinct subjects, and the Court refused to allow the interest as well as the mesne profits, because the loss of the interest had not been claimed as damages.

If the present contention is correct, the term 'mesne profits' in that case included interest thereon year by year, although the Court refused to allow it. It appears to their Lordships that the decision of the lower Court in executing the decree was in accordance with the decree, and that the decision of the High Court by adding the interest from year by year exceeded the original decree.

Under these circumstances, their Lordships think that the decree of the High Court ought to be reversed.

It appears that the total amount which the High Court has given by way of interest in excess of the decree is Rs. 5, 744. If that had been the only objection, the case would [337] have been under the appealable value; but the appellant, in order to gain a locus standi, appealed also upon the ground that the amount awarded for mesne profits was excessive; and the greater portion of the record, about 240 pages, relates to that part of the case upon which there was no chance of the plaintiff's succeeding. The decisions of the Amin of the lower Court and of the High Court were concurrent with reference to that point. The only possible ground of appeal was, that the Court had allowed interest from year to year.

Their Lordships cannot encourage the joinder of grounds of appeal which are absolutely untenable with grounds which are tenable in order to bring a case within the rule as to value which authorizes an appeal as of right. In the present case the effect of so doing has been a large increase of costs to the respondent. The appellant has thereby disentitled herself to the benefit of the rule under which a successful appellant is ordinarily entitled to the costs of the appeal.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the decree of the High Court, but they make no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

[DEFINITION OF MESNE PROFITS INTEREST -

This decision was under the Code of 1859, which did not define 'mesne profits.' The C. P. C. of 1877 gave a definition which was extended by the C.P.C. of 1882, s. 211, so as to include interest. The C.P.C. of 1908 sec. 2 (12) retains that definition, but excludes therefrom profits due to improvements made by the person in wrongful possession.

By virtue of this definition, the award of mesne profits carries with it interest thereon unless it is expressly refused: (1905) 33 Cal. 329; (1903) 30 Cal. 506; 7 C.W.N. 437; (1900) 27 Cal. 951; (1891) 15 Mad. 203; Contra (1900) 22 All. 262 following 8 Cal. 332; 343; which however were decisions under the C.P.C. of 1859. See also (1896) 22 Bom. 49. [On Appeal from the Chief Court of the Punjab.]

Surety—Lex loci contractus.

Under a contract, made and to be performed in the territory of an Independent State, between the State and contractors, the latter received an advance of money, for the payment whereof, in case the contract should fail, a third party became surety to the State. The contract failed, and was terminated by the State, to which the surety repaid, on its demand the money advanced, with some deduction on account of a part performance.

For this amount the surety sued the principals, who were subject to the jurisdiction of the Courts in British India. In deciding whether the contract had or had not failed within the meaning of the suretyship undertaken by [338] the plaintiffs,—held, that not the law of British India, but what was in the contemplation of the parties as to the result of the contract when they entered into it, must be regarded.

APPEAL from a decree of the Chief Court of the Punjab (7th July 1875), reversing a decree of the Commissioner of the Multan Division (15th April 1875), which reversed a decree of the Extra Assistant Commissioner of the Multan District (5th January 1875).

The question raised on this appeal was as to the right, under the circumstances of the case, of a surety to recover from the principal money claimed by the former as paid by him under the contract to which they were parties. The contract of suretyship was made in 1869, at Bahawalpur in the Punjab, and the principals contracted to deliver timber to the Bahawalpur State, which acted through the Superintendent, Colonel Minchin. The principals Nand Singh and Makhan Singh received an advance of Rs. 10,000, which Hurdial Singh, who was then in the service of the State, agreed to repay, in case the contract should fail. In 1870, the State held, that the contract had failed, put an end to it, and giving credit for certain timber delivered, claimed from Hurdial Singh the balance of the advance, Rs. 8,860-7. This he paid; and afterwards, Nand Singh having died, and his representative Sujan Singh, together with Makhan Singh, being resident in British territory, Hurdial sued them for the amount in the Court of the Extra Assistant Commissioner, of Multan. For the defence it was denied that the contract to supply timber had failed, and it was disputed that the State had rightly exacted payment from the surety.

The facts are fully stated in their Lordships' judgment. The Court of first instance decided that, at the stage at which the contract was rescinded, the State was not justified in putting an end to it, and dismissed the claim. This decision was reversed by the Commissioner of the Multan Division, who remanded the suit for trial on the merits with reference to the question whether the State terminated the contract on good grounds.

On an appeal to the Chief Court by Sujan Singh, and on cross objections preferred by the surety Hurdial Singh, the [339] Commissioner's decree was reversed and the surety's claim was decreed with costs. A review, under s. 378 of the Code of Civil Procedure, having been dismissed with costs, Sujan Singh brought the present appeal, pending which Hurdial Singh died. The latter was represented by his heirs, the respondents.

Mr. J. D. Mayne appeared for the Appellant.

The Respondents did not appear.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir R. Couch.—The suit in this appeal was brought by Hurdial Singh, who has since died and is now represented by the respondents, against Makhan Singh and the appellant Sujan Singh, to recover a sum of money which the plaintiff said he had paid as surety, and was entitled to recover from them.

Makhan Singh is since dead, and his representative has not joined in the appeal. Sujan Singh is the son and representative of Nand Singh, who died before the suit.

The circumstances under which the plaintiff became surety are, that, on the 12th of November 1869, Nand Singh and Makhan Singh, through their agent Gormukh Singh, entered into a contract with the Political Agent of the State of Bahawalpur to supply timber, the contract being that the timber should be supplied clear and without knots; that, on its arrival at Multan, it was to be examined there by a mistree appointed by the Political Agent, and after inspection was to be forwarded to Bahawalpur; that, though the timber should be forwarded, yet, notwithstanding the approval of the mistree, the contractors would take back any timber which was disapproved of by the State at Bahawalpur. Another clause, as to the place of depositing it, is not material; and the fifth was, that the Political Agent would purchase the timber brought by the contractors to Bahawalpur, and rates of payment for it were specified. Nothing was said as to the quantity of timber which was to be supplied, nor as to the time during which the contract was to remain in force. It was only a contract to supply timber, and [340] allowed the Political Agent, who represented the State of Bahawalpur, to take it or not according to his approval of it. It would appear that, shortly after the making of the contract, the contractors were desirous of obtaining an advance of money, and they applied to the Political Agent for it. The plaintiff has given his account of the transaction; but as the Political Agent, Colonel Minchin, has also stated what took place, it will probably be better to refer to what he said. He was examined as a witness, and said, in answer to the question "On whose security did Nand Singh and Makhan Singh obtain an advance of Rs. 10,000 from the Bahawalpur State?" "On the security of the plaintiff, who was at that time confidential agent attached to my Court; the defendants were introduced to me by the plaintiff, who stated that they were the agents for the sale of timber belonging to the Maharaja of Cashmere and Cashmere subjects;" "I at once accepted him as security, on the understanding that if the defendants failed to carry out their contract, the plaintiff should make good the balance of advance." In answer to a question in cross-examination he said, "The plaintiff was in no way responsible for the fulfilment of the contract, but only for the repayment of the advance in case the contract should fail." The plaintiff's statement was, that he had a letter from the defendants, asking him to obtain an advance on account of the contract; that the agent Gormukh Singh asked for Rs. 25,000, and he suggested that Rs. 10,000, might be advanced; and that he went to Colonel Minchin on the day he received the letter. Colonel Minchin refused to advance the money unless on security, and the plaintiff said he would be surety, and requested him to advance Rs. 10,000, for the present to enable the contractors to open their work. The money was advanced. The period for the supply of timber appears to have been during the cold season, when only it could be floated down the river, as it had to be for a considerable distance. The contractors supplied some timber. Part of it was received and part rejected; and complaints were made no doubt as to the quality of it. In September 1870, Colonel Minchin called upon the plaintiff to pay the balance which then remained of the advance of Rs. 10,000, after giving credit for [341] the timber which had been received by the State, and which balance amounted, as Colonel Minchin says, to Rs. 8,860-7. He gave directions that this amount should be recovered from the plaintiff; and it was recovered from him, in the first instance, by his giving up jewels and different securities, which were valued at the sum to be recovered, which was ultimately realized from them. The plaintiff was, in fact, obliged to pay the amount, as being the balance remaining of the advance; and this is what he now seeks to recover from the defendants. The question is, whether he is entitled to do so. The lower Courts have decided that he is entitled. When the case first came before the Chief Court, one of the learned Judges was of opinion that, applying, according to his view, the law of British India to the case, there had been a breach of contract which justified the payment of the money by the plaintiff; and therefore he, as surety, was entitled to recover it. The other learned Judge was of opinion that the act of Colonel Minchin, as an act of State, could not be inquired into; and that, on this ground, the plaintiff having been thus obliged to pay the money, he was so entitled. Consequently a decree was made in the plaintiff's favour. There was then an application for a review, upon which the learned Judge, who had in the first instance thought the contract had been broken, after a discussion of the evidence, came to the contrary conclusion, and thought that the contract had not been broken, and therefore that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The other learned Judge adhered to his opinion that the act of Colonel Minchin could not be disputed, and on its being referred to a third Judge, he took the same view. The application for a review was, therefore, dismissed, and the decree was confirmed.

Their Lordships have now to consider whether this decree in favour of the plaintiff ought to stand.

The contract under which the plaintiff became the surety, and which is the contract that must really be considered in this case, was made in Bahawalpur, and the parties must be considered to have made it according to the liabilities that would be incurred there. Their Lordships do not concur in the view that, when the surety comes to enforce his rights against the [342] principals, the law of British India is to be looked at. They must see what was in the contemplation of the parties when they entered into the contract at Bahawalpur, and the evidence of Colonel Minchin puts it as high as it can be put in the defendants' favour. He says, that the plaintiff was to be responsible for the repayment of the advance in case the contract should fail. The question is, whether the contract to supply timber has not failed within the meaning of the contract of suretyship. It is clear that when Colonel Minchin, in September 1870, directed that the balance should be recovered from the plaintiff, the contract had failed. It was put an end to by a power which neither the defendants nor the plaintiff, the surety, could dispute. Colonel Minchin had power to put an end to the contract; and if we look not merely to the power which he might have as Political Agent, but to the terms of the contract for the supply of timber, it would appear that he was entitled to do so. The contract was one which, being indefinite in point of time, it would seem might be put an end to by either party. It was really only a contract to pay for timber supplied and accepted according to certain rates. Therefore, in this respect, if it were necessary to go into that question, he had power to put an end to the contract. Moreover, if their Lordships had thought it necessary to go into the question whether Colonel Minchin was justified in what he did, there is evidence that the contract had failed through the acts of the contractors; that they had, according to Colonel Minchin's evidence, after offering a quantity of timber which had been rejected, as there was power to do, abandoned the contract, and they do not seem to have taken any steps insisting on the timber being received or to have sent other timber in its place. The evidence is, and there is no reason to doubt that it is true, that they had in fact done in the way of abandoning the contract what would have justified the Political Agent in treating it as at an end, and saying that the balance ought to be repaid to the Government. The Agent had, under those circumstances, declared the contract at an end. In any view of the case, therefore, the balance of the advances ought to be repaid by the surety. And the surety, having been compelled [343] to pay the money, is entitled to recover it from the defendants.

Their Lordships think that the decree which was made in the first instance by the Chief Court, and confirmed upon the application for a review, was right; and they will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 17th January, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Rajendro Coomar Roy and others.....Decree-holders

versus

Madhub Chunder Ghose and others.....Judgment-debtors.

Interest—Damages—Mesne profits—Wasilat—Presumption—Onus.

Interest calculated upon yearly rests of rent may, when claimed by the plaintiff in his plaint, be given as an essential portion of the damages, which are recoverable by a person wrongfully kept out of possession of immoveable property.

Protap Chunder Borooah v. Rance Surnomayee (14 W. R., 151) followed.

The term 'mesne profits' does not include interest year by year in those profits.

Hurro Durga Chowdhram v. Surut Sundari Debi (ante, p. 332) followed.

In suits for mesne profits, when the defendants have been on possession of the property as wrong-doers, it lies upon them to show what were the sums realized as rent during the time of their possession.

Principles stated on which the calculation of mesne profits should be based.

THIS was an application for execution of a decree. The decree-holders sought to realize the amount of wasilat due to them under a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 30th of January 1860, in respect of certain estates of which they had been kept out of possession by the judgment-debtors since the 27th of October 1846. They recovered possession of those estates in 1874 in execution of their decree, and it was for this entire period of dispossession, extending over twenty-seven years and some months (to the [344] date of this application) that wasilat was claimed. An Amin was appointed for the purpose of making a local investigation, who submitted his report on the 10th of January 1881, awarding to the decree-holders the sum of Rs. 35,737-13 as mesne profits. At the hearing before the Subordinate Judge, both sides took exceptions to the report.

In respect of one taluk, called Ram Narain Ghose, the decree-holders claimed to have a larger amount of wasilat for the first seven and-a-half years of dispossession than was granted by the Amin. The Subordinate Judge, for reasons recorded by the Amin, found that the collection papers of this taluk for those years were untrustworthy, but stated that there was no better evidence on the point, and he took the highest amount of sheet shown by the judgment-debtors' papers for any one year, and calculated the wasilat for the seven and-a-half years on this basis. The wasilat of the taluk for the remaining years of dispossession was based on collection papers filed by one Nurbux, who had been a shareholder of the taluk from 1261 (1854); this part of the report was, with some unimportant variations, confirmed.

The Subordinate Judge went on to say: "The decree-holders are entitled to have a further sum of Rs. 186 on account of the wasilat of taluk Guru Dass Roy. It is an admitted fact that Kismat Bangla and Manikertak appertain to this taluk; but it appears from the papers forwarded by the Amin that he has not included in his account any wasilat in respect of these two kismats. The judgment-debtors say that, as they were never in possession of the said kismats, they cannot be held liable for the wasilat thereof. It, however, appears from their own taluk haki of 1262 (1855), that they were in possession of Kismat Manikertak, which was charged with a jama of Rs. 16 per year. Under such circumstances, I am clearly of opinion that the decree-holders are entitled to the wasilat of this kismat for the period of dispossession at the rate of Rs. 16 per annum, minus the collection charges, i.e., to Rs. 186. There is no evidence on the record which can enable the Court to award any wasilat on account of Kismat Bangla.

"With regard to taluk Chunder Narain Ghose, the amount [346] of wasilat fixed by the Amin partly on the testimony of witnesses, and partly on the papers filed by the judgment-debtors, is Rs. 6,242-5. The pleaders for the decree-holders contend, that, in fixing this sum, the Amin has committed a mistake by debiting against their clients Rs. 111, as being the amount of khasta, or loss, said to have been sustained by the judgment-debtors in respect of this taluk from 1253 to 1263 (1846—1856). This contention is supported by the account papers prepared by the Amin, in which the amount of khasta has been deducted against the decree-holders. In my opinion this deduction should not be made, for it is not reasonable to hold that, because for some years the amount of collection made by the judgment-debtors fell short of the amount of revenue and collection charges, the decree-holders, in the realization of their wasilat, must suffer a loss likewise."

After referring to the grass mehal in Kamalpur, the Subordinate Judge said: "There is another sowkar, that is, the sowkar of the village called Khagan. The pleaders for the decree-holders urge, that the wasilat of this sowkar, from 1256 to 1269 (1849 - 1862), should have been fixed at Rs. 3,010, according to the evidence of Kasinath Dey, who says, that his father held that sowkar under a farming settlement at a jama of Rs. 215; but that as the Amin has fixed this amount at Rs. 282 only, the decree-holders are entitled to get Rs. 2,728 more than what has been ascertained by the Amin on this point. This contention appears to be well founded. The Amin, in ascertaining the wasilat of this sowkar, has relied on certain papers filed by the judgment-debtors, in which two persons, named Udoy and Ramsunder, have been mentioned as farmers of the said sowkar; but it appears from the deposition of Ramsunder himself and of Barku, a son of Udoy, that those persons were not the ijaradars of the said sowkar. Under such circumstances, the judgment-debtors' papers relating to this property do not appear to be trustworthy, and I am of opinion that the testimony of Kasinath, whose father was admittedly the ijaradar, ought to be relied on."

The decree-holders appealed to the High Court, the judgment-debtors filing a cross-appeal.

[346] Mr. Evans, Baboo Srinath Dass, and Baboo Doorga Mohun Dass for the Appellants.

Mr. Branson and Baboo Upendro Nath Mitter for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J. - In this case there is an appeal by the decree-holders, and a cross-appeal by the judgment-debtors, against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca, passed in certain execution-proceedings, and dealing with the assessment of mesne profits, which, under the terms of the original decree, were left to be settled by the subsequent proceedings in execution. Several grounds have been taken in the petition of appeal, but the learned counsel for the appellants has only pressed one of these grounds upon us; and that is the first ground, which is, that the lower Court has erred in not giving the decree-holders interest on the yearly amounts of wasilat from the end of the years for which such amounts were allowed respectively up to the date on which such wasilat was ascertained. The question whether interest upon the sums allowed as mesne profits for each year, such interest to be calculated from the close of the years in respect of which such sums have been allowed respectively up to the date of instituting the suit in which they were decreed, can be recovered as damages, has been raised in several cases which have, from time to time, come before this Court on appeal. In the case of Protap Chunder Borooah v. Rancee Surnomoyee (11 W. R., 151), the law is laid down by COUCH, C.J., and the result of the decisions appears to be that such interest may be given by way of damages; in other words, that interest calculated upon yearly rests of rent may be given as an essential portion of the damages, which are recoverable by a person wrongfully kept out of the possession of immoveable property. We think there can be no doubt that this principle has been well settled by a number of cases which have been decided by the Courts in this Presidency;

[347] but at the same time it is to be observed that, in the majority of these cases, interest has been treated in the plaint and afterwards in the proceedings, not as an essential portion of the damages, but as interest; and in point of principle no distinction has been drawn between interest before the date of institution and interest after the date of institution. If the subject had been more accurately treated in all cases, the interest allowed upon yearly rests of rent before the institution of the suit or before the making of the decree would have been dealt with as damages, while the interest allowed after institution or after decree would be that interest which is ordinarily given upon an unliquidated claim reduced to a liquidated term, for the time between decree and recovery.

The principle which was recognized in the case of Protap Chunder Borooah v. Rancee Surnomoyee (11 W. R., 151) has been recognized and acted upon in America also. We find in Mr. Sedgwick's work on Damages, that interest is commonly allowed in that country by way of punishment, for any illegal conversion or use of another person's property (see p. 470 of the sixth edition). In another passage Mr. Sedgwick says:—"There is considerable conflict and contradiction between the English and American cases; but as a general thing, it may be said that while the tribunals of the former country restrict themselves generally to those cases where an agreement to pay interest can be proved or inferred, the Courts of the United States, on the other hand, have shown themselves more liberally disposed, making the allowance of interest more nearly to depend on the equity of the case, and not requiring either an express or implied promise to sustain the claim" (p. 473). And further on (p. 476) he shows from the decisions that the rule of allowing interest by way of damages in actions of trespass brought for the recovery of property has been adopted almost generally by the tribunals in the States. Even in England there are many cases in which interest, though not recoverable as such, may be recovered as damages for the detention of money; see Mr. Mayne's work on Damages, third edition, pp. 135, 136, 178, [348] and 179. In this country it may well be held to be in accordance with justice, equity, and good conscience to allow interest upon the yearly rents or profits which the person wrongly kept out of the possession of real property would have received at the close of each year, as part of the damages which such person is entitled to recover from the wrong-doer who has prevented him from enjoying those profits from year to year. The principle being then settled and admitted, we have to apply it to the facts of this case now before us. We were at first pressed with the case of Hurro Durga Chowdhurani v. Surut Sundari Debi (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 674; s.c., in App. to P. C., ante, p. 332). There is, however, an essential difference between that case and the case of Protap Chunder Borooah v. Rancee Surnomoyee (14 W. R., 151). The latter case was a case of regular appeal against an original decree, while the case of Hurro Durga Chowdhurani v. Surut Sundari Debi (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 674; s.c., in App. to P. C., ante, p. 332) was a case arising out of the execution of a decree. The case now before us is, like the case last mentioned, a case of execution; but in that case no question appears to have been raised or argued as to whether interest before institution was claimed in the original plaint: and this, we think, makes an important difference between that case and the case with which we have to deal. The decree adopting the language of the plaint leaves the 'mesne profits' to be ascertained in the execution-proceedings. If it can be successfully contended that the term 'mesne profits,' unrestricted or unlimited by anything in the context, includes interest on the yearly rents and profits, there is no room for this argument where the context excludes the supposition that the plaintiff intended to claim such interest as part of the damages to which he is entitled. The learned counsel for the appellants has drawn a distinction in his argument to-day between interest on the mesne profits before the institution of this suit on the 1st of July 1858, and interest on the mesne profits subsequent to the institution of the suit and up to the date on which possession was given in execution of the decree. As to interest on the mesne profits antecedent to the institution of the suit, we were prepared to decide that even if it can [349] be successfully contended that the decree-holders are entitled to have interest on yearly rests of rent as part of the mesne profits, still, because in their original plaint they introduced a figured statement of the amount which they claimed as mesne profits, such figured statement not including interest upon yearly rests, they have precluded themselves from obtaining such interest upon the ordinary principle that a plaintiff cannot obtain by the decree of Court more than he asked in his original plaint. As to the interest on mesne profits after the institution of the suit and up to the date of obtaining possession, we think that, upon the construction of the original decree, the question really must come to this, whether the term 'mesne profits' can be construed to mean and include interest upon yearly rests of rent by way of damages. It is not necessary for us now to express our own opinion upon this question, because it has been concluded by the judgment of the Privy Council of the 8th November 1881, in the case of Hurro Durga Chowdhurani v. Surrut Sundari Debi (ante, p. 332), where their Lordships reversed the decision of the learned Judges of this Court (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 674), substantially holding that the term 'mesne profits' does not include interest year by year upon those profits, the loss of which interest, if claimed, might be damages fairly recoverable in the action. The decree-holders' appeal must, therefore, fail.

We now turn to the cross-appeal. Four points have been pressed upon us. The first is concerned with the mesne profits in respect of taluk Ram Narain Ghose, No. 360, for seven and-a-half years, being the period from 1253 to 1260 (1846—1853) inclusive. The judgment-debtors produced in respect of these years certain books of account, which have been disbelieved and rejected by the Subordinate Judge. Against the Subordinate Judge's rejection of these account-books no appeal has been preferred. Now, there can be no doubt that, as the judgment-debtors were, as wrong-doers, in possession of this property, it lay upon them to show what were the sums realized by them as rent during the time of their possession. They have produced certain account-books which have been rejected as fabricated, and the [350] Subordinate Judge, in assessing the damages for these seven and-a-half years, has taken the highest amount of the annual sheet for a single year as shown in their accounts; and upon this basis of calculation has allowed mesne profits for the whole seven years and-a-half. It may be observed that, in respect of the period subsequent to these seven and-a-half years, certain account-books produced by one Nurbux, who was the proprietor of the remaining ten-anna share of the same taluk, have been accepted without challenge as the basis of calculation. For the disputed seven and-a-half years Nurbux did produce certain account-books, but as those accounts referred to a period antecedent to that which was within his own knowledge, they have been rejected by the Subordinate Judge. It is contended before us on appeal, that if the Subordinate Judge was prepared to take any portion of the accounts filed by the judgment-debtors and base his calculation of mesne profits thereupon, he was bound to treat these books on the principle applicable to admissions, and take the whole of them together. No doubt, according to the usual rule, a Court is bound to take the whole of an admission together, but a Court is not bound to give equal weight to all portions of it; and we think we cannot say that the Subordinate Judge was in error in the present case in adopting the sheet for a single year as the basis of his calculation, and refusing to accept the sheet shown in the same accounts for the other six years and-a-half. In coming to this decision we are influenced by the peculiar circumstances of the case. A reasonably strong presumption may fairly be made against a person who, having been in the possession of property, and being therefore presumably able to produce the accounts of the collections made by him, has produced accounts wilfully falsified for the purpose of misleading the Court. Having regard to those circumstances, we think that the Subordinate Judge's decision may be supported, and that there is no ground for interfering with the principle upon which he has calculated the mesne profits of the seven and-a-half years - 1253 to 1260 - in respect of taluk Ram Narain Ghose.

The next point which was argued by the learned counsel for the cross-appellants is in respect of Rs. 486, which have been [351] added by the Subordinate Judge to the Amin's calculation of mesne profits in respect of Manikartak. Now, it is admitted that there is an arithmetical error in the calculation of the Subordinate Judge in respect of this item, and that the true amount ought to be Rs. 424 and not Rs. 486, being the amount of mesne profits for twenty-six-and-a-half years at Rs. 16 per annum. This error must, of course, be corrected. In respect of this item, the Subordinate Judge says:—"The judgment-debtors say that as they were never in possession of the said kismats, they cannot be held liable for the wasilat thereof. It, however, appears from their own talab huk of 1262, that they were in possession of Kismat Manikartak, which was charged with a jama of Rs. 16 per year. Under such a circumstance, I am clearly of opinion, that the decree-holders are entitled to the wasilat of this kismat for the period of dispossession at the rate of Rs. 16 per annum, minus the amount of collection charges, that is Rs. 486." It has been contended before us, that it lay upon the judgment-creditors to show that the judgment-debtors have, as a matter of fact, collected this sum of Rs. 16 annually. We are unable to accede to this argument. It is shown that a jama of Rs. 16 was payable in respect of this property; and we think that upon the principle to which we have already referred, it lay upon the judgment-debtors to give some explanation or offer some evidence to show that, as a matter of fact, and for causes over which they had no control, this sum had not been realized by them. They have given them no explanation, have produced no evidence, and we think that, upon the usual presumption to be made against a wrong-doer, the Subordinate Judge was correct in adding this amount.

The third point is connected with the mesne profits of taluk Chunder Narain Ghose. It is objected that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in allowing the decree-holders credit for a sum of Rs. 411, which the Civil Court Amin had deducted as being the amount of khasta, or loss, said to have been sustained by the debtors for the years 1253 to 1263. Here also we think that the same principle applies. There is nothing to show that the land was not let to tenants, or that the judgment-[352] debtors were, for reasons over which they had no control, unable to realize the rents; and we think that, as soon as the ordinarily realizable rents were shown to amount to a certain amount, it was for the judgment-debtors to offer some explanation as to the reason why they were unable to collect this amount. No such explanation has been offered, and we think, therefore, that, in respect of this item also, the decree of the Subordinate Judge is correct.

The fourth and last point is concerned with the mesne profits of the sowkar or grass mehal in a village called Kamalpur. The argument which has been addressed to us on this point is that there is really no evidence upon which the mesne profits of this mehal for the years 1256 to 1269 inclusive can be calculated. It is said that the deposition of Kasinath is the only evidence as to the mesne profits of this mehal; and that, although Kasinath was able to speak from his personal knowledge as to the years subsequent to 1269 (in respect of the mesne profits of which years the order of the Subordinate Judge is not challenged), yet, as to the years 1256 to 1269, this witness speaks from hearsay merely, and that therefore there is no legal evidence upon which the mesne profits of these years can be calculated. It has, on the other side, been argued that the judgment-creditors having proved that the rent payable in respect of this grass mehal was a certain amount in a certain year, it may reasonably be presumed, under the particular circumstances of this case, and with advertence to the principles already referred to, that the same rent had been realized for the antecedent years. Upon the ordinary presumption of continuance, if the years in dispute were years subsequent to the year in respect of which the evidence has been offered, we might reasonably presume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the same annual rent continued to be paid; but we should have some difficulty in carrying back this presumption to an anterior period. Having, however, heard the whole of the deposition of the witness Kasinath, we think that it can scarcely be said that he speaks from hearsay merely as to the period antecedent to 1270. He says that he saw his father pay a rent of Rs. 215, and the passage in his cross-[353] examination upon which the learned counsel for the cross-appeal has relied, is to this effect, that he heard from his father that the annual jama was this amount. We think that when the witness said that he had heard that the annual jama was Rs. 215, this may well be taken in connection with his statement that he saw his father pay a rent of Rs. 215; nay, in other words, be taken as explaining an act which he himself saw done. If the hearsay statement stood alone, it certainly could not be treated as proving the antecedent rent; but taking it with the further statement of the witness that he had seen a particular amount paid, we are of opinion that although exceedingly weak, it still is some evidence of the fact that this amount of annual rent was paid before the year 1270; and having regard to the principle to which we have already so often alluded, as the judgment-debtors have not produced their accounts, or rather have produced accounts which have been found to be false and manufactured, we think that we ought not to say that upon this evidence, weak as it is, the Subordinate Judge was not justified in finding as he did in respect of the mesne profits of this melhal. The result is, that the appeal will be dismissed and the cross-appeal also will be dismissed, and each party will bear his own costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Co-sharers—Parties—Enhancement of rent Separation of shares—

Act XI of 1859, s. 10.

Two co-sharers, joint owners of a zamindari, caused their shares to be separately registered in the Collector's office under s. 10, Act XI of 1859. Subsequently one of the co-sharers sued certain persons (who held ryoti tenures in the co-sharers' zamindari) for enhancement of rent without making the other co-sharer a party.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 921 of 1880, against the decree of J. F. Browne, Esq., Officiating Judge of the 24-Pargannas, dated the 7th April 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Roma Nath Seal, First Munsif of Satkhira, dated the 30th August 1879.

Held, that no such suit would lie.

Guni Mahomed v. Moran (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 96) followed.

[354] THE facts of this case and the contentions of the parties are set out in the judgment of the Court of First Instance, the material portion of which is as follows :

" In these two suits the plaintiff sues to recover from the defendants the arrears of rent for 1283 (1876) and 1284 (1877) at the old rate, and for 1285 (1878) at an enhanced rate, after service of notice. The defendants admit the arrears for 1283 and 1284, but they object to the enhanced rent, on the ground that the plaintiff, being a shareholder of the estate in which the defendants' jama or jamas are situated, has no right to enhance a portion of the rent payable by the defendants on their entire jamas. The defendants have raised other pleas also, but I have considered it proper to decide the preliminary objection first. The issue on this point is whether the plaintiff, being a co-sharer of the estate in which the defendants hold their tenures, is entitled to enhance his share of the rent ?

" It is admitted by both parties that the one-anna zemindari, in which plaintiff holds a durpatni of a three-fourths share, has specific lands allotted to it, and that originally the proprietors of the three-fourths and one-fourth share of the zemindari of one-anna were joint co-sharers, and defendants were their joint tenants. Subsequently the two co-sharers separated and got their shares separately registered in the Collector's towzee, but the land appertaining to the two shares remained joint as before. The lands appertaining to the jamas held by the defendants consequently remained undivided as before. It is argued on plaintiff's side that, as two separate estates have been created by the two co-sharers opening separate accounts with the Collector for their separate shares of the revenue, plaintiff, as durpatnidar in one of the two estates, is entitled to enhance the rent payable to him by the tenants. But this argument does not hold good. The two separate accounts have been opened with the Collector by the two co-sharers agreeably to a private arrangement between themselves, and for their own convenience. Defendants were no parties to this arrangement, and therefore it does not affect them. Neither does the separate registration of the names of the co-sharers in the Collectorate rent-roll alter the nature of the relationship which existed between the plaintiff and the defendants. As a matter of convenience, or by a private arrangement, they pay their rent to the two co-sharers, or their representatives in interest, separately, according to their shares. This does not render their jamas two separate jamas, one each under the two co-sharers. Besides, their tenures have not been split up into two portions according to the shares [355] of the two co-sharers, and the rent apportioned to them. Consequently, they hold joint jamas under the two co-sharers, and according to the Full Bench Ruling in Guni Mahomed v. Moran (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 96), plaintiff's suits for enhancement will not lie, they being for enhancement of portions of the entire rent.

" It has been argued by the plaintiff's pleader that the defendants already pay him enhanced rent on his share, which the co-sharer of the one-fourth share does not get, the rent being paid to him at the old rate according to his share ; but this does not make any difference in the nature of the present suits, inasmuch as the defendants pay but one jama for their respective tenures to the two co-sharers, according to their shares, though by private arrangement, or otherwise, the plaintiff has got a slight increase to his share. As I understand the Full Bench Ruling, it is applicable to all cases of enhancement of rent by a co-sharer. If the plaintiff has succeeded in obtaining a slight increase to his share of the rent by the consent or otherwise of the defendants, his suits for further enhancement cannot be entertained in the face of the Full Bench Ruling."

The Munsif gave a decree for arrears of rent at the old rate, and dismissed the claim for arrears of rent at the enhanced rate. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, but his appeal was dismissed. He then appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Evans, Baboo Hem Chunder Banerji, Baboo Rash Behary Ghose and Baboo Umakali Mookerjee for the Appellants.

Baboo Lall Mohan Das for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J. --The plaintiff in this case is the durpatnidar of the twelve-anna share of a certain estate. It appears that this estate was originally a one-anna or one-sixteenth of a larger estate; but that point is not material to the question with which we have now to deal, and for the purposes of this case, this one-anna share is taken as sixteen annas or a whole estate. This three-fourths share is registered on the Collectorate towzee under a separate number, 652, while the remaining one-fourth share is registered under number 654. Now it would [356] appear that this separate registration is merely for the purposes of the payment of the Government revenue; and it is admitted that the lands of the three-fourths or twelve-anna share and of the one-fourth or four-anna share have never been separated by metes and bounds. The plaintiff, as durpatnidar of the three-fourths share, measured the land in the occupation of the defendants, and served notice of enhancement under the provisions of the Rent Act. The Munsif and the District Judge have held that this case falls within the purview of the Full Bench decision in Gani Mahomed v. Moran (1 L. R., 4 Cal., 96).

It has been contended before us by the learned counsel for the appellant, that the twelve-anna share constitutes a separate tenure, that the tenant has made a separate agreement for the payment of the rent thereof, and that therefore this twelve-anna share ought to be regarded in the light of a separate tenure or tenancy, the whole rent of which is payable to the plaintiff; and that the plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to enhance the rent so payable to him as in respect of a separate tenure or holding.

We have carefully considered the argument addressed to us and the cases which have been quoted. With reference to these cases we think that most, if not all, of them refer not to holdings of cultivating ryots, but to intermediate interest existing between the zemindar at the top and the cultivating ryot at the bottom. The present case is one of a cultivating ryot, and it is sought to put into operation the enhancement provisions of the Rent Law. It appears to us that, as the lands have never been separated by metes and bounds, insuperable difficulties would be created if the owner of a twelve-anna interest in undivided lands were allowed, under the provisions of the Rent Act, to enhance the rent of such share without making the proprietor of the remaining share a party to the suit. We are, therefore, of opinion that the decision of the Courts below is correct, and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[357] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 1st February, 1882.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Bepin Behari Bundopadhyas.....Defendant

versus

Brojo Nath Mookhopadhyas.....Plaintiff.*

Mortgage Decree Execution—Revival of suit Res Judicata—Power of adoption Construction.

A mortgagee brought a suit on his mortgage against his mortgagor and against A, a person who had purchased the right, title, and interest of the mortgagor in execution of a money-decree obtained against him subsequently to the mortgage. Pending the mortgage-suit, and before decree, A died, but the suit was not revived against his representatives. The usual mortgage decree was passed in favour of the mortgagee, who, in execution thereof, sold a portion of the mortgaged property to B. In a suit brought by B against the representatives of A for the property purchased and for general relief—

Held, that the decree in the mortgage-suit was not binding on the representatives of A; nor, under the provisions of Act VIII of 1859, did the failure to revive such mortgage-suit prevent B from bringing the second suit against A's representatives.

A Hindu gave a power of adoption to his wife, directing that so long as the wife should live she should remain in possession of all his property, moveable and immoveable, ancestral as well as self-acquired.

Held, that the widow took a life-interest in her deceased husband's property with remainder to the adopted son.

Mussamut Bhagbutti Dace v. Choudhry Bholanath Thakoor (L. R., 2 I.A., 256) followed.

Form of decree discussed, where a person who, at a sale in execution of a mortgage-decree, has purchased a portion of the mortgaged property, brings a suit for that portion against the assignee in possession as a mortgagor.

THIS was a suit by one Brojo Nath Mookhopadhyas, praying for a declaration of right to certain land, for possession thereof, and for general relief. The plaintiff alleged that the property in dispute had formerly been the property of one Nemy Churn Haldar, who died leaving two sons, Shib Chandra and Bhairab Chandra, who succeeded to the estate of their father and continued in possession of it as members of a joint Hindu family. Bhairab Chandra died leaving as his sole heir a widow, Lukhimoni, who continued to live in the joint family dwelling-house, with the other members of the family. Subsequently, Shib Chandra [358] died leaving his only son, Doorga Coomar Haldar, his sole heir. Doorga Coomar died on the 12th of January 1842, leaving him surviving two widows, Komal Padma and Prosonomoyi. On the day previous to his death, Doorga Coomar executed an anumati pattr, whereby he gave to each of his wives power to adopt a son, directing that, so long as the wives should live, they should remain in possession of all his (Doorga Coomar's) properties, moveable and immoveable, ancestral as well as self-acquired. Under this power Prosonnomoyi adopted Shukmoy Haldar as her son, and, afterwards, Komal Padma adopted successively Kaliprosonno Haldar and Biresnur Haldar as her sons. Lukhimoni died on the 29th of November 1864, and on her death Shukmoy took and held possession of the whole estate, as next heir in reversion on the death of Lukhimoni and as son of Doorga Coomar Haldar. On the 16th of September 1873, Shukmoy borrowed from Radha Mohun Mondol the sum of Rs. 3,000 on giving a mortgage of an eight-anna share of certain property (including the disputed land) as collateral security for repayment. The mortgage deed, which was in the form of a conditional sale, recited that the property mortgaged had been acquired by Shukmoy as heir of Doorga Coomar. On the 3rd of June 1874, one Umesh Chandra Banerji purchased the property in dispute at a sale in execution of a money-decree which he had obtained against Shukmoy and Prosonnomoyi for money which they had borrowed from him. In 1875, Radha Mohun Mondol brought a suit upon his mortgage, making Umesh Chandra Banerji a party. Umesh Chandra died pending the suit and before decree, but the then plaintiff took no steps to have the suit revived as against his representative. The suit was decreed, and in execution the mortgaged properties (including the disputed land) were sold to the plaintiff on the 6th of November 1876. The latter, having failed to get actual possession, instituted the present suit, on the 11th of November 1878, against the tenants in actual possession of the land and against Bepin Behari Banerji, the heir and representative of Umesh Chandra Banerji.

Various defences were set up on the foregoing state of facts. The Munsif decided that Bepin Behari's rights were not affected [359] by the decree passed in the mortgage-suit Syud Enam Momtazooddeen v. Raj Coomar Das (14 B. L. R., 408; s.c., 23 W. R., 187), Soobuns Sing v. Ishur Dutt Misser (21 W. R., 150); that the plaintiff had succeeded to the rights of Radha Mohun Mondol Syud Enam Momtazooddeen v. Raj Coomar Das, (14 B. L. R., 408 s.c., 23 W. R., 187), Gopee Bundhoo Shantha Mohapattur v. Kalepudo Banerjee (23 W. R., 338), Gupi Nath Sing v. Sheo Sahay Sing, (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 72; s.c., 1 W. R., 315); that the property in dispute was the ancestral property of Doorga Coomar and his uncle, Bhairab Chandra; that the family had always remained joint; and that the adoption of Kaliprosonno Haldar and Biresnur Haldar was invalid in law Gopee Lal v. Mussamut Sree Chundroolee Buhoojee (11 B. L. R., 391; s. c., 19 W. R., 12). The Munsif also remarked that "the fact of Shukmoy's reciting in the mortgage deed that he had acquired the property as heir of Doorga Coomar cannot in any way affect the plaintiff's right, for as it is found that Shukmoy had a valid right to the property, it is immaterial whether he asserted that right under a wrong or right title." The Munsif ordered "that the plaintiff do get a decree for Rs. 835, to be recovered from the disputed property with costs and interest at 6 per cent., with a declaration of lien for that sum over the disputed property." The District Judge on appeal upheld the Munsif's decision, and dismissed the appeal with costs.

The defendant Bepin Behari Banerji appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Sreenath Doss and Baboo Kashi Kant Sen, for the Appellant.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—The facts of this case are a little complicated, but when they are understood, we think that no real difficulty [360] will be experienced in disposing of the points which have been argued before us. Bhairab Chandra Haldar and Shib Chandra Haldar were uterine brothers. Bhairab Chandra died first, leaving a widow Lakhimoni, who died in Aughran 1271 (29th November 1864). Shib Chandra died after the death of Bhairab Chandra and before the death of Lakhimoni, and was succeeded by a son Doorga Coomar Haldar. This son subsequently died in Pous 1248 (12th January 1842), leaving him surviving two widows, Komal Padma Dabi and Prosonnomoyi. Doorga Coomar gave his widows a power to adopt a son; and in execution of this power Shukmoy was adopted by the younger widow, Prosonnomoyi. On the 16th September 1873, Sukhmoy Haldar borrowed Rs. 3,000 from one Radha Mohun Mondol, and as security for the payment of this amount, he mortgaged an eight-anna share of the property specified in schedule A annexed to the plaint. On the 3rd June 1874, a portion of this property (including half a cotta of land which forms the subject of the present suit) was sold in execution of a money-decree obtained by one Umesh Chandra Banerji against Sukhmoy Haldar and his adoptive mother Prosonnomoyi, and was purchased by Umesh Chandra Banerji, the decree-holder himself. The effect of this purchase was to make Umesh Chandra Banerji the assignee of the mortgagor. Umesh Chandra Banerji has since died, and defendant No. 3, who is the appellant before us, is his minor son and heir, and defends this suit by his mother and guardian Sreemati Nistarinee Dabi. Subsequent to this purchase by Umesh Chandra Banerji, Radha Mohun Mondol brought a suit upon his mortgage-bond in order to enforce his lien against the mortgaged property. The parties to that suit were Radha Mohun Mondol, the mortgagee, as plaintiff, and Sukhmoy Haldar, the mortgagor, and Umesh Chandra Banerji, the assignee of the mortgagor, as defendants. Umesh Chandra Banerji died while the suit was pending; and no steps were taken to make his heirs or representatives parties to the suit in his place.

Now the first point which has been pressed upon us is, that the mortgage-suit is a bar to the present suit against the appellant, who is the heir and representative of Umesh Chandra [361] Banerji; inasmuch as Umesh Chandra Banerji was a party to the mortgage-suit, it is said that the claim under the mortgage has become res judicata; and that the mortgagee having omitted to make Umesh's representative a party to the suit so as to bind him by the decree is not now entitled to bring a second suit against such representative. We think that if the former suit on the mortgage-bond had been instituted after the present Code of Civil Procedure had come into operation, this contention would be sound, regard being had to the express provision of s. 371; but no such express provision was contained in the old Code, Act VIII of 1859; in other words, that Code did not expressly provide that when a suit abates, as regards the defendant or one of the defendants, no fresh suit shall be brought on the same cause of action. In the absence of these provisions, we cannot say that, under the former Code, the abatement of a suit had the effect which is now given to it by the express provision of s. 371 of the present Code. Without such express provision the present suit can be barred only if the subject-matter of it is res judicata. In order to make such matter res judicata, it must have been decided or determined in the former suit between the parties to the present suit or parties under whom they claim. It is not possible to say that this matter was decided in such former suit between the mortgagee and Umesh, who was dead, or the representative and heirs of Umesh Chandra Banerji, who were not parties to such suit, at the time when judgment was delivered and the decree made. We think, therefore, that that former suit is not a bar to the present suit.

Radha Mohun Mondol having obtained a decree on his mortgage-bond as against the mortgagor only, proceeded to execute that decree; and on the 6th November 1876 the mortgaged property was sold in execution. It appears that the rest of the property, other than the half cotta of land with which the present suit is concerned, was purchased by the mortgagee, decree-holder, himself; and the plaintiff in the present case purchased half a cotta out of the nine bighas which were mortgaged under the bond. The plaintiff having endeavoured to take possession of the half cotta so purchased by him, was resisted by the appellant, who claimed a title to the property under the [362] auction-purchase of the 3rd June 1874 to which reference has already been made. Thereupon the plaintiff instituted the present suit; and, after setting forth the facts in his plaint, he asked, amongst other things, that he should be declared entitled to possession of this half cotta of land, and further that the Court would give him any relief to which he might be found to be entitled.

Several questions were raised and decided before the Munsif, and one of those questions was, that Sukhmoy Haldar had, at the time when he executed this mortgage-deed, no interest in the property. The Munsif has dealt with this point in the following manner: He considered that Sukhmoy Haldar was entitled to the eight-annas share which originally belonged to Bhairab Chandra Haldar, and which upon Bhairab Chandra's death descended to his widow Lakhimoni Debi; that, after her death in Aughran 1271 (November 1864), Sukhmoy Haldar, as her heir under Hindu law, was entitled to this moiety of the property. The mortgage-deed, as a matter of fact, specified that what was mortgaged under its provisions was the property which Sukhmoy had inherited from his adoptive father Doorga Coomar, and the Munsif was of opinion that, under the neum puttro as regards this moiety,—that is, the moiety which originally belonged to Shib Chandra and on his death belonged to Doorga Coomar,—Sukhmoy had no title thereto until the death of Prosonnomoyi (and admittedly Prosonnomoyi was alive at the time of the execution of the mortgage-deed); but inasmuch as Sukhmoy had a good title to the other moiety, that is the moiety which originally belonged to Bhairab Chandra, it appeared to the Munsif immaterial whether Sukhmoy mortgaged the moiety which he inherited from Lakhimoni, or the moiety which he would have inherited with absolute title on the death of Prosonnomoyi. It appears to us, that this was not a satisfactory way of dealing with the question. What Sukhmoy mortgaged was the moiety which he had inherited from his father Doorga Coomar; and if at the time of the execution of the mortgage-deed he had, as a matter of fact, no interest whatever in this moiety which he could alienate or encumber, there was nothing which could have passed to the mortgagee under the bond. [363] But it has been well contended upon the authority of the case of Mussamat Bhagbutti Dace v. Chowdhry Bholanath Thakoor (L.R., 2 I.A. 256), that the effect of the neum puttro was to give to the widow a life-interest in a moiety, and that Sukhmoy Haldar, being the remainder man, was entitled to deal with the property subject to the life-interest of the widow. We think that this contention is correct, and it being admitted that Prosonnomoyi is now dead, we think that the appellant can derive no benefit from the objection taken before us on this point.

The other points which were raised in the lower Courts have not been seriously contested before us, and they are all concerned with questions of fact into which we cannot enter on second appeal.

The next question raised upon the appeal is concerned with the form of the relief granted by the decree of the lower Court. The decree of the Munsif gives to the plaintiff Rs. 835, which it directs to be realized from the disputed property, —that is, the half cotta, together with costs and interest at six per cent., and makes a declaration of a lien in respect of this sum upon the disputed property. Now it is first contended that, upon the plaint as originally framed, this is a relief to which the plaintiff is not entitled. It appears to us, that this contention ought not to succeed. The heirs of Umesh Chandra Banerji, the assignee of the mortgagor, are not bound by the decree passed in the original mortgage suit, and the present suit may fairly be regarded as in the nature of a supplementary suit brought for the purpose of binding the assignee of the mortgagor. In this view we think that it was properly directed that such portion of the mortgage-debt as might be fairly cast upon this half cotta of land should be declared to be a lien thereupon and recoverable by the sale thereof; and this in effect is what the decree of the Munsif has done. The property is in the possession of the assignee of the mortgagor who is entitled to redeem on paying off a fair proportion of the mortgage-debt; and this the decree of the Munsif gives the assignee an opportunity of doing. Then it is further contended that, the sum of Rs. 835 with costs and [364] interest, which is by the decree of the Munsif made recoverable from the half cotta of land, is not a fair apportionment of the mortgage lien upon this which is but a small portion of the whole property,—that is, nine bighas which formed the subject of the original mortgage. This of course is a matter which cannot be dealt with in the absence of the evidence. It has been contended before us, that the plaintiff's suit ought to be dismissed, because the other persons have not been made parties, and because there is no evidence upon the record upon which a fair apportionment can be made; but it appears to us that, having regard to the somewhat complicated nature of the matters involved, this would not be a reasonable course. As already pointed out, the plaint, as originally filed, contained a prayer for general relief; and we think that the relief which has been given by the Munsif's decree comes well within this prayer for general relief. But we think that when, at a late stage of the case, the Munsif decided to give this particular form of relief, he ought to have raised and tried an issue, which would have allowed the parties an opportunity of showing what was a fair apportionment of the mortgage lien upon the half cotta of land. It has been said in the course of the argument that the whole of the mortgage-debt was, or could have been, realized from the rest of the property; and that, under any circumstances, no more than a very small fractional share ($\frac{13}{16}$) of the debt ought to be chargeable upon this half cotta. That is a matter upon which, in the absence of evidence, we offer no opinion. We think that the reasonable course will be to remand the case to the Court of First Instance in order that the Munsif may raise and try an issue as to what sum is a reasonable apportionment of the mortgage-debt upon the half cotta of land. The appellant has expressed himself willing to abide by the ultimate result. If it should turn out that a larger amount than Rs. 835 ought fairly to be apportioned upon the half cotta of land, he will have to pay such larger sum; but if a lesser sum, he will be entitled to the benefit. In deciding this question, it may be well to observe that the price actually realized by the sale of the mortgaged property under the mortgage-decree, [363] though good prima facie evidence of the respective values of the half cotta and the rest of the land is not conclusive. It may be that this half cotta is proportionally more valuable than the rest of the property. Then as regards the apportionment the time at which the respective values of the two portions of the property should be taken is the time of instituting the present case, in which the plaintiff seeks to obtain what is in effect a supplementary decree; and it may well be that the price realized at the sale under the former mortgage-decree for the half cotta of land is in consequence of the lapse of time or for other good reason not a fair apportionment of the total amount due under the mortgage. With these directions, the suit will be remanded to the Court of First Instance; and the costs of this Court will abide the result.

Case remanded.

NOTES.

[The explanation of Hukm Chand in his Res Judicata (1894) pp. 406, 407 is instructive. As pointed out in this case, the position would be different under the C. P. Codes from 1877, as another suit would be barred. As regards the point of title by estoppel (362, 363), see also 29 All. 163.]

Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 27—Ejectment—Limitation.

Section 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 applies only to such suits for possession as the Court is asked to decide irrespectively of any title, but simply on the ground that the plaintiffs have been ousted otherwise than by legal means.

IN this case the plaintiffs stated that they held in possession an ancestral jote of 201 bighas of land at Sultanpore in the district of Burdwan; that Mr. Forbes, the defendant, had instituted suits for arrears of rent, and for ejectment against one of the plaintiffs, Sri Lal Jha; that Forbes obtained decrees in those suits without the knowledge or information of the plaintiffs, "but, before carrying out the order of ejectment, and after it, the plaintiffs were recognized as tenants as before, and rent of those jotes was received and receipts granted and the decree was satisfied in full." The plaint further stated, that, "not-with-[366]standing the rent was received and the tenancy recognized, the defendant instituted a criminal suit under s. 530* of Act X of 1872, with a view to destroy the jote jamas and to forcibly take possession of them from your petitioners. The Criminal Court by a summary trial, passed an order for possession in favour of the defendant on the 8th of March 1878, on account of which the jote-right of the plaintiffs is wholly affected." The present suit was instituted on the 5th of March 1879, praying that "possession be delivered by adjudication of right and cancellation of the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Basaulpore, dated the 8th of March 1878."

The Judge of the lower Appellate Court said:—"I have no hesitation in finding that the defendant was put into formal possession under the ex parte decrees obtained by him on or before the 15th of September 1877. That such was the case appears from the deposition of Posen Lal Putwari, and is consistent with the probabilities of this case. This view is corroborated by the finding as to actual possession from October 1867 to March 1878, but the very fact of proceedings in a Criminal Court having been necessary would also tend to indicate that the defendant's possession was much contested." As to the question in respect of which this case is reported, namely, whether the suit was not barred by limitation under s. 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, the Courts below do not seem to have come to any distinct finding, though both Courts decided in favour of the plaintiffs.

Mr. C. Gregory for the Appellant.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by

Cunningham, J. (who, having stated the facts above set out, continued):—As to the point of limitation, we are not prepared to hold that the lower Courts were wrong in deciding the point in favour of the plaintiffs. Looking to the course of decisions of this Court we think it is clear, that s. 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 applies only to such suits for possession as the Court is asked to decide irrespectively of any title, [367] but simply on the ground that the plaintiffs have been ousted otherwise than by legal means. In the present suit, the plaintiffs allege a particular right, say that the defendant brought his ejection suits without the knowledge of most of them, and pray for an adjudication of their right and for possession. We are of opinion that, under the rulings of this Court, we are bound to hold such Magistrate shall record a proceeding stating the grounds of his being so satisfied, and shall call on all parties concerned in such dispute to attend his Court in person, or by agent, within a time to be fixed by such Magistrate, and to give in a written statement of their respective claims, as respects the fact of actual possession of the subject of dispute.

Such Magistrate shall, without reference to the merits of the claims of any party to a right of possession, proceed to inquire and decide which party is in possession of the subject of dispute. After satisfying himself upon that point, he shall issue an order declaring the party or parties to be entitled to retain possession until ousted by due course of law, and forbidding all disturbance of possession until such time.

In the matter of the Petition of Bhagabuti Churn Bhattacharjee Chowdhry.

Bhagabuti Churn Bhattacharjee Chowdhry

versus

Bisheshwar Sen and others.

Sale in execution of decree—Irregularity—Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877), s. 311.

The words "any person whose immoveable property has been sold" in s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure, do not include a person who has purchased the same property at a prior execution-sale, such prior sale not having been confirmed.

THIS was an application to set aside a sale in execution of decree on the ground of irregularity. The property, which had formerly belonged to one Brojokishore Sen, was, in execution of a money-decree against him, sold to the applicant on the 21st of July 1880. Brojokishore had previously mortgaged the property to Sonatun Sha, and the existence of this lien was duly notified on the occasion of the applicant's purchase. In execution of a mortgage-decree obtained on this mortgage, the property was sold to Bisheshwar Sen, on the 20th of January 1881. The applicant objected to this sale, on the ground of irregularity in publishing and conducting it, though the sale to himself, on the 21st of July 1881, was not confirmed until the 19th of February 1881. The District Judge rejected the application, on the ground that the applicant had no locus standi. The latter appealed to the High Court.

[368] Baboo Kally Mohun Doss and Baboo Bynanth Nath Doss for the Appellant.—Section 311 should be read and construed with reference to ss. 313, 314, and 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The word 'had' in s. 313 seems to indicate that a purchaser gets the property as it exists at the date of sale, and not at the date of confirmation, and although under s. 316, the title of the auction-purchaser is not complete until the sale is confirmed, yet he is entitled to object to all irregular dealings with the property after the date of sale.

*Appeal from Original Order, Nos. 203 and 201 of 1881, against the order of Baboo Juggadurlabh Mozoomdar, Officiating Second Subordinate Judge of Furrirdpore, dated the 26th March 1881.

Even if the applicant is only in the position of a person claiming under a contract for sale, yet, under the existing law, he is entitled to ask for specific performance, and the right of property passes from the date of the contract, subject to the vendor's lien for non-payment of purchase-money—Rajah Mohesh Narain Sing v. Kishraund Misser (9 Moore's I. A., 324; s.c., 5 W. R., P. C., 7); Mahadoo Begum v. Syud Hubechool Hossein (15 W. R., 44); Rajkishore Nag v. Mulhoosoodun Roy (20 W. R., 385); Kalee Churn Giree Gossain v. Lalla Muddun Kishore (7 W. R., 317).

Baboo Srinath Doss and Baboo Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by McDonell, J.—This case has been argued at very considerable length, and a large amount of irrelevant matter has, we think, been introduced into the argument. The facts are very simple. The appellant purchased, on the 21st July 1880, at a sale held in execution of a money-decreo. That sale was not confirmed till the 19th February 1881. Meanwhile, the same property was sold, on the 20th January 1881, in execution of a decree obtained upon a mortgage-bond, by which the property so sold was pledged, that decree declaring the lien and authorizing the mortgagee to enforce it. The appellant claims to come in under s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and he questions the regularity of the proceedings under which the sale of the 20th January 1881 took place.

[369] Now, the only question which has to be decided is, whether the appellant, who had been the successful bidder at the sale of 21st July 1880, but the sale to whom was not confirmed till the 19th February 1881, can be said to be, within the meaning of s. 311, a "person whose immoveable property was sold" upon the 20th January 1881.

It appears to us that this question must be answered in the negative. There can be no doubt that the words "any person whose immoveable property has been sold" are not to be restricted to the judgment-debtor alone. That has been decided in Krishnarav Venkatesh v. Vasudev Anant (11 Bom. H. C. Rep., p. 15) and the same point has been several times decided in the same way in this Court. But we think it impossible to say, that a person the sale to whom has not been confirmed is, within the meaning of s. 311, a "person whose immoveable property has been sold." In the case of Khaja Putthanji (I. L. R., 5 Bom., 202) it was held that the purchaser's right to a sale-certificate accrues when the sale is confirmed; and in the case of Tukaram v. Satvaji Khanduji (I. L. R. 5 Bom., 206), it was held that a purchaser who has not obtained a certificate is not entitled to ask the Court to put him in possession of the property. Now, on the 20th January 1881, the appellant could not have obtained a certificate, because the sale to him had not on that date been confirmed. He was, therefore, not in a position to ask the Court to put him in possession of the property; and we think that the words "any person whose immoveable property has been sold" must be understood to refer to property de facto and not to property de jure. Were it to be otherwise decided, it would follow that any person who alleges that he has a good title to property which is in the possession of another person, might claim to come in and object under s. 311, and the result would be, that the Court would have to enter upon an enquiry which ought to form the subject of a separate suit. We think this could not have been the intention of the Legislature: and we are of opinion, therefore, that the appellant was not entitled to come in under s. 311, and question the regularity of [370] the proceedings under which the sale of the 20th January 1881 was held. As to what may be his rights in a separate suit, we pronounce no opinion.

This appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mahomedan Law—Administration—Creditor's suit—Party to suit—Suit against heir in possession, assets.

After the death of a Mahomedan, several of his creditors sued his widow and daughter, and obtained decrees against the assets of the deceased, which assets had come into the possession of the mother and daughter. In execution of these decrees portions of the property were sold; thereupon two married sisters of the deceased, who lived with their husbands apart from the widow and daughter, sued as heirs of the deceased to recover their shares of the property sold.

Held, that the property of the deceased having been attached and sold in payment of his debts, the plaintiffs' suit must be dismissed.

When a creditor of a deceased Mahomedan sues the heir in possession, and obtains a decree against the assets of the deceased, such a suit is to be looked upon as an administration-suit, and those heirs of the deceased who have not been made parties cannot, in the absence of fraud, claim anything but what remains after the debts of the testator have been paid.

THE facts of this case are set forth in the Judgment of the lower Appellate Court, which is as follows:—

"Mahomed Wasil died, leaving one widow, the defendant Misrijan one daughter, the plaintiff Nuzima, and two sisters, the plaintiffs Muttyjan and Jibunnessa. After his death, the defendant Bhola Gazi obtained one decree, and the defendants Kamdar Ali and Asgar Ali, [371] another decree, against the assets of Mahomed Wasil deceased, who, in the suits in which those decrees were passed, was represented by his widow and daughter. When those decrees were being executed, and the assets of the deceased Mahomed Wasil attached, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit, alleging that the defendants had fraudulently and collusively obtained decrees, and that the plaintiffs were not bound by those decrees. During the pendency of this suit, the disputed properties were put up to sale and purchased by the defendant Kasim Ali, who was added to the number of defendants, and who contended, inter alia, that the decrees were not collusive ones, and that the sales could not be set aside even if the decrees were to be reversed. The Munsif held, that the minor Nuzima was not properly represented in the former suit; that there was not any doubt as to the extent of the shares of the plaintiffs; and that the former decrees were not free from suspicion. Against this decree an appeal has been preferred, and the points for decision are: (i) were the decrees obtained fraudulently, and (ii) are the plaintiffs entitled to have the sales cancelled.

"As to the first issue, there is not an iota of evidence to show that the decrees were fraudulently and collusively obtained by Misrijan and the judgment-creditor, defendants. It is one of the fixed principles of law that fraud cannot be presumed. But in the present suit, there is no reason whatever to suspect that all the defendants are in the same boat. The subject-matter of the suit is not a valuable property, and that so many persons would combine for a property of small value, is not very probable, though not impossible.

"One of the reasons set forth by the Munsif for suspecting the vainness of the actions of the judgment-creditors is, that all the heirs of Mahomed Wasil were not made parties to the former suit. The creditors of Mahomed Wasil had made his widow and daughter parties to those suits. The sisters of Mahomed Wasil were not in possession of the property left by him, nor were they living in their father's or rather brother's house. They were married women, and were living with their husbands. That being so, there was nothing suspicious in the former suits. The mere fact of omission of the names of the first and second plaintiffs, as the heirs of Mahomed Wasil, does not go to show that it was done fraudulently.

"The other reason assigned by the Munsif is, that the plaintiff Nuzima was not properly represented in the former suits. One of [372] those suits was decided on the 2nd Novembe. 1878, by the present Munsif, and if he found that one of the defendants in that case was not properly represented, he should have removed the name of such person from among the defendants, or should have appointed the minor's mother guardian ad litem of her minor daughter. Misrijan was defendant for self and her minor daughter, and decrees were passed against them both. It may safely be inferred from the above, that Misrijan was allowed to represent her minor daughter, though through the laxity of procedure or oversight no order was passed on the subject.

"The plaintiffs aver that the defendant Jafur Ali has been inducing Misrijan to marry the former's son, Ahmed Ali. If these defendants were in collusion with each other, they could contract a marriage between themselves and Misrijan could bestow her daughter in marriage to Ahmed Ali, and thus could secure the interests of both the mother and the daughter, because the defendants Misrijan and Jafur Ali must have been in collusion when the former suits were brought, and Nuzima was surely unmarried at the time. She is still a minor, and the present suit has been brought by her husband in collusion with her mother and aunts. Be that as it may, I do not see any reason to suppose, nor any evidence to prove, that the former judgments were fraudulently obtained by some of the defendants.

"As to the second point, it is neither alleged nor made out that the execution-decree-sales were brought about by fraud. The plaintiffs preferred petitions of objection and they were rejected. The subject-matter of the case was brought to sale with the knowledge of the first plaintiff, and some of their witnesses were present at the time and place of the sale. But the plaintiffs did not take any step to save the property from sale.

"It is true that there is no dispute as to the shares of the plaintiffs; but, according to the tenets of Mahomedan law, out of the property of a deceased Mahomedan, his burial and funeral expenses should be defrayed first, then his debts should be liquidated. If all the assets of a deceased person be consumed in paying his debts off, his heirs-at-law can certainly get nothing."

The Subordinate Judge then reversed the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the suit with costs. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Twidale for the Appellants.

[373] The Judgment of the Court (MORRIS and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Morris, J. This was a suit to set aside certain decrees on the ground of fraud. One Mahomed Wasil died in January 1878, leaving a widow, a daughter, and two married sisters. The two latter did not reside in the family-house, but the house with the other property of the deceased remained in the possession of his widow and daughter. Subsequently, and in the same year, three suits were brought by different plaintiffs against the widow and daughter to recover certain sums borrowed by the deceased, and in execution of the decrees obtained in them, the property left by the deceased was sold and purchased by the defendants Kamdar Ali and Asgar Ali. The sisters, the plaintiffs in the present case, were not parties to these suits, and the claim now put forward by them is—1st, that the decrees were fraudulent, and 2nd, that, even in the absence of fraud, their shares, amounting to six annas, could not pass to the purchaser. They ask for a declaration to this effect. The daughter also seeks to obtain a similar declaration on the ground that she was not properly represented in the creditor's suits.

The charge of fraud has not been established, and the argument put forward on behalf of the daughter is, in our opinion, untenable. The only point, therefore, now in issue is, whether the sisters are entitled to the declaration which they seek. This subject has been dealt with from different points of view in the decisions of our Courts. They all support the contention now raised on behalf of the respondents, that the sisters cannot obtain their shares of the property sold. The first is that of Mussamat Nuzceerun v. Moulvie Ameerooddeen (24 W. R., 3), according to which, following the analogy of the Hindu law in the case of a Hindu widow, the defendants in the former suit may be considered as having been sued in their representative character only and what passed at the sale in execution was the property of Mahomed Wasil. A second case—that of Assamathemnessa Bibee v. Roy Lutcheemput Singh (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 142)—ignores the extension of this principle of Hindu law to Mahomedans, and approves [374] of the procedure provided in the Hedaya for the guidance of Mahomedan law officers, and the judgments thereon are apparently to the effect that one of the heirs in possession may stand as litigant on behalf of all the other heirs with respect to anything done to or by the deceased, whether it be debt or substance.

The third view is opposed to dealing with this question on either of these grounds, but recognizes all creditors' suits as in the nature of administration-suits. This principle was laid down, so far back as in 1799, by the Sadr Dewany Adalat, in the case of Kishwar Khan v. Jearun Khan (Sel. Rep., 25). A creditor's suit is there declared to be in the nature of an administration-suit, and, as such, an heir in possession is bound to account for any assets that may have come into his hands, and to that extent is liable to pay the creditors; the residue, if any, being divided among the heirs. This form of decree has been approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Khajah Hidayatoolah v. Rai Jan Khanum (3 Moore's I. A., 295); subsequently again by their Lordships, in the case of Bazuyet Hossein v. Dooli Chund (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 402). We think that this is the proper principle that must guide us in the decision of the present suit, because in the former suits by the creditors, the property of the deceased Mahomed Wasil was attached and sold in payment of his debts. We, therefore, affirm the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[375] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 13th February, 1882.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM AND MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM.

Thakur Doyal.....Defendant

versus

Ram Narain Singh.....Plaintiff.*

Onus probandi—Evidence—Jagir tenure—Auldad Grant—Suit for possession—Landlord and tenant.

By a sanad dated March 1854, the plaintiff's ancestor granted to B, the defendant's ancestor, a jagir of a certain mauza. B died in 1872, and plaintiff subsequently brought a suit to recover possession of the mauza, alleging that the grant to B was an ordinary service jagir. The plaintiff filed a kabuliati which had been executed by B, the terms of which supported the plaintiff's allegation as to the nature of the grant. The defendant alleged that the grant was auldad, but failed to produce the sanad or account for its non-production.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1895 of 1880, against the decree of H. L. Oliphant, Esq., Judicial Commissioner, Chota Nagpore, dated the 21st June 1880, reversing the decree of Colonel H. M. Boddam, Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh, dated the 3rd June 1879.

Maharaja Juggernath Sahee v. Mussamut Ahlad Kowur (19 W. R., 140) distinguished.

THIS was a suit for possession of a mauza. The plaintiff, which was filed on the 20th of September 1878, stated that the mauza in question belonged to the plaintiff's ancestor, who, by a sanad, dated the 16th of March 1854, granted a jagir thereof to one Bhola Ram, partly in consideration of an annual rent of Rs. 18, and partly in payment of his services as bhandari of the bhandars of certain villages belonging to the grantor; that Bhola Ram died in October 1872, when the plaintiff was a minor under the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards; and that, since the death of Bhola Ram, the jagir (which then reverted to the plaintiff) was held by the defendant, who claimed to be entitled thereto as heir of Bhola Ram. The plaintiff filed a kabuliati signed by Bhola Ram, in which the latter undertook to observe the terms of the sanad of 1854. The defendant, who was the daughter's son of Bhola Ram, alleged that, according to the sanad, the jagir was given auladad, and that the kabuliati was a forgery. The Court of First Instance found that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the grant to Bhola Ram was for life, saying, that if it had been so, [376] "this would have been mentioned in the kabuliati produced by the plaintiff, and the jagir would not have been stated to have been given on condition of khair khahi only." The defendant did not produce the sanad, but having, in the opinion of the Court of First Instance, sufficiently accounted for its non-production, he was allowed to give oral evidence that the jagir was granted auladad. The suit was dismissed with costs.

On appeal, the Judicial Commissioner, having stated the facts set out in the pleadings, continued:— "I have now to consider the question of onus; and having regard to the relative position of the two parties, and the nature of the tenure which is set up by the defendant, it appears to me that the Deputy Commissioner has thrown the onus of proof on the wrong party, and this view would appear to be supported by the Privy Council decision in the case of Rajah Prahlad Sen v. Rajendra Kiskore Singh (2 B. L. R. (P. C.), 111; S.C., 12 Moore's I. A., 292), wherein it is set forth: 'The appellant is the zamindar; as such he has a prima facie title to the gross collection from all the mauzas within his zamindari. It lay upon the respondents to defeat that right by proving the grant of an intermediate tenure.' In the present case the plaintiff is admittedly the zamindar, and it is for the defendant therefore to prove the grant set up by him. He relies on a sanad, which is said to have contained the expression 'auladad,' and which is alleged to have been given by the former proprietor of the estate to Bhola Ram, and this sanad he was bound to produce or else to account satisfactorily for its non-production. It has not been produced, nor has any evidence been offered to account for its non-production; and in these circumstances, and seeing that it was admittedly in the power and under the control of the defendant, secondary evidence in regard to its contents cannot be received. The defendant clearly has no right to retain possession of the village, unless he, as heir of Bhola Ram, can prove the grant made to him 'auladad'; and as he has entirely failed to prove this, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree." The question as to the genuineness of the kabuliati was not touched upon. The decree of the Court of [377] First Instance having been reversed, the defendant appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey for the Appellant.

Mr. Mendies for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by

Cunningham, J.—In this case the plaintiff who is the zamindar of an estate, claims on the ground that, on the 16th March 1854, a service jagir was granted to one Bhola Bhandari; and that the grantee subsequently executed an ikramnama setting out that the grant was an ordinary service jagir. The plaintiff further states that the grantee has since died, and accordingly claims to resume.

The defendant, who is admittedly the lineal descendant of Bhola Bhandari, set up the case that he holds under his sanad, which, he contends, departed from the ordinary terms of a service jagir, inasmuch as it contained the word auladad,— i.e., descendible to heirs generally, both male and female.

This sanad has not been produced, and the Court below has found that no satisfactory evidence has been given to account for its non-production. This being the case, the Judge has held that the onus lay upon the defendant to show the special terms of the sanad which he sets up, and in the absence of the sanad or of satisfactory proof to account for its non-production, that this onus has not been discharged. We think that, in so doing, the lower Court has acted rightly.

Reference has been made in the course of the argument to the case of Juggernath Sahoe v. Mussamut Ahlad Kowar (19 W.R., 140) but in that case there was a material difference from the present, as the defendant there set up a perfectly different grant from that alleged by the plaintiff: and therefore, in default of the plaintiff proving his grant, their Lordships observe that no basis for the action had been laid. In the present instance the grant has been admitted; its terms are proved by the statement of the plaintiff corroborated by the ikramnama; and the defendant [378] has failed to give either proper evidence of the special terms of the sanad which he sets up, or any legal explanation for its non-production.

We think the lower Court was right, under the circumstances, in deciding against the defendant, and this appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE PONTIFEX.

Cally Nath Naugh Chowdhry.....Plaintiff

versus

Chunder Nath Naugh Chowdhry and others.....Defendants.

Hindu Law—Will— Gift to grandsons after death of annuitants— Vesting not postponed—Inconsistent declarations rejected.

A testator, after charging certain annuities and other payments on his estate, gave the whole of his property to his grandsons in these words. —“ I give the whole of my property to my grandsons ; but until those portions of the said property and the monthly stipends which I have given to some to enjoy for the natural term of their lives shall revert to the estate after their deaths, my estate shall not be divided amongst any of my grandsons or my great grandsons. After all the pensioners have died, and after the enjoyment of the said pensions and property shall have ceased, the executor's powers shall be annulled, and then my grandsons and my grandsons' heirs,—that is to say, my great grandsons,—shall be able to divide the whole of the property and take their father's shares.”

He further directed that, for five years after his death, his family should remain joint, and allowed to his executors Rs. 100 for family expenses.

Held, that the will contained sufficiently direct words of present gift to the grandsons, and that the clause in which it was attempted to postpone the enjoyment in possession, and other clauses which directed accumulation, must be rejected or disregarded as inconsistent or repugnant.

Held also, that the fact that the estate was subject to partial trusts or charges did not postpone the vesting in possession ; nor would it, even according to English law, let in grandsons of the testator born after his death during the continuance of the trusts.

Alangamanjori Dabee v. Sonanoni Dabee (ante, p. 157 ; S.C., 9 C. L. R., 121) discussed by PONTIFEX, J.

APPEAL from the decision of WILSON, J.

This was a suit brought for the construction of the will of one Rajmohun Naugh Chowdhry.

[379] Rajmohun died on the 5th July 1880, leaving him surviving a widow and two sons, Chunder Nath and Cally Nath. Previously to the testator's death the family of Chunder Nath consisted of six sons, all born in the testator's lifetime ; and that of Cally Nath, of one daughter. Cally Nath separated from the family in October 1880.

By his will, dated the 4th July 1880, the testator appointed Chunder Nath executor, and gave, amongst other gifts, certain pensions to be paid to certain persons named, and a sum of Rs. 75 for five years to Cally Nath should he choose to separate himself from the family ; and after the expiration of the five years he gave certain landed properties to him for life, and other landed properties jointly to Cally Nath and Chunder Nath for life.

The more important directions in the will were those contained in paras. 1, 3, 14, 17, and 19, which were as follows :—

In para. 1 the testator enumerated his family in these words : “ I have two sons and grandsons surviving, Sreeman Chunder Nath Naugh Chowdhry, Sreeman Cally Nath Naugh Chowdhry, and my grandsons Sreeman Wopendro Nath Naugh Chowdhry and Sreeman Soorendro Nath Naugh, and others whose names will be mentioned hereafter. ”

Para. 3—“ For the first five years after my death, my son, grandsons and all the other members of my family shall live in commensality in one house. They shall not be able to separate, and in order to meet the household expenses, I allot Rs. 400 to my son . . . and no one else shall receive a separate allowance for expenses. ”

Para. 14—“ I give the whole of my property to my grandsons ; but until those portions of the said property and the monthly stipends which I have above given to some to enjoy for the natural term of their lives shall revert to the estate after their deaths, my estate shall not be divided amongst any of my grandsons or my great grandsons. After all the pensioners have died, and after the enjoyment of the said pensions and property shall have ceased, the executor's powers shall be annulled, and then my grandsons and my grandsons' heirs,—that is to say, my great grandsons,—shall be able to divide the whole of the property and take their father's shares. ”

[380] Para. 17—“ My daughter or daughter's sons, or my grandsons' daughters or their daughters' sons shall never be able to inherit my estate. My family shall inherit my estate in the male line only. ”

Para. 19 “ The executor shall, with the money of the estate, preserve in proper repair the family dwelling-house in Kristo Singh's lane and at Arbaliah, and the sons and sons' wives who have possession of certain rooms in the Arbaliah family dwelling-house shall continue to hold possession of them ; no other partition of the same shall be made. ”

Chunder Nath took out probate on the 1st October 1880. On the 17th July 1881, Cally Nath brought this suit against Chunder Nath and the six infant sons of Chunder Nath, making sundry charges of misconduct in carrying out the objects of the will against Chunder Nath, and asking that the will might be construed and an account taken of the estate of the testator, and for partition of the estate so far as it had not been validly disposed of, and for a receiver.

Mr. Jackson and Mr. Stokoe for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Trevelyan for the Defendant, Chunder Nath Naugh Chowdhry.

Mr. Palit and Mr. Mookerjee for the other Defendants.

Wilson, J.—I think this is a very clear case. This is a suit for the construction of the will of Rajmohun Naugh Chowdhry, and is brought by the plaintiff as one of the two sons who survived the testator. He asks to have the will construed, for an account, for partition, and for other relief not now insisted on. He is entitled to have the will construed and the rights declared so far as they concern him, and to such relief as follows. The whole real controversy turns upon para. 14 [reads para. 14].

If that clause is effectual as giving an absolute estate to the grandsons, subject to life-interests and annuities and other charges created by the will, the plaintiff is entitled to nothing but what the will gives him. If the clause is void as doing something which the law does not allow, the plaintiff is entitled to a half of the estate as heir, and to a partition.

[381] The clause "I give the whole of my property to my grandsons, &c.," is said to be void as a gift to a class, some members of which may not come into existence till after the death of the testator. I do not think that this is so.

Before applying the rule which it is sought to apply, a Court must be satisfied, on the construction of the gift, that the gift is clearly to such a class as falls within the rule. In the present case the matter is plain beyond any reasonable doubt. In the first clause we have a guide to the meaning of the testator when he speaks of grandsons: in it he purports to enumerate his family, he says, "I have two sons and grandsons surviving,—the middle, that is to say, the second son, Sreeman Chunder Nath Naugh Chowdhry, and the third son, Sreeman Cally Nath Naugh Chowdhry, and my grandsons, Wopendra Nath Naugh Chowdhry and Sreeman Soorendro Nath Naugh and others whose names will be mentioned hereafter." As a matter of fact he does not name the others afterwards. Those words clearly show what he has in mind when he speaks of grandsons,—namely, living grandsons, two named and two others whose names would be mentioned afterwards. Then he says in the 14th clause,— "I give the whole of my property, &c." If that was alone, it would be clear, and give his living grandsons the whole, but the clause goes on with a provision, "that after all the pensioners have died, and after the enjoyment of the pensions and property shall have ceased," the grandsons and the grandsons' heirs are to divide the property.

Those words, I think, only express over again, what was sufficiently clear without them, that the grandsons take, subject to the provisions, particular estates, and that when those estates are exhausted, they, to whom he makes an absolute present gift, or their heirs, may divide the property.

It was contended, however, that clause 17 makes a difference, "my daughter or daughter's sons, or my grandsons' daughters or their daughters' sons shall never be able to inherit my estate. My family shall inherit my estate in the male line only."

I think that does not control the gift to the grandsons for two reasons. In the first place, I think it may be well read as, speaking of the estate, of matters at the time of the testator's [382] death and as expressing an intention (such as in the Tugore case (9 B. L. R., 477) was held to fail) to disinherit particular heirs at the time of his death. If not, then I think the principles laid down in the Tugore case (9 B. L. R., 477) must be applied, if there be an attempt to control the line of inheritance which the law contemplates.

If the gift to the grandsons in para. 14 is an absolute gift, and if para. 19 attempts to say that the property shall only descend in a particular line, the restriction is void, and the gift in para. 14 prevails. The plaintiff, therefore, is only entitled to what is given him in the will. Paragraph 3 gives him 75 rupees a month for five years. Paragraph 6 gives him a right after five years to enjoy for life certain property mentioned in the schedule to the will, and during that enjoyment to have the Government revenue paid. Paragraph 13 gives him the right to enjoy for life two gardens, one exclusively and the other jointly with his brother, and he is entitled to those and to no other rights. As he has substantially failed, he must pay the costs.

From this decision the plaintiff appealed.

Mr. Pugh (with him Mr. Stokoe and Mr. M. M. Ghose) for the Appellant.—The main question is as to whether, as regards the bulk of the estate, there is not an intestacy. No one is to come into enjoyment of the estate till all the annuities are satisfied. My objections to the will are—(i) that the estate is not given to any one till after the pensioners should die; (ii) that the gift to grandsons in the 14th para. of the will is bad, as being a gift to a class some of the members of which might be born after the death of the testator; (iii) that there is in it an invalid attempt to create a novel form of inheritance. [PONTIFEX, J.—In Saunders v. Vautier (1 Cr. and Ph., 240) there was a gift to sons, postponing enjoyment till they reached 25; there the gift was good, but the provision postponing the enjoyment was rejected. GARTH, C.J.—Do you contend that there is no gift to the grandsons at all? Yes; and I also say that there is no indication in the will that the testator intended that there should be any owner of the estate until the period of distribution arrived. The word ‘grandsons’ means the same throughout the will; great grandsons [383] take by purchase. The rules for ascertaining the objects of gifts to children as a class, so far as relates to the period of their coming into existence, are set out in Hayes and Jarman’s Concise Forms of Wills, p. 210: 1st—If no period of distribution is named, the class is ascertained at the death of the testator; 2nd—When a period of distribution is named, that is the time for ascertaining the class; 3rd—A gift to the children, the distribution of whose shares is postponed till majority or some other age (which none of the class at the testator’s decease has attained) embraces the children living at the testator’s decease, and also those who come in esse before the eldest attain the prescribed age, when the distribution pro tanto takes place, and after born children are excluded; 4th—A gift to children preceded by a life-interest includes the children living at the death of the testator, and those who come in esse in the lifetime of the prior devisee or legatee, whose death is made the period of distribution. [PONTIFEX, J.—The question is, whether there is any period of distribution at all: see Singleton v. Gilbert (1 Ch. Cox., 68). The proper question which arises is, whether the gift is to the grandsons subject to the life-estates, or to the annuitants, and the remainder to the grandsons.] The estate is subjected to trusts for partial purposes, such as the raising of Rs. 100 for maintenance and charges for marriage expenses, &c. These trusts postpone the vesting in possession, and let in grandsons of the testator who may be born after his death during the continuance of the trusts. The case of Gardner v. James (6 Beav., 170) shows that a gift of residue in trust, after payment of annuity to A for life, to apply residue in payment of maintenance of children of B till 21, and after death of A, and at the age of 21, to pay the whole residue to the children of B, was held not to be confined to children living at the death of the testatrix. The learned counsel further cited the case of In re Edmondson’s Estate (L. R., 5 Eq., 389) as showing the meaning of the word ‘vesting;’ and Barnaby v. Tassell (L. R., 11 Eq., 363) and Devisme v. Mello (1 Bro. Ch. Cas., 537) as to the gift to the grandson not being one to the grandsons in presenti. The canon of English law, therefore, [384] shows that such a gift as the present to the testator’s grandsons is not confined to grandsons who are in existence at the death of the testator; but such a gift is bad in Hindu law, as being a gift to a class, some of the members of which might be born after the death of the testator. The testator has endeavoured to postpone the enjoyment of the gift to the grandsons by saying they shall not partition the estate till the annuitants are dead. Such a restriction is void as being repugnant to the gift to the grandsons: see Mokoondo Lall Shaw v. Gonesh Chunder Shaw (I. L. R., 1 Cal. 104). The property is given to no one for five years, and trusts for accumulations are void under Hindu law—Kumara Asina Krishna Deb v. Kumara Kumara Krishna Deb (2 B. L. R., O. C., 11). See, as to accumulations, Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 356.

Mr. Evans (with him Mr. Bonnerjee) for the Respondents.—The question is as to whether the grandsons are not intended to be the beneficiaries, and whether the clause postponing enjoyment must not be rejected. It is enunciated in Tagore v. Tagore (9 B. L. R., 377, at p. 395) that if an estate were given to a man without express words of inheritance, it would carry an estate of inheritance; if there were, however, superadded words restricting the power of transfer, the restriction would be rejected. Now here there is a complete gift with a provision against partition. The English canons of construction should be sparingly applied to Hindu wills. The provision in clause 14 does not refer to the period of distribution, but refers to the usual method of partition belonging to Hindu estates. Ashutosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (L. R., 6 I. A., 182) is a case where directions given in a will were inconsistent with the interest given, and such directions were rejected. I am treating the will as an ordinary will apart from the Hindu Wills Act. I say that the testator has attempted to postpone the enjoyment; the fetters on the condition must drop off; and a vested interest is given to the grandsons when this is done, by the first part. As to vesting, see Rewan Persad v. Radha Beeby (4 Moore's I. A. 137); and S. M. Krishnaramani Dasu v. Ananda Krishna Bose (4 B. L. R., O. C., 231, at p. 295), as showing that where a will is [385] bad in some respects, the property, if vested in trustees, should be left in their hands in order that they may carry out such of the provisions of the will as are valid. See also the Chief Justice's judgment in the latter case 'as to trusts.' As to the power of an executor, see Brajanath Dey Sirkar v. S. M. Annandamayji Dasu (8 B. L. R., 208). My second point is, that this being a will under the Hindu Wills Act, the estate is vested in the executor; see s. 179 Hindu Wills Act. Before the Hindu Wills Act, the words of the will would show in whom the estate vested. Section 293 lays down that the assent of an executor is sufficient to pass a legacy. The Hindu Wills Act was passed before the Tagore case (9 B. L. R., 377) was decided by the Privy Council. The present gift is one to the grandsons, and the bequest is (under s. 98 of the Succession Act, which is made applicable to Hindus by the Hindu Wills Act) confined to such as were alive at the testator's death. I rely upon the construction of the Hindu Wills Act as given in Alangananjori Dabee v. Sonamoni Dabee (ante, p. 157; s.c., 9 C. L. R., 121) in aid of my contention that the present gift was a valid one to the grandsons. I ask the Court to construe the word 'grandsons' as grandsons alive at the death of the testator; but if it is held that the word 'grandsons' is to include unborn grandsons, then I ask that the Court should not hold that the class is vitiated.

Mr. Bonnerjee on the same side.—In the 3rd para. of the will the testator uses the words "his sons and all the other members of his family"; for the meaning of the word 'family,' see the case of Khetter Mohun Mullick v. Gangamoni Mullick (unreported) decided by WHITE, J., in which it was held, that the word signified "members existing at the time of the death of the testator"; but on appeal the word was said to comprise the relations of the testator, whether by marriage or blood, who formed members of his household at the time of his death. No words of inheritance are necessary to give the property to the grandsons; there is nothing in the will to cut down the gift [386] by saying that grandsons who are to come into existence at a future time is meant. Section 98 of the Succession Act does not contravene the Hindu law as laid down in the Tagore case (9 B. L. R., 377), and we fall under s. 98 as possession is not deferred.

Mr. Pugh in reply. —With regard to the Hindu Wills Act there is nothing to show that there is any difference between the 3rd and other sections, as decided by Mr. Justice WILSON, in Alangamanjori Dabee v. Sonamoni Dabee (ante, p. 157; s.c., 9 C. L. R., 121). Section 154 of the Probate Act amends ss. 2 and 3 of the Hindu Wills Act. [PONTIFEX, J. —The way I look at the Hindu Wills Act is, that, at the beginning or end of each section introduced from the Succession Act, you must add the proviso or qualification contained in s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act.] So far as there is any difference between the saving-clause in the Probate Act and the saving-clauses of the Hindu Wills Act, it ought to be that the two clauses have the same effect, and not, as Mr. Justice WILSON has held, that they have not. Where there are different Statutes in pari materia, though made at different times, or even expired, and not referring to each other, they should be taken and construed together as one system, and as explanatory of each other—Rer v. Lordale (1 Burrows Rep., 445, at p. 448). As regards what ought to be looked at in construing Statutes, see Holme v. Guy (L. R., 5 Ch. Div., 901, at p. 905); see also The King v. Inhabitants of Taunton (9 B. and C., 831). The Hindu Wills Act should not be made to extend to something that it has not been intended to extend to. As regards construing the words of an older Statute in reference to words in a later Statute in pari materia, see Rolle v. Whyte (L. R., 3 Q. B., 286). [PONTIFEX, J.—With regard to the construction of Statutes, see Donegall v. Layard (8 H. L. C. 460). As to the provision as to the estate vesting in the executor, there is nothing in the Hindu law to prevent a person vesting his estate in his executor. On the question of remoteness, see Soudamoney Dossee v. Jogesh Chunder Dutt (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 262). [PONTIFEX, J.—If you can show that [387] there was a distinct period of distribution, then the arguments in the case you have just cited may come in. But I look upon the gift of the estate as already vested, and the enjoyment alone postponed.] In s. 329 of Mayne, it is laid down, that it is essential to the validity of a gift that possession should be given to the donee. If you cannot postpone the enjoyment of a gift inter vivos, you cannot do so by will. Possession must follow the gift. [PONTIFEX, J.—I do not see that the case of Soudamoney Dossee v. Jogesh Chunder Dutt (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 262) is to the contrary.] You cannot include after-born grandchildren and postpone the vesting, and the Court will not choose between these inconsistent objects so as to give effect to the one and disappoint the other—Leake v. Robinson (2 Mer., 363, at p. 389). [GARTH, C.J.—There is no question as to the rule of Hindu law; the only question is whether we should read this will so as to apply the rule.] I say there is nothing in the will to show that the testator intended to disinherit his sons; he did not intend to substitute any one else in their place. [PONTIFEX, J.—It seems that it was his intention to cut out his sons altogether and to benefit his grandsons after accumulation.] As to how far a Court may go in construing a will of a testator in a different way to what he intended, that is laid down in Tagore v. Tagore (4 B. L. R., 103; s.c. on ap., 9 B. L. R., 377).

The Judgments of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and PONTIFEX, J.) were as follows:—

Pontifex, J.—We are of opinion that the decision of the Court below is a correct decision, and that the testator's will contains a sufficiently clear gift to his grandsons living at his own decease.

It is true that the testator endeavours to postpone the possessory enjoyment of his grandsons to a period of at least five years from his death; and that he directs an accumulation of the profits of his estate for a very much longer period. But his will containing, as in our opinion it does, sufficiently direct words of present gift, the clauses in it which attempt to postpone the enjoyment in possession, and to direct accumulation, must be rejected or disregarded as inconsistent or repugnant.

[388] The fact that the estate is subjected to trusts or charges for partial purposes, such as the raising and payment of Rs. 400 per mensem for the maintenance of certain members of the testator's family; the substitution at the end of five years of a life-interest in a certain portion of the estate for the claim of one of the testator's sons to maintenance out of Rs. 400 per mensem, and the charges for marriage expenses of other members of the family;—this fact does not, in our opinion, postpone the vesting in possession, nor would it, even under English law, let in grandsons of the testator born after his death and during the continuance of those trusts or charges—Singleton v. Gilbert (1 Cox., Ch., 68) and Hill v. Chapman (3 Bro. Ch. Cas., 390). And reasonable as it no doubt was for English Courts to relax the general rule, which requires that a class of legatees must be in existence at the death of the testator, by putting such a construction on bequests to a class of kindred, as would admit or let in all born before the period of distribution, it would certainly not be reasonable in the construction of Hindu wills to make such a departure from the general rule, if, as I understand the law, it is not even now possible for a Hindu to make a gift by will to a person unborn at his death, because the result would be that the gift would be invalid ab initio from the possibility of its including persons unborn at the testator's decease—Sowdamoney Dossee v. Jogesh Chander Dutt (I.L.R., 2 Cal., 262).

And this leads me to offer some observations on the Hindu Wills Act, and the case of Alangamayori Dabee v. Sonamoni Dabee (Iute, p. 157; s. c., 9 C. L. R., 121) decided therein.

On the argument of the present appeal before us, that case, and the construction which it put upon the Hindu Wills Act, were relied upon by counsel for the grandsons in aid of their contention that there was a valid gift to the grandsons.

In our opinion, as I have already said, the grandsons are entitled irrespective of the Hindu Wills Act and the construction so put upon it. For the decision of the present case therefore it is not necessary for us to express our opinion on the authority of the case cited. But as Counsel addressed a considerable part of their argument to that case, and as I may not again have an opportunity of expressing my individual opinion upon it, I do not like leaving it without remark, though of course any remarks I make must be treated as extra-judicial, and as only the personal opinion of myself.

In the first place I agree with the learned Judge that, in construing the Hindu Wills Act, we are not at liberty to go behind it and enquire what were the motives for its introduction; and after the ruling of the learned Judge to that effect, it would perhaps have been better if the extract from the Calcutta Gazette had not been stated in the Report (p. 127 of 9 C. L. R.). But it does not appear whether s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act was inserted before or after the report of the Select Committee, and it seems to me impossible for us to dive into the mind of each member of the majority who passed the Act; and it may well be that a silent member, differing from the motives expressed by the member who introduced the Act, might have considered, as I myself consider, that s. 3 sufficiently neutralized the view to which he himself might be opposed.

I also of course agree with the learned Judge that it is a "settled canon of construction that a Statute ought to be so construed that if it can be prevented, no clause, sentence, or word shall be superfluous, void, or insignificant." But can the Hindu Wills Act standing alone be called a Statute within the meaning of that canon? It is not even a skeleton of a Statute, but a mere heap of inarticulate dry bones, which require to be set up and clothed with the flesh of the Succession Act, before the Act itself can give forth any sound. Its preamble gives no intimation that it was expedient to give enlarged powers over their estates to Hindu testators. On the contrary, it was a restricting rather than an enabling Act. It does not apply to Hindus in the Madras and Bombay Presidencies outside the Presidency-towns, or to the inhabitants of the North-Western Provinces or the Punjab. It is scarcely likely therefore that the Legislature could have intended to make any radical alteration in Hindu law. It is not even called "an Act to amend and define the law of Hindu Testamentary Succession," but simply "an Act to regulate the Wills of Hindus."

[390] It seems to me, therefore, that, in setting up and clothing each dry bone of the inarticulate bundle contained in s. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act, we must add, either at the beginning or end of each section introduced from the Succession Act, the proviso or qualification contained in s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act.

If placed at the end of the exceptions to ss. 98 and 99, or to the end of ss. 100 and 101, it would certainly, according to the Privy Council decision in the Tagore case (9 B. L. R., 377), make them imperative so far as Hindus are concerned. But at the time the Act was passed the Legislature was not instructed as to this, for the legal powers of devise among Hindus were still in doubt, not having been defined by the final Court of appeal.

From the state of doubt in which the uninstructed Legislature acted, it seems to me that it would be more reasonable to read the qualification contained in s. 3 at the beginning of each of the exceptions to ss. 98 and 99, and at the beginning of ss. 100 and 101: which would then run thus: "Subject to the qualification that no Hindu is hereby authorised to create in property any interest which he could not have created before the 1st of September 1870, if property is bequeathed to a class of persons, &c." (exception to s. 98); or in other words (taking s. 100): "If a Hindu can make a bequest to a person not in existence, then where a bequest is so made, &c." And for all I know this might still leave the sections operative so far as Sikhs or Bhuddists are concerned. And for all the Legislature knew at the time, it might have left the sections operative even with respect to Hindus.

Besides, if the intention of the Legislature is to be considered—and in this respect I think it may be considered—regard must be had to the fact that the Legislature has always been careful not to make any alteration in the substantive law of property of Hindus.

Moreover, these sections of the Succession Act, taken together, have in that Act, or were at all events intended to have, a seriously restrictive effect, making the law in India with respect to Europeans far more stringent than theretofore. It would certainly be a most singular result of legislation if that which [391] was originally intended to operate as a restriction should, under the very unsatisfactory method of legislation employed in the Hindu Wills Act, not only operate to create a power new and therefore unknown, but also to subvert what is recognized by their Lordships of the Privy Council as a fundamental principle of Hindu law. It surely could never have been the intention of the Legislature to make such a radical change in the law.

The difficulty really arises from what I may perhaps call the spasmodic method of legislation. If the Succession Act had, from its commencement, applied to all the inhabitants of British India, but had concluded with s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act, could it then have been contended that ss. 98 to 101 were applicable to Hindus. These sections would have been operative with respect to Europeans, and there would have been no absurdity in excepting Hindus from their operation. No word in them would then have been superfluous, void or insignificant.

And is not this the way in which we ought to regard the legislation under the two Acts? By s. 331 of the Succession Act Hindus were excluded from its operation. The Hindu Wills Act is, so far as our present purpose is concerned, merely a repeal of that section with the super-addition of s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act. If the Succession Act had not contained s. 331, and had contained s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act, it would have been necessary to seek for a refined or non-natural interpretation of the words "create in property any interest" contained in s. 3.

I repeat that it is in my opinion only the method of legislation which creates the difficulty. It seems to me that the two Acts should be read together as one Act, applicable to all classes—Europeans, Hindus, Sikhs, Buddhists, &c. And then s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act would receive a natural interpretation corresponding to that which would be placed on s. 149 of Act V of 1881, which last section shows the intention of the Legislature in an Act of similar character.

Indeed the very language of the last clause of s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act betrays an alarmed consciousness in the Legislature, that through oversight or ignorance some provision which they had attempted to enact might be repugnant to Hindu law; and if we are to search for the particular provisions to which [392] such fear may relate, I should, as at present advised, find them in ss. 98 to 101; for, after an examination of all the sections imported into the Hindu Wills Act from the Succession Act, I confess I am unable to find any which purport to create an estate of a character unknown to Hindu law, and to which the remarks under the second head mentioned at p. 132-3 of 9 Calcutta Law Reports, might relate; and therefore I am unable to agree that the words "create any interest" in s. 3 can be "read in the narrower sense" as referring only to the estate or interest which can be given, without reference to the further question to whom it can be given. For, if so read with respect to this particular Hindu Wills Act, it appears to me that they would have no operation whatever, but would be mere surplusage, and would thus offend against the very canon of construction already referred to.

But apart from these remarks upon the Hindu Wills Act and the case cited, which I wish it to be known are remarks of myself alone, we affirm the decree of the lower Court, holding that the grandsons living at the testator's death are entitled, subject only to such interests and charges created by the will as are legal and capable of taking effect.

But we think, in a case of this kind, depending as it does on the construction of an obscurely worded will, the costs both in the Court below and in this Court should be borne by the estate.

With this modification we dismiss the appeal, and direct that the costs of all parties in both Courts shall be paid out of the estate.

Garth, C. J.—I agree that the appeal must be dismissed, apart from any question arising under the Hindu Wills Act. With respect to the case of Alangamanjori Dabee v. Sonamani Dabee, (Ante, p. 157 ; s. c., 9 C. L. R., 121), I at present express no opinion, as very possibly that case may come up on appeal to this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

[I. HINDU WILLS - GIFTS TO A CLASS—

In this case it was held that the gift to grandsons was to such as were in existence at the testator's death. Transfer of class of cases from Subordinate Magistrates—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 48—Notice to the parties before the transfer is made.

Before a Magistrate of a district can transfer a case from a Court subordinate to him to any other subordinate Court, notice of such intended transfer should be served upon the parties, so as to enable any or either of the parties to come forward and show cause why such transfer should not be made.

A CRIMINAL case pending in the Court of a Deputy Magistrate was transferred to the Sub-divisional Officer by an order of the Officiating Magistrate of the District under s. 48 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The complainants in the case applied to the High Court to have the order of transfer set aside, on the grounds (i) that the order could not be made under s. 48 ; (ii) that it should not have been passed without notice of the intended transfer first having been given to them ; (iii) that the Court to which the transfer had been made was a long distance from their homes.

Mr. Mendies for the Petitioners.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—The petitioners state that a criminal case, in which the petitioners were complainants, and Ameer Majee and others were defendants, was pending in the Deputy Magistrate's Court of Jungipore. This case was transferred to the Sub-divisional Officer of Lallbagh by an order of the Officiating [394] Magistrate of the District, purporting to have been passed under s. 48 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The petitioners have applied to this Court to set aside the order of transfer, on the grounds (i) that it is not warranted by s. 48 ; (ii) that it should not have been passed without any notice to them, they being entitled to be heard in the matter ; and (iii) that it would be extremely inconvenient to them to attend the Court at Lallbagh, which is at some distance from their homes.

By the order of the Officiating Magistrate referred to above he directed that "all criminal cases occurring in Chuckla Ranchundrapur, and all cases if there be any, or any shall arise occurring near there and connected with the disputes there going on" be withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the Sub-divisional Officer of Jungipore, and be tried by the Sub-divisional Officer of Lallbagh.

It is doubtful whether the Officiating Magistrate's order is warranted by s. 48 ; but even supposing that he had the power of transferring the case at the stage in which it was under this section, he is clearly in error in exercising this power without giving the plaintiffs any notice or giving them any opportunity to be heard in the matter ; see the case of In the matter of Jaffer Ali (Criminal Motion, No. 302 of 1877, dated the 26th February 1877), also Umrao Singh v. Fakir Chand (I. L. R., 3 All., 749). The order of the Officiating Magistrate transferring this case is, therefore, quashed, and the Sub-divisional Officer of Jungipore will now proceed to dispose of it in accordance with the law.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 2, sched. ii, art. 11—Claim to mortgaged property—Execution of decree.

In execution of a decree upon a mortgage, a claim to the mortgaged property was put in under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859 by certain persons, on the ground that they had purchased the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor in execution of a previous decree. The claim was allowed on the 26th July 1877. On the 29th March 1879, the mortgagee instituted a suit to establish his right to the property. The period of limitation for such a suit under Act XV of 1877 is one year from the date of the order; but under Act IX of 1871, a longer period was prescribed. Act XV of 1877 did not come into force until the 1st of October 1877.

Held, that the provisions of the last paragraph of s. 2 of Act XV of 1877 applied, and that the suit was not barred.

IN this case it appeared that the plaintiff had obtained a decree on a registered mortgage-bond against the principal defendant, and had attached the mortgaged land. The remaining defendants intervened under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859 as claimants, on the ground that, in execution of another decree, they purchased the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor. The Court, on the 26th of July 1877, allowed the claim and released the property from attachment. The present suit was brought on the 29th of March 1879 for a declaration that the title set up by the intervening defendants could not affect the plaintiff, inasmuch as those defendants purchased the land in execution of a decree in which the original bond upon which the decree was founded was not registered, and that the plaintiff's bond having been registered, he was entitled [396] to preference. Both the lower Courts considered that the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation under art. 11 †, sched. ii of Act XV of 1877. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and BOSE, JJ.) was delivered by

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1949 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Bhooputty Roy, Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 1st July 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Dinesh Chunder Roy, Officiating Munsif of Bood-bood, dated the 7th August 1879.

† [Art. 11:]

Description of Suit.	Period of Limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
By a person against whom an order is passed under section 280, 281, 282 or 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to establish his right to, or to the present possession of, the property comprised in the order.	One year.	The date of the order.]

Prinsep, J.—The plaintiff obtained a decree against the defendant No. 1 personally, with a declaration of a lien to the amount of the debt on the mortgaged property. In executing that decree he was opposed by the defendants, Nos. 2 and 3, who had purchased, before the institution of this suit, in execution of another mortgage-decree obtained on an unregistered bond, under which this very property was mortgaged. Their objection was allowed, and the plaintiff has, accordingly, brought the present suit to establish his right as against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The date of the adverse order under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859 is 26th July 1877, and the present suit has been brought on the 29th March 1879. The lower Courts have held, that the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation under art. 11, sched. ii of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877.

It is contended in appeal that, inasmuch as, under the decisions of this Court in Matonginy Dossee v. Chowdhry Jummunjoy Mullick (25 W. R., 513), and Koylash Chunder Paul Chowdhry v. Preonath Roy Chowdhry (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 610), it was held that, under the Limitation Act, IX of 1871, which was in force when the order of July 1877 was passed, the limitation was not that which is now enacted in art. 11 of Act XV of 1877, but a longer period, the lower Appellate Court should have applied the last paragraph of s. 2 of the Limitation Act of 1877, under which the suit would not have been barred until two years from October 1877, on which date that Act came into force. So far as I am aware, the rule laid down in the two judgments that I have already quoted has [397] always been followed, at least on the Benches in which I have been one of the Judges; and therefore, if the Limitation Act had remained unaltered, the present suit would not have been barred. The terms of art. 11 of the present Limitation Act are clear on this point, and would prevent a suit like the present from being brought after one year from the order in the execution proceedings; but, as I have before observed, that provision would not come into force until the 1st October 1879.

In this view, we are of opinion that the order of the lower Appellate Court is wrong, and that the case must, therefore, be remanded in order that it may be tried on the merits.

The costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

NOTES.

[RETROSPECTIVITY—LIMITATION OF SUITS AND ACTIONS—

The decision in this case, it is submitted, does not appear to be sound. Limitation, being a matter of procedure has generally a retrospective operation. A certain period of limitation different from that in the previous enactment was provided in the Code of 1877; and the new enactment was declared to come into force (on 1st October 1877) some time after its being enacted. In such circumstances it has been held, as a maxim of interpretation, that the new Act operates retrospectively, on its coming into force [see Towler v. Chatterton (1829) 6 Bing., 251; Craies on Statute Law (1907) IV Edn. pp. 327—331].

Secondly the new time limit would work no hardship, in that the New Code came into force on the 1st October 1877 and the one year given by it would expire only on the 26th July 1878, and thus there was time for instituting the suit.

The case of R v. Chandra Dharna (1905) 2 K. B. 335 was one in which the time enlarged by the new statute was held applicable; the same reasoning would apply equally to the case where the time is curtailed by the new Statute, and there was time for instituting the suit.

Thirdly, the matter does not fall within the scope of sec. 2, as the proceeding etc., had not commenced when the new Code came into force; and a new suit cannot be regarded in the same light as an appeal, which has been regarded as a continuation of the original proceedings, 3 Cal., 662.]

Chota Nagpore Tenures Act (Beng. Act II of 1869)—Powers of Special Commissioner.

The scope and object of Beng. Act II of 1869 is to determine the quantity of lands of certain specified descriptions within villages to which the Special Commissioner, named under the Act, may have been appointed. Nothing in the Act empowers an officer so appointed to determine a question of disputed boundary between two villages, and to oust the Civil Courts of their ordinary jurisdiction in determining the rights of parties under conflicting titles as proprietors of such villages.

A SPECIAL Commissioner, appointed under the Chota Nagpore Tenures Act (Beng. Act II of 1869) decided that certain lands were within the boundaries of the defendants' village. The plaintiff then instituted a suit to recover possession of these lands, relying on a safinama settling the boundaries of his [398] and the defendants' village, executed by himself and the defendants. The defendants contended that the question had already been decided by the Special Commissioner, and that no suit would lie to reverse his decision. Both the lower Courts took this view of the case and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Bahoo Jogesh Chunder Dey for the Appellant.

Bahoo Mohendronath Banerjee for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and BOSE, JJ.) was delivered by

Prinsep, J.—The plaintiff, as jagirdar of Mouza Tangarjoria, sues the jagirdar of the adjoining mouza of Chintamunkura to obtain possession of certain specific land. The District Judge has dismissed the suit as not maintainable, inasmuch as in his opinion the matter in dispute has been decided by the Special Commissioner appointed under what is known as the Bhuinhari Act (Beng. Act II of 1869), and the orders of such special tribunal are, under the provisions of s. 20 of that Act, final. It seems that, both before the Special Commissioner as also in the present suit, the dispute was simply a dispute regarding the boundary between two villages. So far as we understand the scope and object of Act II of 1869, it is to determine the quantity of lands of certain specified descriptions within villages to which the Special Commissioner may have been appointed. There is nothing in the Act that would empower an officer so appointed to determine a question of disputed boundary between two villages, and to oust the Civil Courts of their ordinary jurisdiction in determining the rights of parties under conflicting titles as proprietors of such villages. If, therefore, the Special Commissioner's order had the effect of disturbing existing village boundaries and the titles acquired by such defined boundaries, it appears to us that he acted beyond the jurisdiction vested in him by that Act.

The case must, therefore, be returned to the lower Appellate Court in order that it may determine whether the lands in dispute belong to Mouza Tangarjoria or to Mouza Chinta-[399] munkura. If the plaintiff should establish to the satisfaction of the Court that it belongs to the former mouza, then, clearly, the defendants can have no title to the lands as Bhuinhari belonging to Mouza Chintamunkura.

The costs will abide the result.

Jurisdiction—Small Cause Court—Suit to determine co-parcener's rights in moveable property.

A Small Cause Court has no power to entertain a suit for a declaratory decree.

There is nothing to prevent a Small Cause Court from determining whether a person, who has been made a co-plaintiff and claims as a coparcener of the original plaintiff, has any right to the property sued for.

The decree in such a case, if given in favour of the plaintiffs, must order that the parties do recover possession of the property sued for in such shares as the Judge may consider them to be entitled. A declaratory decree of the relative rights of the parties cannot be made.

THIS was a suit brought to obtain a declaration of the plaintiff's right to a cow and a calf, and also for the recovery of the cow and calf, together with the sum of Rs. 28, the value of milk given by the cow during a month and-a-half. The plaintiff, it was admitted, had given the cow to the defendants on the following conditions : that the defendants should have the first calf and retain the milk ; and that, on birth of a second calf, the cow and second calf should be returned to the plaintiff. The defendants retained the cow and the second calf, and appropriated the milk after the birth of the second calf.

* Reference under s. 317, Civil Procedure Code, No. 18 of 1881, from the order made by Baboo Boroda Prosono Shome, First Munsif of Jehanabad, vested with the powers of a Judge of a Court of Small Causes, dated the 17th November 1881.

The plaintiff brought this suit in the Small Cause Court for the purposes abovementioned.

The defendants admitted the conditions and their liability to return the cow and the second calf, but claimed to be paid [400] the expenses incurred in their keep; and further objected to the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court.

At the hearing, one Luteefunnessa, the widow of a deceased brother of the plaintiff, applied to be added as a co-plaintiff, and claimed a one-anna and a half share in the cow and calf. The plaintiff objected, stating that he was the sole owner; the Court, however, allowed the widow to be added as a plaintiff.

The Munsif held, that the suit would lie, but referred to the High Court the question whether the Small Cause Court was competent to adjudicate upon and declare co-parcenary rights in respect of moveable property.

No one appeared for the Parties.

The Opinion of the Court (GARTH, C.J. and PONTIFEX, J.) was as follows :—

Garth, C.J.—If this were really a suit for a declaratory decree only, I should hold that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it.

The case of Ram Dhan Biswas v. Kefal Biswas (10 W. R., 141; s. c., 1 B. L. R., S. N., 10), decided by Sir BARNES PEACOCK and Mr. Justice MITTER, is perfectly good law at the present time. It has never, so far as I am aware, been seriously questioned; and the case of Nathu Ganesh v. Kalidas Umed (I. L. R., 2 Bom., 365) is plainly distinguishable from it. Indeed, Sir Michael Westropp, in page 367, very carefully recognizes the distinction. A man whose goods have been taken and sold in execution has a right to bring a suit in the Small Cause Court for the recovery of those goods against any one into whose hands they have come. But a judgment-creditor cannot sue in the Small Cause Court to have it declared that goods are the property of the judgment-debtor. In the first case, the plaintiff sues to recover his own property; in the other, he asks for a declaration, that the property belongs to a third person.

Sections 280 and 281 of the Civil Procedure Code relate only to execution-proceedings, and have no application to a substantive suit, which is brought to establish a mere right.

But in this case, although the plaintiff asks in form for a [401] declaration of his right, he is really suing, not for a declaratory decree, but to recover possession of his cow and calf, and Rs. 28-10 in money as the value of the milk; and I think that the Small Cause Court should deal with the case upon that footing.

This disposes of the first question which is raised in the reference.

As regards the second question, it is unfortunate that a very simple matter should have been complicated by allowing Musst. Luteefunnessa to intervene as a claimant. We think that the Court would have acted more wisely if, in the exercise of its discretion, it had left Luteefunnessa to bring a separate suit against the plaintiff to establish her title to the property; but as she has been allowed to come in, there is nothing to prevent the Small Cause Court from determining whether she has any right to the property or any other questions of title which may arise in such a suit.

Any decision which the Court may arrive at with regard to the respective rights of the plaintiff and the intervenor to the property in question, would not operate as a res judicata or otherwise affect the rights of the parties with respect to any immoveable property, which may depend upon the same title.

If the Court decides in favour of Luteefunnessa, as well as of the original plaintiff, the decree will be, that those two parties do recover possession of the cow and calf in whatever shares the Judge considers them entitled, and any decree with regard to the money will be decided upon the same principle; but in no case will it be either necessary or proper for the Judge to make a declaratory decree (properly so called) as to the relative rights of the parties.

The 19th August, 1881 and 7th March, 1882.

PRESENT:

SIR RICHARD GARTH, Kt., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE PONTIFEX.

Kristo Mohinee Dossee and others.....Plaintiffs

versus

Kaliprosono Ghose and others.....Defendants.

Execution—Suit to stay execution against certain property, until judgment-creditor had proceeded against other property—Cause of action—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 244, cl. (c)—Part satisfaction.

One Khelut Chunder was entitled to a share in Pargana Alumpore; before he obtained possession, Government revenue on the whole estate fell due. Khelut failed to pay his share, and his co-sharer, Kaminee, to save the estate, paid the whole sum due, and subsequently sued Khelut for the amount, eventually obtaining a decree. Subsequently this decree became vested in one Rutnessur, and the Pargana Alumpore came into the possession of one Kaliprosono Ghose. Rutnessur obtained an order for execution against the property of Khelut, and having transferred his decree to the High Court, proceeded to enforce the decree against Kristo Mohinee, the widow of Khelut, and her son, by attaching the family dwelling-house in Calcutta. The widow and son then brought this suit against Kaliprosono to have the share of Khelut in Alumpore ascertained, and praying for a decree calling upon Kaliprosono to pay the amount of the value of the share of Alumpore in satisfaction of Rutnessur's decree.

Held, that the suit could not be maintained so far as it attempted to make the decree a charge against Alumpore.

Questions as to part satisfaction of a decree cannot, according to cl. (c) s. 244 of Act X of 1877, be raised in a separate suit. That section alludes to parties to the decree or their representatives; but it is not on that account open to a plaintiff to evade the section by adding an unnecessary party to the suit.

Held on appeal, that the suit was rightly dismissed; that, as far as Rutnessur was concerned, it had already been decided that Rutnessur was entitled, if he so chose, to execute his decree against the Calcutta property; and that, therefore, that question was res judicata; and that, as regards the plaintiff's claim that the patni given by Kaliprosono to Hury Churn should be treated as part-payment to Rutnessur, such a question could only be decided, in execution-proceedings.

That the mere existence of the agreement between Kaliprosono, Rutnessur, and Hurry Churn did not entitle the plaintiff to join them as co-defendants in the suit.

[403] That, as far as Kaliprosono was concerned, the suit brought against him could only be treated as a suit to establish a charge or lien on land out of Calcutta, and therefore the Court had no jurisdiction to try it.

THIS was a suit brought, on the 15th September 1880, by one Kristo Mohinee Dossee, the widow of one Khelut Chunder Ghose, for herself and as next friend of Romanath Ghose, her adopted son, seeking to have the exact value of the share of Khelut Chunder Ghose, as it originally existed in the zamindari Alumpore, ascertained, and to obtain a decree against the defendant Kaliprosono Ghose, calling upon him to pay the amount of such value in satisfaction or part-satisfaction of the amount of a decree obtained on the 18th January 1876 by one Kaminee Soondery Dossee against Khelut Chunder Ghose, and of which decree the defendant Rutnessur Biswas alleged himself to be the assignee, or, in the alternative, for an order for the sale of such share, and for the application of the net proceeds in satisfaction or in part-satisfaction of the said decree; and pending the decree for an injunction restraining further execution under the said decree.

The application for the injunction came on on December 7th 1880, and the case is reported in I. L. R., 6 Cal., 485. The hearing of this suit came on on August 17th 1881. The plaintiff Kristo Mohinee Dossee for herself and as next friend of Romanath Ghose, the adopted son of Khelut Chunder Ghose, her husband, who died in 1878, stated, that, in execution of a judgment on a bond executed in 1862 by Kessub Chunder Paul Chowdhry, Joydeb Dey Chowdhry, and Sarasoondery Dossee, in favour of Khelut Chunder Ghose, the interest of Kessub Chunder Paul Chowdhry in a certain zamindari called Alumpore was attached and sold at public auction on the 2nd September 1870, and was purchased by Khelut Chunder Ghose and one Prosono Chunder Chatterjee in equal shares; that one Kaminee Soondery Dossee, the widow of one Ram Chunder Chowdhry, and Sarasoondery Dossee, the widow of Sham Chunder Paul, were also proprietors in the same zamindari; and that, in the year 1865, part of the share of Sarasoondery was sold at public auction to one Gunganarain Sannel, [404] and that, at two later sales in 1866 and 1867, the remaining portions of her share were purchased at public auction by Kessub Chunder Paul Chowdhry and one Bhuggobutty Churn Mukerjee; that Khelut Chunder, after the sale of the 2nd September 1870, obtained a certificate from the Court declaring him to be the purchaser of Kessub Chunder Paul Chowdhry's share in Alumpore, but his possession was obstructed, and it was not till January 1874 that, by an amicable arrangement come to between Khelut, Kessub, and Bhuggobutty Churn Mukerjee, and Prosona Chunder Chatterjee, Khelut Chunder obtained possession of the share he had purchased.

Thus the greater portion of the zamindari belonged to Kaminee Soondery Dossee and Khelut Chunder Ghose.

In the years 1871 and 1872, Government revenue for the estate so held by Kaminee Soondery Dossee and Khelut Chunder Ghose fell into arrears; and Kaminee, in order to save the estate, borrowed, on the 26th March 1872, a large sum of money on mortgage of her share in the zamindari from one Hurrichurn Bose in the name of one Grees Chunder Bonnerjee; and she, again, on the 9th May 1872, borrowed in the same manner on a further mortgage of her share, a further sum, and with these two sums so borrowed she paid off the Government revenue. Kaminee then brought a suit against Khelut Chunder for contribution of his share of the revenue so paid by her, and pending such suit the revenue due on the joint estate again fell into arrears, and as Kaminee was unable to raise a sufficient sum to save the estate, it was sold by public auction in 1874 and was purchased by one Kaliprosoṇo Ghose, subject to the incumbrances thereon (and with notice, as the present plaintiff alleged, of the suit for contribution). Kaliprosoṇo, on the 9th April 1874, took an assignment from Hurri-churn Bose of the two mortgages, dated the 26th March 1872 and the 9th May 1872, in the name of his servant Bhuggoban Chunder Mitter, as trustee for himself, and for the purpose of preventing the merger of the interests of the mortgagor and the mortgagee in the said properties.

Kaliprosoṇo, in his own name and in that of Bhuggoban Chunder Mitter, then instituted two suits against Kaminee,—one [406] for the purpose of obtaining possession of the properties mortgaged on the 26th March 1872 (which had already been foreclosed), and for a declaration that he was entitled by virtue of his purchase and of the foreclosure proceedings to a proprietary interest in the zamindari Alumpore, and the other suit to recover principal and interest due under the mortgage of the 9th May 1872. These suits were heard together; and on the 20th July 1878 he was declared entitled to the right of Kaminee and Bhuggoban Chunder in the zamindari of Alumpore; Kaminee being placed under certain conditions, one of which was, that the debt secured by her mortgage of the 9th May 1872 should be borne by Kaliprosoṇo and Kaminee in certain proportions. (Such an apportionment was ascertained subsequently on the 10th March 1879). On the 18th January 1876, the suit brought by Kaminee against Khelut Chunder was, on appeal, decreed in favour of Kaminee; but the plaintiffs in this present suit alleged that Khelut Chunder was not aware of the arrangement come to between Kaliprosoṇo and Hurri-churn Bose with respect to the two mortgages of the 25th March and 9th May 1872, and that such arrangement was kept concealed from the Court in Kaminee's suit against Khelut when Kaminee obtained her decree.

Kaminee, on the 16th January 1877, assigned her rights under the decree of the 18th January 1876 to one Rutnessur Biswas, who obtained leave to place his name on the record in the stead of Kaminee; and he, after several attempts to execute his decree, obtained an order to execute it in September 1878 against Romanath Ghose; but this order was subsequently reversed, on appeal, on 1st April 1879, and an order passed, stating that Rutnessur might execute his decree against the estate of Khelut and not against the estate upon which a lien was declared by the decree. On the 26th May 1880, Rutnessur transferred his decree to the High Court, and in execution attached the plaintiffs' family dwelling-house.

The plaintiffs further alleged, that, since the commencement of the execution-proceedings, they discovered that, in the month of July 1877, a secret arrangement had been entered into between Kaliprosoṇo, Rutnessur, and Hurri-churn Bose, whereby [406] it was agreed that Rutnessur should not, in execution of the decree of the 18th January 1876, proceed to realize the charge against Alumpore, and that Hurri-churn Bose and Rutnessur should release Kaliprosoṇo and the share charged with payment of the decree from all liability, and that they would not take any proceedings in any Court against Kaliprosoṇo and the share charged; that the whole conduct of the execution-proceedings should be entrusted to Kaliprosoṇo, and that, in consideration of these matters, Kaliprosoṇo should, without any bonus, grant a perpetual lease of five mouzas in Alumpore to Hurri-churn Bose and Rutnessur Biswas at a small annual rental. They then alleged that, in accordance with such agreement on the 4th August 1877, Hurri-churn Bose and Rutnessur had executed a release in favour of Kaliprosoṇo, and the latter, on the same day, had executed the patni lease in favour of Hurri-churn Bose, and they submitted that the amount of the decree was payable out of Alumpore notwithstanding the arrangement last mentioned which sought to save Alumpore and to make Khelut Chunder Ghose's estate liable for the decree. They therefore brought this suit for the purposes abovementioned.

The defendants Rutnessur and Kaliprosono put in written statements, in which they stated that the High Court had no jurisdiction to hear the suit, as the suit was one for land situate in Nuldea; they denied that Khelut Chunder was unaware of the arrangement come to between Kaliprosono and Hurry Churn with respect to the mortgages; and Kaliprosono stated that, with regard to the patni lease granted, the rent of such patni was only less by Rs. 100 per annum than the rents payable by the tenants. They also stated that no secret arrangement had been entered into between themselves and Hurri Churn Bose, but that the release of the 4th August 1877, after setting out the terms of the release to Kaliprosono, contained a proviso to the following effect: "That should the Court, in which the decree should be executed, of its own accord or upon petition of Khelut Chunder, or his legal representatives, and notwithstanding objection on the part of Rutnessur and Hurry Churn Bose, make any order directing the decree to be executed in the first instance against [407] the estate formerly belonging to Khelut and Kaminoo, then Rutnessur and Hurry Churn Bose should not be bound by the covenant for release, nor be bound to indemnify Kaliprosono as therein agreed, but that in such case it should be open to Kaliprosono to cancel the agreement."

The plaintiffs subsequently to the filing of the written statements of the defendants, obtained leave to put in a written statement, stating that Rutnessur had no beneficial interest in the decree of the 18th January 1876 and was not entitled to execute the decree; that the 'secret arrangement' operated as a satisfaction of the decree, and that, as between the owner of Alumpore and themselves, the Alumpore zamindari was primarily liable for the amount of the decree, the 'secret arrangement' having operated as a release of that zamindari, it was not in accordance with equity to permit the defendant Rutnessur to execute the decree against themselves.

At the hearing the following issues were fixed—

- (1) Has this Court jurisdiction to entertain the suit?
- (2) Are the plaintiffs barred by ss. 239¹ and 244 of Act X of 1877 from maintaining this suit?
- (3) Does the plaintiff disclose any cause of action as against any or which of the defendants?
- (4) As between Khelut Chunder Ghose and the owner of Alumpore, are the plaintiffs entitled to insist that the amount of the decree of the 18th January 1876, or any and what part thereof, should be paid out of Alumpore?

*[See 239 :—The Court to which a decree has been sent for execution under this Chapter, shall upon sufficient cause being shown, stay the execution of such decree for a reasonable time, to enable the judgment-debtor to apply to the Court by which the decree was made, or to any Court having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree or the execution thereof, for an order to stay the execution, or for any other order relating to the decree or execution which might have been made by such Court of First Instance or Appellate Court if execution had been issued thereby, or if application for execution had been made thereto; and in case the property or person of the judgment-debtor has been seized under an execution, the Court which issued the execution may order the restitution or discharge of such property or person pending the result of the application for such order.]

(5) What is the effect of the agreement of the 4th August 1877, and the patni lease executed in pursuance of it ? and have either of these transactions satisfied the decree of the 18th January 1876 ?

(6) Are the plaintiffs to stand in the position of the decree-holder as regards the decree when they shall have paid off the amount of the decree ?

(7) Is the defendant Hurry Churn Bose entitled to any interest, and if any, what interest, under the decree ?

Mr. Bonnerjee (with him Mr. Trevelyan and Mr. Henderson) for the Plaintiffs.—With regard to the first issue, this cannot be [408] said to be a suit for land, in the sense in which the words 'a suit for land' are used in the Charter; part of the cause of action arose in Calcutta, and we having obtained leave to sue, this Court can entertain the suit. As to the third issue, the plaint discloses two causes of action against all the defendants ; the first is between the owner of Alumpore and Kaliprosono (Ghose as to whether Alumpore is liable to pay the amount of the decree. The second cause of action is, that Rutnessur having obtained a benefit (viz., the patni lease on Alumpore) should be bound to account for this. The payment of the Government revenue by Kaminee created of itself a charge on the property for the amount of the sum she had paid, and the purchasers of Alumpore are bound to discharge this debt. The Government revenue is not a personal liability attached to the owner of a zamindari, but is a liability attaching to the estate. Therefore a third person paying revenue on account of an owner has only a charge against the property itself, but no remedy against the defaulting proprietor. It was only lately that by Statute a right has been given against the defaulter, but for that Kaminee would have had no right of suit. Khelut Chunder's position was that of a surety. The charge existed on the zamindari before the decree ; it existed directly the money was paid. The Court which gave the decree of the 18th January 1876 proceeded on the case of Syed Enayet Hossein v. Muddun Moonee Shahoon (14 B. L. R., 155; s.c., 22 W. R., 411). See also Nugender Chunder Ghose v. Sreenuttty Kaminee Dossee (11 Moore's L. A., 241), Waring v. Ward (7 Ves. 332), and Fetherstone v. Mitchell (11 Ir. Rq., 35), in which the same principle is laid down. [WILSON, J.—Can you find any case that shows that a defaulter can relieve himself from liability by shifting the liability from himself on to his property which he has since disposed of ?] None except Averall v. Wade (Lloyd and Gould, 252). [WILSON, J.—It will be more convenient to hear the other side as to whether there is a cause of action or not.]

Mr. Branson for the defendant Kaliprosono. —The plaintiffs [409] say that a certain amount of satisfaction seems to have been obtained by Rutnessur, and that ought to go in part satisfaction of the decree ; but I contend that such a question cannot be raised in this suit ; it ought to have been raised in the execution-proceedings, s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. As to whether a lien was acquired against the estate, see s. 9 of Act XI of 1859 and the notes thereon in Forsyth's Revenue Sale Law of Bengal. The section creates no charge on the land, but gives only a personal remedy. As to the case of Enayet Hossein v. Muddun Moonee Shahoon (14 B. L. R., 155 ; s.c., 22 W. R., 411), it has been considered in Hurri Mohun Bagchi v. Grish Chunder Bundopadhyaya (1 C. L. R., 152). Further, how have the plaintiffs any right of action against my client, or how can they join him as defendant in a suit against Rutnessur to restrain Rutnessur from executing his decree ?

Mr. Jackson (with him Mr. Stokoe) for the defendant Hurry Churn Bose.

Mr. Mitra for the defendant Rutnessur.—Section 69 of the Contract Act says, that a person who is compelled to make a payment is entitled to be reimbursed by the one for whom payment has been made; so the suit against Khelut was rightly brought. As to the second cause of action put forward by the plaintiffs, if the effect of the arrangement was that the decree was satisfied, why have either Hurry Churn or Rutnessur been made parties.

Mr. Trerehyan in reply contended that Rutnessur and Hurrichurn had been rightly made parties for the sake of discovery.

WILSON, J. —This case has at first glance an appearance of complexity but after discussion the points necessary to be decided are exceedingly simple. It appears from the plaint (and for the purpose of dealing with the case as I propose, I assume the truth of all the allegations in the plaint) that the late Baboo Khelut Chunder Ghose was entitled to a share of Pargana Alumpore. Before he obtained possession some Government revenue became payable. One Kaminee Soondery [410] Dossee, another sharer, paid the revenue chargeable on Kholut Chunder Ghose's share to save the property, and sued Khelut Chunder for the amount. Her suit was dismissed, but she obtained on appeal a decree of the High Court on its Appellate Side, set out in the plaint, that Kholut Chunder should pay, &c.

It appears further that that decree has since become vested in the defendant Rutnessur Biswas; that Pargana Alumpore has become vested in Kaliprosono Ghose; and that Hurry Churn Bose is interested in the decree. Rutnessur Biswas has proceeded to enforce the decree against the plaintiffs by attaching a house in Calcutta, the property of Khelut Chunder Ghose.

The question is, whether the plaint shows any cause of action.

It was contended it did in two ways, —1st, that the plaintiffs, as the heirs of Khelut Chunder Ghose, were entitled to have the decree satisfied out of his (Khelut Chunder's) share in Alumpore before they could be made liable in respect of other property. According to this contention a person who has made default, and had a decree passed against him as a defaulter, is entitled to have the decree satisfied out of the property in the hands of others and not by himself. To my mind that is a very startling proposition; and no authority has been cited in support of it. It appears to me that this suit cannot be maintained so far as it seeks to make the decree a charge against Alumpore. It was said, however, that the suit would lie on other grounds, i.e., that by reason of certain transactions set out in the 18th and 19th paras. of the plaint, the decree has been in fact satisfied, and Rutnessur Biswas is not entitled to enforce the decree. Whether the suit can be maintained on this ground depends on s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, which says:—

“The following questions shall be determined by order of the Court executing a decree and not by separate suit, namely,—

(a) questions regarding the amount of any mesne profits as to which the decree has directed enquiry;

(b) questions regarding the amount of any mesne profits or interest which the decree has made payable in respect of the subject-matter of a suit, between the date of its institution and the execution of the decree, or the expiration of three years from the date of the decree;

[411] (c) any other questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree.

“Nothing in this section shall be deemed to bar a separate suit for mesne profits accruing between the institution of the first suit and execution of the decree therein, where such profits are not dealt with by such decree.”

The point raised seems to be plainly one as to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of the section. That section speaks of parties to the decree or their representatives. The plaintiffs are the representatives of Khelut Chunder Ghose, and Rutnessur is the representative of Kaminee. It is said the section is not applicable, because Hurrichurn Bose has been added as a party. But it is obvious that the plaintiffs cannot evade the section by adding unnecessary parties. The question is one simply between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder, and Rutnessur is the only proper party. Kaliprosono Ghose and Hurrichurn Bose ought not to be joined. Without, therefore, expressing any opinion on any of the other matters which have been argued, it appears to me that this suit must be dismissed.

From this decision the plaintiffs appealed.

Mr. Pugh (with him Mr. Evans) for the Appellants. --As regards the secret agreement, equity will not allow a person to buy a property subject to a mortgage and say to the mortgagee, 'I will make it worth your while to proceed against other property belonging to the mortgagor'—Mirza Futeh Ali v. Gregory (6 W. R., Misc., 13). [GARTH, C.J. That case is founded on s. 271 * of Act VIII of 1859.] Yes, and see also Fukeer Bux v. Chutturdharee Chowdhury (14 W. R., 209). As showing that there are equities analogous to the present equity we set up, see Kaliprosono Ghose v. Kamini Soondery Chowdhraiz (3 C. L. R., 184). As to the effect of property being sold in England subject to a covenant or incumbrance, see Burnett v. Lynch (5 B. & C., 589) and Moule v. Garrett (L. R., 7 Exch., 101). As to the decree [412] being a charge on Alumpore: Is the payer of revenue able to get both a personal decree and also one against the property? A person who pays revenue for another is entitled to a charge on the estate for which he has paid revenue. [The Advocate-General.—The whole case depends on contribution; I bought subject to incumbrances at the time of the decree, at an auction-sale, before this suit was brought, and I arranged with Hurry Churn as to this incumbrance.] Then I say that you were bound, as this suit was pending, and I do not require to show notice, as you bought pendente lite. I say that lis pendens is as much an incumbrance as a mortgage. A purchaser pendente lite is not even a necessary party to a suit—Unumoyi Burmonce v. Tarini Prasad Ghose (7 W. R., 225). With reference to lis pendens, see Lala Kali Pershad v. Bali Singh (3 C. L. R., 396), Rajkishen Mookerjee v. Radha Madhub Halder (21 W. R., 349). [PONTIFEX, J. The reason does not apply when the property is sold by a power paramount.] As regards the last quoted case, it shows that nothing more would be taken than the right which the judgment-debtor himself could have passed, and the section confers no further right on the purchaser than he would take under the Sheriff's sale. But apart from lis pendens, no particular form of words is necessary to make a charge. As to whether there is a charge or not, I say, 1st, that there is a charge independent of the Act; 2nd, if not, by the Court in which they got notice of the debt. [PONTIFEX, J., referred to the case of Aldridge v. Westbrook (5 Beav., 188).]

* [Sec. 271. —If, after the claim of the person on whose application the property was attached has been satisfied in full from the proceeds of the sale, any surplus remain, such surplus shall be distributed rateably amongst any other persons, who, prior to the order for such distribution, may have taken out execution of decrees against the same defendant and not obtained satisfaction thereof: Provided that, when any property is sold subject to a mortgage, the mortgagee shall not be entitled to share in any surplus arising from such sale.]

Surplus to be rateably distributed among decree-holders who have taken out execution prior to the order for distribution.

Proviso where property is sold subject to a mortgage.

Payment of revenue gives me a charge: see Syed Enayet Hossein v. Muddun Moonee Shahoon (14 B. L. R., 155; s.c., 22 W. R., 411). The cases of Gopee Churn Bural v. Mussamat Lukhee Ishwaree Debia (3 Sel. Rep., 93), and Hamilton v. Denny (1 Ball and Beattie, 199) are in my favour. [PONTIFEX, J.—In the latter case the sale was on account of a fine for renewal of a lease.] As to whether payment of rent creates a lien, see Fetherstone v. Mitchell (11 Ir. Eq., 35), Kehoe v. Hales (5 Ir. Eq., 597), and Locke v. Evans (11 Ir. Eq., 52).

[413] The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul, with him Mr. Phillips) for Kaliponso.—The word 'incumbrances,' in s. 54 of Act XI of 1859, means that the purchaser takes subject to all incumbrances. As regards s. 9, which deals with deposits made by persons not proprietors, see the definition of the word 'proprietor' as given in s. 1 of Beng. Act VII of 1868. Kaminee was not the recorded proprietor, but, under the section, she would have to pay the money. No authority has been shown that a payment of a sum for which a person was jointly liable, gives a right to the payer to follow the estate. [GARTH, C.J.—I question whether there is any privity between co-sharers of a revenue-paying estate, so as to cause any equity to arise.] I say that no equity governs the present case, and it cannot be distinguished from Syed Enayet Hossein v. Muddun Moonee Shahoon (14 B. L. R., 155; s.c., 22 W. R., 411). Payments of revenue by persons interested to save an estate have been held to be personal claims against the person for whom the payment was made, and not liens on the estate—Manikmulla Chowdhraun v. Parbuttee Chowdhraun (15 S. D. A. of 1859, p. 515). Fagan v. Sreemotee Dassee (Marsh, Rep., 226) holds that a deposit of revenue obtains no lien. The Privy Council case of Nugender Chunder Ghose v. Sreemutty Kaminee Dossee (11 Moore's I. A., 241) lays down that s. 9 of Act I of 1845, which is nearly the same as s. 9 of Act XI of 1859, authorizes a personal action, but gives no remedy against the land, which it leaves to the then existing law; and Hurri Mohun Bagchi v. Grish Chunder Bundopadhyia (1 C. L. R., 152) is to the same effect. [GARTH, C.J.—Unless we can distinguish this case from Syed Enayet Hossein v. Muddun Moonee Shahoon (14 B. L. R., 155; s.c., 22 W. R., 411), we ought to refer the question to a Full Bench.] Even if your Lordships think that that case is not distinguishable, yet the Privy Council case is conflicting, and the Privy Council case should be followed. The doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to a purchaser at a sale in execution—Nuffur Merdha v. Ram Lall Adhicurry (15 W. R., 308) and Sreemutty Gourmoney Dabee v. Reed (2 Taylor and Bell, 83). [414] [GARTH, C.J.—The question is whether there is any charge at all, even between the parties, unless it is declared by the Court.] There are two ways in which a lien may arise: 1st, where a lien can be affected by a suit; 2nd, where there is a lien in the suit itself. [PONTIFEX, J.—I think the case of Wilcocks v. Wilcocks (2 Vernon, 2nd pt., 558), will show where a lien arises, and it will aid your case.] If a person buys land from the heirs of a Hindu, knowing that there are women to be maintained, is there a charge on the property for maintenance? I say there is no charge till it is declared by the Court—s. 386, Mayne's Hindu Law. As to lis pendens, the plaintiffs must be defeated on the pleadings, irrespective of the fact that lis pendens does not apply to a case of this sort. In their plaint they do not say that they want to make the payment a charge, but they simply bring this suit. I am only bound by what appears on the pleadings. With regard to the doctrine of lis pendens, see Kailas Chandra Ghose v. Fulchund Jahari (8 B. L. R., 474, at p. 489). There was here no voluntary alienation by the parties to defeat the plaintiffs, and therefore the doctrine does not apply. Execution would in no way detract from the rule, for the purchaser stands in the judgment-creditor's shoes, and that is all. The decree must be read as giving a personal decree against Khelut, and the decree giving a charge must be struck out; and in that case where does equity come in? Assuming even that there was a charge created in 1876, what equity have they to compel us to pay the debt referred to in the 12th paragraph of their plaint? They say that Rutnessur held benami for Hurry Churn; so far at least the equity must fail, as it was decided in the execution-proceedings that Rutnessur did not hold benami. Waring v. Ward (7 Ves., 532) rests on the same principle as this decree rests, viz., that when a person borrows and gives land as a further security, it is intended that his personal estate shall be first liable.

Mr. Phillips on the same side.—As regards the equity which has been assumed, take the case of a private vendor who has [416] mortgaged his property. He is personally liable and his property is liable also; he sells to a third person: in such a case he would have to recite in the deed that the property was charged with the debt. Would a mortgagee have a right to come in and ask for relief without a covenant of indemnity? Where there is nothing to show any contract for the equity of redemption, except a supposed difference between the price paid and the value of the estate, this is not enough to raise an equity. They allege we bought with notice, but they must rely on some principle of law for the notice, as there is no statement that we were aware of the debt to Kaminee. Is this an incumbrance? The sale was by a paramount authority, and we don't derive our title from the previous holder although we take his title—Moonshee Buzlool Rahman v. Pran Dhun Dutt (8 W. R., 222). Was the liability of Khelut an incumbrance? In order to show that the debt was charged on the land, the plaintiffs ought to show that there was an agreement, inferrible from the price given or the conduct of the parties, that the property was to be the primary source: they must make out this before they can succeed in the suit. The equity to make us repay is, that the whole or part of the charge is to be realized out of the land. As regards the case of Syed Enayet Hossein v. Muddun Moonee Shahoon (11 B. L. R., 155; s. c., 22 W. R. 411), decided by MARKBY and MITTER, JJ., I say it is opposed to the Privy Council decision. [PONTIFEX, J.—Does not the second part of s. 9 of Act XI of 1859 show that there is no charge? If it was a charge, the parties would not be put into possession.] As to the case of Fetherstone v. Mitchell (11 Ir. Eq. 35), the circumstance of the defendant having consented that the plaintiff should redeem the land, might very well give the plaintiff an equity. Supposing there not to be a charge originally either under the Act or otherwise, does the doctrine of lis pendens apply? No party can withdraw from litigation so as to affect a suit. It must be bona fide litigation, carried out in a bona fide manner, before a decree obtained by admission, as this decree was, would bind outsiders; it cannot be called lis pendens. We also object to the jurisdiction of this Court.

[416] Mr. Branson for Rutnessur.—The plaintiff seeks no relief against me; the only question that is raised is whether my decree had been in part satisfied; and Mr. Justice WHITE, in his decision on the application for an injunction, put me on terms. I, however, contend that the question as to whether my decree had been in part satisfied, was a question to be raised in the execution-proceedings and not in the suit. I say so far as they may have any supposed claim for relief as against me, such question would be res judicata; and so far as they claim relief against the others, the Court has no jurisdiction to hear the suit.

Mr. Stokoe and Mr. Hyde for Hurry Churn Bose.

Mr. Pugh in reply.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and PONTIFEX, J.) was delivered by Pontifex, J.—The circumstances of this case may be concisely stated as follows :—

A and B were co-sharers in a share of an estate, with respect to which share the Collector had ordered a separate account to be kept. B failing to provide his quota of the revenue, A raised money on a mortgage to C of his own interest, and paid the revenue on the share and so saved the share belonging to A and B from sale under s. 13^{*} of Act XI of 1859. Subsequently, both A and B failed to pay the revenue due on the share, and the share was sold under s. 13 to defendant Kaliprosono Ghose, who under s. 54,† took subject to all incumbrances by A and B. Then Kaliprosono bought up C's mortgage. But before the sale to Kaliprosono, A had sued B for the amount, which A had on the first occasion paid as B's quota of revenue to save the share from sale; and in that suit A claimed to have a lien on B's interest in the share.

At the time of Kaliprosono's purchase, A had obtained a decree in that suit which made B personally liable. But the Court which made the decree refused to declare any lien. Against that decree A appealed to this Court after Kaliprosono's purchase. Kaliprosono was not made a respondent [417] to that appeal, though of course A knew of his having purchased the share. About two years after Kaliprosono's purchase, this Court, apparently with the consent of B (whose interest to dispute the matter had of course ceased, or rather whose interest it then was to concede the question), declared a lien in favour of A on B's former interest. A assigned this decree to the defendant Rutnessur. B died leaving the plaintiff his representative. Rutnessur proceeded to execute his decree against other property of B in the mofussil in the possession of the plaintiff. The plaintiff in those execution-proceedings insisted that Rutnessur was bound to proceed first against the original interest of B in the share originally held by A and B and which had been purchased by Kaliprosono as before mentioned. This question was decided against the plaintiff, and is therefore res judicata between the plaintiff and Rutnessur. Afterwards Rutnessur's execution-proceedings in the mofussil dropped. Kaliprosono and Rutnessur subsequently entered into an agreement, by which Rutnessur agreed, if possible, to execute his decree against property of B in the possession of his representatives, and (if it could be avoided) not as against the original interest of B in the share originally held by A and B and then in Kaliprosono's possession. As an inducement or consideration for this agreement, Kaliprosono gave the defendant Hurry Churn Bose, as the nominee of Rutnessur, a patni in the share originally held by A and B.

*[Sec. 13 :—Whenever the Collector shall have ordered a separate account or accounts to be kept for one or more shares, if the estate shall become liable to sale for arrears of revenue, the Collector or other Officer as aforesaid, in the first place shall put up to sale only that share or those shares of the estate from which, according to the separate accounts, an arrear of revenue may be due. In all such cases notice of the intention of excluding the share or shares from which no arrear is due, shall be given in the advertisement of sale proscribed in section 6 of this Act. The share or shares excluded from the sale, shall continue to constitute one integral estate, the share or shares sold being charged with the separate portion or the aggregate of the several separate portions of jumma assigned thereto.]

†[Sec. 51 :—When a share or shares of an estate may be sold, under the provisions of section 13, or section 14, the purchaser shall acquire the share or shares subject to all encumbrances, and shall not acquire any rights which were not possessed by the previous owner or owners.]

Rutnessur then sought to execute his decree against property of B in Calcutta in the plaintiff's possession as B's representative.

Thereupon the plaintiff institutes this suit against Kaliprosono, Hurry Churn, and Rutnessur, whereby she asks for a declaration, if Rutnessur executes his decree against the Calcutta properties, that the plaintiff is then entitled to stand in the shoes of Rutnessur, and to be recouped both by Kaliprosono personally and also out of the original instalment of B in the share originally held by A and B; and the plaintiff asked in the meantime for an injunction to restrain Rutnessur's execution against the Calcutta property.

Now, so far as Rutnessur is concerned, it is already res judicata, that Rutnessur is entitled, if he so chooses, to execute [418] against the Calcutta property; and if plaintiff claims, that the putoi given by Kaliprosono to Hurry Churn should be treated as part-payment to Rutnessur, such question ought to be decided on the execution-proceedings, as directed by s. 244 of the Procedure Code. The mere existence of the agreement between Kaliprosono, Rutnessur and Hurry Churn does not entitle the plaintiff to join them as co-defendants in this suit, or give this Court jurisdiction to try the case. Kaliprosono and Rutnessur were quite entitled as between themselves to come to the arrangement. That arrangement can neither bind nor prejudice the plaintiff. Therefore, Rutnessur and Hurry Churn were not necessary parties to the plaintiff's suit against Kaliprosono.

But, so far as Kaliprosono is concerned, we think this suit can only be treated as a suit to establish a charge or lien in land out of Calcutta; and therefore this Court had no jurisdiction to try it.

It is true that Mr. Pugh, on the assumption that A's payment on B's account gave A a lien on B's interest, tried to put his case as high as this:—That person claiming under B, but subject to incumbrances, would be personally liable to pay this debt; and if so, the plaintiff would be entitled to sue Kaliprosono in this Court, he being a resident of Calcutta.

Mr. Pugh attempted to put his case on the footing of a purchase of an equity of redemption, and the contract between the mortgagor and the purchaser stating the amount of the money due on the mortgage subject to which the sale was made, and the purchase-money being estimated on that footing. Even if in such a case equity would fasten on the conscience of the purchaser so as to make him personally liable to indemnify his vendor, the mortgagor, it is sufficient to say the present is an entirely different case.

Under s. 54, Kaliprosono undoubtedly took subject to incumbrances; but he purchased not from the mortgagor, but from the Government, the paramount vendor. There was nothing to show him that anything was due from B to A, and no notice of this alleged lien was given. Under these circumstances, we think even if a lien existed, it would be preposterous to make Kaliprosono personally answerable.

[419] We are, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff's suit was rightly dismissed.

It is thus unnecessary for us to deal with the question whether the payment by A on behalf of B gave A a lien on B's interest on the share originally held by A and B, which would bind B's interest in the hands of a purchaser under ss. 13 and 54 of Act XI of 1859. This question was determined affirmatively, as already mentioned, by a Division Bench of this Court in the suit between A and B; that decision having, as I have before said, been virtually made by consent. That decision, whether by consent or otherwise, was founded on the decision of another Bench of this Court—the case of Seyd Enayet Hossein v. Muddun Moonee Shahoon (14 B. L. R., 155; s.c., 22

W.R., 411), which has also been followed and extended by a still later case, Ram Dutt Singh v. Horakh Narain Singh (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 549). Had it been necessary to deal with this question, we should certainly have referred it to a Full Bench; for we are not, as at present advised, at all satisfied as to the correctness of those decisions. They, no doubt, enunciate what at the first blush seems to be an attractive and catching equity; but it is difficult to see on what foundation such an equity could rest. Mr. Pugh has attempted to support the cases referred to, on the authority of certain Irish cases, which are treated as insurance cases. It is sufficient with respect to those cases to say, that there is a substantial difference between them and the present case. In all of those cases the person who claimed the lien was previously interested in the estate which his payment went to save. But, in the present case, A had no interest in B's share of the share originally held by A and B; and it may be remarked that none of the Irish cases go the length of establishing a personal liability.

The Irish cases, in fact, only decide exactly what the last paragraph of s. 9 of Act XI of 1859 provides.

If A had been entitled to a previous lien on B's interest, then he could have tacked the amount paid by him to save the interest from sale. If he had no such previous lien, then, as at [420] present advised, we think his rights would be those provided for by the preceding portion of s. 9,—that is, he may recover from the defaulting proprietors personally.

It appears to us, that whenever it may be necessary to settle this question, it ought to be referred to a Full Bench. In the present case it is unnecessary, and we dismiss the plaintiff's appeal with costs on scale 2.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sched. ii, cls. 171, 171 a, and 178—Application to revive suit—Right to apply—Pending suit.

The right to apply in a pending suit,—i.e., a suit in which no final order has been made,—is a right which accrues from day to day, and therefore the periods of limitation provided in cls. 171, 171a, and 178 do not apply in an application to revive such a suit.

IN this suit, which was one for partition, a decree for partition had been made on the 2nd February 1870, and the usual commission for partition was directed and issued. The commissioners filed their return to the commission on 7th December 1871, but they differed in opinion on the subject of the partition, and by an order of Court of 14th March 1872, the commission of partition and the return were quashed and directed to be taken off the file; and it was further ordered that a fresh commission of partition should issue under the decree. No steps, however, were taken to obtain the issue of such fresh commission. On the 8th December 1880, the defendant died intestate, leaving five sons his heirs and representatives. The present application was made on behalf of the plaintiff on [421] notice to the sons of Harra Chand, for an order to revive the suit, to enter their names as the heirs and representatives of the defendant in the register of the suit in the place of that of the defendant, and to allow the suit to be thereupon proceeded with. The plaintiff, in his affidavit in support of the application, stated, that the delay in proceeding with the suit had arisen from his being desirous of effecting an amicable partition, which he had used his best endeavours to do, but without success.

Mr. Bonnerjee for the plaintiff referred to the case of Gocool Chunder Gossamee v. The Administrator-General of Bengal (I. L. R. 5 Cal., 726).

Mr. Hill appeared to oppose the application, and contended that it was barred by lapse of time. The period of limitation for applications under chap. xxi of the Civil Procedure Code was sixty days under cls. 171,* 171a, and 171b, of sched. ii of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877. If that period of limitation was not applicable, the application was barred by cl. 178 of sched. ii of that Act, it being "an application for which no period of limitation was provided, elsewhere in that schedule or by s. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code," and the right to apply having accrued more than three years previously to the application.

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time when period begins to run.
Under section 363 or 365 of the Code of Civil Procedure by a person claiming to be the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff.	Sixty days ...	The date of the plaintiff's death.

Wilson, J. (without calling on Mr. Bonnerjee to reply), held, that the application being one in a pending suit, the right to apply was a right which accrued from day to day, and therefore it was not barred by lapse of time.

Application granted.

Attorney for the Representatives of the deceased defendant: Baboo Upendrolall Bose.

versus

Lalli Begum and othersPlaintiffs.

[On Appeal from the Chief Court of the Punjab.]

Mahomedan Law—Acknowledgment of children as sons—Pensions Act XXIII of 1871, ss. 4 and 6—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Omission to obtain previously to suit certificate enabling Court to entertain suit—Effect of certificate granted after the hearing.

The acknowledgment and recognition of children by a Mahomedan as his sons, giving them the status of sons capable of inheriting as being of legitimate birth, may, without proof of his express acknowledgment of them, be inferred from his treatment of such children, provided that certain conditions negativing this relationship are absent.

The question whether such acknowledgment should be presumed or not, depends on the circumstances of each particular case. Ashrafud Dowlat Ahmed Hossein Khan v. Hyder Hossein Khan (11 Moore's L. A. 94) referred to and followed.

Part of the property in suit consisted of land, which was assumed in the Courts below to be held on terms bringing it within the Pensions Act, 1871. After the judgment, which disposed of the principal questions in the case, had been given, final judgment was suspended upon an objection that no certificate had been obtained under that Act. The certificate having been then obtained and delivered to the Court,—held, that the original defect did not prevent the suit proceeding.

APPEAL from a decree of the Chief Court of the Punjab (5th December 1876), in part reversing, and in part affirming, a decree of the Commissioner of Lahore (19th January 1874).

The principal questions which arose on this appeal were as to the effect, according to Mahomedan law, of an alleged acknowledgment of the two minor plaintiffs as his sons by the late Ahmed Ali Khan, Nawab of Kurnal, and as to the existence of an alleged custom of the family in exclusion of that law.

The first plaintiff in the suit was Mussamut Lalli Begum, suing on her own behalf as widow of the late Nawab, who died [423] on the 14th November 1867, and also suing as mother and guardian of his two minor sons, aged respectively seven and eleven years. The defendant was Nawab Mahammad Azmat Ali Khan, eldest son and successor of the late Nawab.

The suit was commenced in 1871, and was heard by the Commissioner of Lahore, who found that neither Lalli Begum, nor her sons, were entitled to inherit. He was of opinion that she was never married to the Nawab, and that her sons were neither originally legitimate, nor rendered so by subsequent recognition.

The Chief Court on appeal remanded the suit to the Commissioner, with reference to certain alleged customs of the family, which, if proved, would preclude the operation of the Mahomedan law in respect of sons acknowledged, though born out of wedlock, and in respect to the succession of widows. On this remand the Commissioner found that, by the custom of this family, even a lawfully married widow could not inherit as a sharer: and this finding having been accepted by the Chief Court, Lalli Begum's claim was dismissed—a result against which she made no further appeal.

The Commissioner also found that the Mahomedan law of inheritance did not regulate this family, but that a custom, inconsistent with the law, excluded from inheritance illegitimate sons, even if acknowledged, allowing them only a certain proportion for maintenance.

This latter finding the Chief Court reversed. As regards the sons, the Chief Court was of opinion that the alleged custom had not been proved, and that the Mahomedan law prevailed. The Court held, that the minor plaintiffs were entitled to inherit, being either originally legitimate, or legitimated by subsequent acknowledgment by the late Nawab, their father.

Part of the property claimed consisted of six villages in the district of Muzaffernagar, conferred on the family by 'altunga' grant from the Delhi Emperor: also of villages granted by the British Government in 'istemrari,' through Lord Lake, in 1806; also of a jaghir granted by Lord Canning in 1858. As to the above, the Court held, that they were unable to give a decree; because no certificate under the Pensions Act, 1871, enabling the Court to take cognizance in the matter had been [424] obtained. Before final decree, a certificate was obtained from the Government under the above Act. Thereupon, the Court, considering that the defect of jurisdiction was removed, decreed in favour of the minors for their share.

From this decision the defendant appealed.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., Mr. R. V. Doyne, and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe for the Appellant.

Mr. J. F. Leith, Q.C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne for the Respondents.

For the appellant it was contended, that the alleged custom had been proved; and further that, even if proof of it had failed, the late Nawab had been shown to believe that by it 'illegitimate sons' (excluded from inheriting as sharers) were provided with maintenance suitable to their position. Accordingly, in treating the minor plaintiffs as he had treated them, he intended no other consequences than would follow from their being his sons, with reference to the provisions made for them by the custom of the family. From his recognition of a son, therefore, only the above consequences would arise, and not the right to rank as a sharer under the Mahomedan law. It was also contended, that even if the latter law were applied to the case, the effect of an acknowledgment of parentage being merely to raise a presumption of an antecedent marriage, such a presumption had in this case been excluded by the facts in evidence, which tended to show, and had shown, that there was no marriage.

The Courts had not been able to find that the marriage as a fact took place. Again, independently of the right effect not having been attributed to the acknowledgment, the latter had not extended to the younger boy, Umar Daraz Ali, who was four years younger than his elder brother Rustam Ali; and who had not shared the treatment, from which acknowledgment on the part of the late Nawab of his being the father, had been inferred.

Counsel for the respondents were not called upon.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir M. E. Smith.—This appeal arises in an action brought by Mussamut Lalli Begum, claiming in her own right, as [425] widow of the late Nawab of Kurnal, Ahmed Ali Khan, and as guardian on behalf of her minor sons, Rustam Ali Khan and Umar Daraz Ali Khan, to recover her own share as widow, and the shares of her minor sons, who are alleged to be sons of the late Nawab, in large landed estate and other property left by him. The defendant in the action is Nawab Azmat Ali Khan, who is the undoubted son of the late Nawab and much older than the two minor plaintiffs.

The late Nawab had four wives. A son, Rahmat Ali Khan, died in his lifetime. He left, surviving him, Azmat Ali Khan, the defendant, the Mussamut Lalli, who asserts that she was his wife and is now his widow, and the two minor plaintiffs.

In the Courts below several judgments, original and on remand, have been given, and the result of the litigation appears to be as follows :—The Commissioner of Lahore found that neither Mussamut Lalli, nor her sons, were entitled to inherit, being of opinion that she was never married to the Nawab; that her sons were not originally legitimate; and further, that the status of sons had not been conferred upon them by the late Nawab by any recognition of them as his sons. On remand the Commissioner found that, by family custom, widows did not inherit. The Chief Court of the Punjab agreed with the finding of the Commissioner as to this custom, and dismissed the Mussamut's appeal on the ground that she was disentitled by the custom. The Commissioner also, as already observed, dismissed the suit of the sons. The Chief Court of the Punjab reversed his decree so far as it dismissed the suit of the sons, and decreed in their favour, being of opinion that the minor plaintiffs were entitled to inherit. No question now arises as to the widow, both Courts having found that she is excluded by the custom of the family; and she does not appeal from those decisions.

The issues raised as to the right of the minor plaintiffs to inherit originally involved the following questions :—First, the alleged marriage of their mother, Mussamut Lalli, with the late Nawab; secondly, the alleged acknowledgment and recognition of them by the late Nawab as his sons, and the legal consequence of such recognition, if made; and thirdly, the existence of certain family custom.

[426] It will be convenient, in the first place, to refer to the issues as to the customs of the Mandals, to which this family belonged, to see if any custom has been established varying the general rule of the Mahomedan law relating to inheritance, or the effect of the acknowledgment of a son. An attempt was made to show that, by the customs of the Mandals, the sons of ignoble wives did not inherit. It appears that, in 1849, an inquiry was instituted by the Government respecting the customs of the Mandals, and various dustur-ul-amals were drawn up by members of Mandal families respecting them. But, on consideration of these documents, it appears first, that they do not agree on important points; and, further, they do not profess to record existing customs, except possibly with regard to the exclusion of women from inheritance, but contain endeavours to come to an agreement with respect to the rules which should bind the family in the future. This was the view taken by the Government at the time, and also by both the Courts in India in this suit, of these documents, so far as they related to the inheritance of sons. On a remand by the Chief Court oral evidence of the custom was taken by the Commissioner. The evidence satisfied the Commissioner, and the Chief Court agreed with him, that the custom to exclude widows from a share of the inheritance was proved. The claim of the widow was therefore rejected. With respect to the sons the Commissioner's judgment is to this effect: he finds distinctly, upon the question which was referred to him by the judgment remanding the case, that legitimate ignoble sons would take a share with noble sons; that there is no distinction as to the right to inherit between the sons of noble and ignoble wives. But in the course of his judgment he finds an issue to be proved, which does not appear to have been referred to him. He says this: "They agree"—that is, the dustur-ul-amals and the oral evidence agree—"that illegitimate sons of ignoble mothers, though recognized as sons, got no share." Their Lordships have been referred to the evidence on which this last finding rests; but the learned counsel for the appellant did not prosecute the consideration of it after a few witnesses had been referred to, because it soon appeared that the evidence afforded no foundation [427] upon which the learned Commissioner could properly base his finding, and the Judges of the Chief Court have distinctly come to a different conclusion upon it. His finding that legitimate ignoble sons get a share with noble sons was, however, affirmed by the two Judges of the Chief Court, who both came, after a very careful review of the evidence, to the conclusion that no custom prevails in this family which varies the ordinary rules of the Mahomedan law with regard to the rights of sons to inherit.

An attempt has been made to show that the family were originally Hindus and converts to the Mahomedan faith, and upon this foundation a suggestion has been raised that Hindu customs were preserved in the family; but the foundation for this suggestion entirely fails. Not only was the fact of the family having been at one time Hindus not proved, but it was negatived by some of the witnesses. Even if the fact had been proved, it would only have lent probability to the suggestion that some Hindu laws had been preserved in the family as custom. It must still have been proved that they were in fact so preserved and acted upon; and, as already stated, the proof of the existence of any custom, so far as the present suit is concerned, entirely failed, except as to the widow's right to share. It is to be observed also, that there is evidence that the late Nawab was himself a strict Mahomedan. The rights of the minor plaintiffs have therefore to be determined by the rules of Mahomedan law as applicable to the facts of the case.

The undisputed facts of the case are, that Mussanut Lalli was originally a slave girl in the late Nawab's house, and at one time acted as a servant in it. She lived in the house up to the time of the Nawab's death, and beyond question the Nawab cohabited with her, and the two minor plaintiffs were born in his house, and remained in it up to the time of his death. Those facts are undisputed.

The questions which arise are,—first, whether there was a marriage between the late Nawab and Mussanut Lalli before the births of the plaintiffs, in which case, of course, both would be his legitimate sons; and, secondly, whether, if that be not established, there is proof of an acknowledgment and recognition [428] by the Nawab of the two plaintiffs as his sons, which would give them the status of sons and a title to inherit.

The direct evidence of the marriage is not very satisfactory, and is in some respects contradictory. Still there is positive evidence that a ceremony of marriage did take place before the births of the children. That direct evidence is met by the negative evidence of witnesses, who say that if such a ceremony had taken place they must have known of it. From this state of the evidence, if it stood alone, it would be difficult to affirm that a marriage had been established; but the evidence exists, and a question certainly arises, whether the treatment of the minor plaintiffs by the Nawab as his sons, to be hereafter adverted to, and the acknowledgments he made respecting them, do not afford such a strong presumption of marriage as to entitle the testimony of the witnesses who speak to the marriage to credit which otherwise it would not have possessed. Their Lordships, however, do not think it necessary to decide the case upon the ground that an actual marriage is proved. The Commissioner of Lahore has found against the marriage. The two Judges of the High Court certainly do not find against it. The inclination of Mr. Justice BOULNOIS's opinion was that it was not proved, whilst the inclination of Mr. Justice LINDSAY's opinion was the other way; they therefore did not find against the marriage, though they have not affirmed it. Their Lordships also do not find it necessary to pronounce a distinct opinion upon the question whether the marriage, in fact, took place, as they think the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed upon the ground that acknowledgments of them as his sons by the Nawab have been proved.

The evidence of the acknowledgment of the elder son, Rustam, is extremely strong. It rests not only on oral testimony, but on documents, one of which is almost conclusive of the question. It seems that Rustam was born six or seven years before his father's death. His brother Umar was born shortly before his death,—the precise time is not ascertained,—probably about a year, or a little more: but it is not possible to arrive at the time with any exactness.

With regard to Rustam, it is shown that he was treated by [429] the Nawab as a legitimate son would be. He was often taken by his father on visits to the houses of Mr. Warburton, a native of India, but educated by an Englishman and a Government official, and of Major Parsons, another British officer, both living in the neighbourhood. The Nawab appears to have introduced Rustam as his son, and the evidence is that he treated him with greater affection than his eldest son Azmat. Not only in the Nawab's house was Rustam put forward as his son, but he was taken on the above-mentioned and other visits as if he were a legitimate son. He was always dressed as a legitimate son would be. Mr. Warburton proved that he "used frequently to see Rustam going about well dressed, mounted on an elephant, and attended by servants." He also says he was extremely like the Nawab. A great deal of other evidence was given to this effect. Besides evidence of this kind, when Rustam's education was about to be commenced, the Bismillah ceremony was performed. There is distinct evidence of the performance of that ceremony, not only by the native gentlemen who attended, but by Mr. Warburton and Major Parsons, who were also invited and attended. Mr. Warburton appears to have been an intimate friend of the late Nawab; he is a witness whose credit is entirely unshaken, and appears to be in every respect an unimpeachable witness. At this Bismillah ceremony Rustam was introduced and treated as the son of the Nawab. It is scarcely conceivable this ceremony would have been performed if he had been an illegitimate son. With regard to the evidence of the defendant's witnesses as to the manner in which these children were treated, their Lordships think that it is entirely unworthy of credit. In opposition to the strong and credible evidence given by the witnesses for the plaintiffs, it is attempted to be shown that these children were, in fact, the children of a slave girl allowed to have promiscuous intercourse with men outside the Nawab's house, and whose fathers, some of the witnesses say, it was impossible to know. This evidence, and that which seeks to prove that the boys were treated as such children would probably be treated, seems utterly unworthy of credit.

In addition to the oral evidence which has been mentioned, a declaration, important in itself, and as affording confirmation of [430] the oral testimony of the plaintiffs, is found in the report which the Nawab made to the Government respecting the arms belonging to his family. In a letter to the Deputy Commissioner of Kurnal, dated the 7th March 1866, the year before he died, is a schedule in which the arms held by himself and the members of his family are described. The letter is :—“ After expressing a desire for an interview which has abundant advantages, and is the best of the objects, be it known to your splendid and kind mind, on the arrival of your kind note a list of my personal arms is annexed to this friendly letter, as required in Commissioner's circular dated 8th January 1866 ” In that list there are columns with the names of the possessors and the descriptions of the arms. First there is ‘ Personal,’ that is himself; and he returns 11 native swords, 1 shield, muskets, pistols, and other arms. Then follows :—“ The Nawab's son Azinat Ali Khan ” (the appellant), 4 native swords, 1 shield, 2 double muskets and so on. Then follows :—“ The Nawab's son, Rustam Ali Khan ” (the respondent), 4 native swords, 1 shield, 2 double muskets, and so on. In this document the Nawab describes Rustam as “ the Nawab's son, Rustam All Khan,” and returns exactly the same number of arms as belonging to him as belonged to his eldest son. He therefore not only calls him his son, but treats him as he treated Azmat, his undoubted legitimate son. Their Lordships think that this acknowledgment in a formal report to the Government is almost conclusive as regards Rustam.

Undoubtedly the evidence of acknowledgment and recognition of Umar, the youngest son, is, as may naturally be expected, much less than that in the case of the elder brother. Considering the short period that elapsed between his birth and the death of the Nawab, it is not surprising that a paucity of evidence appears; but their Lordships think that enough is shown in the case of Umar also to satisfy them, as it satisfied the Judges of the Chief Court of the Punjab, that he was acknowledged and treated as a son.

(His Lordship then went through the direct evidence on this point, continuing thus) :—

It is also important to observe that Umar received the titular [431] name of Khan, as his brother Rustam had, a name which it is not likely the father would have bestowed upon any but his acknowledged and legitimate sons. Those who advised the appellant were apparently aware of the importance attached to this name, for they endeavoured to show that it had not been given to the boys until after the death of the Nawab; that is distinctly disproved by the evidence in the case, and it appears that they always bore that name.

The evidence of Major Parsons is not so distinct as that of Mr. Warburton. He says, to the best of his recollection, the Nawab spoke himself to him about the second boy. Besides this testimony, there is general evidence that both boys were treated by the Nawab as his sons.

Undoubtedly an acknowledgment of each son must be proved. In the actual circumstances of this case, it is highly probable that when the Nawab had recognized the elder son of Mussanul Lalli, he would also acknowledge the younger, and this probability gives support to the evidence in the case of the latter. There seems to be no reason for his making a distinction between them.

Their Lordships have already adverted to the unsatisfactory character of the evidence given on the part of the defendant. The only piece of evidence entitled to weight is the genealogical tree which has been produced by him.

That tree professes to be a pedigree of the Nawab's family, which was returned to the Government. The genealogy begins, at no distant period, with the father and uncles of the late Nawab. He was asked for a genealogy of his family. Undoubtedly, in the paper which has been produced, there is, under his own name, an entry of two sons only, Rahmat Ali Khan, 'deceased,' and Azmat Ali Khan; there is no mention of Rustam, though Rustam must have been born at the time that this pedigree was drawn up. It is, however, to be observed that the document produced is a copy only, and that the original has not been produced or satisfactorily accounted for. There may be considerable question whether the copy was admissible in evidence; but whether admissible or not, it is a copy only, and there is an entry after the name of Rahmat Ali of his death—Rahmat Ali Khan, [432] 'deceased.' Now at the time that this pedigree was prepared Rahmat Ali Khan was not dead; and therefore the document must have been altered, at least to that extent after it had been originally prepared. It is possible that when the Nawab was called upon for his genealogy he might have thought it sufficient to give the genealogy only down to himself. But the document itself, the original not being produced, containing an entry which could not have been in a genuine original, cannot be safely relied upon. Even if an original pedigree had been produced without the name of Rustam, though it would no doubt be a piece of evidence favourable to the view of the appellant, and perhaps strongly favourable to that view, it would not be sufficient to outweigh the positive evidence of the acknowledgment of Rustam by the Nawab.

Their Lordships, therefore, have come to the conclusion that an acknowledgment by the Nawab of both the minor plaintiffs as his sons has been proved.

The only question which remains on this part of the case is as to the effect of these acknowledgments. Both the Judges of the Chief Court, who have given learned and careful judgments, have gone very fully into the authorities upon this question. Their Lordships, however, are relieved from a discussion of those authorities, inasmuch as the rule of Mahomedan law has not been disputed at the bar, viz., that the acknowledgment and recognition of children by a Mahomedan as his sons gives them the status of sons, capable of inheriting as legitimate sons, unless certain conditions exist, which do not occur in this case. That rule of the Mahomedan law has not been questioned at the bar. In this case we have not only the treatment of the plaintiffs by the Nawab as his sons, from which, under certain circumstances, an acknowledgment may be presumed, but we have actual acknowledgments of them. It has been decided in several cases that there need not be proof of an express acknowledgment, but that an acknowledgment of children by a Mahomedan as his sons may be inferred from his having openly treated them as such. The question whether the acknowledgment should be presumed or not must of course depend on the circumstances of each particular case in which [433] it arises. The only authority, after the course which the argument has taken, to which their Lordships think it necessary to refer, is the case of Ashrafud Dowlati Ahmed Hossein Khan v. Hyder Hossein Khan (11 Moore's I. A., 94, see p. 113). In that case their Lordships say:—"The presumption of legitimacy from marriage follows the bed, and whilst the marriage lasts the child of the woman is taken to be the husband's child: but this presumption follows the bed, and is not antedated by relation. An antenuptial child is illegitimate. A child born out of wedlock is illegitimate; if acknowledged he acquires the status of legitimacy." The rule of the Mahomedan law as to acknowledgment is so affirmed in this judgment. "When, therefore, a child really illegitimate by birth becomes legitimated, it is, by force of an acknowledgment, express or implied, directly proved or presumed. These presumptions are inferences of fact." This last passage appears to refer to cases where an express acknowledgment is not proved, and has to be presumed from other facts. "They are built on the foundations of the law, and do not widen the grounds of legitimacy by confounding concubinage and marriage." Those observations must be taken with reference to the facts of that case; and in that case it appeared that there was a 'mootta' marriage after the birth of the child. There was no acknowledgment, and the treatment of the child was equivocal. Sometimes he was treated as a son and at others not; and indeed, by a deed executed by the father for that purpose, he was distinctly repudiated by him as his son. In that case it was decided that, in the absence of express acknowledgment, the evidence was insufficient either to raise the presumption of a marriage which in point of time would cover the birth of the child, or of an acknowledgment. The facts and questions in that case were very complicated, and some of the passages in the judgment referred to by the Judges below can only be understood by referring to the questions to which they were addressed. However, there really is no dispute about the law; and their Lordships in this case have not to lay down any new principles of law, but only to apply a well-established principle to the facts.

[434] The remaining point relates to a part of the property which is sought to be recovered. It appears that some part of the property in suit consisted of land which was assumed in the Courts below to be held under a grant from the Crown on terms which brought it within the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871). Their Lordships have not been referred very specially to the facts, nor was that necessary in the view taken by them of the construction of this Act; they are therefore not to be understood to affirm the assumption upon which the Courts below acted, that the grant in question is a grant within the Pensions Act. They give no opinion upon that point; but, assuming that the Court was right in considering the grant as one within the Pensions Act, their Lordships think it came to a correct decision in holding that, when the certificate mentioned in the Act was obtained, the suit might proceed. It seems that, after the judgment which disposed of the principal questions in the case had been delivered, final judgment was suspended upon an objection that no certificate had been obtained. Before the case was finally disposed of and the final decree passed, the certificate was obtained and delivered to the Court. The Pensions Act, by s. 4, provides that: "Except as hereinafter provided, no Civil Court shall entertain any suit relating to any pension or grant of money or land-revenue conferred or made by the British or any former Government." Then the sixth section is, "A Civil Court, otherwise competent to try the same, shall take cognizance of any such claim upon receiving a certificate from such Collector." It is contended that the suit ought to have been dismissed altogether as regards the property held under the grant, because no certificate was obtained before the commencement of the suit; but their Lordships think that the Court, although up to a certain time they had proceeded, apparently without objection, with the suit without a certificate, was justified in going on with the suit when it was received. The Statute says that: "A Civil Court otherwise competent to try it"—this Court was competent to try it—"shall take cognizance of any such claim upon receiving a certificate from such Collector." When the Court received the certificate it was bound to take cognizance of the [435] claim; and it seems to their Lordships that, finding an existing suit when it received the certificate, it might take cognizance of the claim in that suit. The decision on that point, therefore, seems to their Lordships to be correct.

The result is, that the decree of the Chief Court of the Punjab should be affirmed; and their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to that effect. The appellants will pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Prosecution for false charge—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 211—

“Sanction to prosecute”—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 468.

A Magistrate should not direct a prosecutor to be put upon his trial under s. 211† of the Penal Code without first giving him an opportunity of obtaining a judicial enquiry into the charge originally preferred by him.

The sanction to prosecute, contemplated in s. 468 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is not a direction to prosecute, but is a permission granted to a private person to exercise his own unfettered discretion as to whether he will take proceedings or not.

* Criminal Motion, No. 28 of 1881, against the order of A. Weekes, Esq., Magistrate of Puneuh, dated the 13th July 1881.

†[Sec. 211 :—Whoever, with intent to cause injury to any person, institutes or causes to be instituted any criminal proceeding against that person, or

False charge of offence knowingly makes with intent to injure, falsely charges any person with having committed an offence, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such proceeding or charge against that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both ; and if such criminal proceeding be instituted on a false charge of an offence punishable with death, transportation for life, or imprisonment for seven years or upwards, shall be punishable with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.]

ON the 25th May 1881, a complaint was made by one Chumroo Mondul, to a Joint Magistrate, whilst on tour, that a dacoity had taken place in the house of his brother, Giridhari. The Joint Magistrate proceeded to the spot and held a preli-[436]minary enquiry in his executive capacity under s. 115 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, at which Chumroo stated that he recognized one Uchit Jha and others amongst the dacoits. On the 28th May, the Joint Magistrate forwarded, for information, to the District Magistrate and Superintendent of Police, a memorandum of his proceedings. On the same day, the District Magistrate recorded his concurrence in the proceedings of the Joint Magistrate; but no final orders were passed on the case. Subsequently, one Badhri Dosadh was suspected of being implicated in the dacoity, and Giridhari Mondul was sent for to identify certain property found with Badhri Dosadh. He, however, failed to identify the property, and Badhri was discharged. On the 13th July, the District Magistrate, without examining either the complainant or his witnesses, and without entering into any judicial enquiry into the charge of dacoity against Uchit Jha, passed the following order:—"Uchit Jha to bring a case under s. 211 of the Penal Code." And on the 30th August 1881, the Magistrate directed the District Superintendent of Police to conduct the prosecution. The Monduls applied to the High Court under s. 297 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to have the order of the 13th July set aside, and asked for an order that the dacoity-case should be proceeded with, and that the case under s. 211 against them might be postponed till the dacoity-case had been disposed of.

Mr. Wood and Baboo Anund Gopal Palit, for the Petitioners, contended, that the Court had no right to pass the order without first proceeding with the charge against Uchit Jha; that Giridhari Mondul had not mentioned that he recognized Uchit Jha at the dacoity; and that Uchit Jha had never been put upon his trial or even summoned to appear in Court.

Mr. Kilby for the Crown.

The Judgment of the Court (PONTIFEX and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—The facts of this case are as follows: On the morning of the 25th May last, Mr. Pratt, the Joint Magistrate of Purneah, was riding along in a portion of the district, [437] when one Chumroo Mondul came to him, and complained that a dacoity had been committed on the previous night in the house of his brother, Giridhari Mondul. Mr. Pratt immediately proceeded to the spot, and made, what we must assume to be, a preliminary enquiry under the provisions of s. 115 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, or what is commonly called a local investigation, conducted, not in his judicial capacity as Joint Magistrate, but in his administrative or executive capacity as a Police-officer. To this conclusion we are led by several facts. In the first place, there is no record of the examination of witnesses taken down in the manner directed by the Code of Criminal Procedure for proceedings of a judicial nature. In the second place, Mr. Pratt did not proceed to dispose definitively of the case of dacoity; and this he would probably have done if he had been acting as a judicial officer. In the third place, he forwarded, by a memorandum of the 28th May, his proceedings to the Magistrate and the District Superintendent of Police for information; and this is only consistent with the supposition that Mr. Pratt conceived himself to be acting in his administrative or executive capacity, and as a Police-officer. It appears that the local enquiry made by the Joint Magistrate extended over the days intervening between and including the 25th and 28th May. On the 28th May, Mr. Pratt recorded, with some care, the investigation which he had made, and the conclusion to which he was led; and, as has been already observed, this record was forwarded to the Magistrate of the district. Upon the same day, Mr. Weekes, the Magistrate, recorded certain observations, expressing his concurrence generally with the conclusion at which the Joint Magistrate had arrived, but no final orders were passed upon the case. It would then appear that, in the course of some other proceedings held before the Police or before some of the magisterial authorities, one Badhri Dosadh made certain statements as to having taken part in certain dacoities, and having received, and being in possession of, certain property taken in those dacoities. Giridhari Mondul, in whose house the dacoity of the 25th May is said to have taken place, was upon this sent for, together with certain members of his family, and they were examined by the [438] Joint Magistrate on the 13th June. These witnesses did not, however, identify any of the property produced by Badhri Dosadh as property taken on the night of the 25th May. The Joint Magistrate, after examining Giridhari Mondul and the members of his family, released Badhri Dosadh on fifty rupees bail; and by an order, dated the 28th June, he transferred the case of Badhri Dosadh to the District Magistrate for orders. On the 6th July, the District Magistrate, Mr. Weekes, took up the case, and made the order that Badhri Dosadh be released from bail. Meanwhile it would seem that no judicial proceedings were being taken upon the original charge of dacoity made by Chumroo Mondul to the Joint Magistrate on the morning of the 25th May, and no final orders had been passed upon the report of the preliminary enquiry submitted by the Joint Magistrate, Mr. Pratt. We then find that, on the 13th July, the District Magistrate took up this case and made the following order:—"Nunhoo directed to bring a case under s. 211 of the Penal Code." Nunhoo is an alias for one Uchit Jha, whose name had been given by Chumroo Mondul and Giridhari Mondul as that of a person recognized by his voice or otherwise at the time of the dacoity. There is nothing on the papers before us to show that Uchit Jha was arrested, or that any enquiry of a judicial nature, conducted with judicial formalities, was ever made into the charge of dacoity made against this Uchit Jha and certain other persons who had been mentioned by Chumroo Mondul and his brother Giridhari Mondul as persons present at the time of the dacoity. It has been repeatedly pointed out by this Court that it is not a fair course towards a prosecutor to direct him to be placed upon his trial under s. 211 of the Penal Code without having first given him an opportunity of having a judicial enquiry into the charge originally preferred by him. In the present case, it is clear that Chumroo Mondul and his brother Giridhari had no opportunity of producing witnesses and establishing before an officer acting in a magisterial capacity the charge of dacoity which had originally been made on the morning of the 25th May. We think that, under these circumstances, if the order of the 13th July, which [439] has been already quoted, was intended as a sanction under s. 468* of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it was made without proper discretion, and in opposition to what has been repeatedly laid down by this Court as the proper course to be pursued in these matters. But, upon a full consideration of the case, it appears to us that this order cannot properly be considered as a sanction within the meaning of s. 468. There had been no judicial proceeding, and hundred and ninety-three, one hundred and ninety-four, one hundred and ninety-five, one hundred and ninety-six, one hundred and ninety-nine, two hundred, two hundred and five, two hundred and six, two hundred and seven, two hundred and eight, two hundred and nine, two hundred and ten, two hundred and eleven, or two hundred and twenty-eight of the Indian Penal Code, when such offence is committed before or against a Civil or Criminal Court, shall not be entertained in the Criminal Courts, except with the sanction of the Court before or against which the offence was committed, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate.]

the offence, if any, committed under s. 211 was not committed before or against a Court. It has been decided that, in the case of a complaint made to the Police, the sanction required by s. 468 is not necessary. It is further to be observed that, if this order of the 13th July was intended as a sanction under s. 468, it is expressed in an improper manner: "Nunhoo directed to bring a case under s. 211." In the mofussil the effect of such a direction upon a person in complainant's position of life would be that he would feel himself constrained to carry out the direction so conveyed to him by the Chief Magistrate of the District. The sanction contemplated by s. 468 is something very different from this, inasmuch as it leaves a private prosecutor free to exercise his own unfettered discretion as to whether he will proceed or not. We find a further order, dated the 30th August, in which the Magistrate instructs the District Superintendent of Police to direct the prosecution. We cannot suppose that the District Magistrate intended to assume in this case the functions of a public prosecutor, or that the prosecution under s. 211 was intended to be inaugurated and conducted as a prosecution on behalf of Government. This being so, we are of opinion that this further order that the District Superintendent should direct the prosecution was calculated to prejudice still further the accused persons against whom Nunhoo was directed to bring a charge under s. 211. The proceedings in the dacoity-case not being proceedings before a Court, no sanction under s. 468 was requisite; and regarding these proceedings as proceedings merely before a Police-officer, we think that the order of the Magistrate directing Nunhoo to institute a case under s. 211, and the further order directing the District Superintendent of Police to take charge of that prosecution, were made without jurisdiction, and must be [440] set aside. We have been asked further to direct that the private prosecution instituted by Uchit Jha should determine, or, at least, that the proceedings taken upon that prosecution should be stayed until there has been a judicial enquiry into the charge of dacoity. We think that we have not jurisdiction to make an order to this effect; and that if Uchit Jha is disposed, at his own instance, to proceed with the charge under s. 211 of the Penal Code, we cannot interfere to prevent him. At the same time, we think it proper to observe, that if Chumroo Mondul and Girdhari Mondul desire that the original charge of dacoity should be judicially enquired into, it is not competent to the District Magistrate to refuse a judicial enquiry into that charge as originally made on the morning of the 25th May.

Order set aside.

Appeal, Abatement of—Death of appellant—No application for substitution—Application by respondent for costs—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 582, 368, 365, and 366.

Per MITTER, J. (GARTH, C. J., dubitante)—Notwithstanding that s. 582 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not expressly direct that the word 'plaintiff' occurring in s. 366 shall be held to include an 'appellant,' yet the power conferred by s. 366 on the Court of original jurisdiction to award costs against the estate of a deceased plaintiff, may, by analogy, be taken to be conferred on the Appellate Court.

Lakshmbai v. Balkrishna (I. L. R., 4 Bom., 654) followed.

THIS was a suit for possession of certain lands, which was dismissed by the Court of First Instance, but determined in [441] favour of the plaintiff in the lower Appellate Court. The defendant appealed to the High Court, and, pending the hearing of the appeal, died; but no application having been made by her legal representative to be substituted in her place, the appeal abated.

Baboo Bungshedhur Sen for the Respondent applied for costs.

Baboo Pran Nath Pandit, who had been the deceased defendant's pleader, contended that the Court had no power to award any costs to the respondent as against the representative of the deceased Appellant.

The following Judgments were delivered :—

Mitter, J.—In this appeal the appellant having died, and no application having been made by her legal representative to be substituted in her place, the appeal will abate.

A question has been raised as to the power of this Court to award any costs to the respondent, who, there cannot be any doubt, is justly entitled to them. I am of opinion that we have the power to award to the respondent the costs of this appeal, to be recovered from the estate of the deceased appellant.

Section 582 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to the following effect :—The Appellate Court shall have, in appeals under this chapter, the same powers, and shall perform, as nearly as may be, the same duties, as are conferred and imposed by this Code on Courts of original jurisdiction in respect of suits instituted under Chap. V; and in ss. 363 and 365, the word 'plaintiff' shall be held to include an 'appellant.'

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 809 of 1880, against the decree of J. G. G. Campbell, Esq., Acting Judge of Moorshedabad, dated the 16th January 1880, reversing the decree of Baboo Rahi Chundra Gangooly, Munsif of Azimgunge, dated the 7th March 1879.

Although s. 366 is not expressly mentioned here, the power conferred by it on the Court of original jurisdiction to award costs against the estate of the deceased plaintiff is, in my opinion, also conferred on the Appellate Court by the last part of the section cited above. This view is in accordance with a decision of the Bombay High Court in the case of Lakshuibai v. Balkrishna (I. L. R., 4 Bom., 654).

I would, therefore, award to the respondent the costs of this appeal, to be recovered from the estate of the deceased appellant.

[442] Garth, C.J.—I have some doubt whether, in the absence of express legislative authority, we have any right to make an order for costs as against the representatives of the appellant, who are no parties to the record.

Section 582 of the Code has provided, that, in ss. 363 and 365* the word 'plaintiff' shall be held to include 'an appellant.' If the same provision had been made with regard to s. 366†, all difficulty in this case would have been removed; but the express mention of ss. 363 and 365, and the omission of s. 366, would rather lead to the supposition that the Legislature did not intend a respondent to have his costs under such circumstances. As my learned brother, however, is disposed to put a more liberal interpretation upon s. 582, and as the view which he takes appears to be supported by the Bombay High Court in the case to which he has referred, I shall not differ from him on this occasion, more especially as, in my opinion, the justice of the case is entirely in accordance with that view.

We trust that the omission, if it is one, may be supplied in the Bill to amend the Civil Procedure Code, which is now before the Legislative Council.

The appeal will, therefore, abate, and the respondent will have his costs in this Court.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 141—Suit by reversioners after death of Hindu widow.

In 1846, a widow, under an ikarnama, made over to her brother-in-law certain properties formerly belonging to the estate of one Luchmi Narain, her late husband. The widow died in 1878. In March 1879, a suit was [443] brought by the daughters of Luchmi Narain to recover the properties formerly belonging to their father, from the hands of certain vendees.

Held, that the suit by the reversioners was not barred under art. 141 of Act XV of 1877, there having been no possession adverse to the widow, by dispossession for more than twelve years, the widow's cause of action having ceased when she entered into the ikarnama in 1846, and gave up her right to the property; nor, under sched. II of Act XV of 1877, could the right of the plaintiffs be said to be barred by any Act repealed thereby, inasmuch as art. 142 of Act IX of 1871 prescribes the same period of limitation as is prescribed in art. 141 of Act XV of 1877; and that although, under Act XIV of 1859, repealed by Act IX of 1871, it was decided in Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Guru Persad Dass (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 1008; S. C., 9 W. R., 505), that adverse possession which bars a widow also bars the reversionary heirs, yet the exception laid down in that case would be applicable, and would save limitation.

THE plaintiffs, the daughters of one Luchmi Narain, stated that their father and Ramjoy Narain were brothers belonging to a Mitakshara family, but that they were separate in food and estate. Luchmi Narain died in 1842, leaving a widow, Golab Koer, and two daughters; after the death of Luchmi Narain, Ramjoy, on the 25th January 1846, entered into an ikramnama with Golab Koer, by which the latter relinquished to Ramjoy the whole of the property left by her husband, retaining only a one-anna share in a certain mouza in lieu of maintenance. Ramjoy, in 1847 and 1848, sold the properties so made over to him to the defendants.

On the 9th April 1878, Golab Koer died, and the plaintiffs, on the 29th March 1879, brought this suit to recover from the defendants the properties which had belonged to their father, and asked that the ikramnama made by their mother, who had only a life-interest in the property, might be set aside.

The defendants contended, that the two brothers had never separated, and that Ramjoy, on the death of Luchmi Narain, succeeded by survivorship to his brother's property; and that the suit was barred by limitation, Ramjoy and his vendees having held adversely to Golab Koer.

The Subordinate Judge found that, on the death of Luchmi Narain, Ramjoy had taken possession of the properties to the exclusion of the widow, and that the brothers were members [444] of a joint Hindu family at the time of the death of Luchmi Narain; that there was no proof that Golab Koer was ever in possession of the property; and that the possession of Ramjoy and his vendees had been adverse; and he, therefore, dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation as well as on the merits.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. C. Gregory and Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose for the Appellants.

Mr. Twidale and Baboo Amarendronath Chatterjee for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by

Mitter, J.—The only question of fact that we have to decide in this appeal is, whether the two brothers, Luchmi Narain Singh and Ramjoy Narain Singh, at the time of the death of the former, which took place in the year 1842, were members of a joint Hindu family. (After stating the facts, and finding on the evidence that Luchmi Narain and Ramjoy Narain were not members of a joint Hindu family at the time of the death of Luchmi Narain, his Lordship continued):

This brings us to the question, whether, notwithstanding our finding that the brothers Luchmi Narain and Ramjoy Narain were separate, the plaintiffs' suit must fail on the ground of limitation. The finding of the lower Court upon this point is, that, on the death of Luchmi Narain, the whole of the family property came into the possession of Ramjoy Narain to the exclusion of the widow of the former, viz., Golab Koer. We are not prepared upon the evidence to dissent from this finding, although it seems to us that the possession of Ramjoy as regards Luchmi Narain's share was far from undisputed.

In fact, in our opinion, the disturbed state of possession and the constant squabbles which must have ensued between the widow of Luchmi Narain and her brother-in-law, resulted in the ikramnama of the year 1846; but, in our opinion, this finding did not warrant the lower Court in holding that the plaintiffs' claim was barred by limitation. This suit was instituted [446] on the 29th March 1879; it is consequently governed by the now law of limitation, viz., Act XV of 1877. Under art. 141 * of the 2nd schedule, a suit of this description would not be barred unless it was brought more than twelve years from the date of the death of the last female entitled to the succession. In this case, according to our finding on the question of separation, Golab Koer was the legal heir of Luchmi Narain, and the plaintiffs in this case are entitled to the possession of the property left by Luchmi Narain on the death of the widow Golab Koer, and admittedly her death took place within twelve years from the date of suit. Therefore it is quite clear that, under art. 141 of the Limitation Act, the suit would not be barred unless under the second para. of s. 2 the right of the plaintiffs had been barred under Act IX of 1871, or any other Act repealed by the latter Act. Now, under Act IX of 1871, art. 142, 2nd schedule, the same period of limitation is provided as in the present Act.

Therefore this suit would not have been barred even if the Act of 1871 had been applicable. Therefore we have to consider next, whether the right of the plaintiffs had been barred by any Act repealed by the Limitation Act of 1871. Now the Act which was repealed by the Limitation Act of 1871 was Act XIV of 1859. In the Full Bench Decision in the case of Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Gurn Persad Doss (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 1008; s. c., 9 W. R., 505), it was held, that, under Act XIV of 1859, adverse possession which barred the widow also barred the reversionary heir; but there was this exception laid down to the general proposition enunciated above, viz., that the same rule of law would not apply to alienations made by a Hindu widow while in possession of the estate. In a case like the last mentioned, it was held, that the cause of action to recover possession of properties improperly alienated by Hindu widows would accrue on the death of the widow. Now, in this case, taking the finding of the lower Court that Golab Koer was dispossessed on the death of her husband,—that is, in the year 1842,—as correct, there was no adverse possession by the dispossessor for more than twelve years. The cause of action which [446] accrued to her ceased to exist when she compromised the dispute between herself and her brother-in-law Ramjoy by the ikrarnama of 1846. Consequently, the present case, even under Act XIV of 1859, would come within the exception to the rule laid down by the Full Bench in the case cited above. The plaintiffs' claim cannot, therefore, be considered to have been barred by the law of limitation.

Upon all these grounds, we are of opinion that the decree of the lower Court in this case is not correct. We accordingly set it aside, and decree the plaintiffs' suit with costs in both Courts. The claim regarding mesne profits, under the circumstances of the case, is disallowed.

Appeal allowed.

Holloway.....Defendant

versus

Muddon Mohun Lall.....Plaintiff.*

Co-sharers—Indigo cultivation—Lease by one co-sharer—Landlord and tenant—Joint property—Estoppel.

A and B were joint owners of a certain piece of land. In the year 1874, A leased his share to the defendant for a term ending in October 1880, for the purpose of growing indigo. At the same time B leased his share to the defendant for the same purpose for a term ending in October 1881. A and B sold their shares to the plaintiff in the year 1879. In January 1881 plaintiff sued to prevent the defendant from growing indigo on the land and for khas possession, on the ground that the lease of A's share having expired, the defendant was not entitled to retain the land for the purpose of growing indigo under the lease given by B.

Held, that the plaintiff having by his own act become the owner of both shares, he could not as owner of one share exercise a right which he was precluded from exercising as owner of the other share ; and that the suit should have been dismissed.

THIS was a suit for khas possession. The land in dispute (about 650 bighas) had previously belonged to a joint family, [447] the members of which were Rughoobur Dyal Sahoo, Rughoonundun Lal Sahoo, and Lalji Sahoo, and had been held under them for the cultivation of indigo by the defendant from the year 1272 (1865-66). On the 4th of April 1874, Rughoobur Dyal gave a patta of his share, a five-annas share, to the defendant for a term ending the 15th of October 1880. At the same time the defendant received a patta from Rughoonundun Lal of his eight-annas share for a term ending the 15th of October 1880, or the 15th of October 1881, at the option of the lessee.

On the 3rd of September 1879, the shares of Rughoobur Dyal and Rughoonundun Lal were sold to the plaintiff, who, on the 30th September 1880, gave notice to the defendant to quit the land on the 15th of October 1880. On the 2nd of October 1880, Lalji Sahoo gave the defendant a lease of his share (a three-anna share), from the 14th of October 1880, for a term of seven years. The plaintiff brought the present suit on the 29th of January 1881.

It was contended in the Court of First Instance that, as the defendant was entitled to retain possession until the 15th of October 1881, under Rughoonundun Lal Sahoo's patta, the plaintiff could not claim khas possession of the land, though the term of Rughoobur Dyal's patta had expired. The same contention was raised with respect to Lalji Sahoo's patta. The Subordinate Judge said :—" Both these questions may be decided by the disposal of one of them, and it is this,—' whether a shareholder of an ijnali mouza has or has not any power of retaining khas possession of land which is not his khas khamat, or which is not acquired by him as dur-jote from a tenant having a right of occupancy, without the consent of the other shareholders.' This question will be clear from a perusal of the following precedents:—Stalkart v. Gopal Panday (12 B. L. R., 197; s.c., 20 W. R., 168) and Lloyd v. Mussamut Bibee Sogra (25 W. R., 313). From a perusal of these two decisions, it appears that the shareholder or his ticcadar has not the power to which allusion has been made above. The pleas which have been or can be taken by the present defendant for retaining the khas possession have been decided in Lloyd v. Mussamut Bibee Sogra (25 W. R., 313). The decision in Gobind Chunder [448] Ghose v. Ram Coomar Dey (24 W. R., 393) has been quoted on behalf of the defendant; but the spirit and real purport of that decision have been clearly explained in the decision in Lloyd v. Mussamut Bibee Sogra (25 W. R., 313), and that spirit and purport are not against the plaintiff's claim. Hence, it being disposed of that a shareholder or his ticcadar is not entitled to hold khas possession of any ijmal land in an ijmal mouza without the consent and permission of the other shareholders, both the arguments forwarded by the defendant's vakeel fall to the ground. Hence the defendant is not entitled to retain possession of the indigo field from the month of Kartick 1288 F. S., according to the conditions laid down in the ticca patta in respect of the five-annas share. It is clear that, had this share not been sold to the plaintiff, the maliks of the said share could institute a suit of this nature against the defendant, in which case this plea of the defendant could not be entertained, that, under the conditions of the pattas granted by other sharers, the defendant has a right to retain possession of the indigo field. It is also clear, that the plaintiff, by his purchase, has become the representative of those owners. Under such circumstances, if the plaintiff's suit, on the consideration of his being the representative of the maliks of the eight-annas share, is not tenable under the conditions of the patta in respect of the eight-annas share, there is no reason why it should not be maintained on the ground of the plaintiff being the representative of the maliks of the five-annas share. The plaintiff being the purchaser of the five-annas share, has acquired the right to ask the defendant to quit possession of the indigo cultivation from the 15th of October 1880. Hence, in the absence of the defendant's having any right of occupancy, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for the ejection of the defendant from khas possession of the indigo cultivation, and to prevent him from sowing therein either indigo or any other kind of crops; and that the said land should remain in a condition by which all the maliks and possessors of the mouza can be able to make a joint management and settlement of those lands." The learned Judge then gave the plaintiff a decree. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

[449] Mr. Branson and Mr. Sandel for the Appellant.

The Advocate-General (Mr. G. C. Paul and Mr. Twidale for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by

Cunningham, J. (who, having stated the facts above set out, continued):—The position of things is therefore as follows:—

The plaintiff has, by purchase, become lessor, as to an eight-anna interest of a lease by which the lessees are entitled to grow indigo till October 1881, and the lessor is bound to assent to indigo being grown. As to a five-anna interest, the plaintiff has become lessor of a lease by which the lessee's right of growing indigo extends only to 1880.

It is admitted that indigo can be grown on land, which is the subject of co-ownership, only by the consent of all the co-owners.

It is urged in appeal that the plaintiff being bound as lessor of the eight-annas interest to assent to the cultivation of indigo and receiving consideration for that assent, cannot, in his capacity as lessor of the five-annas interest refuse his assent, and invoke the aid of the Court to have the cultivation stopped, and this assent given in respect of the eight-annas interest rendered unavailing.

The Advocate-General, in support of the plaintiff's claim to exercise in one capacity a right which he has surrendered in another, has put a hypothetical case. Suppose, he says, that A and B are joint owners, and X gets a lease from A of his interest for Rs. 10,000. X then tries to get a lease from B, but fails, as B demands Rs. 15,000. A acquires B's interest. Then if this vesting of the two interests in one person would disentitle A, as representing B's interest, to object to cultivation, the result, he says, would be to confer on X for nothing the boon he was unable to procure from B except at a price of Rs. 15,000.

But it is argued, and we think with justice, with reference to this illustration, that though X is thus accidentally benefited by the union of A and B's interest, it would be a still greater anomaly if A, having for consideration given his assent to X, could by purchasing B's interest render that assent unavailing.

[450] The case of different and conflicting interest, the right to refuse and the obligation to assent being vested simultaneously in the same person, is not one which appears to have been dealt with in the recorded rulings of this Court, nor has any English authority, by the analogy of which our decision might proceed, been brought to our notice. We are obliged, therefore, to be guided by the general equities of the case: and it appears to us that the plaintiff, having by his own act become the owner of both leases, cannot equitably, under one of them, exercise a right which he is precluded from exercising under the other, and which would render the benefit conferred by the other unavailing.

We hold accordingly that the plaintiff cannot, as owner of the eight-annas interest, sue to stop the tenant's cultivation, because the lease has not expired, and that he cannot do so as owner of the five-annas, six gandas interest, because, though the lease has expired, and he would have, if this lease stood alone, a right to enforce its terms, it would be inequitable that he should in his capacity as owner of one interest in the estate do anything which would render his acts, as owner of another interest, abortive, and the advantages purchased by the tenant for valuable consideration practically valueless. We, therefore, allow the appeal, and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The 7th February, 1882.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 167, 466, 471—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872), ss. 445, 446, 453—Separate trials—Offences of the same kind—Amendment of charge.

The prisoner was committed for trial on fifty-five charges, including three charges under ss. 167, 466, and 471 of the Penal Code. At the trial before [451] the District Judge sitting with assessors, the Court informed the prisoner that the trial would be confined to the three charges last mentioned. The prisoner was convicted on these, but the Court allowed evidence to be adduced by the prosecution on all the remaining charges, and in respect of these the prisoner was acquitted. On appeal to the High Court,—

Held, that the District Judge should have exercised the powers conferred on him by ss. 145 and 146 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and then have proceeded to hold separate trials; that he should not have tried together the charges under ss. 167 and 466 of the Penal Code, as the offences were not of the same kind within the meaning of s. 453† of the Code of Criminal Procedure; but the convictions on these charges were upheld, as it did not appear that the prisoner had been prejudiced by the mode of trial adopted.

IN this case the prisoner, who had been committed for trial on fifty-five charges, was convicted of two offences under s. 167 of the Penal Code, and also under ss. 466 and 471, which he is said to have committed while accountant of the Judge's Court of Mymensingh. The first conviction related to a cheque for Rs. 405-9-6 of money on deposit in Court, drawn in favour of one Kisto Kant Ghose, as agent for Deno Nath Roy. As accountant, the prisoner had charge of all the books and papers connected with his department. He was bound to see, among other things, that the deposit registers were properly kept up, and, as a fact, most of the entries in these registers were in his handwriting. In connection with repayments his duties were as follows:—On receipt of the local Court's application, usually made by rubokari, he verified the item by looking at his register and made out a letter to the Accountant-General, asking him to sanction the repayments. When this officer's sanction was accorded, the prisoner referred to the rubokari to find the name of the payee. He then filled up the cheque, entered the payee's name in it, and having obtained the Judge's signature, delivered the documents to the person entitled to receive payment. All matters connected with these repayments were under the immediate control of the prisoner, were disposed of by him alone, and no other officer of the Court ever filled up the cheques or presented them for signature to the Judge. The charge against the prisoner in connection with the cheque was, that, with intent to injure, he framed this cheque in a manner which he knew to be [452] incorrect. The real payee's name was Koonja Kishore Laha, nephew of Makadassy, and instead of his name, the name of Kisto Kant Ghose, on behalf of Deno Nath Roy, was entered in the cheque. Looking to the fact that the prisoner always, as part of his duty, filled up the cheques,—that the entry containing the wrong payee's name was proved to be in his handwriting,—that Kisto Kant Ghose was a poor man, a mukhtar's mohurir, related to the prisoner and living with him,—and that the proceeds of this cheque were traced to the joint possessions of the peon and the prisoner, the High Court thought that there could not be any possible doubt of the prisoner having committed the offence of which he had been found guilty by the Court of Sessions.

Intimately connected with this portion of the case were the charges laid against the prisoner in regard to a document which purported to be a certified copy of a rubokari, dated the 8th of March 1880, requesting the District Judge to obtain sanction for the payment of a lapsed deposit. That this rubokari had been tampered with, the original schedule erased, and a new schedule entered, was not seriously denied: indeed, the marks of the erasure were plainly visible. But it was urged before the High Court that there was not sufficient evidence to bring the act home to the accused. But the writing in the schedule was sworn to be similar to that of the prisoner, the document was received from him, and the false entry was made only for the purpose of supporting the scheme for obtaining the money drawn by the cheque. The High Court thought this evidence sufficient to convict the prisoner of having forged the document; but as there was nothing to show he ever used it, their Lordships considered that the conviction under s. 471 of the Penal Code should be set aside. The last charge was based on a second cheque. It was similar to that laid on the cheque previously mentioned. The documents were of the same kind, and the evidence in support of both charges was almost identical. The High Court was of opinion that the prisoner had been properly convicted on this charge also.

Mr. A. M. Bose (with him Baboo Kally Churn Banerjee), [453] who appeared for the prisoner, argued that the prisoner had been prejudiced by the mode of trial adopted in the Sessions Court; that he had been tried upon charges under ss. 167, 466, and 471 of the Penal Code, which were not in respect of offences of the same kind (s. 452, Code of Criminal Procedure, Illus.); and that the Judge should have ordered the Government Pleader to select any items he wished and amend his charge under ss. 445 and 446 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The Advocate-General (Mr. G. C. Paul), who appeared for the Crown, said,—there had not been any irregularity committed, as the charges were of the same kind; and that even if there had been, the prisoner had clearly not been prejudiced—s. 167* of the Evidence Act.

Separate charges for distinct offences.

*[Sec. 152:—There must be a separate charge for every distinct offence of which any person is accused, and every such charge must be tried separately, except in the cases hereinafter excepted.]

Cur. ad. vult.

O'Kinealy, J. (who, having stated the facts of the case, the charges brought against the prisoner, and the decision of himself and MORRIS, J., on the merits, as above set out, continued):—We have had some trouble in dealing with this case, owing to the manner in which it has been tried by the lower Court. On the preliminary inquiry before the Deputy Magistrate, the proceedings were allowed to cover a very large number of transactions. The prisoner was committed for trial on fifty-five charges, and with other persons who were accused of having more or less assisted him in obtaining money from the Government treasury. Those irregularities were perceived by the Sessions Judge; but instead of exercising the powers conferred on him by ss. 445 and 446 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and then proceeding to hold separate trials, he adopted the somewhat unusual course of informing the prisoner that he would acquit him of all the charges except those already mentioned, and that to those the trial would be confined. Having come to that determination, he failed, unfortunately, to act up to his own convictions; and, under the excuse of giving Government an opportunity of appealing, if necessary, against the [454] acquittals on the other charges, he allowed evidence in regard to them to be adduced by the prosecution. On the other hand, it must be admitted that the Judge recorded the evidence bearing on the selected charges in a compact and succinct form, and it was in respect of them, and of them only, that the prisoner was examined and called upon to give any explanation. The selection, too, of those particular charges seems to have been the best that could have been made in favour of the prisoner. Both the cheques referred to transactions of the same date; so that this circumstance greatly facilitated the defence of the prisoner, where so much—indeed, we may say, his innocence or guilt—turned upon the state of his accounts. Moreover, the charges were confined to acts arising out of two, and only two, transactions of a similar kind, in which the prisoner succeeded in dishonestly and fraudulently obtaining Government money by means of false documents, and had he been tried at one trial, as he should have been, for obtaining the money, then all the evidence in connection with the present charges would have been properly admitted against him.

In this Court it has been contended on behalf of the prisoner, that he should have been tried separately for offences under ss. 167 and 466 of the Penal Code, and that he was prejudiced by the irregular manner in which the trial was held in the lower Court. In reply, the Advocate-General asserted that the charges under ss. 167 and 466 were of the same kind, and even if this were not so, still the prisoner had not shown how, or in what manner, he had been prejudiced by the irregularities which had occurred at the trial.

We are of opinion that offences under ss. 167 and 466 are not of the same kind as defined in s. 453 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. There are several points in which they differ. They are not even in the same chapter

* [Sec. 167 :—The improper admission or rejection of evidence shall not be ground of itself for a new trial or reversal of any decision in any case, if it shall appear to the Court, before which such objection is raised, that, independently of the evidence objected to and admitted, there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision, or that, if the rejected evidence had been received, it ought not to have varied the decision.]

No new trial for rejection or improper reception of evidence.

of the Code. Section 167 requires that the accused should be a public servant, but not that he should be actuated by any dishonest or fraudulent intention; while s. 466 requires the latter, but not the former. The offences seem to us, therefore, to be different, and not of the same kind, although the same individual may possibly commit both in the same transaction. But we are also of opinion that nothing has been brought to our notice which would [455] support the contention that the prisoner has been prejudiced in his defence by the proceedings in the lower Court. As we have already stated, the selection of the charges to be tried was made in the interest of the prisoner, and the transactions out of which they arose are of the same state and kind and only two in number. Moreover, no objection of this kind was pressed on the lower Court. We, therefore, confirm the convictions of the prisoner, except as to that for using a forged document, which we set aside. The sentences will stand, but instead of the third sentence being entered upon the two convictions,—viz., under ss. 466 and 471 of the Penal Code,—it will be entered upon s. 466 of the Penal Code only.

Convictions, except that under s. 471, upheld.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 998 of 1880, against the decree of R. F. Rampini, Esq., Officiating Judge of Dacca, dated the 12th March 1880, modifying the decree of Baboo Gunga Churn Sircar, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 30th April 1879.

† Appeal from Appellate Order, No. 160 of 1880, against the orders of R. F. Rampini, Esq., Officiating Judge of Dacca, dated the 12th and 24th February 1880, rejecting the memo. of appeal against the order of Baboo Gunga Churn Sircar, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 30th December 1879.

judgment obtained by the plaintiff, and the judgment-creditor at the same time agreed to release the judgment-debtor from arrest, and to take payment of the sum decreed to him by instalments. An order was passed by the Court embodying this arrangement.

The judgment-debtor, in contravention of this arrangement, preferred an appeal,—held, that the judgment-debtor having induced the decree-holder to believe, and having expressly undertaken that he would not prefer an appeal, and having by the representation and undertaking procured his own release from arrest, was estopped from acting contrary to his deliberate representation and undertaking.

[456] Section 28 of the Contract Act has no application to such an undertaking. Anant Dass v. Ashburner and Co. (1. L. R. 1 All., 267) followed.

THIS was a suit on a contract to supply 4,000 maunds of kajla rice. The plaintiff supplied to the defendant in all, at different dates, 3,181, maunds but the defendant refused to accept the rice, on the ground that it was not kajla. The plaintiff thereupon sold the rice elsewhere at a loss of Rs. 1,882, and brought this suit against the defendant to recover that sum with commission and interest, amounting in all to Rs. 2,920. The defendant contended that the plaintiff was not entitled to any compensation, inasmuch as the rice was not of the same quality as was mentioned in the contract. The Subordinate Judge, on the 30th April 1879, gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 2,037. Execution of this decree was taken out, and the defendant was arrested. On the 21st May 1879, the defendant presented to the Court a petition under which he bound himself not to appeal against the judgment of the 30th April 1879, and the decree-holder at the same time agreed to release the defendant from arrest and to take payment of his decree by instalments; and further agreed that he himself would not appeal against the portion of the claim for which he had failed. On the 30th December 1879, the Subordinate Judge passed an order giving effect to the arrangement entered into between the parties. The defendant appealed against this order, but his appeal was dismissed.

The defendant appealed against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 30th April 1879. The District Judge found that the appellant was not prevented from appealing by the agreement entered into between the parties set out in the petition of the 21st May 1879, and on the merits reversed in part the decision of the Subordinate Judge, disallowing to the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 1,057 out of the sum of Rs. 2,037 decreed to him.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, and the defendant also appealed against the order of the District Judge, dismissing an appeal against the order of the 30th December 1879.

[457] Baboo Mohiney Mohun Roy and Baboo Busunt Coomar Bose, for the appellant, contended, that the Court was bound by the compromise made between the plaintiff and defendant mentioned in the petition of the 21st May, and ought not to have allowed the appeal to be preferred.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Hari Mohun Chuckerbutty, for the respondent, contended, that s. 28 of the Contract Act made void all agreements entered into in restraint of legal proceedings, and that, therefore, the appeal preferred to the District Judge was in order.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—In this case one Baboo Protap Chunder Dass, the plaintiff, entered into an arrangement with Mr. Arathoon, the defendant, under which the former was to purchase rice on behalf of the latter, and was to receive one per cent. on all moneys actually advanced, and also a commission of one rupee eight annas of the transactions. After the execution of this agreement, rice was, on several occasions, purchased by the plaintiff and forwarded to the defendant. Disputes arose in consequence of its being alleged by the defendant that the rice so forwarded was not of a quality which had been contracted for. Other disputes, to which it is unnecessary to refer in detail, also arose in connection with consignments of rice and other matters concerned with the transactions had under the agreement; and the result was a suit by the plaintiff in which he claimed the sum of Rs. 2,920 odd. Upon the 30th of April 1879, he obtained, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca, a decree for a portion of the amount so claimed,—viz., Rs. 2,037 odd. Execution was taken out upon this decree, and the defendant was arrested. Upon his arrest an arrangement was made between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder, by which the decree-holder undertook to release the judgment-debtor from arrest without having him sent to jail, and to allow him time to pay the amount of the decree by instalments; and the judgment-debtor undertook not to appeal against the decree, while the decree-holder further undertook not to appeal in [468] respect of that portion of the claim for which he had failed. This agreement was at once acted upon by the decree-holder, who had the judgment-debtor released without being sent to jail. Subsequently, the judgment-debtor, in contravention of this agreement, appealed against the decree, and the first question, and indeed the only question, with which we have to deal upon this appeal is, whether, under the circumstances, the judgment-debtor could be allowed to carry on his appeal. The District Judge of Dacca decided that the agreement did not estop the judgment-debtor from appealing. In this view we are unable to concur. The case of Anunt Dass v. Ashburner and Co. (I. L. R., 1 All., 267) is very similar to the case now before us, and we concur in the view taken by the majority of the Judges in that case. We think that s. 28² of the Indian Contract Act has no application. We think that the judgment-debtor, having induced the decree-holder to believe, and having expressly undertaken that he would not prefer an appeal, and having by this representation and undertaking procured his own release from arrest, was estopped from acting contrary to his deliberate representation and undertaking.

* [Sec. 28 :—Every agreement, by which any party thereto is restricted absolutely from enforcing his rights under or in respect of any contract by the usual legal proceedings in the ordinary tribunals, or which limits the time within which he may thus enforce his rights, is void to that extent.]

Exception 1. This section shall not render illegal a contract, by which two or more persons agree that any dispute, which may arise between them in respect of any subject or class of subjects, shall be referred to arbitration and that only the amount awarded in such arbitration shall be recoverable in respect of the dispute so referred.

When such contract has been made a suit may be brought for its specific performance; and if a suit, other than for such specific performance, or for the recovery of the amount so awarded, is brought by one party to such contract against any other such party, in respect of any subject which they have so agreed to refer, the existence of such contract shall be a bar to the suit.

*Exception 2 :—*Nor shall this section render illegal any contract in writing, by which two or more persons agree to refer to arbitration any question between them which has already arisen, or affect any provision of any law in force for the time being as to references to arbitration.]

There are two other cases which, although not exactly in point to a certain extent, support the view which we take. The first is the case of Moonshee Ameer Ali v. Moharani Indurjeet Singh, (14 Moore's I. A., 203; s.c., 9 B.L.R., 460). In that case the appellant had undertaken not to appeal from the judgment of the High Court to Her Majesty in Council if the High Court would confine its judgment to a single point,—viz., the validity of a certain mokhtear-nama relied upon in the case. The High Court did accordingly confine its decision to this one point. The appellant afterwards preferred an appeal to the Privy Council upon the whole case; and the High Court having certified the fact of the undertaking made by the appellant, the Lords of the Privy Council were of opinion that the appeal had been brought in violation of good faith, and therefore ought not to be entertained. The other case is that of Raj Mohun Gossain v. Gour Mohun Gossain (8 Moore's I. A., 91; s.c., 4 W. R., P. C., 47). In that case the Privy Council expressed [459] a strong opinion that a decree of an Appellate Court obtained after a compromise of the matters in dispute was an adjudication obtained not only with great impropriety, but, in effect, by fraud.

Having regard to these authorities, it appears to us that the defendant did, by his conduct and by his petition of the 21st May 1879, estop himself from afterwards preferring an appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

But it is said that the agreement by which the defendant undertook not to appeal was an agreement obtained by duress. We have heard the defendant's own account of the transaction as given in his deposition, and it appears to us impossible to say that this agreement was obtained by duress. We think that it was an agreement made of his own free will, and that it ought to be strictly enforced against him, seeing that he obtained the immediate benefit of it by being released from arrest. In connection with the present case there is an appeal, No. 160, which is an appeal from the order of the District Judge rejecting, on the ground that it was not properly stamped, an appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, dated 30th December 1879. By that order the Subordinate Judge rejected certain objections raised by Arathoon, the defendant—objections which in fact raised the same question with which we have just dealt,—viz., the question of duress, and directed that the decree originally passed on the 30th April 1879 should be amended in accordance with the petition of the 21st May. We think it exceedingly doubtful whether any appeal would lie against the order of the Judge rejecting the petition of appeal, on the ground that it was not properly stamped; but the question is not really very material, because the substantial question raised upon this appeal to the Judge has been disposed of in dealing with the substantial appeal from the District Judge's decree. Appeal No. 998 of 1880 will, accordingly, be decreed with costs, and the Miscellaneous Appeal, No. 160 of 1880, will be dismissed without costs.

Appeal No. 998 allowed.

Appeal No. 160 dismissed.

Pran Nath Surma Jowardar.....Plaintiff

versus

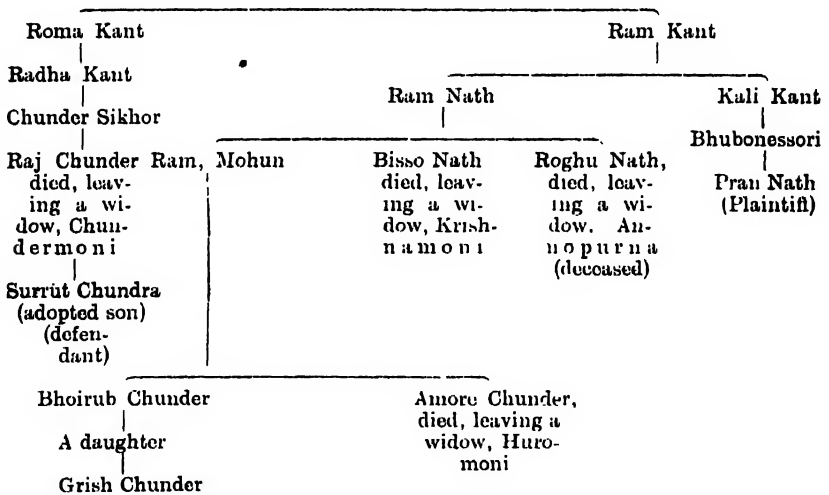

Surrut Chundra Bhuttacharjee.....Defendant.

Hindu Law—Inheritance—Bengal school.

According to the Bengal school of law, inheritance goes to him who offers oblations to the deceased, or to ancestors of the deceased, in which oblation the deceased would participate. Where more than one person offers such oblations, succession goes to him who offers oblations to the father of the deceased, and an heir who offers such an oblation, will be preferred to an heir who offers oblations to the grandfather and great grandfather of the deceased.

THIS was a suit to establish the plaintiff's right to inherit certain property, and for possession with mesne profits. The following genealogical table explains the position of the members of the family :—

RANGOPAL

[461] The plaintiff stated, that Roghu Nath died possessed of the property in question, and that his widow, Annopurna Dabi, remained in possession thereof as a party having a life-interest therein and as one entitled to offer the pindas ; that Annopurna Dabi died in Chait 1274 (March 1868), leaving the plaintiff, her husband's uncle's daughter's son, as the preferential heir ; that, at the date of Annopurna's death, there was no one who was a nearer heir than the plaintiff ; and that the property had devolved upon him as the heir of Roghu Nath.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2975 of 1879, against the decree of T. M. Kirkwood, Esq., Officiating Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 8th September 1879, reversing the decree of Baboo Kedar Nath Mozoomdar, Officiating Second Subordinate Judge of that District dated the 10th September 1878.

The defendant appeared by his guardian and adoptive mother Chundermoni, who, in her written statement, alleged, that the plaintiff, being an uncle's daughter's son, was not, according to the Dayabhaga, an heir; that her husband was the sapinda kinsman of Roghu Nath; and that she had, by her husband's permission, adopted Surrut Chundra. She further stated, that her husband, being Annopurna's reversionary heir, had, during her lifetime, entered on the property, Annopurna having sold the property to him in order to raise money to pay off debts contracted by Roghu Nath and to perform his shradh. On behalf of the defendant it was further alleged that Grish Chunder, the nephew's daughter's son of Roghu Nath, was entitled to succeed to the property in suit in preference to the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge found the plaintiff was Roghu Nath's legal heir, and gave him a decree. The District Judge reversed this decision, holding that Grish Chunder was a sapinda as well as the plaintiff, and that both of them took before any sakulya; but that Grish Chunder took before the plaintiff, notwithstanding that the plaintiff offered two oblations and Grish Chunder one, because Grish Chunder's oblation went to the deceased owner's father, while the plaintiff's oblations went to the deceased owner's grandfather and great grandfather.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Grish Chunder Chowdhry for the Appellant.

Baboo Gopal Lal Mitter and Baboo Behary Lal Mitter for the Respondent.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (PRINSEP and BOSE, JJ.):—

Bose, J.—The following genealogical tree shows the relationship of the plaintiff and Grish Chunder as heirs to the deceased Roghu Nath:—

The defendant belongs to another branch of the family, but defends his possession of the land in suit against the claim of Pran Nath by asserting that Grish Chunder, and not Pran Nath, is the proper heir.

This case raises a question of Hindu law as current in the Bengal school. The question is—Who is the preferential heir to Roghu Nath, deceased proprietor—his uncle's daughter's son, namely, Pran Nath, or his brother's son's daughter's son, namely, Grish Chunder?

The District Judge of Mymensingh, in appeal from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, has held, in an elaborate and well considered judgment, that Grish Chunder, offering oblations to the immediate ancestor, viz., the father of the deceased proprietor, should be preferred to Pran Nath, who offers oblations to his grandfather and great grandfather.

In second appeal, it is contended on behalf of Pran Nath, that the District Judge's view of the law is not correct; that the Dayabhaga does not mention the brother's son's daughter's son as an heir ; that the Dayakrama Sangraha expressly gives a position to the plaintiff, namely, to the uncle's daughter's son, as an heir, but does not give any to a brother's son's daughter's son ; that the dictum of Jagannath Tarkapanchanun, that the latter has a position in the line of heirs, because he offers oblations to the ancestor of the deceased proprietor, is no authority on the subject. Again it is contended, that, if instead of the daughter's son Grish Chunder had been the son's son of the brother's [463] son of the deceased, then he would not have been a sapinda, because he would occupy the position of a fifth in descent. Ultimately it is urged, that even if it be conceded that Grish Chunder is an heir, he, as offering oblations to one paternal ancestor of the deceased, cannot have preference over Pran Nath, who offers oblations to two such ancestors.

We are of opinion that the District Judge's view of the law is correct. Grish Chunder is undoubtedly an heir, when he offers one oblation to the father of the deceased in which the deceased participates. He satisfies the principle of the Bengal law, that inheritance goes to him who offers oblations to the deceased, or to an ancestor of the deceased, in which oblation deceased would participate. He may not be expressly mentioned as an heir either in the Dayabhaga or Dayakrama, but the list of heirs set forth in those treatises is not exhaustive, as has been held in Guru Gobind Shaha Mandal v. Anand Lal Ghose (5. B. L. R., 15). He clearly comes within the principle upon which that list has been prepared, and which must be applied to complete it. The Dayabhaga does not mention the brother's daughter's son as an heir, but, on the principle enunciated therein, the author of the Dayakrama has included him in the list of heirs. Again, the brother's son's daughter's son is not mentioned either in the Dayabhaga or Dayakrama, but he is noticed by Jagannath as an heir. He says : " It should be here remarked that the son of a son's and of a grandson's daughter, and the son of a brother's and of a nephew's daughter," and so forth, " claim succession in the order of proximity before the maternal grandfather ; for they also confer benefits by the oblation of funeral cakes " (3 Colebrooke's Digest, 530). It seems that both these commentators, in elaborating the line of succession, have proceeded on the text of the Dayabhaga, chap. xi, sec. 6, v. 20. That text is, " that the order of succession then must be understood in this manner : on failure of the father's daughter's son or other person who is a giver of three oblations (presented to the father, &c.), which the deceased shares, or which he was bound to offer the succession devolves in the next place on the maternal uncle and others namely, his son and grandson)." It is [464] upon this authority, as I take it, that the author of the Dayakrama Sangraha has given the brother's son's daughter's son a position in the line of succession. When Jagannath's opinion is supported by this text of the Dayabhaga, it is entitled to the highest respect. We, therefore, hold Grish Chunder to be an heir on the authority of the Dayabhaga as interpreted by Jagannath. The contention that if the line of descent had not been through a female (his mother), but had been in equal degrees through males,—that is to say, if instead of his mother as daughter of the brother's son the descent had been through a male, then, as being fifth in descent, he would have no place in the list of sapindas, has no force in our estimation, because the daughter's son presents the oblation which his mother would have offered, but for her incompetency, and as such he might be said to stand in the place of the mother, and therefore within the fourth degree. This may seem somewhat an anomaly, but it is in accordance with Hindu law. The objection, if tenable, would have excluded many persons whom our Courts have always admitted.

Grish Chunder and Pran Nath are both heirs according to the principle of oblation laid down in the Dayabhaga. They are both sapindas of the deceased proprietor. The question next for consideration is—Who has the preference in regard to the succession? Grish, as being the nephew's daughter's son offers one oblation, and that to the father of the deceased proprietor. Pran Nath, as being the uncle's daughter's son, offers two oblations, and that to the grandfather and great grandfather. It is contended that, as the oblations are of the same kind, being both in the paternal line of the deceased, Pran Nath, offering two such oblations, should be preferred to Grish Chunder, who offers only one. But here we have an express text of the Dayabhaga to guide us in the solution of the question. In vv. 5 and 6, chap. xi, sec. 6, the author of the Dayabhaga has given preference, in such a case, to the one who offers oblation to the father. He has given preference to the brother's son and grandson over the paternal uncle, because they are "a giver of oblations to the deceased owner's father, who is the person principally considered." Applying the same reasoning, [463] Grish Chunder precedes Pran Nath in the order of succession, because the former offers oblations to the father of the deceased, who is the person to be principally considered.

Prinsep, J.—I am of the same opinion. The judgment of the Full Bench in the case of Guru Gobind Shaha Mandalv. Anand Lal Ghose (5 B. L. R., 15), which has long been accepted as settled law, merely lays down what is known as the principle of the efficacy of oblations in determining questions of disputed succession among Hindus. I agree with my learned colleague, that, in applying this principle, regard must be had, not merely to the number of such oblations, but to their propinquity to the deceased. In the present case, Grish Chunder, who offers oblations to the father of the deceased, stands higher in the order of succession than Pran Nath, who offers oblations only to the grandfather and great grandfather.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[DAYABHAGA LAW OF SUCCESSION—

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 17th February, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM AND MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM.

Ghunshyam Singh.....Defendant

versus

Tara Proshad Coondoo and another.....Plaintiffs.*

Enhancement of rent—Notice of enhancement—Suit for arrears of rent.

The plaintiffs sued for the arrears of rent of the years 1284, 1285, and also for the arrears of rent of the year 1286, the latter at an enhanced rate. The notice of enhancement was not proved, and the defendant insisted that the suit should be dismissed.

Held, that though the notice of enhancement had not been proved, the plaintiffs were not thereby precluded from the arrears of rent at the old rate.

Soorasoondery Dabee v. Golam Ally (15 B. L. R., 125; S.C., 19 W. R., 142), Brojonath Tewaree v. Grant (22 W. R., 13), Bhugwan Dutt Jha v. Sheo Mungul Singh (22 W. R. 256) and Bhubo Soonduree Chowdhraim v. Kasheemulk Acharjee (22 W. R. 351) referred to.

[466] THE plaint in this suit was filed on the 26th August 1879. The facts of the case are thus stated in the judgment of the Court below :—" This is a suit for rent. The rent is claimed from 1284 to 1286 Fasli (1877--1879). The rent for the year 1286 Fasli was claimed at a higher rate on the basis of a notice for enhancement. But the claim at enhanced rate has been dismissed, on the ground that service of notice of enhancement has not been proved. The plaintiffs do not appeal against this portion of the decision. As regards the old rate, the defendant pleads that his old rate was Re. 1 per bigha. As regards this rate, the Court below has found that there is no sufficient and satisfactory evidence on the part of the plaintiffs to prove their alleged old rate of Rs. 3 per bigha, and on this ground a decree has been passed for the rent at the rate admitted by the defendant. In dissatisfaction with this portion of the decree the plaintiffs have appealed, urging that the rate alleged by them is proved." [The Judge here went into the evidence and found that the rate alleged by the plaintiffs had been proved.] "The defendant urges a plea that the plaintiffs' claim to the rent of 1284 Fasli (1877) is barred by limitation; for, in June 1877, he deposited the rent in the Court to the amount alleged by him; and that, as regards the amount in excess, the suit should have been brought within six months. The Munsif has allowed this plea. But limitation would only have applied had the defendant proved that he had carried the rent to the collection officer, and that he refused to receive it; and then he should have proved that a notice of the deposit was duly given to the plaintiffs, or to the place where collection is made; for the Act, in which six months' time is allowed, lays down a rule for deposit in the manner stated above. Hence, unless the deposit is made according to that rule, and unless the due service of a notice for deposit is proved, limitation cannot apply simply on the ground of money being deposited."

The learned Judge, for these reasons, gave the plaintiffs a decree.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1373 of 1880, against the decree of Hafiz Abdool Kurrim, Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore, dated the 30th April 1880, modifying the decree of Syud Fokhraddin Hossain, Munsif of Monghyr, dated the 18th February 1880.

The defendant appealed to the High Court on the grounds :—(i) that, according to the principle laid down by the Privy Council in the case of Soorasoondery Dabee v. Golam Ally (15 B. L. R., 125; s.c., 19 W. R., 142) [467] the plaintiffs' suit, which was for enhancement of rent, should have been dismissed, as the plaintiffs in such a suit were not entitled to arrears of rent at the old rate; (ii) that the Court had erred in law in holding that the plaintiffs' suit was not barred by limitation under Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 3, the suit having been brought after the expiry of twelve months from the time of the deposit of rent in Court.

Baboo Amarendro Nauth Chatterjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Gopee Nath Mookerjee for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by Cunningham, J.—In this case it was urged with regard to the year 1286 (1879), for which rent at an enhanced rate was claimed, that the Courts below ought to have dismissed the plaintiffs' claim altogether instead of giving them rent at the rate found to be the proper one. In support of this contention the rule laid down by the Privy Council in the case of Soorasoondery Dabee v. Golam Ally (15 B. L. R., 125; s.c., 19 W. R., 142), was brought to our notice; but we find that the application of that rule has been discussed in the subsequent cases of Brojonath Tewaree v. Grant (22 W. R., 13), Bhugwan Dutt Jha v. Sheo Mungul Singh, (22 W. R., 256) and Bhubo Soonduree Chowdhraim v. Kasheerath Acharjee (22 W. R. 351), and that it has been held, that the rule prescribed by their Lordships in that case does not apply to cases where the suit is not simply a suit for enhancement, but a suit for rent at the old rate as regards some years and at an enhanced rate for others.

We, therefore, think that the Courts below are right.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

level than that of the defendants, and from time immemorial the surplus water used to flow from the plaintiffs' land through certain passages in the 'al' and across the defendants' land. The defendants closed up the passages and increased the height of the 'al'.

Held, that, it having been established that, for a long series of years, the waters from the plaintiffs' lands had been accustomed to escape in a particular direction, and by certain separate passages across the defendants' land, the defendants could not do anything which would interfere with the plaintiffs' rights in this respect.

THESE were two second appeals from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore. The points raised in both being the same, the appeals were heard together. The facts of the cases and the arguments are set out in the judgment of the Court.

Mr. Twisdale and Mr. Mendies for the Appellants.

Babu Mohney Mohun Roy and Babu Juggut Chunder Banerjee for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by

Cunningham, J. In this case the plaintiffs and defendants are land-holders of two jaghirs, co-terminous throughout their entire length of 20 bighas, and separated from each other by an 'al,' running east and west. The plaintiffs say, that the rain water from their lands used, from time immemorial, to pass over the [469] defendants' land by flowing over the 'al' through certain passages (khurhi or nulls), but that the defendants have raised the height of the 'al' by 2 or 2½ cubits, so as to form a new bandh for a distance of 11 bighas, have closed all the khurhis, and have laid two new pipes, a cubit high, through the 'al'; that, owing to these acts, rain-water accumulated on the plaintiffs' lands and occasioned damage to the crops of the plaintiffs in one suit amounting to Rs. 150, and of the plaintiffs in the other suit amounting to Rs. 180. The plaintiffs accordingly claim (i) a declaration of their prescriptive right; (ii) an order reducing the 'al' to its proper height; (iii) the opening the passages and removal of the two pipes. The original Court found that the lands of the plaintiffs are half a cubit higher than those of the defendants, and that the natural flow of water is from the one to the other, and that, for more than twenty years, water has passed in rainy seasons from one to the other; that the 'al' is the boundary between the two estates, and that the defendants have heightened it: that the water previously passed from the plaintiffs' lands to those of the defendants' by three or four passages, which at present do not exist; that the pipes do not afford an outlet; and he accordingly has given the plaintiffs a decree.

The lower Court has, with some modifications not now under consideration, upheld the finding of the original Court.

In special appeal it is urged that the right alleged by the plaintiffs to have the surface water of their lands escape over the 'al' to the lands of the defendants, is one which could not be legally acquired.

We do not consider that there is any ground for this contention. There is a well-recognised servitude of lower lands to receive the natural drainage of adjoining lands on a higher level—Smith v. Kenrich (7 C. B., 515); and as, in the present case, it is established that, for a long series of years, the waters from the plaintiffs' lands have been accustomed to escape in a particular direction and by certain separate passages across the defendants' lands, the defendants cannot now do anything which would interfere with the plaintiffs' right in this respect.

We think it unnecessary to discuss the question, which has [470] been raised in the appeal, of the rights of an owner to protect himself from unusual floods, and of the liability which he may incur if, in so doing, he injures the land of another The King v. Trafford (1 B. & Ad., 874; s.c., on appeal, 8 Bing., 204), Nield v. London and North-Western Ry. Co. (L. R., 10 Exch., 4); because there is no evidence that the escape of water was, with reference to the ordinary conditions of an Indian climate, in any sense exceptional.

The present case falls, in our opinion, clearly within the remarks of BRAMWELL, B., in the latter case as to the liability of a person who for his own purposes diminishes a natural escape of water to any one who is injured by his act. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

Res judicata Rent-suit Intervenor Civil Procedure Code
(Act X of 1877), s. 13.

A sued B for rent in the Court of the Deputy Collector of Tipperah, under the provisions of Act X of 1859. C intervened, claiming that the land in respect of which the rent was claimed was his property, and the suit was dismissed. On appeal, the District Judge of Tipperah reversed this decision and decreed the claim, on the ground that C had no right whatever to the land. In a subsequent suit brought by C against A and B for possession of the same lands---

Held, that the previous decree of the District Judge did not constitute the plaintiff's claim a res judicata, and was no bar to the suit.

Dunauth Bose v. Kali Kumar Roy, (B.L.R., Sup. Vol., 364; s. c., 5 W.R., Act X Rul. 23) followed.

THIS was a suit for possession of certain land. Several defences were raised, and several issues were settled by the Courts below; but the only one material for the purposes of [471] this report was that of res judicata, which was the only one dealt with by the lower Appellate Court in the following judgment:—

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 22 of 1881, against the decree of F. McLaughlin Esq., Judge of Nonkhally, dated the 10th September 1880.

"The first issue is, whether this suit is barred by s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, with reference to a judgment of the Tipperah Judge's Court, dated the 26th of May 1869. That judgment was in appeal from a rent-decree of the Deputy Collector of Tipperah, dated the 17th of February 1869. By this and four other suits, in which the now plaintiff intervened, the then plaintiff, now the second defendant, sought to recover rents of the property now in suit. The now plaintiff intervened under s. 77 of Act X of 1859, and successfully, the plaintiff losing his suits on account of this intervention. The now plaintiff, then intervenor, pleaded the property was his by purchase thereof in July, 1868. The then plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, who reversed the lower Court's decision, holding that the now plaintiff, then intervenor, had no rights under his said purchase. That judgment was allowed to become final, and it decreed that the now plaintiff had no right under the purchase he now sues to establish. But, argues the plaintiff, it is not valid, being only a judgment in a rent-suit. This is a point that has been raised often ere this, and it appears settled law that a decision in a rent-suit, tried after Beng. Act VIII of 1869 transferred such suits to the Civil Court, will bind. The next question is, will it bind when the decision was passed before Beng. Act VIII of 1869, as here? The principle involved is very fully discussed in (among others) Hurri Sunker Mookerjee v. Muktaran Patro (15 B. L. R., 238). In Gobind Chunder Koonloo v. Taruck Chunder Bose (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 145; s.c., 1 C. L. R., 35), the point is discussed, and its treatment affirmed in Prannath Sandyal v. Ram Coomars Sandyal (2 C. L. R., 33). The two last are not quite on all fours with the present suit, since the intervention was in rent cases tried by Civil Courts after Act VIII of 1869. But in view of the principle enunciated in the first named ruling Hurri Sunker's case (15 B. L. R., 238) the decision of the Judge's Court [472] pleaded in this suit should be held of full force, because the Deputy Collector's judgment was reversed, and the decision now relied on was that of a Court, the Judges of which would have been the very same appellate tribunal under the later Act; and the passing or non-passing of Act VIII of 1869, which has throughout been held to affect jurisdiction, nowise affected the powers of the Court concerned. And scrutiny of the sections of Act X of 1859 confirms the view now taken. If a Collector decided adverse to a person on a point of title, a suit lay to be brought within a year. But there is no such provision as to an appeal from a District Judge."

The learned Judge then dismissed the suit, and the plaintiff appealed.

Moonshee Serajul Islam, for the Appellant.

Baboo Doorga Mohun Doss and Baboo Kali Mohun Doss, for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (MORRIS and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Morris, J.—In this case the District Judge holds the view that though a decision of the Collector under s. 77, Act X of 1859, is not final, and is liable to be set aside by a suit brought in a Civil Court, yet the decision of the Judge passed on appeal against an order passed by the Collector under s. 77, Act X of 1859, is final, because his Court is a Court of competent jurisdiction and is precisely the same Appellate Court as that in which an appeal is tried under Beng. Act VIII of 1869. This view appears to us to be erroneous. The decision of the Court on appeal against an order passed under s. 77, stands in no higher position than the decision of the lower Court, whether passed by the Collector or by the Deputy Collector in cases referred to him by the Collector. This point has been expressly determined by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Dinanath Bose v. Kali Kumar Roy (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 364; s.c. 5 W. R. Act X Rul., 23). The judgment of the Full Bench, delivered by the [473] late Chief Justice, Sir B. PEACOCK, concludes with these words:—

 “We think that the words of the Legislature must receive a reasonable construction, and that the right of either party, who may have a legal title to the rent, to establish his title by suit in the Civil Court, is not barred or affected by the decision of the Court of First Instance, or of the Court of appeal, if the suit in the Civil Court is instituted within one year from the date of the decision against him.” In this view, therefore, the decision of the lower Court must be set aside, and the case remanded to that Court to be tried on the merits.

Case remanded.

Arms Act (XI of 1878), s. 19, cl. (f), and ss. 25, 30. Arms in a temple Confiscation of arms used for purposes of worship—Inspector specially empowered. License to possess arms—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 579 and sched. iv—“Offences against other laws.”

A collection of fire-arms, consisting of four small cannons, four pistols, and thirty-one muskets, had been kept as objects of worship in a Sikh temple in Patna for upwards of two centuries. The Mohunt of the temple neglected to take out a license in respect of these arms under Act XI of 1878. A Police Inspector, who was appointed to see that the provisions of the latter Act were obeyed, searched the temple on information received, and, having found the arms, prosecuted the person who had charge of the temple. The latter was convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Patna, under s. 19, cl. (f) of Act XI of 1878, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50, or to be rigorously imprisoned for two months. The Deputy Magistrate also ordered the arms to be confiscated, and directed that their value and the fine should be divided between the informer and the Police Inspector. On a reference from the Sessions Judge of Patna—

Held, with reference to Act X of 1872, s. 579, and the last heading to [474] sched. iv of the same Act, and to s. 19, cl. (f) of Act XI of 1878, that the proceedings of the Police Inspector and the conviction of the accused were not illegal.

* Criminal Reference, No. 240 of 1881, and Letter No. 549, from the order made by H. Beveridge, Esq., Sessions Judge of Patna, dated the 20th December, 1881.

There is nothing in the Arms Act to exempt the custodians of a temple from complying with the requirements of the Arms Act, either by taking out a license or obtaining exemption under s. 27.

Section 25 of the Arms Act appears to refer to cases in which the Magistrate considers that arms, whether under a license or not, are possessed for an illegal purpose, or under circumstances such as to endanger the public peace.

Section 30 of the Arms Act appears to contemplate the presence of some specially empowered officer besides the officer conducting the search.

THIS was a reference under s. 296 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, from the Sessions Judge of Patna. The terms of the reference are as follows :

There is, in the city of Patna, a famous Sikh temple, called the Har Mandir. It is said to be built on the site of the birthplace of Guru Govind Singh, and his cradle and a book bearing his signature are preserved in it. The latter was the subject of a law-suit, which is reported in the number of the Indian Law Reports for the current month, page 767, Dhurrum Singh v. Kissen Singh (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 767). In the temple there were some old fire-arms, one or two of which might perhaps come within the definition of cannon. The Police Inspector describes them as "four little cannons." There were also four jingals, four pistols, and thirty-one guns (muskets). These weapons had been in the temple for about two centuries, and this fact alone shows that they could not be of much use in warfare. They are kept in the temple, as the Deputy Magistrate admits, as objects of worship. There is a Police Inspector appointed to see that the Act is obeyed, and some one told him that there were unlicensed fire-arms in the temple. He made a search and found them, and sent up the man who was, in the absence of the Mohunt, in charge of the temple. The Deputy Magistrate convicted him under s. 14 (more correctly s. 19, cl. f) of the Act, and sentenced him to pay Rs. 50 fine or to be rigorously imprisoned for two months. He also ordered that the fire-arms should be confiscated, and that their value and also the fine should be divided between the Inspector and the informer. It appears to me that the Deputy Magistrate's proceedings are illegal for the following reasons :

(1.) The only witness examined was the Police Inspector Digam Lal, but his evidence was inadmissible as he had no right to search the [475] temple. He is appointed under the Act, but that does not empower him to search houses without a Magistrate's warrant. He had no warrant from a Magistrate under s. 25, nor could he have got one without the Magistrate's having reason to believe not only that there were weapons, but also that they were in the temple for an unlawful purpose. Section 30, under which the Inspector presumably acted, only refers to the Code of Criminal Procedure and gives no authority to the Police to search in non-cognizable cases. Now the mere possession of arms is a non-cognizable offence, though the going armed may, under s. 13, be cognizable,—that is, the Police may arrest a person so doing without a warrant and disarm him. Section 17, cl. (d) has also no application to the present case, nor can I find any other section or rule which empowers the Police to make a search without a Magistrate's warrant. If Digam Lal's proceedings were illegal, his evidence should, I think, be rejected, and then there is no evidence except Tegha Singh's statement, and he does not say that the weapons are cannons.

(2.)—The man who has been convicted is the temporary manager of the temple. He has not been charged with being in possession of the weapons, but with having them under his control. This probably is not correct, for it is not likely that he has power to remove them or otherwise dispose of them.

He is only ex-officer in charge of them, and it is perhaps doubtful if he can be personally fined and be sent to jail in default. It is perhaps only the property of the temple which can be attached in realization of the fine.

(3) I doubt if the Act applies to temples. Its language is wide enough to include them; but it might, I think, be argued that its provisions must be held to be controlled by, what I presume, is the higher authority of the Queen's Proclamation of 1858. That document declared that no one should be molested or disquieted by reason of his religious faith or observances, and strictly charged all in authority under the Queen to abstain from interference with the religious belief or worship of any of her subjects. Admittedly the fire-arms are in the temple as objects of worship, and have been so for many years, and it certainly is an interference with the Sikh religion to insist on their being licensed and to order their confiscation. The Deputy Magistrate says that the Mohunt should have taken out a license for the weapons, and it would have been better for himself if he had done so, but if the weapons are really cannons, no Magistrate, and not even the Local Government could have given him a license.

Finally. Even if the Magistrate's proceedings are not illegal, his [476] order should, I think, be set aside on the ground that the punishment is too severe. A nominal fine was all that should have been inflicted.

No one appeared on the reference.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by Cunningham, J. With reference to s. 579 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the concluding heading of the fourth schedule ("offences against other laws,") and s. 19, cl. (f) of the Arms Act, XI of 1878, we are not satisfied that there has been any illegality in the proceedings either of the Police Inspector in this case or in the conviction of the accused.

Section 25 of the Arms Act appears to refer to cases in which the Magistrate considers that arms, whether under a license or not, are possessed "for an illegal purpose," or under circumstances such as to endanger the public peace, neither of which conditions is suggested as existing here. It is not clear from the Sessions Judge's reference whether the Police Inspector was specially empowered under s. 30. That section appears to contemplate the presence of some specially empowered officer besides the officer conducting the search.

There is nothing in the Act to exempt the custodians of the temple from complying with the requirements of the Act either by taking out a license or obtaining exemption under s. 27.

On the other hand, they may well have imagined that the Act did not extend to weapons which were objects of interest or worship rather than 'arms' in the proper sense of the word.

We set aside so much of the Deputy Magistrate's order as refers to the division of the value of the fire-arms and the fine imposed between the informer and the Inspector, and we direct that the case be submitted for such orders as the Government of Bengal may be pleased to pass.

Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 2, 244, cl. (c), ss. 546, 588—

for restitution of property.*

Where an order, requiring the decree-holder to give security within three days, is made under s. 546 † of the Code of Civil Procedure, by the Judge of the Court in which the decree was passed, and in which the execution is pending, such order is appealable as a decree under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, s. 2 and s. 244, † cl. (c).

THE facts of the case are sufficiently set forth in the judgment of the Court.

Baboo Biplin Doss Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Kali Mohun Doss and Baboo Surendronath Motilall for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (FIELD and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—In this case an order was made under s. 546 of the Code of Civil Procedure that security be given for the restitution of property, which was about to be taken in execution of decree. The decree was a decree of the Second Subordinate Judge of the 24 Parganas, and the execution was pending in his Court. Now the first point with which we have to deal is concerned with an objection made by the pleader for the respondent to the effect that no appeal lies in this case. Undoubtedly, this particular matter does not fall within the enumeration contained in s. 588 of the Civil Procedure Code :

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 309 of 1881, against the order of Baboo Krishna Mohun Mookerjee, Second Subordinate Judge of the 24 Parganas, dated the 3rd September 1881.

† [Sec. 546 :- If an order is made for the execution of a decree against which an appeal is pending, the Court which passed the decree shall, on sufficient cause being shown by the appellant, require security to be given for the restitution of any property which may be taken in execution of the decree, or for the payment of the value of such property, and for the due performance of the decree or order of

or the Appellate Court may for like cause direct the Court which passed the decree to take such security. And when an order has been passed for the sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree for money and an appeal is pending against such decree, the sale shall on the application of the judgment-debtor be stayed until the appeal is disposed of, on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as the Court which passed the decree thinks fit.]

Questions to be decided by Court executing decree. † [Sec. 244, cl.(c):—The following questions shall be determined by order of the Court executing a decree and not by separate suit (namely):

(c) any other questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution of the decree.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to bar a separate suit for mesne profits accruing between the institution of the first suit and the execution of the decree therein, when such profits are not dealt with by such decree.]

[478] but we think that the question which has been decided by the order of the Subordinate Judge is within the meaning of cl. (c), s. 244—a question arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and relating to the execution of the decree; that it was a question decided between the parties is admitted; that it related to the execution of the decree is, we think, manifest from the fact that the execution of the decree has been stopped in consequence of the security having been rejected.

The order of the Subordinate Judge is as follows:—"The property which the decree-holder wishes to place in security is situate in the district of Purnea. No enquiry could be made of the validity of the security from this distance. I must not, therefore, act upon such security. The decree-holder may adduce promissory notes or any other tangible security within three days." Now, if the Subordinate Judge meant to say that he could in no case accept as security the immoveable property situate within any other district than that of the 24 Parganas in which district his Court is located, we think that he was wrong. We think that any such general proposition as this cannot be supported; but having regard to the facts of this particular case, we think that this appeal must be dismissed.

The property offered as security belonged, not to the decree-holder himself, but to his son, and his son does not join in the application, or in any other way express his willingness that his property should be hypothecated as security. Then, the title-deeds of the property, or a copy of the torji of the Purnea Collectorate, was not tendered, and the Subordinate Judge, in fact, had no materials whatever upon which he would be justified in approving of the execution of the security-bond which was tendered with the application. Under these circumstances, we think it impossible to say that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in refusing to accept this security; and we shall, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs, but without prejudice to any other proper application for security which may be made to the Subordinate Judge.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[Similarly, the following questions have been held to fall within C. P. C. 1908 s. 47 : C. P. Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 245—Application for execution of decree—Amendment—Time fixed by Court—Jurisdiction—Ultra vires.

On the 9th of April 1880, A applied for execution of a decree, which he had obtained against B. On the 20th of April 1880 the Judge of the Court, under the provisions of s. 245 of the Code of Civil Procedure, ordered the application to be amended within seven days. This order was disobeyed, but no order rejecting the application was asked for or passed. On the 11th of May 1880 the applicant prayed leave to make the amendment, which prayer was granted.

Held, that the order of the 11th of May 1880, granting leave to amend, was not ultra vires of the Judge, under the provisions of s. 245 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

THE facts of this case are set out in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, which is as follows :—

“The admitted facts are these: On the 26th of February 1877 the respondent, decree-holder, obtained a decree for costs, etc., about Rs. 178, against the appellants, judgment-debtors. On the 20th of April 1877 application was made for execution, and on the 6th of August 1877 it was struck off. On the 9th of April 1880 a fresh application was made, but was irregular in form. On the 20th of April 1880 the Munsif ordered amendment within seven days. This order was disobeyed. On the 11th of May 1880 a prayer was made for amendment, and this prayer was granted. On the 27th of July 1880 an affidavit should have been filed, and for default the lower Court refused to send for the record. On the 10th of August 1880 a prayer was made for reversal, and this was allowed.

“The appellants urged below, unsuccessfully, that the lower Court's order of the 11th of May 1880 was ultra vires. The [480] same point is taken here, and it is objected that even now the execution prayer is irregular, the last column, among others, being improperly filled, it specifying no details, but referring the Court to some former application, and only asking that notice to issue to the judgment-debtors. The objection that the Munsif, when granting further time on the 11th of May 1880, acted ultra vires, is apparently well-founded and fatal. Section 245 of the Code of Civil Procedure is clear, prescribing imperatively that if the application be not so amended as ordered by the Court, it shall be rejected. The respondent urges that if a Court could extend it once, it might extend the time twice, as here, or thrice, or as often as it thought fit, and that its order of the 11th of May 1880 was an extension of time (order No. 2). But scrutiny of the amended section (245), and comparison thereof with the original section, militate against this argument. The language contemplates speedy amendment. ‘Then and there’ is mentioned in both old and new sections. And the whole tendency of the new Civil Procedure Code was to expedite executions and do away with the old dawdling, dilatory style. Section 230, as enacted with the due diligence proviso, is a marked indication of this resolve.”

The learned Judge then reversed the decision of the Munsif, and dismissed the application with costs.

From that decision the decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

Bahoo Bycunt Nath Doss for the Appellant.

Baboo Doorga Mohun Doss for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (FIELD and O’KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—The question in this case is one of limitation. The original decree was dated 26th February 1877. An application for execution was made on the 20th April 1877. Within three years from this latter date,—that is to say, on the 9th April 1880,—a fresh application for execution was made; but this application was found not to be in the form prescribed by [481] the Code of Civil Procedure. The Munsif, under the provisions of s. 245, directed that the application should be amended, and he fixed seven days as the period within which the amendment was to be made; but the application was not amended within this period of seven days, and subsequently,—that is to say, on the 11th of May 1880,—a further application for amendment was made and allowed. Now, the Judge of the Court below has held, with reference to the language of s. 245 of the Code of Civil Procedure, “if the application be not so amended, it shall be rejected,” that it was compulsory upon the Munsif to reject the application of the 9th April 1880, because it was not amended within the seven days allowed by the Munsif’s order, and that the Munsif has no discretion to allow the amendment of the 11th May. We do not concur in this construction. We think that, inasmuch as the Munsif had not rejected the application and so finally disposed of it, it was within his competency to fix a further time for making the amendment, or to allow the amendment to be made within a further time after the seven days originally fixed had elapsed. We think, therefore, that the order of the Judge must be set aside and that of the Munsif restored.

This appeal is decreed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The 10th March, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

In the matter of the Petition of Ameruddin.

Ameruddin

versus

Farid Sarkar and another.*

Committal on two separate charges—Trial as for one offence—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 454—Separate trial.

Where persons are charged with rioting and also with causing hurt, although they may be tried as for one offence under s. 454 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is not illegal to try them for both offences separately.

[482] FARID SARKAR, Ali Sarkar, and Nizamdi were charged with the offence of rioting by entering forcibly into a cutcherry: the case was tried in a regular manner, the evidence being recorded in full. Farid Sarkar and Ali Sarkar were also charged by one Ameruddin, a peon, with having caused him hurt at the time of the riot. This latter case was tried summarily under s. 227 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The Magistrate recorded but one judgment in both cases, and sentenced the accused in the first case to two months’ rigorous imprisonment under s. 147 of the Penal Code; and the accused in the second case to a fine of Rs. 50 under s. 323 of the Penal Code.

* Criminal Motion, No. 323 of 1881, against the order of T. M. Kirkwood, Esq., Sessions Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 16th September 1881.

The prisoners in the rioting-case appealed to the Sessions Judge, and the accused who had been fined applied, on motion to the Sessions Judge, to have the finding and sentence set aside.

The Sessions Judge held, that, under s. 454 of the Criminal Procedure Code, there should have been but one trial, and himself treating the whole matter together, reversed the convictions.

Ameruddin applied to the High Court to have the order of the Sessions Judge set aside.

Baboo Bama Churn Banerjee for the Petitioner.

Baboo Bykunt Nath Dass for the accused persons.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—Farid Sarkar and Ali Sarkar and others were charged with the offence of rioting by entering forcibly into a zamindar's cutcherry. Against the first two there was a separate complaint by one Ameruddin, a peon in that cutcherry, of having caused hurt to him in the course of the rioting, which formed the subject-matter of the first-mentioned case. The Magistrate convicted the accused persons in both cases. He recorded one judgment, in which he says that he tried the riot-case regularly, and the hurt-case summarily. The punishment awarded in the latter case was a fine of Rs. 50 each. Both [483] cases went before the Sessions Judge,—the former by way of appeal, and the latter by way of motion. The Judge, holding that, under s. 454 of the Criminal Procedure Code, there should have been one trial, treated the whole matter together, and reversed the conviction. Although we are inclined to agree with the Judge that, under s. 454, there could have been one trial, yet it does not seem to us that it was illegal to try the two cases separately; therefore, the Judge had no jurisdiction to reverse the conviction in the hurt case. His order, so far as it relates to this case, must be cancelled.

We have perused the record of the summary trial made under s. 227 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and as we find it is not open to any objection, we direct that the order of the Magistrate, adjudging Farid Sarkar and Ali Sarkar to pay a fine of Rs. 50 each, be restored.

Application granted.

FULL BENCH.

The 11th March, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE PONTIFEX, MR. JUSTICE MORRIS, MR. JUSTICE MITTER, AND MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP.

Kalidhun Chuttapadhyaya and another.....Plaintiffs

Shiba Nath Chuttapadhyaya.....Defendant.*

*Declaratory decree—Subsequent suit for consequential relief—Civil Procedure
Code (Act VIII of 1859), ss. 7 & 15—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 43—Splitting claim.*

The plaintiffs brought a suit to have themselves declared entitled to an account, and obtained such a declaratory decree without asking for or obtaining any consequential relief.

The defendants took no steps to render an account, and the plaintiffs brought another suit against them "for the amount of such Company's papers and other debts that might be found due by the defendant on an adjustment of accounts."

[484] Held, that the plaintiffs were not barred from bringing such a suit, s. 15 of Act VIII of 1859 being intended to modify the provisions of s. 7 of the same Act.

Tulsi Ram v. Gunga Ram (I. L. R., 1 All., 252) followed and approved.

THIS was a reference to a Full Bench by (PRINSEP and FIELD, JJ.), the reference being in the following terms :—

Field, J.—The facts of this case are briefly as follow :—

There were five brothers, Dena Nath, Hara Nath, Bhola Nath, Tara Nath, and Shiba Nath, who acquired a considerable amount of property, moveable and immoveable, and lived together as members of a joint Hindu family. In the Bengali year 1261, 1851-55, Tara Nath separated in mess from the other four brothers, who continued to live together till the end of the year 1262. It is alleged that, after this separation of Tara Nath, Shiba Nath (the defendant in the present case) had the management of the property and the charge of the cash. In Bysakh 1263 (April 1856), Dena Nath, who is the father of the plaintiffs in the present suit, separated in mess; but it appears that the family-property continued to be joint, and (as has been stated in the course of the argument) there has been no partition of this property up to the present time. In Assin 1272 (September 1865), Dena Nath, the plaintiffs' father, died, and the plaintiffs were admittedly then minors. It is alleged that Shiba Nath having, as already mentioned, commenced to manage the joint property upon Tara Nath's separation, continued to conduct the management from the beginning of 1262 to Assin 1277 (i.e., 1855 to September 1870); and that, after this latter date, he began to pay and receive the debts relating to his share separately, and gave up the management of the plaintiffs' share. In 1872, the plaintiffs (one of whom Kalidhun Chuttapadhyaya, being then a major, acted on behalf of himself and his minor brother Krishnadhun Chuttapadhyaya) instituted a suit, No. 38 of that year, for the purpose of obtaining from the defendant Shiba Nath a settlement of the accounts for the years 1262 to 1277. In that suit the plaintiffs asked for a declaration of their right to have an account; and we think there can be no doubt that they also asked in that suit to have an account taken; but it appears that, in the course of the suit, so much of the prayer of their plaint as asked that an account be taken was abandoned; and the decree, which was ultimately passed, was simply a decree declaring the plaintiffs' right to have an account. That decree was never carried into effect [485] by anything in the nature of an attempt to execute it; and, indeed, there could not have been any actual execution, seeing that the decree was a declaratory decree only, and gave no consequential relief.

The present suit was instituted on the 30th of December 1879, and the plaintiffs here ask "that the Court may be pleased to pass a decree against the defendant for the amount of cash, Company's papers, and other sort of debts that may be found due by the defendant to the plaintiffs on an adjustment of accounts, by declaration of right to the same, after calling upon the defendant to submit an account agreeably to the decree passed by the High Court, &c." In other words, the plaintiffs now seek to have the consequential relief which they might have had in the former suit. It may be well to say here that, although it would appear that this consequential relief was asked in the plaint in the former suit, no case has been made that the plaintiffs, having withdrawn from this portion of their prayer without the permission of the Court, are precluded on this ground from renewing their claim to consequential relief. The case has been treated throughout as if the former suit had been brought merely to obtain a declaratory decree—i.e., a decree declaring the right to have an account.

The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the present suit, holding that it is barred by limitation; and we are of opinion that, so far as regards the major plaintiff, this decision is correct.

We think that the period of limitation applicable must be taken to be six years, as provided by art. 120ⁱ of the second schedule of the present Limitation Act, XV of 1877; and that this period of six years commenced in Assin 1277 (September 1870), when the defendant's managership admittedly and practically came to an end.

It has been contended by the learned counsel for the appellants that s. 10[†] of the Limitation Act ought to apply to this case; that Shiba Nath ought to be regarded as a trustee; and that the nullum tempus provision of that section should be held applicable.

Now the case of Saroda Pershad Chattopadhyay v. Brajo Nath Bhuttacharjee (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 910) is opposed to this contention; and if we were prepared to differ from the decision in that case, we should still be of opinion that the provisions of s. 10[†] were not intended to apply to the case of an implied or constructive trust. Whether the Law of Trusts, in the sense in which this term

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
Suit for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this schedule.	Six years	... When the right to sue accrues.]

† [Sec. 10:—Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, or against his legal representatives or assigns (not being assigns for valuable consideration) for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property, shall be barred by any length of time.]

is understood in Courts of Justice in England, has operation in India outside the Presidency towns, is a question upon which there is some difference of opinion.

[486] It is unnecessary for us to attempt to deal with this question on the present occasion. We may, however, observe that, in different systems of jurisprudence, certain portions of law are sometimes differently classified; and that, under the head of 'Trusts' as a branch of English Jurisprudence, are included portions of law which under another system might be differently classified. It is not necessary for us to decide whether s. 10 of the Limitation Act is to be restricted in its application to what are known as express trusts in English law: it is sufficient for the purposes of the present case to say that, if Shiba Nath can be regarded as a trustee, he is not, in our opinion, "a person in whom property has become vested in trust for a specific purpose" within the meaning of s. 10 of the Limitation Act.

We are also unable to assent to the further argument advanced by the learned counsel, Mr. Bell, that the declaratory decree ought to be regarded in the nature of a contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant, upon which the plaintiffs are entitled to sue as upon a new cause of action. We, therefore, think that this suit is barred by limitation so far as regards the major plaintiff, Kalidhun Chuttapadhyas.

With reference to the minor plaintiff, Krishnadhun Chuttapadhyas, the question which we have to decide is more difficult. He was a minor when the cause of action accrued, and he continued to be a minor when the previous suit was instituted, and also when the present suit was instituted. Now, in the previous suit, No. 38 of 1872, he was represented by his major brother. There is no contention that, according to the law then in force, he was not properly represented; and we must, therefore, assume that he was duly represented in that suit through his brother acting as his guardian and next friend. This being so, he is as much bound by the decision as if, being of full age, he had been a party—(Gregory v. Molesworth (3 Atk., 626).

Unless the previous suit is a bar to the present suit, the minor can sue by a next friend at any time during his disability, or in person within three years after attaining his majority; and the present suit would not, therefore, be barred by limitation so far as the minor is concerned (see s. 7 of the Indian Limitation Act, XV of 1877).

But the question is raised—Has the cause of action been split, is the present suit not maintainable, because a previous suit has already been brought upon the same cause of action? It is contended on behalf of the defendant, respondent, that the cause of action was the [487] non-delivery of the accounts to which the plaintiffs were entitled; and that, as they asked in the former suit merely for a declaration that they were entitled to have an account from the defendant, and omitted to ask for the consequential relief which the Court would have been able to afford them in that suit, they cannot now ask to have an account taken and to have a decree for such sum as may be found due upon the taking of this account, because this is really suing for another portion of a single claim arising out of the same cause of action, the previous suit having been brought for one portion of the same claim.

It is important to observe that the previous suit was instituted while the old Code, Act VIII of 1859, was in force. There is an important difference between the language of s. 7 of that Code and the language of the corresponding section (43) of the present Code. Section 7 was as follows:—"Every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action, but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of the Court. If a plaintiff relinquish or omit to sue for any portion of his claim, a suit for the portion so relinquished or omitted shall not afterwards be entertained."

Section 43 consists of two portions. The first portion, until altered by the amending Act, XII of 1879, was almost verbatim the same as the above s. 7. The second portion is wholly new. The following are the two portions of the section, as they now stand, since the passing of the amending Act :

First portion.—"Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action; but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court. If a plaintiff omit to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquish, any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished."

Second portion.—"A person entitled to more than one remedy in respect of the same cause of action may sue for all or any of his remedies, but if he omits (except with the leave of the Court obtained before the first hearing) to sue for any such remedies, he shall not afterwards sue for the remedy so omitted."

The questions which arise upon these sections are—

First.—Do the claim (a) to have a decree declaring the right to an account, and the claim (b) to have an account taken by the Court and a decree for the amount found to be due upon taking such account, arise out of the same cause of action?

[488] Second.—Are (a) and (b) portions of one claim, or are they separate claims?

Third.—Are what is asked in (a) and what is asked in (b) remedies or portions of one remedy, and so different from claims or portions of the same claim?

We think that, if the present suit could have been maintained under the old Code, the previous suit having been instituted under that Code, the alteration of language in s. 43 of the new Code would not have the effect of rendering this present suit not now maintainable. We think that this is the effect of s. 6 of the General Clauses Act, I of 1868.

The meaning of the term 'cause of action' has undergone considerable discussion in connection with different contexts in which it has been used by the Legislature. The 59th section of the 9th and 10th Vict., c. 95 (an Act for the more easy Recovery of small Debts and Demands in England), enacted, that "it shall not be lawful for any plaintiff to divide any cause of action for the purpose of bringing two or more suits in any of the said Courts," &c. In Grimbley v. Aykroyd (12 Jur., 357) the facts were as follow:—The defendant was a railway contractor employing a large number of labourers, whom he paid partly in cash and partly by tickets, which were orders on tradesmen for goods. The plaintiff was a grocer, and by the defendant's order, as he alleged, he supplied articles to a number of the labourers who presented to him these tickets. Not having been paid, he commenced in the County Court 228 actions—one on each ticket—against the contractor. It was decided that he could not do this—that the understanding in the case of goods supplied by a tradesman, where the debtor has a bill running on from day to day, is that each item shall be united with other items and form one demand. The Court of Exchequer were of opinion that the term 'cause of action' in the above context meant cause of one action, and was not to be limited to an action on one separate contract—also that it was not "intended to cover all contracts executed, however dissimilar in character, that could be included in one indebitatus count, which, according to the modern practice, may comprise any number of separate unconnected contracts, whenever made, each having ended in a debt before the commencement of the suit." The modern practice here spoken of is incorporated in Order XVII, rule 1, of the Rules of Court made under the Supreme Court of Judicature Act; and in s. 8 of the old, and in s. 45 of the new Code, [489] which allow causes of action by and against the same persons to be joined in the same suit. The case of Grimbley v. Aykroyd (12 Jur., 357) was followed in Wood v. Perry (3 Exch., 442), and it was again held, that 'cause of action' meant 'cause of one action,' and was not to be limited to an action upon one separate contract. These two cases were followed by the Court of Common Pleas (JERVIS, C.J.) in Bonsey v. Wordsworth (2 Jur., N. S., 491). In the case now before us there is no contract. The right to have an account arises out of the relation of the parties. It may be said that the right to have the account taken in the particular instance arises out of the antecedent right to an account; and the right to receive the amount found due on the taking of the account arises out of the two rights first mentioned; but it would seem clear that all these rights in the particular case constitute one cause of action, —i.e., according to the above decisions, the cause of one action: that there was in fact eadem causa petendi, —i.e., as rendered by Lord Westbury in Hunter v. Stewart (31 L. J., Ch., 346), the same ground of claim, or one and the same case for relief.

The meaning of the term 'cause of action' was again considered in connection with the 18th section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 15 and 16 Vict., c. 76, which allowed a British subject residing out of the jurisdiction of the Superior Courts, in any place except in Scotland or in Ireland, to be sued in any of those Courts, if the Court or a Judge were satisfied upon affidavit that there was "a cause of action which arose within the jurisdiction, or in respect of a breach of a contract made within the jurisdiction," &c. In Allhusen v. Malgarejo (37 L. J., Q. B., 169; s.c., L. R., 3 Q. B., 340), the Contract was made abroad, but was to be performed in England. The breach, therefore, took place in England. The Court of Queen's Bench held, that the cause of action within the meaning of the 18th section of the Common Law Procedure Act had not arisen within the jurisdiction, and that the contract must be made and the breach take place within the jurisdiction in order to bring the case within the section. In other words, the term 'cause of action' was held to include both the contract and the breach. This case was followed by the Court of Queen's Bench in Cherry v. Thompson (L. R., 7 Q. B., 573). The Court of Common Pleas, on the other hand, were of opinion that 'cause of action' in this section meant not the whole cause of [490] action, i.e., the contract and breach, but the act on the part of the defendant which gives the plaintiff his cause of complaint, i.e., the breach—Jackson v. Spittall (L. R., 5 C. P., 542),

In the case of Durham v. Spence (L. R., 6 Exch., 46), the Judges of the Court of Exchequer were divided in opinion. Pigott and Cleasby, BB., took the same view as the Court of Common Pleas. Kelly, C. B., taking the view of the Court of Queen's Bench, thus expressed himself:—"If the words 'cause of action' are to be read as equivalent to the words breach of contract, I can see no reason why, inasmuch as the latter words are used in the second branch of the alternative, they should not also have been adopted in the first, instead of the ambiguous phrase 'cause of action.' But, further, it appears to be contrary to the plain and ordinary meaning of the terms, to say that the act, which thereby completes the cause of action, is the cause of action. Of itself, the act or omission, the non-payment, non-acceptance, or non-delivery, does not constitute a cause of action; what makes it such, that without which it would have no legal quality at all, is the contract that the person, whose default is complained of, should pay, accept, or deliver. To make up a cause of action, therefore, it is necessary to import the preceding contract."

- CLEASBY, B., who took the contrary view, said: "Now the cause of action must have reference to some time, as well as to some place; does then the consideration of the time when the cause of action arises give us any assistance in determining the place where it arises? I think it does. The cause of action arises when that is not done which ought to have been done, or that is done which ought not to have been done. But the time when the cause of action arises determines also the place where it arises, for when that occurs which is the cause of action, the place where it occurs is the place where the cause of action arises. I cannot avoid the conclusion that a cause of action arises where that takes place which first makes a cause of action; the contract does not make a cause of action; but a cause of action does arise when and where the person who has entered into the contract does or omits to do that which gives a cause of action. But the whole cause of action, in the sense which makes it include both the contract and the breach, arises nowhere."

In the case of Vaughan v. Weldon (L. R., 10 C. P., 17), it was announced that the Judges of all the Courts had agreed to follow the view taken by the [491] Court of Common Pleas in Jackson v. Spittal (L. R., 5 C. P. 542); and, in accordance with this view, rule 1 of Order X now provides that service out of the jurisdiction may be allowed, whenever the contract which is sought to be enforced or rescinded was made or entered into within the jurisdiction, and whenever there has been a breach within the jurisdiction of any contract, wherever made.

This view appears to be in unison with the ordinary use of the word 'cause' in the sense of the immediate or proximate cause. If a man is killed by a gunshot wound, we say that the wound is the cause of death. A surgeon will go even nearer to the effect and will say that the cause of death was shock to the system or loss of blood from the wound. Now the wound could not have been caused without a gun and a bullet and gunpowder; but none of these is ordinarily spoken of as the cause of death. If a man is injured by a blow of a club, it is the blow, not the club, that is spoken of as the cause of the injury. If a person is in grief on account of the death of a child or a friend, the cause of grief is the death, not the child or the friend; though if the child had never existed, the grief could not have been caused. "It were infinite," said BACON, "for the law to consider the causes of causes and their impulsions one of another; therefore it contenteth itself with the immediate cause."

In many of the cases above referred to, the meaning of the term 'cause of action' was considered only in connection with contracts. But the term, as used in the Code of Civil Procedure, has a much wider meaning, and applies to torts as well as contracts. Mr. Austin's definition of a 'right' also includes both:—"Right—the capacity or power of exacting from another or others acts or forbearances—is nearest to a true definition. I say that a party has a right, when another or others are bound or obliged by the law to do or to forbear towards or in regard of him" (Lecture XVI). If we accept this definition of a 'right,' every infringement or violation of a right affords a cause of action. In this view the origin of the right is immaterial, and this is in accordance with the principle of Roman law that the identity of the question is not destroyed by the origin of the right being different—See Savigny, p. 412, Chinniya Mudali v. Venkatchella Pillai (3 Mad., II. C. Rep., 320), Kashee Kishor Roy Chowdhry v. Kristo Chander Sandyal Chowdhry (22 W. R. 464), Denobundhoo Chowdhry v. Kristomonee Dossee (I. L. R., 2 Cal. 152), [492] and the Siragunqa case (11 Moore's I. A., 50). In the present case the defendant is bound or obliged by law to do an act or acts towards the plaintiffs, - i.e., to render a proper account and pay the amount due thereupon. In other words, the plaintiffs have the power of exacting these acts from the defendant. It is the refusal to do these acts the violation of this right - that constitutes the cause of action. It may be said that there are two acts --(i) the rendering the account, (ii) the payment of the amount due thereupon; that there are therefore two violations two rights--two causes of action. The better view is, that the whole thing constitutes one act: but those who will not concede this, must admit that the two acts, if two they are, are more closely connected so as to constitute a cause of one action than the 228 acts in Crimbley v. Aykroyd (12 Jur., 357). The view that every right of action arises from an injury or violation of some other right was Mr. Austin's view, and though it has been objected to and severely criticized (see, for example, the remarks of Mr. Justice HOLLOWAY in the case of Pattaravay Mudali v. Audimula Mudali, 5 Mad. II. C. Rep., 419), it is the view which, as most practically useful, has been finally adopted by the Courts in England, as already shown.

The term 'cause of action' was used in s. 2 of the old Code of Civil Procedure: "The Civil Courts shall not take cognizance of any suit brought on a cause of action which shall have been heard and determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit between the same parties or parties under whom they claim." If there may be several claims or remedies in respect of one cause of action, and if one only be made or asked, and the cause of action be heard and determined thereupon, it may well appear that this section is a bar to the other claims or remedies being made or asked. There are many cases which support this view; and if this is so, s. 2 of the old Code includes all that is in s. 7 of the same Code and s. 43 of the present Code. The term 'cause of action' in this context was found embarrassing, and it is not used in s. 13 of the new Code, which corresponds with s. 2 of the old Code.

The term 'cause of action' was used in s. 5 of the Beng. Reg. II of 1803; is used in s. 5 of the old Code; in s. 17 of the new Code; and in s. 12 of the Letters Patent (1862) of the High Court all which sections allow a suit to be instituted in the Court with which they are respectively concerned, if the cause of action shall have arisen within the local limits of its jurisdiction. The meaning [493] of the term in these sections has been discussed in several cases, which I now proceed to notice.

I shall first refer to those cases in which the same view is taken as was taken by the Court of Queen's Bench. In the case of Desouza v. Coles (3 Mad., II. C. Rep., 384), HITTLESTON, J., dealing with a case under s. 12 of the Letters Patent, examined the whole of the cases in a very elaborate judgment, and came to the conclusion that the term 'cause of action' in the above section meant the whole cause of action,—that is, both the contract and the breach: and HOLLOWAY, J., took it "to be abundantly clear on authority, English and Roman, that, in actions arising from obligations, it is the obligation and its breach which are together the cause of action " an opinion which he expressed still more strongly in the later case of Patturay Mudali v. Audimula Mudali (5 Mad. H. C. Rep., 419). In the case of Rajendra Rau v. Rama Rau (1 Mad. H. C. Rep., 436), the Madras High Court had already taken the same view. It may be observed that, in both these cases, no particular place had been fixed for the payment of the money; and that, therefore, there might have been some difficulty in saying that the breach took place within the jurisdiction. In the case of Kishen Kinkur Ghose v. Burroda Kant Roy (Marsh., 533), the Calcutta High Court (PEACOCK, C. J., and LEVINGE, J.) held, that the term 'cause of action' meant the whole cause of action; and that, in a suit for breach of contract, not only must the contract have been made, but the breach must also have been committed within the jurisdiction. In the case of The Indian Carrying Company v. Macarthy (1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 61), a promissory note was delivered out of the jurisdiction, but was payable within the jurisdiction; and PHEAR, J., held, that the cause of action did not arise within the jurisdiction because the whole cause of action had not arisen within the jurisdiction. The same learned Judge took the same view in Hajibai Das v. Bhagwan Das (7 B. L. R., 102). All these cases were decided before the case of Vaughan v. Weldon (L. R., 10 C. P., 47), in which, as has already been pointed out, all the Courts in England agreed to adopt the view taken by the Court of Common Pleas.

Turning now to the cases in which the contrary view has been adopted, we find that they are at least as numerous, and one of them has the authority of the Privy Council. In the case of Lachmee Chand v. Zorawar Mull (8 Moore's L. A., 291), a contract was made at Rutlam, in the Independent State of Malwa, between a firm residing and carrying on business at Muttra within the jurisdiction of the Agra Court, and another firm carrying on business at Rutlam, for the establishment of partnership for the purchase and sale of opium. This partnership was carried on principally at Muttra, and the business was there conducted with the capital advanced by the Muttra Firm. The partnership books were kept at Muttra, and a balance was struck at Muttra at the close of the partnership, which was attended with loss. Upon this balance a debt was due by the Rutlam Firm to the Muttra Firm. The Muttra Firm sued for this debt in the Agra Court. This Court, and the Sudder Court on appeal, held, that the cause of action had not arisen within the jurisdiction, because the contract was made at Rutlam, out of the jurisdiction. The Privy Council reversed this decision, holding that the cause of action had arisen within the jurisdiction of the Agra Court, because Muttra was the central place of business; because the partnership books were kept at Muttra, and the partners would there have recourse to the books to ascertain the state of the transaction between them; and, if in the result a balance was due to either party, Muttra would be the place where the payment of that balance would have to be made. In the case of DeSouza v. Coles (3 Mad. H. C. Rep., 384), already referred to, HOLLOWAY, J., considered that this case established the following propositions:—

(i) The making of the contract is a matter perfectly indifferent, and is no part of the cause of action.

(ii) The place at which an obligation is to be performed is its seat and the place of jurisdiction.

In the case of Chunilal Maniklabhai v. Mahipatrayvalad Khundu (5 Bom. H. C. Rep., A. C. J., 33), a contract to sell and deliver goods to the defendant was made at A. The goods were to be delivered at B; and, in default of delivery, the value of the goods was to be paid at the market-rate of A. Default was made; and it was held, in an action to recover the value of the goods, that the cause of action had arisen at B, where the breach took place.

In the Full Bench case of Premshook v. Bheekoo (3 Agra H. C. Rep., 242), the consideration for a bond passed at D. The defendant executed the bond at S. The money was payable to the plaintiff at D; and it was held, that the cause of action arose at D.

In this state of the authorities it may well be that the meaning of [495] the term 'cause of action,' which was finally adopted by the Courts in England in the case of Vaughan v. Weldon (L. R., 10 C. P., 47) ought to be followed in this country. In this case now before us, the defendant was bound to render an account to the plaintiffs. By refusing to render that account, he infringed or violated the plaintiffs' right, and thus gave the plaintiffs a causa petendi, a cause of action—a ground of claim. If this causa petendi did not exist, the plaintiffs would have no ground upon which they could ask the Court (a) to declare them entitled to an account; (b) to take this account; or (c) to make a decree for any sum of money which may be found to be due to them upon taking such account. I think, therefore, that (a), (b), and (c) arise out of the same cause of action.

Then come the two questions:—

Are (a), (b), and (c) portions of the same claim, or are they separate claims?

Are (a), (b), and (c) portions of the same remedy, or are they separate remedies?

What is a 'claim' as distinguished from a 'remedy.' A 'claim (clamer clamer)' is a demand of right, a challenge of interest of something which is not in the possession of the claimant. A remedy is the legal means to recover a right. If A is entitled to recover a debt of one hundred rupees from B, A makes a claim for one hundred rupees; and the remedy he asks is a decree for rupees one hundred with costs, which can be executed in the manner provided in the Code of Civil Procedure so as to compel B to pay a hundred rupees to A. The mode in which the decree is to be enforced (see ss. 252 to 255, and 259 to 265, of the Code of Civil Procedure) is never stated in the plaint, and can scarcely be regarded as a remedy within the meaning of the second portion of s. 43 of the Code. If A is entitled to an estate which is in the possession of B, A makes a claim for the estate, and the remedy which he asks is a decree for possession which can be executed by turning B out of possession and putting A into possession. If A made a claim for fifty rupees in the first case, intending to make a second claim for the other fifty rupees; or if, in the second case, A made a claim for a portion of the estate only, intending to make a further claim for the remaining portion, it is clear that the claim would be split or divided in each case.

The case of more than one remedy in respect of the same cause of action (in the unamended Code of 1877, it was 'in respect of the [496] same claim') is not so simple. From the instances above given, the remedy appears to be the mode of enforcing the legal claim. In this view a case of more than one remedy seems to suppose more than one claim. The words 'more than one remedy' in s. 43 can scarcely mean a remedy against more than one person—Subeer Khan v. Kullu Das Dey (1 W. R., 199). The recovery of immoveable property, and the recovery of mesne profits, are treated, not as separate remedies, but as separate causes of action (s. 44¹). In mortgage cases we get more than one remedy—Doss Money Dossee v. Jonmenjoy Mullick (1. L. R., 3 Cal., 363; s.c. 1 C. L. R., 447), Synd Esmam Montazoodeen Mahomed v. Haran Chunder Ghose (14 B. L. R., 408; s.c., 23 W. R., 187). In the following cases also, perhaps, we find instances of more than one remedy in respect of the same cause of action :—Okhoy Coomar Chuttopadhyaya v. Mahatap Chunder Bahadoor (1. L. R., 5 Cal., 21), where a patnidar, who had previously obtained a decree for abatement of rent, was allowed to maintain a second suit for a refund of the excess rent paid before the institution of the suit for abatement ;—Tarini Prasad Ghose v. Raghab Chandra Banerjee (5 B. L. R., 184; s.c., 13 W. R., 203), Tarini Prasad Ghose v. Khudumani Debia (5 B. L. R., 187; s.c., 13 W. R., 261), Lalla Luchmun Sahoy v. Ramsarn Sandyal (20 W. R., 144), and Routledge v. Hislop (2 E. and E., 519). In many cases there is an option of suing on the contract, or for breach of the contract, and in these cases there are more than one remedy, but the remedies are alternative.

It is not very easy to define what constitutes a 'claim' as distinguished from a 'remedy' for the former appears to include the latter to some extent. Doubtless the two terms were intended to overlap, and the second portion of s. 43 was added for more abundant caution and in consequence of the different form in which s. 2 of the old Code was drafted, when it became s. 13 of the new Code. A declaratory decree can scarcely be termed a 'remedy,' although there are cases—see Tulsi Ram v. Gangra Ram (1. L. R., 1 All., 252)—in which it is spoken of as a remedy. I can understand an injunction being a relief or remedy—Marsh v. Keith (1 Drew and Sm., 312), but I do not understand how a decree, which declares a right merely and gives no relief, can be termed a remedy.

I think that (a), (b), and (c) ought to be regarded as portions of one [497] claim arising out of the same cause of action. I take it that (a), (b), and (c), and the execution of the final decree, all together, constitute one remedy. Without (a) there cannot be (b); and without (c) and the execution of the decree there is no effectual remedy.

In this view there was a splitting of the cause of action within the meaning of s. 7 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, and the present suit is barred.

The following cases are, however, opposed to this view :—

(i) Sabeer Khan v. Kali Das Dey (1 W. R., 199). In this case a taluq was sold for arrears of rent, and certain surplus sale-proceeds were deposited in Court. This taluq had belonged to three persons, A, B, & C, but C's share (which was two annas) had been sold in execution in 1265, and purchased by P, the plaintiff. P had applied to the Collector for a two-anna share of these Only certain claims to be joined with suit for recovery of land.

*[Sec. 44.—Rule c.—No claim or cause of action shall, unless with the leave of the Court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immoveable property, or for a declaration of title to immoveable property, except—

(a) Claims in respect of mesne profits or arrears of rent in respect of the property claimed,

(b) Damages for breach of any contract under which the property or any part thereof is held, and

(c) Claims by a mortgagee to enforce any of his remedies under the mortgage.

Claims by or against executor, administrator, or heir.

Rule b. No claim by or against an executor, administrator or heir as such, shall be joined with claims by or against him personally, unless the last-mentioned claims are alleged to arise with reference to the estate in respect of which the plaintiff or defendant sues or is sued as executor, administrator or heir.]

surplus sale-proceeds; but as his purchase had not been registered, the Collector would not recognize him. P brought a suit against the other co-sharers in the taluq in order to obtain a decree declaring his right to a two-anna share. Having succeeded in that suit, he then brought a second suit to recover from the co-sharers, including C, the rent for the period prior to his purchase, which rent had been satisfied out of the sale-proceeds of the taluq. It was held, that his second suit could be maintained, and that there had been no splitting of the cause of action within the meaning of s. 7 of the old Code. With this case compare the cases of Tarini Prasad Ghose v. Raghab Chundra Banerjee (5 B. L. R., 184; s.c., 13 W. R. 203) and Tarini Prasad Ghose v. Khudumani Debta (5 B. L. R. 187; s.c., 13 W. R., 261).

(ii) Tulsi Ram v. Ganga Ram (I. L. R., 1 All., 252). In this case the father of B had executed in favour of A a deed of sale of certain land on the 23rd December 1862, but had failed to put A in possession, whereupon A sued B, on the second June 1864, for a declaration of his rights under the deed of sale, and obtained a declaratory decree. When this suit was instituted, A was out of possession; and was, therefore, in a position to ask for possession as consequential relief. A brought a second suit to obtain possession. The Court of First Instance held, that this second suit was barred by s. 7 of the old Code. The lower Appellate Court considered that this section applied only to cases in which the plaintiff omits to seek relief in respect of a portion of his claim, and does not apply to cases in which, although he may be entitled to claim [498] more than one kind of relief, he seeks for the time one remedy only. The Allahabad High Court approved of this view. They said:—"We have not now to consider whether the plaintiff ought to have obtained that relief in an ordinary suit for possession. We have to determine whether, in seeking a declaratory decree to establish his purchase-deed, and omitting to sue for possession, he can be held to have omitted any portion of the claim arising out of the cause of action he then put in suit. The cause of action he then put in suit did not necessarily involve any breach of the contract to deliver possession. The plaintiff might have obtained a declaratory decree without entering on the question of possession."

(iii) Darbo v. Kesho Rai (I. L. R., 2 All., 356). In this case, which was decided by a Full Bench, the plaintiff, a widow, upon her husband's death, sued one Kesho Rai for a declaration of her title to succeed as her husband's heir to certain property, and for a declaration that the defendant was not the adopted son of her late husband. The Court of First Instance dismissed her suit, on the ground that she was not in possession of a large portion of the property, and should, therefore, have sued for possession. On appeal the High Court held, that she was entitled for the protection of property in her possession to a decree; that the defendant was not the adopted son of her deceased husband; and in respect of property, of which she was not in possession, the High Court referred her to a suit for possession. She then brought a second suit for possession of this latter property, and the High Court held, that this second suit was not barred by s. 7 of the old Code. They said:—"She is seeking a different relief, and the relief she formerly sought was refused her in respect of this property, on the ground that the Court ought not to exercise its discretionary power of awarding a declaration of title when relief can be obtained by an ordinary suit for possession." It is to be observed in connection with this case, that the High Court had in the first suit expressly referred the plaintiff to a suit for possession of the property of which she was not in possession; and, as nothing was heard and determined as to this property, the principle of res judicata could not apply.

(iv) Gobind Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Sheriff (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 169). In this case the plaintiff employed the defendant to collect certain debts. The defendant's term of service expired in November 1864. He refused to render any accounts, and the plaintiff, in 1875, sued him for the delivery of his accounts and obtained a decree. In execution of [499] this decree the plaintiff obtained accounts on the 11th June 1877, and after examining them he found that the defendant had misappropriated a sum of Rs. 500. He then instituted a suit in September 1877 to recover this amount, and also prayed for a decree for whatever sum might be found due on taking the accounts. The defendant contended that the suit was barred by ss. 2 and 7 of the old Code, because the plaintiff had prayed for the same relief, and the Commissioner appointed by the Court had found that Rs. 83 only were due to the plaintiff. The learned Chief Justice said :—"The decree merely orders the defendant to render proper accounts to the plaintiff, and it has not been proved how or why the Commissioner was appointed, nor that the report of the commission was approved by the Court. It was, therefore, competent for the plaintiff, after the accounts had been filed by the defendant, and adjusted by the Commissioner, either to accept the money found by the Commissioner to be due to him, or to sue the defendant in a fresh suit for the sums which he now claims." The learned Chief Justice then notices the mosussil practice in suits for accounts, and adverts to this practice and that on the Original Side of the High Court. He says :—"On the Original Side, the prayer of the plaint is not only for an account, but to have the account adjusted, and the balance ordered to be paid to the party entitled to it. The case is referred to the Registrar for this purpose; and after the account has been taken and the balance ascertained by the Registrar, the case comes again before the Court, and a final decree is made. Both parties have a full opportunity, if they please, of going into evidence before the Registrar, and afterwards objecting to the Registrar's findings; and the whole matter is thus adjusted finally in one suit."

It will be important to examine some of the cases decided in England upon the question of splitting claims. In the case of Lord Bagot v. Williams (3 B. and C., 235), Williams the defendant was the plaintiff's steward between November 1821 and April 1822. He received various sums between those two dates, and two other sums in June 1822. He ceased to be the plaintiff's steward in September 1822. The plaintiff sued him in an inferior Court at Ruthven in Wales for the money received by him on the plaintiff's behalf and obtained a decree. A subsequent suit was then brought for a further amount, and the learned Judge, before whom the case came, was of opinion, that whatever constituted a subsisting debt at the time when the first suit in the inferior Court was instituted, and was known to be so, was to be considered as [500] included in and constituting one entire cause of action. A rule to set aside the verdict was obtained but discharged. This was clearly a case of a second suit for a portion of the same claim. In the case of Dunn v. Murray (9 B. and C., 780), a servant, who had been wrongfully dismissed before the expiry of the year of service, brought his action before the expiry of the year. There were counts for wages, work, and labour, &c. There was then a reference of all matters in difference to an arbitrator, who gave the plaintiff a sum equal to wages up to the date upon which the action was commenced. The plaintiff then brought a subsequent suit for damages for wrongful dismissal. TENDERDEN, C.J., said :—"The present claim was within the scope of the former reference: it was the duty of the plaintiff to bring it before the arbitrators, if he meant to insist upon it as a matter in difference; and he cannot now make it the subject-matter of a fresh action." This case may be regarded as one of several remedies arising out of the same cause of action. In the case of Henderson v. Henderson (3 Hare, 100), the next-of-kin of an intestate filed their bill in equity in the Supreme Court of Newfoundland against A, the brother and deceased partner of the intestate, for an account of the estate of the father of A and of the intestate, possessed by A, and an account of the partnership transactions, and the dealings of A with the estate since the death of the intestate. The bill was taken pro confesso against A in the Colonial Court, and, on a reference, the Master reported that certain sums were due to the several next-of-kin on the account of the estate of the intestate's father possessed by A; but that no account between A and the intestate had been laid before him. The Supreme Court decreed that the sums found by the Master to be due to the next-of-kin and the costs should be paid to them by A. The next-of-kin then brought their actions in England against A upon the decree. A filed his bill in Chancery against the next-of-kin and personal representative of the intestate, stating that the intestate's estate was indebted to him on the partnership accounts, and on private transactions; alleging various errors and irregularities in the proceedings in the Supreme Court, and that A intended to appeal therefrom to the Privy Council; and praying that the estate of the intestate might be administered, the partnership accounts taken, the amount of the debt due to A ascertained and paid, and the next-of-kin restrained by injunction from proceeding in their actions. A demurrer for want of equity was allowed on the ground that the whole of the matters were in question between the [501] parties, and might properly have been the subject of adjudication in the suit before the Supreme Court of Newfoundland. The Vice-Chancellor said:—"I believe I state the rule of the Court correctly, when I say, that where a given matter becomes the subject of litigation in, and of adjudication by, a Court of competent jurisdiction, the Court requires the parties to that litigation to bring forward their whole case, and will not (except under special circumstances) permit the same parties to open the same subject of litigation in respect of matter which might have been brought forward as part of the subject in contest, but which was not brought forward only because they have, from negligence, inadvertance, or even accident, omitted part of their case. The plea of res judicata applies, except in special cases, not only to points upon which the Court was actually required by the parties to form an opinion and pronounce a judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of litigation, and which the parties, exercising reasonable diligence, might have brought forward at the time. Those who have had occasion to investigate the subject of bills of review in this Court will not discover anything new in the proposition I have stated, so far as it may apply to proceedings in this country."—See and compare Unatara Debi v. Krishna Kamini Dasi (2 B. L. R., A. C., 102), and the same case before the Privy Council (11 B. L. R., 158), Muthu Madava Naik v. Secatta Muthu Madava Naik (7 Mad. H. C. Rep., 160), Janaki Ammal v. Kamalath Ammal (7 Mad. H. C. Rep. 263), Kashe Kishore Roy Chowdhry v. Krishto Chunder Sandyal Chowdhry (22 W. R. 464), and Denobundhoo Chowdhry v. Kristomonee Dasi (I. L. R. 2 Cal., 152).

In the case of Bowden v. Horne (7 Bing., 716), it was determined, that if a plaintiff obtains an interlocutory judgment for his whole claim, but afterwards attends before the Master to have his damages assessed on one item only, and enters a nolle prosequi as to the others, this will bar any future action for the last-mentioned items. The case of Hunter v. Stewart (31 L. J., Ch., 346) is a case which the profession have found some difficulty in reconciling with the other decisions on the same subject. In that case a bill in equity had been filed in the Supreme Court at Sydney, by which the plaintiff claimed to be admitted as a shareholder in respect of certain shares. That bill was dis-[502]missed. A fresh bill was filed in the Court of Chancery in England, and it was held, that the dismissal of the first bill at Sydney was not conclusive as against the plaintiff. But the real ground of the decision was, that the allegations and equity of the bill at Sydney were different from the allegations and equity of the bill in England. Lord WESTBURY said :—" It is a different equity. It is indeed true that the case made by the second bill must be taken to have been known to the plaintiff at the time of the institution of the first, and might have been then brought forward, and it may be said, therefore, that it ought not now to be entertained ; but I find no authority for this position in civil suits, and no case was cited at the Bar, nor have I been able to find any, in which a decree of dismissal of a former bill has been treated as a bar to a new suit asking the same relief, but stating a different case, giving rise to a different equity." The law here laid down does not accord with the law for India as settled by the decisions above quoted. Whatever force these observations may have in a country in which there is no express statutory provision against the institution of a second suit, such as is to be found in the Indian Code of Civil Procedure, there can be no doubt that they cannot apply where such an express statutory prohibition does exist. In the case of Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsunnessa Begum (11 Moore's I.A., 551; s.c., 8 W. R., P. C., 3), their Lordships of the Privy Council were of opinion, that this prohibition, as contained in s. 7 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, is a strict prohibition, not to be controlled by any consideration of the motives of the party to whom it is to be applied, nor limited by what the Judges who apply it may suppose to have been the reasons for enacting it. In Daniel's Chancery Practice (5th ed., p. 569), it is stated that " a decree or order of the Court, by which the rights of the parties have been determined, or another bill for the same matter dismissed, may be pleaded to a new bill for the same matter; and this, even if the party bringing the new bill were an infant at the time of the former decree: and, if the plaintiff, after the case has been set down to be heard, causes it to be dismissed on his own application, or if the cause is called on to be heard in Court, and the plaintiff makes default, and by reason thereof the bill is dismissed, such dismissal, unless the Court otherwise orders, is equivalent to a dismissal on the merits, and can be pleaded in bar to another suit for the same matter." At page 280 of the same work it is stated that " a bill must be brought for the whole subject; and the Court will [503] not permit a bill for part of a matter only, so as to expose a defendant to be harassed by repeated litigations concerning the same thing; it, therefore, as a general rule, requires that every bill shall be so framed as to afford ground for such a decision upon the whole matter, at one and the same time, as may, as far as possible, prevent future litigation concerning it. It will not allow a plaintiff who has two distinct claims upon the same defendant, or to whom the same defendant may eventually prove liable, to bring separate bills for each particular claim, or to bring a bill for one and omit the other, so as to leave the other to be the subject of future litigation; and it is a good cause of demurrer that a bill is brought for part of a matter only, which is properly one entire account, because the plaintiff shall not split causes and make a multiplicity of suits; and the ground of this rule is the prevention of circuity of remedy." The rule strictly applies where " the whole matter is capable of being immediately disposed of: but if the situation of the property in dispute is such, that no immediate decision upon the whole matter can be come to, the Court may lend its assistance to the extent which the actual state of the case, as it exists at the time of the filing of the bill, will warrant." The rule that a plaintiff will not be allowed to make two litigations when the whole matter can be disposed of in a single suit, is based upon the maxim nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causâ.

But it may be said that the rule as to declaratory decrees really engrafts an exception upon this general principle—it may be said that it could not have been the intention of the Legislature, when allowing a declaratory decree to be made by a Civil Court, to preclude the party, in whose favour that decree is made, from afterwards seeking consequential relief. In order to deal with this argument, some examination of the law relating to declaratory decrees in this country will be necessary. The rule that a Civil Court may make a declaratory decree without consequential relief was first enacted in a statutory form in the 15th and 16th Vict., c. 86, s. 50. That section was re-enacted in India for the old Supreme Courts in s. 29 of Act VI of 1851. It was then re-produced in the same form as s. 15 of the old Code of Civil Procedure:—"No suit shall be open to objection on the ground that a merely declaratory decree or order is sought thereby; and it shall be lawful for the Civil Courts to make binding declarations of right without granting consequential relief." Some doubt and difference of opinion at first prevailed as to the scope of this section, and in several cases the High Courts appear to have thought that a very wide discretion indeed was conferred by this provision upon Civil Courts in India. But in the case of Strimathoo Moothoo Vija Rugoonadah Ranees Kolandassuree Natchiar v. Dorasinga Tever (L. R., 2 I. A., 169; S.C. 15 B. L. R., 83), the Privy Council, after examining the authorities, English and Indian, expressed a very decided opinion that the Indian enactment is to be construed in the same manner as the English Courts have construed the similar provision in the English Statute. Their Lordships then referred to the cases of Jackson v. Turnley (22 L. J., ch., 949) and Rooke v. Lord Kensington (2 K. & J., 753) as deciding that the English section contemplated a case in which the Court is capable of giving consequential relief. In the first of these cases Vice-Chancellor KINDERSLEY, referring to the words of the section—"It shall be lawful for the Civil Courts to make binding declarations of right without granting consequential relief" said:—"This seems to import that it supposes a case in which the Court was capable of granting consequential relief, if consequential relief had been asked or desired." In the second case, Vice-Chancellor WOOD said:—"The form of that section of the Statute implies that there is a consequential relief which might be granted in each case when the right has been so declared, but that the parties are not to be compelled to ask for that relief, and they may satisfy themselves by simply asking a declaration of right, and not pursuing the matter further." There are many cases in which a declaration of right may be sufficient for all purposes; but it is one thing to say that a plaintiff may have such a declaration of right without consequential relief; and another thing to say that, if he chooses to rest contented with a declaration merely, he will still have the right to harass his adversary by a second suit for consequential relief. In the case of Sadat Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (11 B. L. R., 203, at p. 226), the Privy Council said:—"It must be assumed that there must be cases in which a merely declaratory decree may be made without granting any consequential relief, or in which the party does not actually seek for consequential relief in the particular suit; otherwise the fifteenth section of the Code of Civil Procedure would have no operation at all. What their Lordships understand to have been decided in India on this article of the Code, and in the Court of Chancery upon the analogous provision of the English Statute is, that the Court must see that the declaration of right may be the foundation of relief to be got somewhere." Now, in a country where there are [305] different Courts, administering different portions of the substantive law, it may be quite possible that a right may have to be established in one Court before consequential relief can be had in another Court. But where the same Court has jurisdiction to declare the right and to grant the consequential relief, there does not exist the same necessity for a provision which allows merely a declaratory decree to be made. If it really were the intention of the Legislature that in every case there may be a declaration of right obtained in one suit, and consequential relief obtained in a second suit, although the declaration of the right and the relief might have been obtained in one and the same suit, I think that harassing litigation would be largely increased in this country by such a provision. The judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Strimathoo Natchiar v. Dorasinga Tever (L. R., 2 I. A., 169; s.c., 15 B. L. R., 83) was delivered in February 1875, and probably reached this country a month or two afterwards; and it is observable that s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, which was passed on the 17th February 1877, or about two years after this decision, differs materially from s. 15 of the old Code, which was repealed thereby. This section is as follows:—"Any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right, and the Court may in its discretion make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the plaintiff need not in such suit ask for any further relief: Provided that no Court shall make any such declaration where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so." What is the meaning of the term 'right as to any property' in this section? Does it mean an incorporeal right, such a right as is implied by the same term in s. 13 of the Indian Evidence Act—see the Full Bench case of Gujju Lall v. Futtch Lall (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171). Some of the Illustrations appended to the section favour this view, while some of them are not easily reconcilable therewith; at any rate, under this section of the Specific Relief Act, no such declaration could have been made as was made in the case of Tulsi Ram v. Gunga Ram (I. L. R., 1 All., 252). And here it may be observed that it is not easy to reconcile the decision in that case with the observation in the case of Keshoree Lall v. Gobind Ram (4 All. H. C. Rep., 70), where it was said that, if a declaration of the right to recover damages had been made in one suit, [306] a second suit to recover those damages would be barred by s. 7 of the old Code. The omission in s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act of the words "and it shall be lawful for Civil Courts to make binding declarations of right without granting consequential relief" is significant, and the proviso appears to show that the Legislature intended to restrict bare declarations of right to those cases only in which no immediate consequential relief is possible or necessary. In the case of Strimathoo Natchiar v. Dorasinga Tever (L. R., 2 I. A., 169; s.c., 15 B. L. R., 83), their Lordships of the Privy Council expressed their dissent from the view taken by HOLLOWAY, J., that s. 15 of the old Code must be used generally for the purpose of quieting titles; and, as already pointed out, their Lordships intimated their opinion that, in construing this section of the Code, regard was to be had to the construction placed upon the corresponding section of the English Statute by the Courts in England. It will have yet to be decided how far the law as thus settled by the Privy Council has been altered or intended to be altered by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act; see the case of Poran Sookh Chunder v. Parbutty Dossee (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 612).

It will be important to say a few words about the practice as to obtaining an account and a decree for such sum as may be found to be due upon the taking of that account in this country and in England; and this more especially, as there seems to be an idea that the plaintiff could not have had in a former suit the relief sought in the present suit. The fact that the plaintiff did in a former suit ask to have an account taken by the Court, although this prayer was subsequently abandoned (because, as it would seem, the plaintiff did not wish to pay the additional court-fee stamp) is strong to show that the plaintiff was under no misapprehension on this point. A good summary of the action of account in England is given in Mr. Justice Story's Work on Equity Jurisprudence, ss. 447 et seq. In an action of account, there were two distinct courses of proceeding. In the first place, the party might interpose any matter in abatement or bar of the proceeding, as for example, that he was not liable to render an account; and, if he failed in this, then there was an interlocutory judgment, that he should account before auditors. After that judgment was entered, the Court assigned auditors who proceeded to take the accounts. This was a common law action, and for reasons to which it is unnecessary to refer here, it was found to be tedious, expensive, and inconvenient. A [507] Court of Common Law could not grant discovery; and a discovery of facts was, in most cases of account, very essential to a complete recovery. It thus became the practice for persons requiring an account to resort to the Court of Chancery; and it was held that the Court having once a rightful jurisdiction of the cause ought to proceed to give relief in order to avoid multiplicity of suits. Thus it happened that Courts of Equity acquired jurisdiction in matters of account; and in accordance with the principle usually followed in these Courts, complete relief is given in one suit (i) by taking an account, and (ii) by making a decree for the amount found to be due to the plaintiff upon the taking of such account. See s. 455 and following paragraphs of Mr. Story's Work.

Now the Courts in India are Courts of Equity, and it would seem to be reasonable that the same course should be followed in this country; and that would also appear to have been the intention of the Legislature in enacting both the old and the new Codes of Civil Procedure. Section 181 of the old Code enacted as follows:—"In any suit or other judicial proceeding, in which an investigation or adjustment of account is necessary, it shall be lawful for the Court to appoint such officer or other person as aforesaid (that is, as mentioned in s. 180) to be a commissioner for the purpose of making such investigation or adjustment, and to direct that the parties, or their attorneys, or pleaders shall attend on the commissioner during such investigation or adjustment." The remainder of the section contains further provisions to enable the commissioner to investigate and adjust accounts. Sections 394 and 395 of the present Code contain similar provisions. It thus appears that at the time when the plaintiffs brought their first suit they might have asked and obtained all the relief which they seek in the present case. I may refer to the following authorities as showing that the High Court have on many occasions pointed out and explained the practice in matters of account to the lower Courts in the mofussil—Syud Shah Ali v. Mussummat Bibi Nasibun (24 W. R., 70), Annoda Persad Roy v. Dwarka Nath Gangopadhyaya (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 754), Shoshi Bhoshun Pal v. Guru Churn Mookhopadya (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 89); and page 12 of the Memorandum of Practice prefixed to the edition of the High Court Circular Orders published in 1876.

The questions, then, which we desire to refer to a Full Bench are the following:—

I. If a person, who is in a position to ask (a) a declaration of right [508] and (b) immediate consequential relief, asks and obtains a declaration of right only, can he afterwards maintain a suit for the consequential relief, which he might have asked and obtained in his first suit?

II. If a person, who is entitled to have an account, and a decree for whatever amount may be found due to him upon the taking of such account, asks and obtains merely a decree declaring his right to have an account, can he maintain a second suit for an account, and the amount which may be found due to him upon the taking of such account?

The result will be that, so far as the major plaintiff is concerned, this appeal will be dismissed; and that, so far as the minor plaintiff is concerned, the determination of the appeal will depend upon the decision of the Full Bench upon the questions submitted. If the result of this decision should be that the present suit can be maintained so far as the minor plaintiff is concerned, then there is another question as to which it is desirable to make a few observations. It is said that there is not a single cause of action in respect of the account for the whole of the period from 1262 to Assin 1277, but that there is a separate cause of action in respect of the account of each year. The determination of this question will depend upon the validity of the will, which is to be found at pages 16, 17, and 18 of the Paper-Book. If that will is genuine, according to the direction contained at the close of the first paragraph (page 18), there was to be an yearly adjustment of accounts at the close of each year; and upon that adjustment the surplus profits were to be divided into five equal shares, one share going to each of the five brothers. If the will is established in this suit, or ought to be held to have been established in the previous suit, it may follow that the right of action in respect of the account of each year accrued upon the adjustment directed to be made at the close of the year. This is a point with which, if necessary, we shall deal when the questions submitted to the Full Bench shall have been determined.

Prinsep, J.—As regards the plaintiff Kalidhun Chuttapadhyas, there can be no doubt that the suit is barred. It is necessary, however, having regard to the two decisions of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Tulsi Ram v. Gunga Ram (I. L. R., 1 All., 252) and Darbo v. Kesho Rai (I. L. R., 2 All., 356), and to the decision in the case of Gobind Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Sheriff (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 169), that the question now in issue regarding the minor [509] plaintiff should be determined by a Full Bench. The question which would arise for the determination of the Full Bench is, whether, after having obtained a decree declaring his right to obtain accounts for a certain period from the defendant, the plaintiff can bring a second suit for those accounts and any money due thereon, or whether such a suit is barred by s. 7 of Act VIII of 1859 or s. 43 of the present Code, inasmuch as it relates to a claim arising out of the same cause of action as in the declaratory suit. I, therefore, concur in referring the case, as regards the minor, for the decision of a Full Bench on this point. Should it be held that the suit is not barred, it will be necessary to determine the other points raised on this appeal.

Mr. H. Bell, Baboo Juggut Chunder Banerjee, and Baboo Bama Churn Banerjee for the Appellants.

Mr. Evans and Baboo Ambica Churn Banerjee for the Respondent.

Mr. H. Bell for the Appellants.—The reference gives to the words 'cause of action' a wider meaning than they will bear; the cause of action is confined to the particular suit. The right to account depended on the fiduciary relationship of the parties; out of that relationship a number of causes of action may arise. In the declaratory suit, the issues were—(i) was the defendant the guardian and manager of the minors? (ii) had the accounts been duly rendered? (iii) did the will save him from accountability? The decree simply declared the plaintiffs' right to have an account; the defendant was bound to have given the account, and if nothing was due, there was an end of the matter. No cause of action for money due can arise till the accounts are taken. The cause of action then is the neglect of the defendant to pay over the money; whether the decree should have been declaratory is a different question. It was open to the Court to have refused a declaratory decree. The essence of a declaratory decree is, that it is the foundation of future relief, as was the case in Tulsi Ram v. Gunga Ram (1 L. R., 1 All., 252). The true test of the proper application of s. 7 of Act VIII of 1859 is given in Rao Kurun Sing v. Nawab Mahomed Fyz Ali Khan (14 Moore's I. A., 187; s.c., 10 B. L. R., 1). [310] A suit against an executor for an account is no bar to a suit for breach of trust—Dhonender Chunder Mookerjee v. Mutty Lall Mookerjee (14 B. L. R., 276). The cause of action is limited to the immediate cause which entitled the party to relief. A plaintiff who has sued for and obtained a decree for an abatement of rent may afterwards sue for refund of rent paid in excess prior to the institution of the first suit, notwithstanding he might have joined the two causes of action—Okhoy Coomar Chuttopadhyaya v. Mahatap Chunder Bahadoor (1 L. R., 5 Cal., 24). The true test is, whether it is an integral part of the same cause of action—Pratap Chandra Burua v. Ram Swarnamayi (4 B. L. R., F. B., 113), Balam Bhutt v. Bhoobun Lall (6 W. R., 78), in which Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonessa Begum (11 Moore's I. A., 551; s.c., W. R., P. C., 11) is explained. A suit to declare a right to an account is different from a suit for money due on the account; see Gobind Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Sheriff (1 L. R., 7 Cal., 169).

Mr. Evans for the Respondent.—The cause of action was a liability to render an account, and the defendant's refusal is no reason why the plaintiffs should split their cause of action; all points should have been raised in the first suit; the suit is to include the whole claim arising out of the cause of action. The word 'claim' in s. 43 of the Code covers the whole of the demand. [MITTER, J.—That is, a demand to recover something from the defendant; a demand for some remedy; a declaratory decree could not be a claim. [PONTIFEX, J.—It was not necessary to have sued for a declaration. Section 15 of Act VIII of 1859 merely follows the English Act—Jackson v. Turnley (22 L. J., Ch., 949).] Declaratory decrees without giving consequential relief are only to be given in England in cases in which there is some equitable relief which might be granted if the plaintiff chose to ask for it—Rooke v. Lord Kensington (2 K. & J., 753). The plaintiffs brought this suit to harass the defendant; they had all the accounts with them. The plaintiffs have clearly relinquished part of their cause of action in not asking for the account to be taken: See Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonessa Begum (11 Moore's I. A., 551; s.c., 8 W. R., P. C., 11) and Radha Kishore Debia v. Ram Coomar Chowdhry (12 W. R., 79): They have split their claim.—Tarun Prasad Ghose v. Khudumani Debia (5 B. L. R., 187; s.c., 13 W. R., 261).

The Opinion of the Full Bench was as follows:—

Garth, C. J.—In the year 1272, the plaintiffs brought a suit against their uncle, the defendant Shiba Nath Chatterjee, who had been the manager for many years of certain family property in which they were co-sharers. In that suit the plaintiff Kalidhun, who was of age, acted on behalf of himself and of his brother, the plaintiff Krishna Dhun, who was a minor. The object of the suit was to obtain from the defendant an account of the property from the year 1262 to 1277, Fasli; but from the form of the plaint it seemed doubtful whether the plaintiffs meant to sue for the account itself, or only for a declaration of their right to it. The stamp-fee on the plaint was Rs. 10, which would have been the proper stamp if the plaintiffs only sued for a declaration of right; but the defendant took the objection, that the stamp was insufficient, because the plaintiffs had in their prayer apparently asked for an account.

An issue was raised upon this point; but the Subordinate Judge considered that the plaintiffs' claim was for a declaration of right only, and eventually made a decree to that effect; and this judgment was afterwards affirmed on appeal by the District Judge. Having obtained that decree, and the defendant having taken no steps to render an account, the plaintiffs, on the 30th of December 1879, brought their present suit "for the amount of cash, Company's papers, and other debts that might be found due by the defendant to the plaintiffs on an adjustment of accounts." In other words, the plaintiffs in this suit sued for the consequential relief, which they undoubtedly might have had in the first suit, if they had only insisted upon it.

The lower Court decided that the suit was barred by limitation, and the plaintiffs appealed to this Court from that decision.

The Division Bench, before whom the appeal was heard, con-[512]sidered that, as regards the plaintiff Kalidhun, the suit was barred: but as regards the other plaintiff, as he was still a minor at the time when the suit was brought, they held that limitation did not apply. They have, however, referred to a Full Bench another and more difficult question which has been raised by the defendant,—namely, whether the suit is barred by s. 7 of Act VIII of 1859, which was the Code of Procedure in force at the time when the former suit was brought?

That section enacts, that "every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action; and that if a plaintiff relinquish or omit to sue for any portion of his claim, a suit for the portion so relinquished or omitted shall not afterwards be entertained."

A provision to the same effect is contained in s. 43 of the present Code, and the substantial question referred to us is Whether the fact of the plaintiffs having omitted to press for an account in the former suit, prevents them from suing for such an account in the present suit?

If s. 7 stood alone, unqualified by any other provision in the law, it would, indeed, be very difficult to contend, that the present suit is not barred. It is obvious that the plaintiffs' real object in the first suit was to obtain an account from the defendant, and that the declaratory decree, with which they were then content, was only a means to effect that end. It would seem, therefore, impossible to say that, in suing for that decree, they sued for their whole claim in respect of their cause of action.

But then it is contended that s. 15 of the Code is intended to modify s. 7, and removes any difficulty which the plaintiffs might otherwise have had in enforcing their present claim. That section is as follows:—"No suit shall be open to objection on the ground that a merely declaratory decree or order is sought thereby; and it shall be lawful for the Civil Courts to make binding declarations of right without granting consequential relief."

This provision is precisely similar to that of s. 50 of the English Statute 15 and 16 Vict., c. 86, which was passed "for the improvement of the jurisdiction of the Courts of Equity;" [513] and it has received an interpretation from the highest judicial authorities in England, which, as the plaintiffs contend, impliedly, if not expressly, justifies their present suit. It has been held by the Privy Council, in accordance with decisions of the English Courts of Equity, that a declaratory decree cannot be made under s. 15, unless the plaintiff is entitled to obtain some consequential relief. In the case of Sree Narayan Mitter (11 B. L. R., 171), their Lordships, quoting with approbation the rule laid down by V. C. WOOD in Rooke v. Lord Kensington (2 K. & J., 753), say:—"It has been held that, under the 15 and 16 Vict., s. 50, a declaratory decree cannot be made unless the plaintiff would be entitled to consequential relief if he asked for it :” and further on in p. 162 of the same judgment they say :—“ It is not a matter of absolute right to obtain a declaratory decree. It is discretionary with the Court to grant it or not, and in every case the Court must exercise a sound judgment as to whether it is reasonable or not, under all the circumstances of the case, to grant the relief prayed for.” And again, “ it must be assumed that there may be cases in which a merely declaratory decree may be made, without granting any consequential relief in the particular suit ; otherwise s. 15 of the Code of Civil Procedure would have no operation at all.”

And in the well-known Shiva Gunga case (11 Moore's I. A., 50), Sir JAMES COLVILLE says :—“ It appears, therefore, to their Lordships, that the construction which must be put upon the clause in question (s. 15) is, that a declaratory decree cannot be made, unless there be a right to consequential relief capable of being had in the same Court, or in certain cases in some other Court.”

Having regard to these rulings, the plaintiffs contend, apparently with good reason, that their case comes directly within the scope of s. 15. They might in their first suit [to use the language of V. C. WOOD in Rooke v. Lord Kensington (2 K. & J., 753)], have obtained consequential relief if they had pressed for it, but the Court in its discretion thought fit to give them a declaratory decree only ; and as the defendant has disregarded that [514] decree, the plaintiffs have now brought a second suit to enforce their right.

It seems to me that this contention is well founded. I think that s. 15 is intended to modify the provisions of s. 7, and the present case is just one of those to which the section is intended to apply. This was evidently the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in Tulsi Ram v. Gunga Ram (I. L. R., 1 All., 252), and I entirely agree with that decision.

It may be that, in the plaintiffs' first suit, the Court did not exercise its discretion wisely in acting upon s. 15, when it might have disposed of the plaintiffs' whole claim at once. There certainly seems no good reason why it should not have done so. But the Subordinate Judge having exercised his discretion in that suit, and given the plaintiffs a declaratory decree only, we are clearly not called upon, nor indeed competent in this suit, to say whether in so doing the Subordinate Judge was right or wrong. We have only to determine whether, having obtained in that suit a declaratory decree, the plaintiffs are barred in this suit from obtaining the account to which they have been declared entitled, and it seems to me that, according to the true meaning of the Privy Council rulings, they are so entitled.

It would indeed seem almost a mockery to empower a Civil Court to declare a plaintiff entitled to relief, and then, when the defendant refuses him that relief and disregards the Court's order, to tell the plaintiff that he is wholly without remedy, and that the Court has no power to assist him.

As s. 15 has now been virtually repealed by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act and as no similar provision has been re-enacted in the new Civil Procedure Code, it is probable that the result of our present judgment will not be very material in the future.

I am of opinion that the answer to the question referred to us should be that the plaintiffs, under the circumstances, are not barred from bringing their present suit.

The plaintiffs should have their costs of this reference to the Full Bench.

[515] Prinsep, J.—No doubt a suit for a declaratory decree without consequential relief would lie, but I have much hesitation in holding that, as in the present case, a suit could be brought for the consequential relief for which the plaintiffs could have asked, but omitted to ask in their former suit. The law now in force, s. 42, Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), provides for such a contingency, and, therefore, I do not think it necessary to differ from the judgment of my learned colleagues.

NOTES.

[I. DECLARATIONS "IN THE AIR"—

The statutory changes in the law may be noted :—

In England, previous to the Chancery Procedure Act, 1852, (15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 50) neither the Court of Chancery nor the Chancery Division would in general make declarations "in the air" (i.e., declarations which were not asked for as a step towards obtaining some present relief.)

Sec. 50 thereof empowered the Court of Chancery "to make binding declarations of right without granting consequential relief," but this was construed to apply only where the plaintiff would be entitled to consequential relief if he chose to ask for it (Rooke v. Lord Kensington, (2 K. & J. 753).

That section was introduced in India by VI of 1854, sec. 29; and it was embodied in Act VIII of 1859, sec. 15, "No suit shall be open to objection on the ground that a merely declaratory decree or order is sought thereby, and it shall be lawful for the Civil Courts to make binding declarations of right without granting consequential relief." The qualification laid down in Rooke v. Lord Kensington was also held to apply; and it was held that "the Court must see that the declaration of right may be the foundation of relief to be got somewhere" (11 B. L. R. 203; 15 B. L. R. 83).

The present Indian Law is that embodied in sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. The present English rule (O. 25, r. 5 of the rules of the Supreme Court) empowers the Court to "make binding declarations of right whether any consequential relief is or could be claimed or not." Under this rule, actions can be brought merely to declare rights—what they are and what they will be—even in cases where no substantial relief can at present be given. See for instances, The Annual Practice (of 1913, at pp. 108-410).

II. THE BAR TO SUBSEQUENT SUIT FOR OMITTED CLAIM OR REMEDY—

This case was decided with reference to the wording in ss. 7 and 15 of the C.P.C., 1859. Both these sections have been altered (see C.P.C. 1908, O. 2, r. 2 C.P.C. 1882, 1877, s. 43; Sp. Relief Act, s. 42) and the question has to be considered with reference to these—see 8 Cal. 825; 8 Cal. 819; (1910) 8 I.C. 9 per KARAMAT HUSAIN, J.

III. MEANING OF CERTAIN EXPRESSIONS—See FIELD, J.'S JUDGMENT—

'Cause of action'—Comprises every fact which is material to be proved to enable the plaintiff to succeed:—Cooke v. Gilt, L.R. 8 C.P. 116; comprises every fact which, if traversed, the plaintiff must prove in order to obtain judgment:—Read v. Brown, 22 Q.B.D. 131; 16 All. 165; 18 All. 131; 432; 26 Mad. 760. The grounds or the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour:—16 Cal. at 102 P.C.; includes the entire set of facts which gives rise to an enforceable claim, i.e., the right and its infringement:—22 Cal. at 839; 21 Mad. at 157. Ex. III to sec. 17 in the previous Code of 1882 has been omitted in the C.P.C. of 1908, as it makes it immaterial whether the whole or part only of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction—see sec. 20.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 15th March, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE.

Jantoo.....Plaintiff

Radha Canto Doss.....Defendant.*

Stamp-duty on appeals arising out of suits under s. 77 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) - Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), sched. iv, cl. 12, art. 17.

The court-fees payable on all appeals to the High Court arising out of suits brought under s. 77 of the Registration Act of 1877, is a fee of ten rupees, irrespective of the value of the suit.

REFERENCE to the High Court under s. 5 of the Court Fees Act.

This was originally a suit brought under s. 77 of Act III of 1877 to enforce the registration of a certain deed purporting to convey landed property of the value of Rs. 609. The plaintiff failed in both the Court of First Instance, and on appeal to the Subordinate Judge. He then appealed to the High Court, affixing to his memorandum of appeal a stamp of Rs. 10. The stamp was objected to, and the question as to whether an ad valorem stamp was necessary, or whether a stamp of Rs. 10 would be sufficient, was heard before the Taxing Officer, where it was [516] contended, on behalf of the plaintiff, that a fee of Rs. 10 only was required under art. 17, cl. 12, sched. iv of the Court Fees Act, as the suit was one to 'obtain registration,' and the nature of such a suit rendered it impossible to estimate the suit at a money-value; and that, notwithstanding that in a similar reference [Chunnamul Johori v. Brojonath Roy (appeal from Original Decree, No. 142 of 1881)], it had been decided that an ad valorem stamp was necessary, yet that decision was made on special grounds,—viz., that "the question virtually at issue was, whether the defendant was or was not a minor at the time when he executed the deed, and whether the deed as against him was a valid document," and the case was distinguishable.

The Taxing Officer was of opinion that an ad valorem stamp was necessary; but on account of the distinction sought to be drawn between this case and the decision in Chunnamul Johori v. Brojonath Roy (appeal from Original Decree, No. 142 of 1881) he referred the matter to the Chief Justice.

The Opinion of the Chief Justice was as follows :

Garth, C.J.—I have had great doubt about this question. But having regard to what appears to be the general opinion of the Judges, and also to the inconvenience that would arise, if the stamp-fee upon such appeals were to vary according to the nature of the issues raised in each case, I think it will be advisable to order that a uniform fee of Rs. 10 should be charged in all such cases.

NOTES.

[REGISTRATION ACT (1877, s. 77)—SUITS (AND APPEALS TO ENFORCE REGISTRATION)—STAMP DUTY—

In (1901) 12 M. L. J. 87 suits to enforce registration were held to be suits in which consequential relief was prayed for, within sec. 7 (4) of the Court Fees Act 1870, but this view was not accepted in (1902) 12 M. L. J. 88, and by the Full Bench in (1907) 31 Mad. 89 17 M. L. J. 573. The latter report gives full notes of the arguments urged for and against the view.

Such suits were held to be incapable of valuation and the Madras High Court, in 31 Mad. 89 F. B., laid down that for purposes of jurisdiction of Courts, the valuation should be not that fixed by the plaintiff (31 Cal., 352; 28 All., 545), but one determined by the Court itself.]

Hindu Law - Mitakshara—Sale or mortgage of joint family property—Suit by son to recover possession of share— Limitation—Presumption as to property acquired while family joint- Parties--- Right of purchaser at execution-sale.

A suit by a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law, to recover possession of property sold during his minority by his father, is within time if brought within three years after he attains the age of twenty-one.

The presumption is, that all acquisitions made while a family is joint, are made from the joint funds, and the burden is upon the person who alleges that any property is self-acquired, to prove that allegation.

A father governed by the Mitakshara law may alienate the family property to discharge debts incurred by him for purposes not illegal or immoral. If the son seeks to set aside such alienation as to his own interest, he will have to show that the purposes of the alienation were illegal or immoral.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 162 of 1880, against the decree of Moulvie Hafiz Abdul Karim, First Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore, dated the 24th April 1880.

If the son, being adult, has joined in the conveyance, or led the alienee by his conduct to suppose that he assented to the alienation, he will be estopped from disputing its validity. These propositions apply to a mortgage, so as to place the purchaser at an execution-sale under a decree upon the mortgage-bond in the position of an alienee by private sale.

If the son has been a party to the suit in which the decree upon the mortgage-bond was obtained, he is concluded; but if he has not been a party to the suit, he is not concluded, but must show that the original debt was contracted for illegal or immoral purposes, in order to recover his share of the property from the purchaser. Where the father has neither aliened nor mortgaged the family property, but it is sought by suit to make that property liable to satisfy a debt incurred by the father, the son, as well as the father, must be a party to the suit.

When the creditor sues the father alone for a debt contracted by him alone, and in execution sells the right, title, and interest of the father only, the purchaser at this sale does not take the son's interest.

THIS was a suit for possession of a share in certain property, which had been sold in execution of a money-decree.

The plaintiffs, who alleged that they were governed by the [518] Mitakshara school of law, were respectively the son and wife of one Gobind Dyal Singh, who was made a party defendant to the suit. It appeared that, on the 12th September 1865, in execution of a decree against the defendant Gobind Dyal Singh, his right and interest in certain properties were sold to one Honuman Singh. The plaintiff Deg Narain Singh was at that time a minor, and his mother, the plaintiff Mussanut Luchman Dai Koeri, by virtue of a certificate under Act XL of 1858, became the manager of his estate. Deg Narain Singh attained the age of twenty-one years on the 28th January 1879. The plaintiffs now sued the representatives of Honuman Singh, and also Gobind Dyal Singh, alleging that, in the decree in execution of which the right and interest of Gobind Dyal Singh were sold, the plaintiff Deg Narain Singh was no party, and that the decree was not binding upon him. They alleged that a 1a. 2g. 2½k. share had been acquired out of joint funds belonging to the family. They prayed that their share in the property sold might be placed in their possession, and for mesne profits. The representatives of Honuman, in their written statement, contended, that the suit was barred by limitation; that the family of Gobind Dyal Singh was governed by the Mithila law, and that the property alleged to have been acquired out of joint funds was the self-acquired property of Gobind Dyal Singh. They also stated that a regular suit for confirmation of possession had been brought by their ancestor against Gobind Dyal Singh and decreed in his favour. The Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiffs a decree.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Mr. R. E. Twidale, Baboo Saligram Singh, and Baboo Doorga Prosad for the Appellants.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry, Baboo Taruck Nath Sen, and Baboo Amarendra Nath Chatterjee for the Respondents.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (PRINSEP and FIELD, JJ.):—

Field, J.—Four points have been taken before us in this appeal. The first is concerned with the question of limitation.

[519] On this point we agree with the judgment of the Court below. We think that, having regard to the provisions of s. 3* of the Indian Majority Act, IX of 1875, the plaintiff No. 1, Deg Narain Singh, attained his majority upon completing his age of twenty-one years; and as this suit was instituted within three years after he so came of age, it is within time. We may observe that there is now no contention before us that this plaintiff was born on a date prior to that set forth in the plaint.

The second point is concerned with the 1a. 2g. 2½k. share, which the plaintiffs allege, though not very distinctly, to have been acquired out of the joint funds belonging to the family. The defendants, on the other hand, contended, that this was their self-acquired property. The Subordinate Judge has, in a very hesitating manner, disposed of the question thus raised. He does not believe the evidence on either side, but he comes to the conclusion that, as the burden lay upon the defendants to prove that this share of the property was purchased out of their funds exclusively, and as they have failed to discharge this burden, it must be held that the property was acquired from the joint funds of the family. There can be no doubt that the presumption is, that all acquisitions made while the family is joint are made from the joint funds; and that the burden is upon the person who alleges that any property is self-acquired to prove this allegation. In this case we think that the defendants have not discharged the burden which thus lay upon them; and we think, moreover, that the balance of evidence is in favour of the plaintiffs. We are, therefore, of opinion that this 1a. 2g. 2½k. share must be regarded as joint property.

The third point raises rather a difficult question concerned with Mitakshara law. It is contended that the son, who is the plaintiff No. 1, cannot succeed in this suit, unless he can prove that the debt, upon which the decree was passed, was a debt incurred for immoral purposes; and the fourth contention is, that if we hold that the plaintiff No. 1 can succeed in the present suit without proving that the debt was incurred for immoral purposes, because he was not a party to the suit in which the decree for that debt was passed, then there ought to be an inquiry into the question, whether or not that debt was incurred for necessary purposes.

[520] These last two points are, to a certain extent, intermixed, and will have, therefore, to be considered together. The argument upon both of them assumes that the share of the son was made liable to satisfy the debt, and passed by the execution-sale to the purchaser. If this were so, there would be much force in the argument addressed to us. If, on the contrary, the share of the son was not made liable and did not pass, the case becomes altogether different. It will be important to examine the cases bearing on the question. In the case of Deen Dyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198; S.C., I. R., 4 I. A., 247), the son sued to recover back the whole of the estate. The Subordinate Judge, gave him a decree for one moiety, - i.e., his own share; the father and the son being the only persons entitled to share upon a partition. The District Judge dismissed the suit altogether, holding that legal

* [Sec. 3:—Subject as aforesaid, every minor of whose person or property a guardian has been or shall be appointed by any Court of Justice, and every minor under the jurisdiction of any Court of Wards, shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Succession Act (No. X of 1865) or in any other enactment, be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of twenty-one years and not before:

Subject as aforesaid, every other person domiciled in British India shall be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of eighteen years and not before.]

necessity for the alienation had been proved. The High Court reversed the decree of the District Judge, and, on appeal to the Privy Council, their Lordships were of opinion, that legal necessity had been proved, but that this point was immaterial, as the case ought to be decided upon another ground,—the ground namely, that the father's right, title, and interest only had been sold in execution of the decree; and the purchaser at the execution-sale was entitled to nothing more. Their Lordships of the Privy Council say: "This issue," that is the issue of legal necessity, "seems to their Lordships to be immaterial in the present suit, because whatever may have been the nature of the debt, the appellant cannot be taken to have acquired by the execution-sale more than the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor. If he had sought to go further, and to enforce his debt against the whole property and the co-sharers therein who were not parties to the bond, he ought to have framed his suit accordingly and have made those co-sharers parties to it. By the proceedings which he took, he could not get more than what was seized and sold in execution, viz., the right, title, and interest of the father. If any authority be required for this proposition, it is sufficient to refer to the cases of Nugendur Chunder Ghose v. Sreematty Kaminee Dossee (11 Moore's I. A., 241), and Baijun Doobey v. Brij Bhookun Lall Amusti (L. R., 2 I. A., 275)." See the report of Deen Dyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh, in the I. L. R., 3 Cal., at pp. 204, 205. Now, in the case before us, there can be no doubt that what was sold at the execution-sale was, not the whole property, but the right, title, and interest of the father Gobind Dyal Singh alone, and, therefore, so far as this point is concerned, the present case is on all fours with the case in the Privy Council just quoted. But it is contended by Mr. Twisdale, that, although the decree was obtained only as against the father, we ought to presume that it was obtained against the father not only in his personal capacity, but also in his representative capacity as guardian of his minor son and manager of the family-property; and that, in this way, the decree binds all the members of the family and the whole of their interest in the property sold. It is sought, moreover, to distinguish this case from that of Deen Dyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198; S.C., L. R., 4 I. A., 247), on the ground that, in that case, Jugdeep Narain Singh was a major when the suit on the bond was brought, while in the present case the plaintiff Deg Narain Singh was a minor when the suit was instituted and the decree obtained. It has been argued that, although it does not so appear from the published report, Jugdeep Narain Singh was a major at the time referred to; but the judgment of the Privy Council does not in any way turn on this. It will, however, be useful to examine the authorities which Mr. Twisdale has quoted in support of that argument. The first case is that of Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (L. R., 1 I. A., 321; S.C., 14 B. L. R., 187). There, in what is called "the first appeal" (page 328 of the report in L. R., 1 I. A.), the father had sold the property by private sale, and it was not a case of a purchase at an execution-sale. The father had sold not merely his own interest, but the property itself. Their Lordships of the Privy Council were of opinion, that this sale was justified by the necessity of discharging the father's debt, which had not been shown to have been incurred for an immoral purpose, and which was, therefore, properly discharged from the ancestral property. In the second appeal (page 333 of the report in L. R., 1 I. A.), the purchaser was a purchaser at an execution-sale. The property purchased had been mortgaged by the father (see the report of this case at pages 188-189 of 14 B. L. R.), a decree had been made upon this mortgage-bond, and the Court had given an order for this particular property to be put up for sale under the execution. The property itself, and not merely the father's interest therein, had been sold, and in this respect that case differs from the case of Deen Dyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198; s.c., L. R., 4 I. A., 247), and from the case now before us. The father had in fact exercised the power of a managing member of a Hindu family to bind the family property by the mortgage-bond. A decree was subsequently obtained upon this bond: and, as the Lords of the Judicial Committee observed, if this decree was a proper one (and that it was an improper one was not shown), the interest of the sons, as well as the interests of the father, in the property, although it was ancestral, were liable for the payment of the father's debt. The question, whether a decree against the father in a suit to which the son was not a party would bind the son and his interest in the property, was not raised in those cases, and therefore nothing was decided on this point by the Privy Council.

The next case relied on is that of Tachmi Dai Koori v. Asman Singh (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 213; s.c., 25 W. R., 421). Here the exact point which we have now to decide was not raised or determined.

The case of Gonesh Panday v. Dabi Doyal Singh (5 C. L. R., 36) was a case of a mortgage-bond and of a purchaser in execution of a decree upon this mortgage-bond, and is, therefore, not in point, as it is on all fours with the case of Girdhari Lal v. Kantoo Lal (L. R., 1 I. A., 321; s.c., 14 B. L. R., 187). It may be convenient to notice that this case decided a point which is also material in the case now before us—viz., that a decree-holder, who purchases in execution of his own decree, cannot be considered to be in the favourable position of a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. This is also in accordance with [523] the decision of the Full Bench in Luchmun Dass v. Giridhar Chowdhry (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 855). We may here observe that the decree, in execution of which the property was sold in the case now before us, was a simple money-decree, and was apparently obtained upon a simple money-bond. We think that there is a distinction between a simple money-decree upon a money-bond and a decree upon a mortgage-bond. In the case of a mortgage it would perhaps make no difference whether the decree obtained upon the mortgage-bond were a simple money-decree or a decree to enforce the lien against the mortgaged property; as in either case the mortgagee's lien would (so far as the present question is concerned) be satisfied and extinguished by the sale of the mortgaged property. See the Full Bench case of Syud Emam Momtazooddeen Mahomed v. Raj Coomar Dass (14 B. L. R., 408); also Narsadas Jitram v. Joglekar (I. L. R., 4 Bom., 57) and Munbasi Koorer v. Nourutton Koorer (8 C. L. R., 428). In the present case it has not been proved that the decree was a decree made upon a mortgage-bond. The property of a joint family governed by Mitakshara law may be bound in two ways. It may be bound by the father if he sells or mortgages it for the liquidation of a debt due by him and not incurred for immoral purposes. If the father does not, in the exercise of the power which he has as manager, himself sell or mortgage, then the only other way in which the family property can be made liable is by a decree of Court; and according to the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Deen Dyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198; s.c., L. R., 4 I. A., 247), the decree will bind only those persons who are parties to the suit in which it was made. In the present case the father was the only person sued, and we are not prepared to assent to the argument addressed to us, that, although the minor was not expressly made a party to the suit through his natural guardian or a guardian ad litem appointed by the Court in the suit, still we ought to assume that the father was a defendant, not only for himself and his own interest, but also as representing his minor son and the interest of such son in the family property. The next case is [524] that of Gunga Pershad v. Sheo Dyal Singh (5 C. L. R., 224). This was a case of an alienation by the father, and not a case of a purchaser at an execution-sale, and with reference to what has been already said, it was not in point, as the father was competent to alienate the property for a debt not incurred for immoral purposes. The case of Bissessar Lall Sahoo v. Luckmessur Singh (I. L. R., 6 I. A., 233; s.c., 5 C. L. R., 477) is also not in point. It was there expressly found that the decrees were substantially in respect of the joint debt of the family, and that they were passed against the representative of the family, in other words, it was found that the person sued represented all the members of the family. The next case is that of Upooroop Tewary v. Lall Baudjee Sahay (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 749; s.c., 8 C. L. R., 192). This also was a case in which the father had mortgaged, and there was also this additional ground for the decision that the son, being an adult, stood by and allowed the creditors, with whom his father was dealing, to believe that he was a consenting party. Then we have the case of Gobardhon Lall v. Singessur Dutt Kooer (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 52; s.c., 8 C. L. R., 227). Here a decree was made against the father, the family property was attached, and after the attachment the father died. No sale took place in pursuance of the attachment, and therefore this case also is not in point. The case of Munbasi Kooer v. Nowrutton Kooer (8 C. L. R., 428), was a case of a sale in execution of a decree obtained upon a mortgage-bond, and, for the reasons already given, is not in point. The last case relied upon by Mr. Twidale is that of Narayana Charya v. Narso Krishna (I. L. R., 1 Bom., 262), and this case is in support of his contention, but it is not a decision of this Court.

We now turn to examine the cases quoted on the other side, and we think that the following four cases are against Mr. Twidale's argument, and support the contention of the respondents—Doodur Prokash Misser v. Hirday Narain Sahoo (5 C. L. R., 112), Pursidh Narain Singh v. Hanooman Sahay (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 845; s.c., 5 C. L. R., 576), Bhagwat Dussa v. Gouri Koonwar (7 C. L. R., 218), and Hanooman Sahay v. Pursidh Narain [525] Singh (7 C. L. R., 465). We may observe that the last case is the case of a mortgage, and therefore conflicts with some of the decisions already referred to. We may further refer to the case of Laljee Sahoy v. Fakeer Chaud (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 135), where it was held, that the interests of an adult son could not be affected by a decree against the father alone. The decision of that case turned, however, upon another point.

We think that the following propositions will be found to be established as the result of all the cases :—

1st. The father may alienate the family property to discharge debts incurred by him for purposes not illegal or immoral.

2nd.—If the son seeks to set aside such alienation as to his own interest, he will have to show that the purposes of the alienation were illegal or immoral.

3rd.—If the son, being adult, has joined in the conveyance or led the alienee by his conduct to suppose that he assented to the alienation, he will be estopped from disputing its validity.

4th.—The above three propositions apply to a mortgage so as to place the purchaser at an execution-sale under a decree upon the mortgage-bond in the position of an alienee by private sale.

5th.—If the son has been a party to the suit in which the decree upon the mortgage-bond was obtained, he is of course concluded.

6th.—If the son has not been a party to the suit, he is not concluded, but must show that the original debt was contracted for illegal or immoral purposes, in order to recover his share of the property from the purchaser.

7th.—Where the father has neither aliened nor mortgaged the family-property, but it is sought by suit to make that property liable to satisfy a debt incurred by the father, the son, as well as the father, must be made a party to the suit.

8th.—When the creditor sues the father alone for a debt contracted by him alone, and in execution sells the right, title, and interest of the father only, the purchaser at this sale does not take the son's interest.

The case of Laljee Sahoy v. Fakeer Chand (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 135) was the case of an adult son. The present case is that of a minor son. Does [526] this difference make any difference in the application of the eighth and last proposition? It has always been well understood in this country that where it is sought to affect the interests of a minor by a suit, such minor must be made a party to such suit by his natural guardian or a guardian appointed by the Court. The present Code of Civil Procedure lays down more precise rules than were contained in the former Code for making minors parties to suits, and having them properly represented by guardians ad litem. But there is no pretence for saying that, before the passing of the present Code, minors were not made parties to suits affecting their interests, or that, when they were not made parties, they could be affected by the decrees passed in such suits.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff No. 1 in this case cannot be affected by the decree or by the sale in execution of that decree, seeing that, being a minor when the suit was instituted in which that decree was obtained, he was not made a party in the manner usual under the procedure then in force. In conclusion, we may notice one more case which has been referred to in the course of the argument, and that is the case of Suraj Bansi Koor v. Sheo Prosad Singh (L. R., 6 I. A., 88; s.c., I. L. R., 6 Cal., 148). In that case the father executed a mortgage-bond. There was then a decree against the father upon this bond; and the father, the judgment-debtor, died while the execution-proceedings were pending. The minors then came in before the sale, and objected that the father had incurred the debt without justifying necessity, the money having been applied to debauchery and sensuality. They were referred to a separate suit, and, having instituted such separate suit, it was held therein that, as they had raised objections before the sale, the purchaser at that sale must be held to have had constructive notice of those objections. The decision, as regards the actual merits proceeded on the ground that the debt in respect of which the father had executed the bond, was found to have been incurred without justifying necessity; and the allegation of the sons in this respect being proved, they succeeded in recovering their shares from the purchaser at the sale. It will be observed that [527] this case also was a case in which the father had bound the family-property in the exercise of that power, which is a good power when exercised within the limits and for the purposes allowed by law.

The conclusion then at which we arrive is, that it was unnecessary for the plaintiff No. 1 to prove that his father's debt was incurred for an immoral purpose, and it was equally unnecessary to enter into the question of justifying necessity, because the father did not alienate or bind the family-property, and the proceedings in the former suit and the execution were not directed to make the son's interest liable for the father's debt. The creditor in fact dealt with the father alone, and sought to enforce his claim by suit against the father and the father's interest only, and the purchaser under the decree passed in that suit cannot give to his purchase an operation wider than the scope of the suit, the decree, and the execution of the decree.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the decree of the lower Court is correct, and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Prinsep, J.—I am also of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed, because, under the decree under which the defendants acquired their title, only the right, title, and interest of plaintiff's father was sold, the plaintiff being no party to the suit either personally or as represented by his father.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[HINDU LAW—WHEN SON'S INTEREST PASSES AT AN EXECUTION SALE—

This decision is only partially correct. Of the propositions of law summed up at p. 525, those numbered 1 to 6 are still good law. The seventh proposition is wrong, as it is not necessary for the purpose of binding the son's interest, to make the son a party, whether the suit is on mortgage or on an unsecured debt (13 Cal. 21 P. C.; 9 Cal. 389; 495). The son may be made a party in order (1) to remove possible ambiguity as to what passed at the sale in execution, and (2) to prevent his re-agitating the matter in a suit of his own (13 Cal. 21 P. C.). As regards the eighth proposition, it is correct except to the extent that it appears to lay undue emphasis on the description at sale of "the right, title and interest" of the father. See the notes to 3 Cal. 198 in the LAW REPORTS REPRINTS.

As regards the son's being a party, see also 8 Bom. 481 (488); 4 Bom. L. R. 587.]

Payment into Court—Departmental Rules directing all moneys to be paid into the Treasury—Rule No. 9, High Court Rules and Circular No. 4, 1881, p. 37 Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 52.

Where a decree directs the payment of money into Court within a limited time, it is a sufficient compliance with such decree if the judgment-debtor bring the money into Court within that time and diligently take the necessary steps required by the Departmental Rules for its actual payment into the Treasury.

THE plaintiffs sued the defendants for arrears of rent and asked for ejectment. The claim for arrears was decreed on the 16th December 1878, and it was by the decree ordered "that should the defendants not deposit in Court, or pay to the plaintiffs the amount decreed within fifteen days from the date of the decree, possession of the land on which the arrears accrued should be given to the plaintiffs."

On the 30th December 1878, the defendants paid into Court the money, and obtained in return a chalan, from which it appeared that the money was credited in the treasury on the 9th January 1879.

On the 16th August 1879, the plaintiffs applied for execution of the decree, ignoring the payment. The Munsif ordered execution and gave the plaintiffs delivery of possession.

* Appeal from Appellate Order, No. 277 of 1881, against the order of J.B. Worgan, Esq. Judge of Shahabad, dated the 14th June 1881, reversing the order of Moulvi Syed Ahmedulla Munsif of Sasaram, dated the 4th October 1879.

On the 24th September 1879, the defendants applied to the Court to have this order set aside, filing the chalan in Court. The Munsif thereupon released the land on the ground that payment had been made in time, and that the defendants could not be blamed for the delay in crediting the money in the treasury.

[329] The plaintiffs appealed against this order to the District Judge, contending that the money had not been "paid into Court" within the meaning of s. 52 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, until it was actually paid into the treasury.

The District Judge was of opinion that the payment of the 9th January 1879 was out of time, and that the decree of the 16th December 1878 had not been complied with by the defendants; that "the payment into Court" under the Act must be held to mean payment into the treasury as well as payment to the Court-Nazir, he therefore, reversed the Munsif's order and allowed the appeal.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose for the Appellants.

No one appeared for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—We think that, in this case, the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is erroneous, and must be set aside. There was a decree against the appellants before us for rent, and that decree directed, that if the amount decreed be not paid into Court within fifteen days from the date of the decree, the defendants should be ejected from the tenure. It is found by the Courts below that the amount decreed was actually brought into Court within fifteen days; but this money was not received by it, because, according to certain Departmental rules, it was to have been paid into the treasury. It is also found by the lower Appellate Court that there were no laches on the part of the judgment-debtors in complying with the Departmental rules for actually paying the amount decreed into the Government treasury. We think that this was a sufficient compliance with the decree. Where a decree directs the payment of money into Court within a limited time, it would be a sufficient compliance with the decree if the judgment-debtor bring the money into Court within that time and diligently take the necessary steps required by the Departmental rules for its actual payment into the treasury. For these reasons we are of opinion that the Munsif's decision is right. We accordingly [330] reverse the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Munsif with costs. We may also point out to the Munsif that, under the spirit of the existing rules of the year 1881, Rule No. 9 to be found in p. 37 of the General Rules and Circular Orders of this Court, if this case was governed by them, the Munsif would have been bound to receive the payment of the money if it had been tendered by the judgment-debtors within the time limited by the decree. We assess the hearing-fee at Rs. 16.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[PAYMENT INTO COURT—

The production in Court and later payment into Treasury (1883, 7 Mad. 211) or into Court again as required by Court when according to the rules it should have been paid into the Treasury at the very outset, (1908 18 M. L. J. 168), was held to be sufficient payment into Court. But not payment into the Post Office for being sent by Postal Money Order:—(1896) 22 Bom. 415.]

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 11th January, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Gopal Sahoo.....Plaintiff

versus

Gunga Pershad Sahoo and others.....Defendants.*

Mortgage—Mortgaged property, conveyance of, to mortgagee—Attachment and sale of same property under another decree—Suit by mortgagee to recover money advanced on mortgage-bond—Avoidance of conveyance—Lien.

In 1874, the plaintiff advanced money to P. and Z. on the security of a mortgage of certain properties. In 1875, the plaintiff took a conveyance of the properties mortgaged to him, setting off the money due to him under the mortgage against the consideration-money. At the time of this conveyance, the same property was under attachment under a decree obtained by another person, and the property was, in execution of this decree, put up for sale, and purchased by one G.

In a suit brought by the plaintiff on the mortgage-bond (to recover the money lent, and asking that the properties might be made liable to satisfy the debt) against P., Z., and G., it was held, that the conveyance of 1875 being void as against G., the plaintiff was entitled to fall back upon the lien created by the mortgage-bond.

Bissen Doss Singh v. Sheo Prosad Singh (5 C. L. R., 29) followed.

IN November 1874, one Gopal Sahoo lent to Faridunnessa, a purdanasheen lady, through Zahmal Huq, the sum of Rs. 105, [531] and took as security a mortgage of certain properties; the money so advanced was made payable in February and March 1876.

On the 2nd September 1875, the property mortgaged was sold by the mortgagor to Gopal Sahoo, and the original bond-debt was set off against the consideration-money of the bill of sale. At this time the mortgaged property was under an attachment in the suit of certain other parties who had obtained a decree, and in execution of which, one Gunga Pershad Sahoo subsequently purchased the property.

Gopal Sahoo then brought this suit against Faridunnessa, Zahmal Huq, and Gunga Pershad Sahoo to recover the principal sum advanced, together with interest, and praying that the mortgaged property might be declared liable to satisfy the debt.

Gunga Pershad alone appeared and contested the claim, stating that the debt was not in existence at the time when the suit was brought, it having been satisfied by the consideration given for the conveyance of the property made in September 1875. The Munsif found that the mortgage-bond had been duly executed by the two defendants, Faridunnessa and Zahmal, and the money paid to Faridunnessa, and that the deed of sale of September 1875 was also genuine; but he held, that the original mortgage-debt had been satisfied by the conveyance of September 1875. and, refusing to charge the property mortgaged, gave a personal decree against the executants of the bond.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1791 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Koylash Chunder Mookerjee, Second Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 11th June 1880, affirming the decree of Syed Abdul Kurim Khan, Munsif of Durbhunga dated the 7th April 1879.

The plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who held, that the mortgage had been satisfied by the conveyance of 1875, and that the plaintiff could not enforce his lien on the property, and dismissed the appeal.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry, for the Appellant, contended, (i) that the deed of 1875 had not the effect of extinguishing the plaintiff's right under the mortgage-bond; (ii) that the sale under the conveyance of 1875, being void against the auction-purchaser by reason of the subsisting attachment, and the purchase at the auction-sale being subject to the mortgage of the plaintiff, the lower Courts should have held that the property pledged was liable to satisfy the mortgage-debt.

[532] Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Mr. Sandel for the Respondents.

Mitter, J.—We think that the decisions of the lower Courts in this case are not correct, and must be set aside. The plaintiff brought this suit against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, upon a mortgage-bond executed on the 30th Kartick 1282 (corresponding to the 15th of November 1874). The mortgage-bond was executed by the defendant No. 1, who is a purdanasheen lady, through the defendant No. 2. In that bond a sixteen-ganda share of Mouza Futtehpore was hypothecated as security for the loan. The plaintiff brought the suit to recover the money due by enforcing his mortgage lien. The suit was brought against the executants of the bond and Gunga Pershad Sahoo, who became the auction-purchaser of the property, mortgaged after the execution of the bond. In the written statement of Gunga Pershad, who alone defended the suit, it is alleged that, on the 2nd of September 1875, the property mortgaged, viz., the sixteen-ganda share of Futtehpore, was sold by the mortgagors to the plaintiff, and the original bond-debt was set off against the consideration-money of the bill of sale.

On these facts Gunga Pershad contended, in the lower Courts, that the mortgage-debt was not in existence at the time when the suit was brought. The plaintiff, although he does not allege in the plaint that this bill of sale of September 1875 had been cancelled, gave evidence to that effect at the trial. The first Court, being of opinion that the original mortgage-debt was satisfied by the bill of sale of the 2nd September 1875, and disbelieving the plaintiff's allegation that that bill of sale was subsequently cancelled, decreed the claim only against the executants of the bond, dismissing the plaintiff's suit for the enforcement of the lien under the bond. The plaintiff appealed against that decree, and the Subordinate Judge, being of opinion that the bill of sale, after it was executed, could not be cancelled, and that the original mortgage-debt was satisfied by the execution of the subsequent bill of sale, dismissed the appeal of the [533] plaintiff. It may be mentioned here that there is no dispute that, on the date when this bill of sale was executed, viz., on the 2nd September 1875, the mortgaged property was under attachment under the decree in execution of which the defendant Gunga Pershad Sahoo subsequently became the purchaser. It is quite clear, therefore, that even supposing that the kobala of the 2nd September 1875 was not cancelled as alleged or attempted to be proved by the plaintiff, it was absolutely void against the auction-purchaser Gunga Pershad. That being so, we think that, in accordance with the principle laid down in the case of Bissen Doss Singh v. Sheo Prosad Singh (5 C. L. R., 29), the plaintiff in this case is entitled to fall back upon the lien created by the bond of the 30th Kartick 1282. We are, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff's appeal to the lower Appellate Court ought to have been decreed. We accordingly direct that that appeal be decreed. The decree passed by the Munsif was against the executants of the bond. Whether that decree is right or wrong it is not for us to consider in this second appeal, because there was no appeal against that decree by the defendants against whom it was passed. That decree will, therefore, stand. But we think that the plaintiff will also be entitled to realize the amount decreed in his favour with costs by the sale of the mortgaged premises. The plaintiff will recover costs of the first Court from the defendants jointly, and the costs of the lower Appellate Court and of this Court from the defendant Gunga Pershad Sahoo.

Appeal allowed.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

In the matter of the Petition of Nasibun and others.

Nasibun and others

Preosunker Ghose.*

Bond—Stamp Act (XVIII of 1869), s. 2, cl. 5—Definition of Bond—Promissory Note.

The definition of the word 'bond' in the Stamp Act of 1869 is not exhaustive; the word 'includes' in cl. 5 of s. 2 has an extending force, and does not limit the meaning of the term to the substance of the definition.

THE plaintiffs had obtained a decree against the defendant, and had applied for its execution; but before any order was passed on the application, the parties came to the following compromise contained in a letter addressed to one only of the plaintiffs:—

"To the respected Baboo Nibaran Chandra Chuckerbutty,—The executrix of Sheikh Asmatullah, deceased, Bibi Nasibun, executed a kistibandi against me in the Narail Munsif's Court in the execution case, No. 60 of 1875, which was struck off on the 31st May 1875. By way of compromise, I consent to pay to you Rs. 150, being the amount fixed, in satisfaction of the said decree; you are requested to ask the decree-holders to stay execution of the decree.

* Rule, No. 1026 of 1881, against the order of Baboo Upendra Chundra Mullick, Judge of Small Cause Court at Jessore, dated the 4th August 1881.

I will pay you Rs. 50 cash in June next, and Rs. 10 in every consecutive month from July till the debt is discharged. I will execute a regular instrument for the above purpose. Dated 20th May 1878.

(Sd.) PREOSUNKER GHOSE."

This letter was addressed to the plaintiff No. 3 in the present suit (who was the mukhtar and agent of the two original plaintiffs), engrossed on plain country-made paper, but was unstamped. The defendant neither paid the instalments as they fell due, nor executed any further deed. The two ladies and their agent thereupon brought a suit on the document above set out in the Court of Small Causes at Jessore, contending that it was a bond.

The defendant contended that the document being unstamped [535] was inadmissible in evidence, and that being in reality a promissory note, it could not be stamped on payment of a penalty.

The Judge was of opinion, that the document was a promissory note, and being unstamped was inadmissible in evidence, and that no penalty could be levied under s. 34 of Act I of 1879, nor could parol evidence be received to prove the contents of the document, and that there being no other evidence of any consideration, the suit must fail.

The plaintiffs obtained a rule calling upon the defendant to show cause why the decision of the Small Cause Court Judge should not be set aside on the ground that the instrument was a bond and not a promissory note.

Baboo Saroda Churn Mitter and Baboo Golap Chunder Sircar for the Petitioners.

Baboo Rash Behary Ghose showed cause against the rule.

The Judgment of the Court (MCDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.--The question in this case is, whether the Judge of the Small Cause Court at Jessore is wrong in holding that a certain instrument is a promissory note, and requires to be stamped as such. It appears that the plaintiffs, who obtained this rule, had a decree against the defendant; that this decree was being executed; that the parties came to a compromise; and that the instrument with which this rule is concerned was executed thereupon. The instrument, leaving out the immaterial portions, runs as follows:—

एक्षणे नडाईलेर द्वितीय मुनासिफअदालते सन १८७५ सालेर ई नं
जारी करिले ऐ सनेर ३१ मेतारीखे नम्बर खंरिज हय । ऐ डिक्री
जारिर मय खरचा रफासूरत १५० टाका आमि आमनाके दिते
स्वीकार हइलाम आपनि ऐ डिक्रीदार गोणके बलिया डिक्रीजारि क्षान्त
करीबेन । आमि आगामी जून मासे ५० टांका नगद ओ
जुलाईमास हइते मास २ दस टाकार हिसावे दिया उक्त टाका
परिशौध करिब ।

Now this instrument recites the fact of the decree having been under execution and the fact of the execution-proceedings having been struck off. It then recites that 'you,' that is the mukhtar, in whose favour the instrument was executed "having spoken to the decree-holders, will adjust the decree" [536] (for this we take it, is the proper signification of these words) and then the instrument goes on to state that the amount will be paid by instalments on certain dates. The argument addressed to us is, that this instrument is not a promissory note but a bond. The definition of a bond as given in the Stamp Act, XVIII of 1869 (which governs the case) is as follows :— "Bond includes every instrument whereby a person obliges himself to pay money to another, on condition that the obligation shall be void if a specified act is performed, or is not performed, as the case may be." The argument addressed to us has turned upon this language only; but we may observe that this language does not contain an exhaustive definition of the term 'bond.' The word 'includes' has an extending force, and does not limit the meaning of the term to the substance of the definition. We have in the instrument now before us a promise to pay money, and, according to our construction of the instrument, there is no condition that this promise or obligation shall be void if a specified act is performed, or is not performed. The plaintiffs' vakeel contends that the words खीआनत कोरीबन mean stay the execution of the decree, and that the sentence in which these words occur is to be construed as a condition precedent to the payment of the money, that if the decree be not stayed, the money will not become payable. Now, in the first place, it is admitted on both sides, that the decree never was executed after the date of this instrument, and it appears to us, that if the decree-holders had sought to execute the decree, they could have been restrained from doing so. We consider that this instrument was to all intents and purposes a complete adjustment of the decree; and that, if the judgment-debtor had applied to the Court under the provisions of s. 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the instrument must have been treated as an adjustment of the decree, and it would have been the duty of the Court to make an entry accordingly in its register. We think, therefore, that the payment of the money did not depend on any condition, that the promise to pay was absolute, and that the instrument is a promissory note. There is a further passage in the instrument upon which one of the [537] arguments addressed to us has been based. That passage is as follows :—

जो ताहार रीतिमत दल्लि लिखिया दिब. Now, it is said that this shows that it was not the intention of the parties to treat this instrument as a promissory note, and that this was really an agreement to execute a subsequent document. If this argument can prevail, the necessary result will be, that the plaintiffs' suit must fail, because this suit has not been brought to compel specific performance of any agreement to execute a subsequent document, and a suit of this nature must, we may observe, have been brought, not in the Small Cause Court, but in the regular Civil Court. The present suit has been brought not with the object of obtaining specific performance, but for the purpose of recovering the amount set out in the agreement; and this being so, it appears to us that the plaintiffs themselves have treated the instrument as one which entitles them to recover the amount set forth therein. Having regard, however, to the fact that this instrument was executed in favour of the mukhtar, we think that the reasonable meaning of this latter passage is, that as soon as the decree would be adjusted, the judgment-debtor would execute another document in favour of the decree-holders themselves instead of the note in favour of the mukhtar. In the present suit, the mukhtar has been joined as a plaintiff, and this being so, the suit was in proper form. Under these circumstances, we think that this rule must be discharged with costs.

Rule discharged.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 20th January, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Damoodur Misser and another.....Defendants

Senabutty Misrain and others.....Plaintiffs.*

Hindu Law—Mithila school—Partition of share of minor—Unmarried daughter's share—Suit by mother and minor children for partition—Malversation.

A suit cannot be brought by or on behalf of a minor to enforce partition unless on the ground of malversation, or some other circumstances which make it for his interest that his share should be set aside and secured for him. [538] Property sufficient to defray the expenses of the nuptials should be given to unmarried daughters.

According to the leading authorities of the Mitakshara school, both mother and step-mother are equal sharers with the sons.

Revenue-paying estates must be partitioned by the Collector; they cannot be partitioned by metes and bounds by the Civil Court. Ameen : and if the shares in such an estate are not separate estates, but are mere fractional shares of integral estates, they cannot be partitioned in the absence of the other co-sharers.

THE plaintiff, Senabutty, on her own behalf and as the widow and guardian of her minor children, Madho and Josoda, sued for the partition of the property left by her late husband, Mokoond Misser, claiming to share equally with the defendants, who were another widow of the deceased Mokoond Misser, and her sons.

The defendants contended that the suit could not proceed, as no sufficient grounds had been put forward such as would justify a partition on behalf of a minor; that the widows and unmarried daughter were not entitled to any share; that Senabutty had received her stridhan, and that this should be deducted from any share that she might get; that the widows were only entitled to maintenance; and that Josoda was only entitled to her marriage expenses. The parties were governed by the Mithila law. The Subordinate Judge found that the two families were not on good terms, and that sufficient ground had been made out for partition; that Senabutty had received no stridhan from her husband; and awarded one-fourth of one-sixth to Josoda, the unmarried daughter, for her marriage expenses and for her maintenance, and divided the residue into five equal parts, allotting two-fifths to Madho and Senabutty, and the remainder to the defendants.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 167 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Koylash Chunder Mookerjee, Officiating Second Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 13th May 1880.

Mr. Branson (with him Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Rajender Nath Bose) for the Appellants, contended, that partition ought not to have been decreed, as it was not shown that there had been any malversation of the minor's property—Mayne's Hindu Law, s. 400. A widow is not entitled to any [539] share out of the portion allotted to her step-sons—see Cally Churn Mullick v. Janova Dossee (1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 284), and therefore Senabutty was not entitled to share.

The Advocate-General (Mr. G. C. Paul) (with him Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry, Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee, and Baboo Umakali Mookerjee) for the Respondents.—There was sufficient reason shown why the minor sons should have their share secured for them. The unmarried daughter was entitled to a fourth of the share allotted to a brother; see Vyvada Chintamani, 248.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—This suit was brought for the partition of the estate left by one Mokoond Lall Misser, who died in Joist 1285 (May 1878), leaving him surviving two widows, viz., Mussamut Senabutty Misrain and Belashbutty Misrain; Madho, a son; Josoda, a daughter by Senabutty; Damoodur Misser and Keshub Misser, sons; Bhuggobutty, daughter by Belashbutty. At the time when the suit was brought, Madho, Josoda, and Keshub were minors, and they are still minors. Bhuggobutty is not a party to the suit; she is admittedly not entitled to any share in the estate, she having been married during her father's lifetime. The plaintiffs are Senabutty and her minor son and daughter through herself as guardian. The plaintiffs' prayer is, that the estate be divided into six equal shares, and three of these shares be allotted to them.

The defendants, viz., Belashbutty and her sons, contend, (i) that the suit cannot proceed, because no sufficient ground has been stated which would justify a partition on behalf of a minor; (ii) that the widows and the unmarried daughter are not entitled to any share; (iii) that, conceding that the widows are entitled to shares, Mussamut Senabutty having received stridhan from her husband, her share should be subject to deduction to the value of that stridhan. With reference to the [540] second ground of defence it is stated, that the widows are only entitled to maintenance, and the unmarried daughter is entitled only to an amount sufficient to defray her marriage expenses. It is further stated, that 2a, 13g, 1c, 1k share of Mouza Bishenpore Bahas, purchased by Mokoond Lall in the name of Senabutty, was given to her as stridhan.

The lower Court has awarded one-fourth of a sixth share to the unmarried daughter for her marriage expenses and for her maintenance till her marriage, and dividing the residue into five equal parts, has allotted two of them to Madho and Senabutty. The defendants have preferred this appeal.

The first question raised before us is, that the partition should not be decreed in this case, because it is not shown that there has been any malversation of the minor's property.

The true rule upon this point is, we think, correctly laid down in Mayne on Hindu Law. He says (s. 400): "But a suit cannot be brought by or on behalf of a minor to enforce partition, unless on the ground of malversation, or some other circumstances which make it for his interest that his share should be set aside and secured for him."

We think sufficient grounds have been shown to justify a decree for partition. It is proved to our satisfaction that there have been constant disputes and differences between the two branches of the family. In this state of things, it is but natural to find that the joint estate should be mismanaged. This is deposed to by a witness examined by the defendants themselves. Witness Bagesuri says :—" When both the brothers who are parties in this suit agree, then the collection is made, otherwise the collection is stopped. Such is also the case with ziraat,—that is, when the parties in this suit agree, then the cultivation is made, otherwise it is stopped. This state of things exists since Assin last year. The dispute is growing more serious daily, and it has not abated. The parties to this suit have separated in mess since last year. I, by guess, say that the two co-wives are not on good terms with each other." Moreover, the appeal is valued at Rs. 9,799-5-3, the estate sought to be partitioned being of the value of Rs. 27,992. The defendants valued the appeal, questioning the lower Court's [541] decree only, so far as it allows shares to Senabutty and Josoda. This objection must, therefore, fail.

As regards the share allowed to the daughter Josoda, the law on this subject is thus laid down in Vyvada Chintamani, which is the highest authority in districts governed by Mithila law (see page 248). Menu says :—" To the unmarried daughters by the same mother, let their brothers give portions out of their own allotments respectively according to the classes of their several mothers; let each give a fourth part of his own distinct share; and they who refuse to give it shall be degraded.

" Their own allotments mean the allotments of the brothers. Therefore the meaning is, that a quarter of the share ordained for a brother of the class to which she belongs should be given to a maiden sister.

" Here the mention of a quarter is not essential. Property sufficient to defray the expenses of the nuptials should be given, for this is ordained by Vishnu." &c., &c.

There is conflicting evidence adduced by the parties as to the expenses incurred in the marriage of Bhuggobutty, the eldest daughter, which took place in the year 1276 (1869). The lower Court finds that about 1,000 rupees were spent on that marriage. In that finding we agree. But that marriage took place twelve years ago. Having regard to the general rise in prices, to celebrate a marriage now in the style in which the marriage of Bhuggobutty was celebrated in the year 1276, the expenses would be now nearly double. Then again it is proved, that Bhuggobutty, since her marriage, has been residing in her father's house. It is, therefore, probable that she has not been married to a person in good circumstances of life. To secure a better match for Josoda, the family would have to spend more than what was spent on the marriage of the eldest sister. Having regard to all these circumstances, we think that the decision of the lower Court allowing one-twenty-fourth share of the estate (i.e., property worth Rs. 3,000) to Josoda is correct. We may suggest here that the lower Court in its final decree should provide, if that is practicable, that Rs. 3,000 be paid out of the estate to the guardian of the minor Josoda to be applied to her marriage expenses.

[542] The next question is—Whether Mussamut Senabutty is entitled to a share, and if entitled to a share, to what share? It has been urged on behalf of the appellants that, under Hindu law, a widow is not entitled to any share out of the portion allotted to her step-sons, and in support of this contention, the learned counsel for the appellants relies upon Cally Churn Mullick v. Janova Dasse (1 Ind. Jur., N. S., 284), which is a Bengal case. There is a difference upon this point between the Dayabhaga and Vyvada Chintamani and other cognate works on Hindu law of the Mitakshara school.

According to the Bengal school, a step-mother having no issue is not entitled to any share. But according to the other school, she is entitled to a share.

Jimutavahana says (chap. iii, s. 2, vv. 29 and 30) :—"When partition is made by brothers of the whole blood, after the demise of the father, an equal share must be given to the mother. For the text expresses : the mother should be made an equal sharer.

"Since the term 'mother' intends the natural parent, it cannot also mean a step-mother. For a word employed once cannot bear the literal and metaphorical senses at the same time."

But Vachaspati Misser (Vyvada Chintamani), quoting another text of Vrihaspati, says on the same subject :—"On the death of the father, the mother (janani) has a claim to an equal share with her own sons. Mothers (matara) take the same share ; and the unmarried daughters each a fourth of a share.

"Mother (janani) means one who has male issue : mothers (matara) mean step-mothers who have no male issue. These females shall have equal shares with the sons."

The author of the Mitakshara on the same subject says :—"When a distribution is made during the life of the father, the participation of his wives equally with his sons has been directed ('If he make the allotments equal, his wives must be rendered partakers of like portions.') The author now proceeds to declare their equal participation, when the separation takes place after the demise of the father, text cxxiii-a--'Of heirs dividing after the death of the father, let the mother also take [543] an equal share'" (Mitakshara, chap. i, s. 7, v. 1). Although in this passage it is not explained whether the term 'mother' includes step-mother, yet that that is his opinion is clear, because he says, that the rule of law is the same whether the partition is effected by the father during his lifetime or after his death by the sons. From verse 8, chap. i, s. 2, it is evident that, on a partition during the father's lifetime, all his wives receive shares. That this is the meaning of the author of the Mitakshara appears further clear from the discussion upon the subject in question by Sreekissen Tarkalunkar in Dayakrama Sangraha, and by the author of the Viramitrodaya.

In chap. vii of Dyakrama Sangraha, Sreekissen, after laying down the law in the same way as his great master, viz., Jimutavahana, says in paras. 7 and 8 :—"But the followers of the Mithila school assert, that the word 'mother' in this text of Vrihaspati,—'The mother should, on the decease of the husband, be made an equal sharer with her sons'—intends also the step-mother, in support of which opinion they adduced the following text of that author of the same import. In his default, the mother is an equal sharer with her sons ; mothers are equal sharers with them, and daughters are entitled to a fourth part :

"'In his default'—In default of the father, when a partition is about to be made by grandsons.

"'The mother'—She who has male offspring.—'Mothers,' step-mothers destitute of male offspring : all these are sharers in equal proportions with their sons."

A similar view is taken in the following passage of Viramitrodaya, to be found at page 80 (Ch. II, pt. 1, sec. 19) :—"That all the wives of the father, whether sonless or having sons, are entitled to shares equally with the sons, even in partition after the father's demise, appears to be the opinion of the learned author of the Mitakshara, since he introduces the text of Yajnavalkya —namely, 'The mothers also of those effecting partition after the demise, &c.' with these remarks: it has been ordained that the wives are entitled to shares equally with the sons in partition during the lifetime of the father. Now the sage declares that the wives [544] are entitled to shares equally with the sons in partition after the demise of the father."

"Accordingly also the author of the Madanaratna says: 'The use of the term indicates also the sonless step-mothers, as also the paternal grandmothers, agreeably to the text of Vyasa. The father's sonless wives, &c.'"

According to Vyavahara Mayukha (see chap. iv, v. 1) and Smriti Chundrika (see chap. iv) the word 'mother' includes step-mother.

Thus, according to Vyavahara Chintamani of Vachaspati Misser and all the leading authorities of the Mitakshara school, both mothers and step-mothers are equal sharers with the sons; therefore, the lower Court is right in its decision upon this point.

The next objection urged before us is, that the plaintiff, Mussamut Senabutty, having received stridhan from her husband, is not entitled to a full share on partition. The defendants' allegation, that 2a. 13g. 1c. 1k. share of Bishenpore Bahas was purchased by Mokoond Lal for Senabutty, is not made out. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, state that the kobala by which the purchase is said to have been effected, was merely a bonami transaction.

We think that the lower Court is right in holding that it was a bonami transaction; therefore this appeal fails upon all the grounds taken before us.

But the decree that has been passed seems to us to be open to objection. It is to the following effect:—"Accordingly I give the plaintiffs a modified decree, and they shall take by an actual partition the real and personal properties of Mokoond Misser as mentioned in the plaint to the extent of six-annas sixteen gandas share. The revenue-paying estates to be partitioned by the Collector, and in case he refuse to do so, they shall be partitioned by the Civil Court Ameen. Other properties also, moveable and immovable, to be divided between the parties, and plaintiffs shall get according to their share now decreed. In case any moveable property cannot be found or partitioned, the plaintiffs will get their proportionate costs with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from this day till realized from the defen-[545]dants, and their proportionate costs, with similar interest, should be borne by the plaintiffs."

The direction as to the partition of the revenue-paying estates seems to us to be erroneous. These estates must be partitioned through the Collector; they cannot be partitioned by metes and bounds by the Civil Court Ameen. Then also if the shares of these revenue-paying estates belonging to this family are themselves not separate estates, but are mere fractional shares of integral estates, they cannot be partitioned in the absence of the other co-sharers. If there be any estate or estates in this predicament, partition by metes and bounds of these estates cannot be effected in this suit. The lower Court must adopt some other equitable mode of partitioning the shares. As regards the shares to be allotted to the two widows, it should be made clear in the decree that they are allotted to them in lieu of their maintenance; the proprietary right in them shall remain vested in the sons subject to the widows retaining possession and enjoying the profits during their respective lives.

The respondents are entitled to recover the costs of this appeal from the appellants.

Appeal dismissed.

II. FEMALE SHARERS AT PARTITION—

The mother (whether the father be alive or dead, 8 Cal., 17) is entitled to a share at a partition (33 All., 118—not on other occasions) of joint family property between sons or sons and grandsons:—32 Cal., 234 ; 31 Cal., 262 (271) ; 16 Cal., 758 ; 12 Cal., 165 ; So is the grandmother:—15 Cal., 292 (303) ; 31 Cal., 1065 (1076).

As for the great grandmother, see Trevelyan, Hindu Law (1912) p. 320.

The sister is not entitled to a share but provision should be made for her marriage, 8 Cal., 537 ; (dowry gift by mother upheld : (1909) 13 C. W. N. 994 : 10 C. L. J. 545). This rule is not extended to the brothers themselves, for the necessary ceremonies of their children:— 31 Bom. 54.

The step-mother also is entitled (except in the Bengal school 16 Cal., 758):—1 C. L. J. 142 ; 17 Bom., 271 ; 13 Cal., 39 ; 10 A. W. N. 124 ; 31 Bom. 54.

This right of the mother etc. is independent of her actual means of subsistence, though the amount of her share is regulated by the stridhan that she received from her husband or her father-in-law:— 36 Cal., 75.

The nature of the estate taken by these female sharers has been held by the Privy Council not to be stridhan:—(1912) 34 All., 231 P. C. reversing 32 All., 253 ; 24 All., 67 ; 82.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 6th February, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Chowdrani.....Defendant

versus

Tariny Kanth Lahiry Chowdry.....Plaintiff.*

Hindu Law—Benami transaction—Purchase in name of Hindu wife—Presumption—Onus—Joint family.

Quere.—Whether, in the absence of any evidence to show the source from which the purchase-money was derived, there is a presumption that property purchased in the name of a Hindu wife is the property of her husband and has been purchased with his money?

Per FIELD, J. Semble.—There is no presumption one way or the other, but the burden of proof in each particular case must depend upon the pleadings and the position of the parties as plaintiffs or defendants.

IN this case it appeared that, some time previously to the year 1842, one Goloke Nath Chowdry entered into a bond as [546] surety for the due performance by one Jogul Kishore Sen of the latter's duties as treasurer of the Mymensing Collectorate. Jogul Kishore having become a defaulter, the Collector, on the 9th of June 1842, sold one-fourth (three gandas) of the rights of Goloke Nath Chowdry in a certain zamindari (which had been pledged in the bond) to Sreemutty Chowdrani, the wife of Goloke Nath Chowdry. In the present case the plaintiff alleged that that purchase was benami, and that the real purchaser was Goloke Nath himself. On the 6th of September 1871, the plaintiff, in execution of a decree obtained against Goloke Nath by one Mokhoda Debea, purchased the share of Goloke Nath in the zamindari. The plaintiff afterwards applied for registration under Beng. Act VII of 1876, but the defendant, Sreemutty Chowdrani intervened, claiming the three gandas share, which she declared she had purchased at the sale by the Collector in June 1842. Her claim was allowed by the Deputy Collector, and his order was upheld on appeal by the Collector of Mymensing on the 20th of September 1878.

The plaintiff brought the present suit on the 27th of February 1879, for possession of the three gandas claimed by Sreemutty Chowdrani, alleging that the purchase of the 9th of June 1842 was merely benami for Goloke Nath Chowdry. The defence was, inter alia, that the purchase was made bonâ fide with Sreemutty Chowdrani's own moneys, and that the suit was barred by limitation. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the purchase of June 1842 was benami for Goloke Nath Chowdry, and overruling an objection taken by the defendant that the plaintiff's sale-certificate was not registered, gave the plaintiff a decree.

Mr. Branson, Baboo Mohiny Mohun Roy, and Baboo Ishur Chunder Chuckerbutty for the Appellant.

Mr. H. Bell, Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Bycunto Nath Dass for the Respondent.

Mr. Branson, for the Appellant.—The purchase of June 1842 purports to have been made by the defendant Sreemutty Chow-[547]drani with her own money, and the conveyance was taken in her name. The Subordinate Judge should have required clear evidence of the fact that it was benami, and no such evidence has been given. He has throughout put the burden of proof on the defendant, and has taken away her property, because there are, in his opinion, suspicious circumstances in the case. Such a mode of proceeding is entirely opposed to the case of Sreeman Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Chuckerbutty (11 Moore's I. A., 28), where the Privy Council laid down that the decisions of the Court must rest not upon suspicions, but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony. In the case of Rajah Chundra Nath Roy v. Ramjai Mazumdar (6 B. L. R., 303), the Privy Council say, that the plaintiff, in a suit challenging a purchase as benami, is bound to prove his case, and if he does not, it is immaterial whether the defendant prove his or not. In Lyakut Ali v. The Court of Wards (10 W. R., 423), the same rule was followed; and in Mussamut Meher Banoo v. Keramat Ali (22 W. R., 402), COUCH, C.J., says, that circumstances of suspicion are not strong enough, and that the Judge must come to a clear finding that the purchase was benami. Even if the onus was properly on the defendant, the evidence is amply sufficient to prove the defendant's case. [The learned counsel then urged the plea of limitation, but did not go into the question of the sale-certificate, as the point was under the consideration of a Full Bench of the Court.]

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 168 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Nobin Chunder Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Mymensing, dated the 9th April 1880.

Mr. Bell, for the Respondent.—In this case it is clear from the evidence, that Sreemutty Chowdrani lived with Goloke Nath Chowdry, her husband, at the time of, and for years after, the purchase of 1842; and in such a case that purchase, though made in her name, will be presumed to be a purchase made for the benefit of the family, or rather for the benefit of the only person in the family from whom the money could come,—namely, Goloke Nath Chowdry—Chunder Nath Motro v. Kristo Komul Singh (15 W. R., 357). It is laid down in Field on Evidence, 3rd edition, p. 493, that the presumption of English law,—namely, that the [548] property belongs to the member of the family in whose name the conveyance was taken,—does not arise under Hindu law, “and when immoveable property is purchased by a Hindu in the name of his son, the presumption is, that it is a benami purchase merely, and that the property belongs to the father. If the person in whose name it was purchased alleged that he is solely entitled to the legal and beneficial interest in such property, the burden of proving this will lie upon him.” In Bindoo Bashinee Debee v. Pearee Mohun Bose (6 W. R., 312) the Court held, that the wife in whose name the property stood was bound to show whence the money had come. [FIELD, J.—I think that case has been overruled. That case was decided by TREVOR, J. He afterwards decided Sreeman Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Chuckerbutty on the same principle, and that case was reversed by the Privy Council (11 Moore's I. A., 28). McDONELL, J.—I suppose you will admit that, since the Privy Council's decision in Sreeman Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Chuckerbutty (11 Moore's I. A., 28) the Courts in India have veered round a good deal?] There is no evidence on the record which is in any way inconsistent with the fact of the purchase being benami, and the defendant must show a genuine title—Bebee Zahrah v. Bhugwan Doss (16 W. R., 211).

Mr. Branson in reply.—The assertion that a transaction is not really what it purports to be, is one that will be regarded by the Courts with great suspicion, and must be strictly made out by evidence—Mayne's Hindu Law, s. 367 (2nd edition, p. 375), and the authorities there cited. Money advanced by a wife for the purchase of property in her husband's lifetime will not be considered as advanced for his benefit, nor will the property be presumed to be his—Gobind

Chunder Mozoomdar v. Dubneer Khan (23 W. R., 125), and Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shunsoonissa Begum (11 Moore's I. A., 551). The burden of proof lies on the person who maintains that the apparent state of things is not the real state of things, and the apparent purchase must be regarded as the real purchase until the contrary is proved—Deo Nath v. Peer Khan (3 Agra H. C., Rep., 16): [549] and in the judgment of PONTIFEX and FIELD, JJ., in Koc-jo Kamny Debee v. Beedhu Soondur Gossamee, Reg. App., No. 266 of 1879 (unreported), their Lordships say:—"A good deal has been said about the presumption that property acquired in the name of a wife must be presumed to have been purchased with her husband's money. If it were necessary to decide this case upon that presumption, we should have considerable hesitation in according our assent to the proposition contended for by the learned counsel for the appellant. There can, of course, be no doubt upon the authorities, that when property is acquired in the name of either a Hindu or a Mahomedan wife, and when there is evidence that the money with which such property has been acquired was the money of the husband, such property, of which the conveyance has so been taken in the name of the wife, will, notwithstanding the fact of the conveyance being in the wife's name, be considered to be the property of the husband. But we think it extremely doubtful if the naked proposition contended for by the learned counsel is supported by the authorities to which he has referred us, the proposition, viz., that, in the absence of evidence as to who supplied the consideration-money, the mere fact of the property being acquired in the name of the wife is to be taken as presumptive evidence to show that the consideration-money was advanced by the husband, and therefore the property was the property of the husband."

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—The plaintiff in this case purchased, on the 6th September 1871, the right, title, and interest of one Goloke Nath Chowdry in a twelve ganda share of an estate. Subsequent to his purchase, he applied under the provisions of Beng. Act VII of 1876 to be registered on the Collectorate as proprietor of this twelve-ganda share. He was opposed by the defendant in the present suit, Sreemutty Chowdrani, and the result of the registration proceedings was, that the plaintiff's name was registered for nine gandas only, and the [550] defendant's name was registered for the remaining three gandas. In consequence of this order of the registration authorities, the present suit has been instituted, and the plaintiff asks in his plaint to have his title declared to the three gandas, for which the defendant's name has been registered, and to have the Collectorate register amended accordingly.

In order to understand the merits of the controversy between the parties, it will be necessary to go back for more than forty years, and refer to the original members of the family to which Goloke Nath and Sreemutty Chowdrani both belonged. The following is a genealogical tree, which will enable the facts of the case to be readily understood:

It appears that one-anna ten gandas of Parganah Sherepore, formerly belonged to five brothers,—Roma Nath, Ram Chunder, Gopi Nath, Shyam Chunder and Radha Nath,—the interest of each of these brothers being six gandas. Rama Nath died and was succeeded by his son Goloke Nath Chowdry, who married Sreemutty Chowdrani, the defendant in the present case. Goloke Nath Chowdry, as the heir of his father Roma Nath, became entitled to his six gandas. Ram Chunder died subsequently, and the six ganda share belonging to him was also inherited by Goloke Nath Chowdry. There was at one time a contention that one moiety of Ram Chunder's six gandas went to Gopi Nath, and that the other moiety, or three gandas went to Goloke Nath, and that Goloke Nath, upon this, became entitled to nine gandas only; but this has been found against the plaintiff, and there is no appeal upon this point. It follows that Goloke Nath was entitled to twelve gandas of the property after the death of Ram Chunder and his daughter. While Goloke Nath was so entitled to the twelve gandas, he became surety for [551] one Jogul Kishore Sen, who was employed on the Mymensing Collectorate; and as surety for this Jogul Kishore Sen, he pledged one-fourth of his share in the property. Jogul Kishore Sen defaulted, and the Collector, under the law at the time in force, proceeded to sell the one-fourth share of Goloke Nath Chowdry's interest. This one-fourth share was three gandas, inasmuch as Goloke Nath Chowdry was, in the manner just stated, at that time entitled to an interest represented by twelve gandas. The three ganda share thus sold on the 9th June 1842 was purchased in the name of Sreemutty Chowdrani, the defendant, and this is the title to this three-ganda share upon which she relies. Subsequent to this Gopi Nath died, and was succeeded by his son Sreenath, who died in 1832; and it appears that the six gandas, which originally belonged to Gopi Nath, were also inherited by Goloke Nath. It then appears that Goloke Nath sold a twelve-ganda share to one Sib Dyal Tewari, and upon the same date, he and his wife, Sreemutty Chowdrani, executed, in favour of the same Sib Dyal Tewari, an izara or usufructuary mortgage, of a further six ganda share, for the period of twenty-six years. The date of this instrument was the 2nd Pous 1266, or 16th December 1859. Afterwards the share belonging to Shyam Chunder was also inherited by Goloke Nath, upon the death of Shyam Chunder's wife, Saroda Chowdrani. It would thus appear that Goloke Nath, at various times, and as the result of these successive inheritances, became entitled to twenty-four gandas. With respect to the six gandas which belonged to the fifth brother Radha Nath, we have nothing to do, and no question has been raised in this case.

The execution-sale under which the plaintiff purchased took place on the 6th September 1871, and the plaintiff's contention is, that the right, title, and interest of Goloke Nath Chowdry purchased by him at that sale is really an absolute title to twelve gandas of the estate,—that is, the twenty-four gandas to which Goloke Nath became entitled in the manner just described, less the twelve gandas sold by him on the 16th December 1859 to Sib Dyal Tewari. There is one further transaction which it is necessary to notice, and that is this. It appears [552] that the six gandas which formed the subject of the izara or usufructuary mortgage of the 2nd Pous 1266, or 16th December 1859, was granted in izara to three persons, of whom one, viz., Bisso Nath, owned seven-sixteenths, Sib Dyal owned five-sixteenths, and the third, Judoo Nath, owned four-sixteenths. Bisso Nath's interest, that is seven-sixteenths, was sold in execution of a decree against him, and was purchased by Goloke Nath in the name of Kisto Moni, his son's wife.

The essential question with which we have to deal in this case is, whether the three gandas purchased on the 9th June 1842, in the name of defendant

No. 1, Sreemutty Chowdrani, were purchased by her as her absolute property, or were really purchased by her husband, but benami in her name. The first question which it will be convenient to consider in dealing with this matter is, the burden of proof. The Subordinate Judge evidently considered that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff, for it appears that the plaintiff was called upon to begin, and that his witnesses were first examined. In this Court it has been contended that the burden of proof ought to have been laid upon the defendant Sreemutty Chowdrani. It is said that a Hindu wife is a member of a joint Hindu family, and that the general presumption that all property acquired by a member of such a family is acquired from the joint funds, is just as applicable in the case of property standing in the name of a Hindu wife as in the case of property standing in the name of any other member and alleged to have been acquired from separate funds. In support of this contention, the case of Bindoo Bashinee Debee v. Pearee Mohun Bose (6 W. R., 312), has been relied upon. In that case Bindoo Bashinee, wife of Modhoosoodun, was the person in whose name the property was purchased, and Mr. Justice TREVOR, who delivered the judgment of the Court, said :—"The plaintiff is entitled to a clear finding as to whether she held it in trust for him (that is her husband) or in her own right. That point can only be determined by her showing the source whence the money came, and as in such a case the burden is on the defendant Bindoo Bashinee, we remit the case to the Judge [553] for the purpose of enquiring whether the three bighas and three cottahs purchased by her ostensibly from Jugomoyi Dabi and Anund Chunder Chuckerbutty in 1256 was purchased by her from her husband's money and held in trust for him."

Now it would appear that the learned Judge of this Court who delivered that judgment was of opinion that, as a general rule, in cases of alleged benami, it lies upon the ostensible owner to prove that he is the real owner, if the person who impugns the ostensible title can succeed in throwing suspicion upon such title. This appears from the case of Sreeman Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Chuckerbutty (11 Moore's L. A., 28). The judgment in that case in the High Court was the judgment of Mr. Justice TREVOR and Mr. Justice JACKSON, and in that judgment there is the following passage (p. 39 of the report) :—"In a case of this nature, if the plaintiff succeeds in showing just ground for suspecting the good faith and reality of the title, which is interposed between the creditor and the realization of his dues, the Court will require the ostensible owner to do that which he alone can do, and which he can easily do if he is a bonâ fide owner, viz., to place beyond a doubt the reality of his ownership. In this case we think there is ample ground for putting the defendant Sreeman Chunder to such proof." When that case came on appeal before the Privy Council, their Lordships said (pp. 43 and 44 of the report) :—"Undoubtedly, there are in the evidence circumstances which may create suspicion, and doubt may be entertained with regard to the truth of the case made by the appellant; but in matters of this description it is essential to take care that the decision of the Court rests, not upon suspicions, but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony"; and they were of opinion that it lay, not upon the defendant Sreeman Chunder to show that the property was purchased with his own money, but upon the plaintiff to show that the judgment-debtors on whose behalf the purchase was alleged to have been made were the persons who supplied the purchase-money. It therefore appears to us, that the general principle laid down by Mr. Justice TREVOR in [554] the case of Bindoo Bashinee Debee v. Pearee Mohun Bose (6 W. R., 312), and followed by him in the subsequent case to which we have just referred, has been overruled by the Privy Council. But it is said that there is an essential difference between the case of Sreeman Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Chuckerbutty (11 Moore's L. A., 28) and the present case, inasmuch as that was not the case of property purchased in the name of a Hindu wife. We are inclined to think that the judgment in the case of Bindoo Bashinee Debee v. Pearce Mohun Bose (6 W. R., 312) proceeded upon a general principle supposed to be applicable to all benami-holders, and not upon the peculiar position of a Hindu wife. The same question came before a Bench of this Court very recently in appeal from Original Decree, No. 266 of 1879—Koonjo Kaminny Debee v. Beedhu Soondur Gossamee (unreported); and we there expressed our unwillingness to accept the bare proposition that, in the absence of any evidence to show the source from which the purchase-money was derived, there is a presumption that property purchased in the name of a Hindu wife is the property of her husband, and has been acquired with his money. If we had now to decide this question, we are inclined to say that, in our opinion, there is no presumption one way or the other, and that the burden of proof in each particular case must depend upon the pleadings and the position of the parties as plaintiffs or defendants. But we think it will not be necessary to decide this point upon the present occasion, because whether the burden of proof be laid upon the plaintiff or upon the defendant, we think that the preponderance of evidence is in favour of the defendant Sreemutty Chowdrani. The plaintiff has examined eight witnesses. Of these Nos. 4, 5, and 6—viz., Chunder Kishore Bhat, Raj Kishore Hore, and Ram Comul Dey—give an account of the manner in which Goloke Nath Chowdry supplied the money with which the purchase was made. Having heard the evidence of these witnesses, we are of opinion that the story told by them is not in itself a very credible one. On the other side, we have the testimony of seven witnesses, including the defendant Sreemutty Chowdrani herself, and we have further the evidence of [555] Sib Dyal Tewari, a witness called by both parties, and the impression which this evidence leaves upon our minds is, that Sreemutty Chowdrani had funds of her own, and that, with a portion of these funds, this share in the property was purchased. It may be observed that the price paid, viz., Rs. 560, renders this view a reasonable one. There is nothing improbable in the wife of a man in Goloke Nath's position having this sum of money as her stridhan. Then there are other circumstances in the case which, in our opinion, when taken together, afford corroboration of this view. First, the sale-certificate was taken out in the name of Sreemutty Chowdrani. The Subordinate Judge observes, that there is no evidence that the Mukhtear Doorga Prosad was acting on her behalf, but the recital in the sale-certificate is strong evidence of this fact. Then the name of Sreemutty Chowdrani was registered in the Collectorate for the share purchased by her; and decrees for rent were obtained in her name. Thirdly, we have an admission in the izara lease of the 16th December 1859, an instrument executed by Goloke Nath Chowdry and Sreemutty Chowdrani jointly. The recital in that instrument that three gandas of the property belonged to Sreemutty Chowdrani was an admission against the interest of Goloke Nath Chowdry, and if any question as to the real ownership of this share had subsequently arisen between Goloke Nath or his heirs and his wife or her heirs, this admission would have been strong evidence against Goloke Nath and his representatives. It appears to us that an admission of this kind is not an admission which would have been readily made by Goloke Nath if it did not represent the real state of the facts. As to the question of possession, there is, we think, as good evidence on one side as on the other; but this evidence, so far as it relates to the period after 1859, cannot be worth very much, seeing that, since the execution of the izara or mortgage lease on the 16th December 1859, the izaradars have been in actual possession of the property:

and nothing by way of rent or otherwise was payable to the reversioners. Looking at the evidence on both sides and the circumstances to which we have referred taken together, for each of them singly may be fairly argued to carry less weight, it appears to us, that [556] the preponderance of evidence is in favour of the defendant; and we think, therefore, that the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be reversed, and this appeal decreed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 16th February, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE WILSON.

Kristocomul Mitter

versus

Suresh Chunder Deb.

Insolvency—After-acquired property—Purchaser from insolvent who had not obtained his discharge—Purchaser from Official Assignee—Rights of parties—Intervention of Official Assignee.

Subject to the right and claim of the Official Assignee, and so long as he does not interfere, an insolvent, who has not obtained his final discharge, has power with respect to after-acquired property to buy and sell and give discharges, and do all other acts which he could have done before his insolvency.

The possession of such property by an insolvent in such a position may be adverse to the Official Assignee so as to bar the title of the latter by lapse of time.

THE plaintiff was the son of one Hurrochunder Mitter, who died intestate in 1862, leaving three sons, Nilcomul, Ramcomul, the plaintiff Kristocomul, and a widow Bemola Money Dossee, all members of a joint family, and as such, in possession of a family dwelling-house in Musjeed Baree Street.

In the year 1860, Nilcomul had been adjudicated an insolvent, and all his property thorefore, from such date, vested in the Official Assignee; and he, up to the time of the present suit, had failed to obtain his final discharge.

The three brothers and the widow, in the year 1876, instituted a suit for the partition of the family dwelling-house, and, in accordance with a decree passed in that suit, a commission of partition issued, under which Nilcomul was allotted a quarter share. The Official Assignee was not made a party to the partition proceedings, and Nilcomul remained in possession of his quarter share up to the 24th July 1880.

On the 1th December 1881, the plaintiff bought from the Official Assignee Nilcomul's quarter share in the dwelling-house [557] for 500 rupees, the actual deed of conveyance being dated the 21st December 1881.

The plaintiff, on endeavouring to take possession, was forcibly prevented from so doing by the defendant, Suresh Chunder Deb, who alleged that he had, on the 24th July 1880, purchased from Nilcomul himself his quarter share in the family dwelling-house for the price of rupees 1,300, and that such purchase was made bonâ fide and without any notice of the alleged insolvency. The plaintiff, therefore, brought the present suit to have his title and share in the house declared and possession given to him.

The defendant contended that the plaintiff was estopped from setting up the title of the Official Assignee, inasmuch as Nilcomul had all along remained in possession of the property from the time of the partition up to the 24th July 1880, and that his own purchase was a bonâ fide one, and that, since his purchase, he had expended 850 rupees on the house.

Mr. Montrion and Mr. W. C. Ghose for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Bonnerjee (with him Mr. Amir Ali) for the Defendant. It is hardly likely that the defendant would have bought a property of a speculative kind, if he knew of the insolvency. The Official Assignee's title is barred by lapse of time—art. 144, sched. ii of the Limitation Act. Nilcomul's possession became adverse upon the death of his father. If the insolvent is regarded as the agent of the Official Assignee, I would contend that he could pass a good title to the defendant; but I say, that that would refer to personal property only. Whatever may be the right of the Official Assignee, the plaintiff cannot take advantage of it; his conduct debars him from so doing: see s. 115* of the Evidence Act. The case of Herbert v. Sayer (5 Q. B., 965) lays down that an uncertificated bankrupt may acquire property and contract for the benefit of his assignees, and may sue in respect of such property, the bankruptcy constituting no defence unless the assignees have interfered. In Ashley v. Kell (2 Strange, 1207) it was held, that although the future effects of a bankrupt were liable to be seized for the benefit of his credit-[558]ors, yet the bankrupt had, in the meantime, such a property in them, as enabled him to transact and sell to a bonâ fide purchaser. In Re London and Provincial Telegraph Co. (L. R., 9 Eq., 653) it was held, that the title of a registered purchaser for value prevailed against the assignee in bankruptcy, who had taken no steps for five years to assert his right. In Drayton v. Dale (2 B. and C., 293) it was held, that the right and title to endorse a bill does not vest in the assignee; and that if the assignee in bankruptcy make no claim to the bankrupt property, the bankrupt has a right to it as against all others. The principle to be deduced from Herbert v. Sayer (5 Q. B., 965), seems to be, that a bankrupt has property in after-acquired property and is entitled to deal with it. As to acquiescence, the silence of the assignee for a long time is to be construed as allowing the bankrupt to deal with the property as he pleases: see Pickering v. Lord Stanford (2 Ves., Jun., 272), Prendergast v. Turton (1 Y. and C., Ch. Cas., 98), and Fyson v. Chambers (9 M. and W., 460). [WILSON, J.—In all these cases, the question has been between a third person and the bankrupt; is there any case as between a third person and the assignee?] Not that I am aware of.

*[Sec. 115:—When one person has, by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative to deny the truth of that thing.]

Wilson, J.—The facts in this case are as follows:—Nilcomul Mitter, a brother of the plaintiff, was adjudicated an insolvent in the year 1860, but never obtained his final discharge. In 1862, by the death of his father, he became entitled to certain joint family property as one of three sons, and continued in undisturbed possession; and the Official Assignee never intervened or made any claim so long as the property was undivided. In 1876, the plaintiff and the third brother brought a suit against the widow and second brother, asking for partition. On the 13th May 1877, a decree for partition was made and carried out, and Nilcomul remained in undisturbed possession of his divided share, the Official Assignee making no claim. In June 1880, Nilcomul sold his interest to the present defendant, who, I find, bought in good faith, without notice, and paid full value. On the 4th December 1880 six [559] months after, the plaintiff bought the same share from the Official Assignee for a small sum, and with full knowledge of the purchase made by the defendant. The plaintiff now sues for the possession of the property purchased by him from the Official Assignee, stating that the defendant had forcibly prevented him from taking possession, and alleging the insolvency of Nilcomul. Such are the facts and contentions on the plaintiff's behalf. The subject of after-acquired property as regards uncertificated bankrupts, has been considered in England, from time to time, and the result is this, that, subject to the right and claims of the Official Assignee, so long as the Official Assignee does not interfere, the uncertificated bankrupt has power to buy and sell and give discharges and do all other acts he could have done and had done before the intervention of the Official Assignee. The law is summed up in Herbert v. Sayer (5 Q. B., 965), which seems to me conveniently to sum up the decision in England on the various cases, and Kerakoose v. Brooks (8 Moore's I. A., 339), is clear authority that the Indian Act is to be construed on the same principle. The defendant acquired a good title and the plaintiff none. But even if I thought the defendant's title was not good on the above ground, it is good on another ground. Nilcomul's possession since 1862 was adverse possession against the Official Assignee. The suit must be dismissed with costs No. 2.

Suit dismissed.

[560] APPELLATE CRIMINAL.The 20th February, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

In the matter of the Petition of Nobin Chundra Banikya.

The Empress

Nobin Chundra Banikya.*

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 349—Acquittal of prisoner - Withdrawal of pardon granted to approver after judgment of acquittal - Conviction on trial improperly originated, Power of High Court to set aside.

At a sessions trial, the Judge, after acquitting the prisoner, passed an order withdrawing a pardon already granted to an approver (who had given his evidence as such approver before the Sessions Court), and ordered his commitment. The approver was charged, tried, and found guilty. Held by MITTER, J., that the order withdrawing the pardon and committing the approver was contrary to the provisions of s. 349† of the Criminal Procedure Code, the words, "before judgment has been passed" being words inserted in the section to put a limit to the time within which the power of withdrawal of the pardon conferred in the Court of Sessions may be actually exercised; and that therefore the trial of the approver was illegal.

The power of directing commitments conferred upon the Sessions Court by s. 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be exercised only before judgment has been passed.

Held by MACLEAN, J., that it is not necessary that the order should be made before judgment is passed, but that it must appear to the Judge before he passes judgment, that the conditions of the pardon have not been complied with; and that, in the present case, it was impossible to hold, that because the actual order of commitment of the accused was written (although in the judgment) after the acquittal, therefore it did not appear to the Judge before passing judgment that there were grounds for his order.

Per MACLEAN, J.—The High Court may, without reference to the Local Government, set aside a conviction made upon a trial improperly originated.

RAMKRISTO, Nobin Banikya, and others were charged with abetment of the murder of one Muddun Banikya. Before the [561] Deputy Magistrate, Nobin made a confession, and a pardon was tendered to him under s. 347 of the Criminal Procedure Code. At the trial before the Sessions Judge, Nobin gave his evidence as an approver, which was substantially * Criminal Appeal, No. 20 of 1882, against the order of T. D. Beighton, Esq., Officiating Sessions Judge of Mynensingh, dated the 14th November 1881.

seven or section three hundred and forty-eight, if it appears to the Magistrate before the trial, or to the Court of Session before judgment has been passed, or to the High Court as a Court of reference or revision, that any person, who has accepted such offer of pardon, has not conformed to the conditions under which the pardon was tendered, either by wilfully concealing anything essential, or by giving false evidence, such Magistrate or Court may commit or direct the commitment of such person for trial for the offence in respect of which the pardon was so tendered.

the same in effect as his evidence before the committing officer ; but the Judge, concurring with the assessors, acquitted the accused, and after the formal finding acquitting the prisoner (although in the judgment) added an order to the effect that the pardon granted to Nobin should be withdrawn, and he, Nobin, put upon his trial for the murder of Muddun, and stating therein that he was of opinion, that Nobin had wilfully concealed essential facts and had given false evidence against Ramkristo, who, the Judge held, was innocent.

Nobin was then tried for the abetment of the murder of Muddun, and at this trial his deposition in the former trial was used against him ; the Judge, differing from the assessors, found him to have been present when the murder was committed, and sentenced him to transportation for life.

Nobin appealed to the High Court.

Mr. M. Ghose (with him Baboo Anando Gopal Paulit) for the appellant, contended, (i) that the pardon could not be withdrawn by the Sessions Judge at the stage at which it was withdrawn ; (ii) that he had no jurisdiction to withdraw the pardon at all, and even had he the power, he was not justified in so doing under the circumstances of the case ; (iii) that, assuming the Judge had jurisdiction having regard to the last clause of s. 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the statement used against Nobin was inadmissible in evidence ; (iv) that it never was intended that the last clause in s. 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code should override the provisions of the Evidence Act ; and (v) that the last clause of s. 349 can be read consistently with s. 24 * of the Evidence Act. 1st.—The Judge had no power to cancel the pardon after verdict ; the object of the limitation in s. 349 as to the time when this power is to be exercised, is to prevent Judges from being influenced by the result of the trial. An approver does not undertake to secure a conviction, nor is it a condition of his pardon that he is [562] to be believed. He is prima facie unreliable unless corroborated in material particulars. The power must be exercised before the Court has made up its mind one way or the other, otherwise an approver may be committed in every case in which he fails to secure a conviction. 2nd.—Assuming the Judge had jurisdiction to revoke the pardon, he was not justified in doing so under the circumstances of the case ; the falsity of the deposition ought to appear on the face of it. I contend that the prisoner apparently told the truth, and that there was no reason for holding that he had given false evidence. [MITTER, J.—But you contend on the merits that we ought not to believe his statement if it is admissible in evidence against him, how can you then ask us to hold that he did not give false evidence ?] For the purposes of my present contention only I ask your Lordships to hold that the prisoner stated what was apparently true. If he told the truth his pardon was improperly cancelled, and if he did not, then he ought not to be convicted on the basis of his own deposition. [MACLEAN, J.—Have we any power to interfere if we hold that his pardon was improperly withdrawn ?] I submit this Court can then set aside the conviction and hold that the pardon had become final. [MACLEAN, J.—Are you aware of the case of the Empress v. Srinobin Bhutia (Cr. Ap., No. 811 of 1879), from Darjeeling, decided on the 17th March 1880, in which WHITE, J., and myself held, that the pardon ought not to have been withdrawn, and we have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise, having reference to the charge against the accused person, proceeding from a person in authority and sufficient, in the opinion of the Court, to give the accused person grounds, which would appear to him reasonable, for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him.]

* [Sec. 24 :—A confession made by an accused person is irrelevant in a criminal proceeding, if the making of the confession appears to the Court to

then recommended the Local Government to pardon the prisoner?] That case was undefended, and the question was not argued. Whatever may be the case in England, here the pardon is provided for by Statute, and your Lordships are competent without referring the matter to the Local Government to set aside the conviction. As regards the fourth contention, the learned Counsel cited The Dean of Ely v. Bliss (2 DeGex M. & G., 459), as showing that a later Act does not repeal by implication a previous Act; and that, therefore, s. 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code could not override the Evidence Act. The words of a general Code cannot, without express words of modification, override a particular Code: Wilberforce's Statute Law, p. 326. The general rule touching [563] the repeal of laws is "leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant" but subsequent Acts in the affirmative giving new penalties and instituting new methods of proceeding do not repeal former penalties and methods of proceeding without negative words. In Fitzgerald v. Champneys (2 John. & Hem, 31; at p. 54), it was held, that a general Act of Parliament does not repeal a prior special Act without express word of reference. See also Escott v. Mastin (4 Moore's P. C., 104) and Frans v. Rees (9 C B. (N. S.), 391). The statement made by Nobin is not admissible under the Evidence Act, and this Act being a prior Act is not repealed by implication by s. 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [MITTER, J.—We reserve our opinion as to whether the statement can be read, and subject to this you can read it.]

Mr. Branson (with him Baboo Kalichurn Banerjee) for the Crown.—As regards the withdrawal of the pardon, the order was in accordance with the provisions of s. 349, because this section only requires that the Court of Session should come to the conclusion that the accused has not conformed to the conditions under which the pardon was tendered before the judgment has been passed, and if this condition be fulfilled, the actual order directing the commitment may be passed at any time.

Mr. Ghose in reply. —If it was simply intended that before judgment is passed it must appear to the Judge that the prisoner had not conformed to the conditions of his pardon, and that the Judge might revoke the pardon at any time, then in every case, after any length of time, a Judge might exercise the power by simply recording, that, during the trial, it had appeared to him that the approver had not conformed to the conditions of his pardon. If the construction contended for were correct, then a Magistrate might, after trial, and even after an approver's evidence had been acted upon by the Sessions Court, revoke a pardon on the ground that it had previously appeared to such Magistrate that the approver had not told the whole truth—a result which could never have been intended. On the merits I [564] contend that the deposition of the prisoner, on which the conviction mainly rests, was improperly obtained by the Police, and ought not to be believed even as against himself.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.):—

Mitter, J.—The appellant has been convicted of the offence of abetment of murder (ss. 114 and 302 of the Penal Code) of a person named Muddun Banikya, and sentenced to transportation for life. The assessors were for acquitting the appellant. That, on the night of Friday the 8th Joist last (20th May), Muddun was murdered in his hut while asleep, and on the following morning his corpse was discovered with a ram-dao lying near it, is proved beyond the possibility of a doubt. It appears that the appellant was suspected of having committed this murder, and was arrested by the Police on the 22nd May and challaned on the 30th May. On the 31st May the appellant made a statement to the Deputy Magistrate in charge of the Subdivision within which the murder was committed, confessing his guilt and implicating one Ramkristo Banikya and four other Mussulmans of his village. On the 7th June the Deputy Magistrate, under s. 347 of the Criminal Procedure Code, tendered pardon to the appellant, who, having accepted the tender, was examined as a witness in the case, which was prosecuted against Ramkristo and the aforesaid four Mussulmans. The case was ultimately committed for trial in the Sessions Court. In the Sessions trial, which was held by Mr. Kirkwood, the appellant was examined as a witness on the 27th July. His evidence was substantially the same which was given by him before the committing officer. On the 28th July, after the first witness for the defence had been examined, the assessors intimated to the Judge that, in their opinion, the evidence adduced on behalf of the prosecution was not sufficient to warrant a conviction. The Judge, concurring in that opinion, stopped the trial; and on the following day delivered his written judgment, acquitting the persons then on their trial. At the end of the judgment he recorded an order, directing the Magistrate to commit the appellant to be tried for the murder of Muddun, as it appeared to him that the appellant, having been guilty of wilful concealment of essential facts and of giving false [563] evidence against Ramkristo, had not conformed to the conditions under which the pardon had been tendered to him. This order was passed under s. 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The appellant was ultimately committed and convicted as stated above. The present Sessions Judge, Mr. Beighton, in support of his conclusion, relies chiefly upon the appellant's statements made from time to time while under pardon, and thinks they are corroborated by the fact that the ram-dao, which was found lying near the corpse of the murdered man, is proved to have been purchased by the appellant from a blacksmith, named Ram Gopaul, about fifteen or sixteen days before the occurrence.

The learned Counsel who appeared for the appellant before us contended, (i) that the order of Mr. Kirkwood under s. 349, Criminal Procedure Code, directing the appellant to be committed, having been made after the judgment was passed, was not warranted by the provisions of that section; (ii) that, notwithstanding the express provision of s. 349, Criminal Procedure Code, the statements of the appellant, while under pardon, should not have been allowed to be put in evidence, inasmuch as these statements, amounting to confession of guilt on the part of the appellant, are not relevant under s. 24 of the Evidence Act; (iii) that the finding of the Sessions Judge is against the weight of the evidence in the record.

It has been urged by the learned Counsel who appeared before us to support the conviction, that Mr. Kirkwood's order under s. 349, Criminal Procedure Code, is in accordance with the provisions of that section, because it is clear from his judgment that it appeared to him before it was passed that the appellant had not conformed to the conditions under which the pardon was tendered; that the section only requires that the Court of Sessions should come to this conclusion before the judgment has been passed; and that, if this condition be fulfilled, the actual order directing the commitment may be passed at any time without any limitation.

I am of opinion that the order of Mr. Kirkwood, withdrawing the pardon to the appellant, and directing him to be committed, was passed contrary to the provisions of s. 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It appears to me that the words "before [566] judgment has been passed" have been inserted in the section with a view to put a limitation in respect of the time within which the power of the withdrawal of the pardon conferred in the Court of Sessions may be actually exercised. This intention of the Legislature would not be attained if we put upon the section the construction for which the learned counsel who appeared in support of the conviction contends. According to his contention a person, to whom a pardon has been tendered under the provisions of s. 347, may be ordered to be committed by the Court of Sessions after the lapse of any length of time, provided it would appear that, before the judgment was passed, it had come to the conclusion that he had not conformed to the conditions under which the pardon was tendered. It seems to me that this is not a reasonable construction. It frustrates the very object for which this limitation of time is laid down. In my opinion the power of directing commitment conferred by the section in question upon the Court of Session can be exercised only before the judgment has been passed. In this case, therefore, Mr. Kirkwood, after passing the judgment in the case in which the appellant was examined as a witness under the provisions of s. 347 of the Criminal Procedure Code, had no power to withdraw the pardon granted to him, and direct his commitment. The subsequent trial of the appellant is consequently illegal. The conviction cannot, therefore, stand. In this view which I take of this question of law, it is unnecessary for me to express any opinion upon the other objections urged before us against the validity of the conviction. I would, therefore reverse the conviction and direct his release.

Maclean, J.—The appellant, stated in the record to be twenty years of age, was placed before the Magistrate charged on his own confession with abetment of the murder of one Muddun Banikya. The Magistrate thought proper to tender to him a pardon under s. 347 of the Criminal Procedure Code with a view to procuring the conviction of four other persons also charged with the murder. The appellant accepted the pardon, and was examined before the Magistrate on the 7th June last. The other persons were committed for trial, and the appellant gave his deposition on the 27th July. On the [567] 28th July the assessors, at the close of the evidence of the first witness for the defence, intimated that they had made up their minds and did not wish to hear further evidence. The Judge expressed his concurrence, but no finding was recorded on that day. On the following day the assessors' opinions were recorded and judgment delivered, acquitting the persons under trial. At the close of his judgment the Judge recorded that the appellant had not conformed to the conditions under which the pardon was tendered (s. 349, Criminal Procedure Code), and he directed that the appellant should be committed for trial for the offence in respect of which the pardon was so tendered. The appellant was thereafter committed, and has been tried before a different Judge and assessors. The assessors would have acquitted him, but the Judge has convicted him of abetment of murder and sentenced him to transportation for life.

Before dealing with the merits of the case two matters have to be disposed of, which Counsel for the appellant have urged against the proceedings before and at the trial.

In the first place it was urged, that the order of the Judge, dated 29th July, directing the commitment of the appellant, was not made before judgment was passed, and is, therefore, illegal with reference to s. 349 of the Procedure Code. Counsel for the prosecution urged against this view of the case, that it is not necessary that the order should be made "before judgment is passed," as the section requires only that it shall have "appeared to the Court or Sessions before judgment is passed" that the conditions under which pardon was tendered have not been conformed to. I think the correct view of the section is, that it must appear to the Judge before he passes his judgment that the conditions of pardon have not been complied with, and reading the judgment in this case it is abundantly clear that it did so appear to him. It is impossible to hold that because the actual order for commitment of the accused was written (although in the judgment) after the acquittal, therefore it did not appear to the Judge before passing judgment that there were grounds for his order. The judgment prior to signature must be taken as a whole, as [568] representing the view taken by the Judge of the whole case, and nothing would justify us in dealing with it paragraph by paragraph and founding any conclusion upon the order in which they come. I therefore reject this objection.

The next objection is, that the statement of the appellant under pardon, viz., his deposition on 27th July, was improperly used in evidence against him, although the last clause of s. 349 (Criminal Procedure Code) directs that it may be put in evidence against him. The argument in support of this objection is, that, by s. 24 of the Evidence Act, a confession made by an accused person is irrelevant, if it appears to the Court to have been caused by inducement, threat or promise, etc., and that there is thus a conflict between the Evidence Act, s. 24, and the later Act, s. 349. The appellant's counsel asked us to read the last section as if it contained the words "provided it is otherwise admissible in evidence." I must say, that, in my opinion, Counsel asked us to reduce the last clause of s. 349, Criminal Procedure Code, to an absurdity. I can see no connection whatever between the two sections. The deposition or statement made by the appellant under pardon was not a confession made by an accused person. The appellant was not an accused person on the 27th July. He had ceased to be so on the 7th June, when pardon was tendered and accepted. Holding this opinion, I decline to waste any time in considering what are called canons of construction on supposed inconsistencies between an earlier and a later Act.

In the present case the first point for consideration is, whether the same statement, condemned as false in part and in other respects untrustworthy by the Judge who tried the first case, and again condemned in many respects by the Judge who tried this case, can be accepted as justifying the appellant's conviction.

I entertain a very strong opinion that the story told by the appellant is in the main true, and that Muddun Banikya was murdered with the prisoner's duo, and with his knowledge and consent. I share the belief expressed by the two Judges who [569] considered the case, that, as regards Ramkristo Banikya, the statement is false. My impression is, that the duo having been found by the body of Muddun Banikya, the case was so strong against the appellant that he was induced to make such statements as would, while implicating himself in a minor degree, secure, it was thought, the conviction of Ramkristo. Appellant was evidently in the hands of the Police from the 22nd to 31st May; and considering his youth and the pressure to which he was evidently subjected both by the finding of the duo and by the steps taken against his family who were put under restraint, I can quite understand his yielding.

I confess, however, that I cannot justify his prosecution. The Judge who directed this committal did so on two grounds—firstly, that he had concealed something essential; secondly, that he had given false evidence. This last ground would have justified his trial for that offence, but nothing has transpired at his trial to show that his evidence was false as regards his own share in the crime. If it is false in that respect, he must be acquitted on the ground that he had nothing to do with the murder. It was not to be expected that he should prove his own perjury, and therefore his silence cannot be unfavourably construed. As for the concealment of essential particulars, I am unable to discover it. It rather seems that he has stated false particulars.

The result, therefore, of my consideration of the case is, that this trial has properly ended in a conviction, but it is a trial which ought not to have taken place.

But I have, on a previous occasion, held, that this Court had no authority to set aside a conviction in a trial properly held. In the case I refer to, there was much that resembles this case. The appellant had accepted a pardon. The Judge considered his statement false, and ordered his trial. The Bench of which I was a member held, that the appellant's statement was not false, and that the conditions of the pardon had really been complied with. The proper course we then thought to be to uphold the conviction and refer the case to the Local Government with a view to pardon, which was done, and the pardon was granted. On re-consideration, however, [570] I think this Court may itself set aside a conviction made upon a trial improperly originated, and on this ground, I would direct the release of the appellant.

Appeal allowed and conviction set aside.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 27th February, 1882.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

In the matter of the Petition of Hurro Lall Shaha.

Kamona Soondury Dassee.....Defendant

versus

Hurro Lall Shaha.....Plaintiff.*

Application for revocation of probate—Jurisdiction—Interest of applicant in the estate—Special citation—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 235, 244, 250.

The test of jurisdiction made use of in applications for grant of probate, may be also applied to cases in which a revocation of probate is demanded—viz., whether or no the deceased, at the time of his death, had his fixed place of abode, or had some property, moveable, or immoveable, situate within the jurisdiction of the particular District Judge to whom the application is made.

A presumptive reversioner to property with which a will deals, has a sufficient interest in the property to entitle him to maintain a suit in respect of such property; and on the authority of Nobeen Chundra Sil v. Bhobo Soonduri Dabee (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 460), he is entitled to maintain a case for the revocation of probate.

In every case in which probate of a Hindu's will is applied for, a special citation should be served upon those persons whose interests are directly affected by the will.

* Appeals from Original Decree, No. 337 of 1880, against the decree of C. D. C. Winter Esq., Judge of Pubna, dated the 18th of September 1880.

THIS was an application to revoke probate of a will alleged to have been executed by one Huri Mohun Shaha.

Huri Mohun Shaha died at Pubna on the 21st February 1873, leaving a widow, Kamona Soondury Dassee, and a sister's son, named Hurro Lall Shaha. In March 1877, Kamona Soondury Dassee applied to the District Judge of Rajshahye for [571] probate of a will, which she alleged to be the will of Huri Mohun Shaha; and, on the 22nd June 1877, she obtained an order granting probate. At that time Pubna was under the jurisdiction of the District Judge of Rajshahye; but, in 1878, Pubna was formed into a distinct district, having a separate District Judge. On the 27th March 1878, Kamona Soondury Dassee executed a kobala, conveying all the property left by Huri Mohun Shaha to one Lukhipria Dasia.

On the 22nd May 1880, Hurro Lall Shaha applied to the District Court at Pubna to have this probate set aside, alleging that the will was a forgery, and that he first became aware of the existence of the alleged will, on hearing of the conveyance made by Kamona Soondury Dassee in 1878.

The District Judge found that no citation had been served on Hurro Lall Shaha in 1877, and that the will was not genuine, and on these grounds revoked the probate.

Kamona Soondury Dassee appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Troilockya Nath Mitter, for the Appellant, contended, that the District Judge of Pubna had no jurisdiction to revoke the probate granted by the Judge of Rajshahye; see the case of In the matter of the Petition of Kasi Chunder Mozoomdar (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 440). The petitioner had not sufficient interest in the property of Huri Mohun to entitle him to maintain the suit.

Baboo Mohiny Mohun Roy and Baboo Shooshee Bhooshun Dutt for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—In this case the plaintiff asks for the revocation of probate of a will alleged to have been executed by one Huri Mohun Shaha as far back as 27th Magh 1279 (8th February 1873). Huri Mohun Shaha, the alleged testator, died in the following month, that is Falgoun 1279. No application for probate of the alleged will was made until some four years [572] after the testator's death; and probate was granted on the 22nd June 1877. The present petition for revocation of this probate was presented to the Court of the District Judge of Pubna on the 22nd May 1880; and the petitioner explains his delay in applying for revocation by saying that he had no information as to probate of the alleged will having been granted until a few months before making this application, when for the first time he became aware of the grant. Now the District Judge has dealt with the materials put forward by the petitioner and with the evidence produced as to the execution of the will in a way that is, to our minds, not altogether satisfactory. There are certain observations in his judgment with which we are unable to concur. We may mention, as an example, his remarks as to the possession of certain ornaments by the alleged testator's widow, Kamona Soondury Dassee. We do not think that it is at all probable that a Hindu widow would have sold her ornaments, which are her own stridhan, and applied the proceeds towards the payment of her husband's debts. In consequence of not being able to accept the District Judge's reasons for the conclusion at which he has arrived, we have reconsidered the whole evidence and have arrived at an independent conclusion of our own.

Before dealing with the evidence as to the factum of the will, it is necessary to dispose of two points which have been raised by the pleader for the appellant. These points are: first, that the District Judge of Pubna had no jurisdiction to revoke the probate; and secondly, that the petitioner had not sufficient interest in the property of the alleged testator to entitle him to maintain this suit.

As to the first point, it is admitted on all sides that probate of the will was originally granted by the District Judge of Rajshahye, and that between June 1877, the date of the grant of probate, and May 1880, the date on which the petition for revocation was filed, the Pubna District was removed from the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Rajshahye Court, and was constituted into a separate District Judgeship. Now it is said, that because the probate was originally granted by the District Judge of Rajshahye, the application for revocation [573] ought to have been made to the same Judge in his Court at Rajshahye and not to the District Judge of Pubna; and, in support of this contention, the case of In the matter of the Petition of Kasi Chunder Mozoomdar (1. L. R., 6 Cal., 440) has been relied upon. We think that that case is not on all fours with the case with which we have now to deal. In that case the statement, alleged to be false, and in respect of which the Court was asked to sanction a criminal prosecution, was made in proceedings which had been commenced and completed in the district of Rajshahye. The application in the present case is not concerned merely with proceedings that have been commenced and concluded in the Rajshahye Court. No doubt, if this application be successful, the grant of administration made by the Rajshahye Court will be cancelled; but the present proceedings are distinct from the former proceedings,—the allegations are different, the evidence is different, there is a new party, and the trial is inter partes and not ex parte. Section 235 of the Indian Succession Act (which is applicable to Hindu wills) enacts, that “the District Judge shall have jurisdiction in granting and revoking probates and letters of administration in all cases within his district.” Now, in order to ascertain what is a case within his district, we must turn to s. 244, which directs that, in petitions for probate, the following, among other particulars, shall be inserted,—viz., that the deceased at the time of his death had his fixed place of abode, or had some property, moveable or immoveable, situate within the jurisdiction of the Judge. Now, it is clear from these words, that, in order to determine the district within which a case for grant of probate is to be instituted, we must see whether the deceased, at the time of his death, had his fixed place of abode, or had some property, moveable or immoveable, situate within the jurisdiction of the particular District Judge to whom the application is made. There is no similar provision in express language applicable to a case of revocation of probate; but it appears to us that the reasonable construction is, that the same test of jurisdiction is to be applied. Were it otherwise, there is no test of jurisdiction to be found in the Succession Act, and it is admitted [574] that if we are to look for that test in the Code of Civil Procedure, the case has been properly instituted in the Court of the District Judge of Pubna. Now it is admitted, that the testator, at the time of his death, had his fixed place of abode and also had property within the jurisdiction of the Pubna Court. Section 18 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act provides, that the “Local Government shall fix, and may from time to time vary, the local limits of the jurisdiction of any Civil Court under this Act;” and under the provisions of s. 15 of the same Act, a District Judge is a Civil Court within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is clear that the Local Government, in the exercise of the power hereby conferred, varied the local limits of the Rajshahye Court. It is also clear that, after the Pubna District had been constituted a separate jurisdiction with a separate District Court, any petition for grant of probate of this will must have been presented to the Pubna Court, inasmuch as the deceased resided and had property within the local limits of that Court. It follows from what has been already said, that, if the Pubna Court had jurisdiction to grant probate, it had also jurisdiction to revoke. Then, is this latter jurisdiction affected by the fact of the grant having been made in the Rajshahye Court? We cannot see that it is, more especially as the judicial jurisdiction of the two Courts is exactly equal, and neither party suffers any disadvantage by the revocation-suit being tried at Pubna. On the contrary, there is a positive advantage to the parties and their witnesses, inasmuch as Pubna is nearer their houses than Rajshahye. There is nothing to show that, by having the revocation-suit tried at Rajshahye, it would come before the same Judge who originally made the grant, and indeed it has been admitted that this would not be so, while it may well be that the jurisdiction of the Rajshahye Court has been taken away by the removal of the Pubna District from the local limits of its jurisdiction. For all these reasons, we think that the petition for revocation was properly presented to the Pubna District Judge.

The second question is concerned with the right of the plaintiff to maintain this suit. It appears to us, that the plaintiff, who [573] is admittedly the next presumptive reversioner, had a sufficient interest in the property with which this will deals to entitle him to maintain a suit in respect of such property. In support of this view we may refer to the case of Ranee Anund Kunwar v. The Court of Wards (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 764), decided by the Privy Council on the 19th November 1880. Then, inasmuch as the plaintiff had a sufficient interest in the property to maintain a suit in respect thereof, we think, upon the authority of the case of Nobeen Chundra Sil v. Bhobo Soondury Dabee (I.L.R. 6 Cal., 460), that he was entitled to maintain this case for the revocation of the probate. Having disposed of these two preliminary points, we now turn to the evidence as to the factum of the will.

(The learned Judge then went into the evidence as to the execution of the will, and found it was insufficient to enable the Court to come to the conclusion that the will had been executed by Huri Mohun Shaha, and continued :) In the first place, the application for probate of the will was not made until nearly four years after its execution. Now, the will contains a recital that it was executed in order to provide for the payment of certain debts that were due by the testator; and the fact that no probate of the will was applied for till nearly four years after the testator's death, which occurred soon after the execution of the will, is not very consistent with this recital. In the second place, no special citation was served upon the petitioner, who was the next presumptive reversioner. We think that, in every case in which probate of a Hindu will is asked, a special citation ought to be served upon those persons whose interests are directly affected by the will. In this case no such special citation was served. It is said that it is not the usual practice in the mofussil to serve anything more than a general citation. There may be some truth in this statement, and in dealing with the case now before us, we, in consequence, assign less weight to this consideration than we might give to it, if a more careful practice prevailed. We desire to observe, however, that the practice of a mere general citation in all cases is one which in this country may tend to encourage fraud, [576] and the fabrication and propounding of forged wills. Section 250 of the Succession Act vests the District Judge with full discretion, which should be exercised with proper care: and when a will is propounded which alters the devolution of property, a special citation should be directed to be served upon the person or persons who is or are immediately affected by the will. The other grounds on which the learned Judge was of opinion that the will had not been executed by Huri Mohun are not material to this report. Taking all these facts into consideration, and further having regard to the positive evidence which has been produced to prove the execution of the will, it appears to us, although we do not agree in the judgment of the District Judge, or in the reasonings upon which he has arrived at his conclusion, that this conclusion is substantially correct, and that we ought not to interfere with the order for revoking probate of the will.

This appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 28th February, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Leelanund Singh.....Plaintiff

versus

Hamidooddin and others..... Defendants.

Construction of document—Compromise—Release—" All present and future liabilities."

General words used in a deed of compromise or in a release must be confined to matters of the same nature and forming part of the transaction which the parties had in view.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1933 of 1880, against the decree of W. Verner, Esq., Officiating Judge of Bhagalpore, dated the 26th June 1880, reversing the decree of Baboo Koylash Chunder Mookerjee, Officiating Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 27th September 1879.

Directors of the London and South-Western Railway Co. v. Blackmore (L. R., 4 H. L., 610) followed.

THIS was a suit for arrears of rent instituted in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore, on the 4th [577] of June 1879, to recover arrears of rent for the years 1283 (September 1875—August 1876), 1284 (September 1876—August 1877) and 1285 (September 1877—August 1878) Fuslee. One of the defendants was Bhoobun Chunder Roy, and the others were his co-sharers, the heirs of one Kamiruddin, who, in his lifetime, had been the co-sharer of Bhoobun Chunder Roy. The arrears sued for had all accrued in the lifetime of Kamiruddin. It appeared that Kamiruddin had formerly been the plaintiff's agent, and in the present suit his heirs put in a written statement, in which they asserted that the plaintiff had brought a previous suit against them in respect of the agency, and that, by a compromise entered into in that suit on the 16th of May 1879, the plaintiff had released them from "all present and future liabilities" including the liability in question in this suit. In respect of this defence, the Judge of the Court of First Instance said: "We come now to consider the most important issue, namely, whether the plaintiff absolved the defendants from all liability by his deed of compromise. The compromise is to be construed by reading it as an entire document, and not merely by reading some portions of it on which the defendants laid much stress. The compromise was effected between the plaintiff and the heirs of Kamiruddin in a case where he sued them for money and accounts in the hands of his deceased agent, and also for recovering certain moveable properties that were in his hands, which we find fully set forth in the beginning of the compromise. In one portion of the instrument it is mentioned, that the plaintiff would not ask for accounts from the defendants whether their claim was included in that suit or not. It was also mentioned that the plaintiff would be at liberty to contest the demands of third parties. In the seventh paragraph of the instrument it was mentioned, that the defendants would pay the plaintiff Rs. 10,000 and the plaintiff thereupon acquitted them from all present and future liabilities. The defendants contend that these terms are very wide and may include all sorts of liabilities; but I am of opinion that this is an unreasonable construction of that document, for it was merely a suit for recovering accounts, money, and other moveables in the hands of the plaintiff's deceased agent, [578] and the terms of the compromise should be confined regarding those items of the claim, or, in other words, regarding those moneys which were in his hands in the capacity of an agent. In the present case the claim is regarding arrears of rent, and in this case Bhoobun Chunder Roy is a coparcener of the defendants, they are both principals, not agents, and both of them are jointly liable to pay rent. It is true that they are sharers of one moiety of the disputed jote; but the plaintiff has sued them jointly, and their respective liability was undetermined before. In that state of things it is unreasonable to suppose that the plaintiff absolved the defendants from their liability to pay him even his due rent, which is quite unconnected with that case." The Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiff a decree against all the defendants, which was reversed on appeal, the District Judge holding, that the deed of compromise covered the claim in the present suit. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Twidale and Moonshi Mahomed Yusuf for the Appellant, argued, that, by the terms of the solehnama, the claim involved in the suit in which it was filed, as well as claims of a similar nature—i.e., claims for accounts of moneys received by Kamiruddin in his capacity of manager, were alone settled; and that the District Judge had failed to take into consideration that this was a suit for rent due not merely by Kamiruddin himself, but by him jointly with Bhoobun Chunder Roy.

Moonshi Serajul Islam for the Respondents.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court. (CUNNINGHAM and FIELD, JJ.) :—

Cunningham, J.—This was a suit for rent. The only question is, whether the claim was comprised in the deed of compromise, which was executed previously with reference to a former suit between the parties. The language of this deed is, in several places, somewhat general, and extends to claims of every description. In construing it, the view taken by the original Court is, that it deals with a particular claim, namely, the [379] subject of the former suit, which was a certain account to be rendered as an agent, and certain sums of money to be recovered, for which the defendants, in the former suit, were responsible. I think the general expressions used in the deed of compromise must, according to the well-known rule of interpretation, be confined to matters of the same nature, and forming part of the transaction which the parties had in view. I, therefore, agree with the view taken with regard to the compromise by the original Court, and think that the appeal, so far as regards this part of the case, must be allowed.

The result is, that the decision of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside, and the case remanded for trial of the other points raised in the petition of appeal to this Court.

Field, J.—In this case the plaintiff sued two persons—namely, Bhoobun Chunder Roy and the heirs of Kamiruddin Mahomed, for rent of an ijara for 1283 to 1285. It appears that Kamiruddin Mahomed was in the employment of the plaintiff as gomashta; and, after his death, the plaintiff had brought a previous suit against the heirs of Kamiruddin in order to have an account of the moneys received and disbursed by Kamiruddin Mahomed during the period of his agency. That suit was terminated by a compromise dated the 16th of May 1879, and the question which we have to decide in this case is, whether that compromise was intended to embrace, not only the subjects which were then in dispute between the parties, but also the claim for rent which forms the subject of the present suit.

I concur with my learned colleague in thinking, that the proper construction to be put upon that compromise is, that it was not intended to embrace the claim which forms the subject of the present suit. It is a general rule of construction that general words in a release are to be limited to that thing or those things which was or were in the contemplation of the parties; see the judgment of Lord WESTBURY in the case of the Directors of the London and South-Western Railway Company v. Blackmore (L. R., 4 H. L., 610). In that case the words of the release were [380] quite as general as the words which are to be found in the solehnama in the present case. It was a release of "all claims and demands therein mentioned and for or on any other account or claim whatsoever."

I, therefore, concur in reversing the decision of the District Judge, and I also agree that the case must be remanded to him for a decision of the other questions raised in the petition of appeal to this Court.

The costs of this Court will abide the result.

Appeal allowed and case remanded.

NOTES.

[I. RECITALS—THEIR VALUE IN INTERPRETATION OF DEEDS—

The following rules taken from Norton on Deeds (1906) 2nd Edn. pp. 181—199 will be found very useful. The authorities on which they are based are there set out in extenso :—

i. If both the recitals and the operative part of a deed are clear and unambiguous, but they are inconsistent with each other, the operative part is to be preferred.

"If the recitals are ambiguous and the operative part is clear, the operative part must prevail:" per LORD ESHER, M.R. ex parte Daves (1886) 17 Q.B.D. 275 (286).

It follows that a specific description of property or a specific statement of what is intended to be done contained in the operative part will not be controlled by a general description, or a general or ambiguous statement, contained in the recitals.

ii. "If the recitals are clear and the operative part of a deed is ambiguous, the recitals must govern the construction", per LORD ESHER, M.R. ex parte Daves (1886) 17 Q. B. D. 275 at 286.

It follows that a specific description of property, or a specific statement of what is intended to be done, contained in the recitals, will not be enlarged by a general description, or a general or ambiguous statement, contained in the operative part.

iii. The most striking instance of the generality of the operative words being controlled by the recitals occurs in a release, (also, powers-of-attorney, etc.)

iv. A misrecital will not affect the deed, if it be sufficiently clear what is intended.

v. A misrecital may influence the construction.

vi. A misrecital may operate by way of estoppel.

vii. A recital in a deed may operate as a covenant, where it appears to have been the intention of the parties that it should so operate.

II. RECITALS IN RELEASE MAY RESTRICT GENERALITY OF OPERATIVE PART :—

"If a release is given on a particular consideration recited, notwithstanding that the release concludes with general words, yet the law, in order to prevent surprise, will construe it to relate to the particular matter recited which was under the contemplation of the parties, and intended to be released":— per LORD HARDWICKE in Ramsden v. Hylten (1751) 2 Ves. Sen. 305 (310).

"The general words in a release are limited always to that thing or those things which were specially in the contemplation of the parties at the time when the release was given." :— London and South Western Railway Co. v. Blackmore (1870) L. R. 1 H. L. 610 (623) ; Turner v. Turner (1880) 14 Ch. D. 829 ; In re Perkins (1898) 2 Ch. 182 (190).

Thus, this maxim has been applied to restrict the general words in the operative part to those mentioned in the recitals, when they were specified debts (Payler v. Homersham (1815) 4 M. & S. 423) ; specified objections to title (Lord Braybrooke v. Inskip (1803) 8 Ves. 417) ; specified causes of action (Simons v. Johnson (1832) 3 B. & Ad. 175) ; specified assets in the release to the administrator (Turner v. Turner (1880) 14 Ch. D. 829).

Similar constructions have been placed on powers of attorney (Darby v. Coutts & Co., 29 Ch. D. 500 ; Watson v. Jinn-enjoy Coondoo, 10 Cal. 901 P.C.) ; indemnity bonds (Boyes v. Bluck (1853) 13 C. B. 652) ; guarantees (Bain v. Cooper, (1842) 9 M. & W. 701).

Norton on Deeds, (1906) p. 193, gives instances, where on this principle even without mention in recitals, general words were confined to what the parties had in contemplation : see Turner v. Turner (1880) 14 Ch. D. 827 ; Lytall v. Edwards (1861) 6 H. & N. 337 ; Cholmondeley v. Clinton (1817) 2 Mer. 171, 353. This case was cited in argument to support that a thing not in the contemplation of parties should be excluded from the document :— (1904) 14 M.L.J. 175, (right of survivorship in a partition between two daughters—upheld) ; (1903) 31 Cal., 111 at 125, (description in ekranamah as mathk, proprietor ; contention from context, that only trustee was meant—not upheld).]

CRIMINAL REFERENCE

The 6th March, 1882.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), ss. 297, 518—Injunction—Review of order—Revival of order which has been quashed—High Court, superintendence of—Reference—Charter Act, 24 and 25 Vict., c. 104, s. 15.

On the 7th of June 1881, the Assistant Commissioner of Hylakandi, in Sylhet, passed an order under s. 518 of the Criminal Procedure Code, that the manager of a certain tea garden should discontinue holding a market on Thursdays until further notice. On the 25th of August 1881, the Assistant Commissioner reviewed this order, and having come to the conclusion that he had no power to issue a permanent injunction, struck the case off the file, at the same time referring the matter to the Deputy Commissioner. The latter declined to interfere, informing the Assistant Commissioner that he saw no illegality in his order. Thereupon the Assistant Commissioner passed an order declaring that his order of the 7th of June 1881 remained in full force. On a reference to the High Court, made by the Officiating Sessions Judge of Sylhet under s. 297 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.—

Held, that the Magistrate having, on the 25th of August 1881, set aside his order of the 7th of June 1881, and struck the case off the file, he had no power to revive it without a fresh proceeding.

[581] Held also, that the Magistrate had no power to pass a perpetual injunction under s. 518 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Gopi Mohun Mullick v. Taramoni Chowdhurani (I. L. R. 5 Cal., 7) followed.

Held also, that orders made under s. 518 of the Code of Criminal Procedure not being orders made in a judicial proceeding, the High Court had no power to deal with them under s. 297 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; but the order of the 6th of September 1881 being illegal, the High Court would set it aside under s. 15 of the Charter Act, 24 and 25 Vict., c. 104.

In the matter of the Petition of Chunder Nath Sen (I. L. R. 2 Cal., 293) followed.

THIS was a reference under s. 297 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872) by the Officiating Sessions Judge of Sylhet, the terms of which are as follows :—

“The facts of the case are, that the managers of Phencha Cheera and Katti Cheera Tea Estates have established two markets on the same day of the week close to each other. The Phencha Cheera market is the older of the two. The Sub-divisional Officer of Hylakandi, on the 7th of June 1881, has ordered that the Katti Cheera manager should discontinue holding his market on Thursdays until further notice. The reasons which he gives in his order for passing it are as follows :—‘All persons bringing articles for sale must pass through Phencha Cheera Bazar, and if they sell their wares there, instead of at Katti Cheera, it will be open for some ill-disposed person to raise a row between the coolies of each garden by alleging that the Setakandi coolies are stopping the supplies of the Katti Cheera coolies.' The Assistant Commissioner subsequently reviewed this order on the 25th August 1881, remarking that he had no power to pass a permanent injunction, and 'struck the case off the file' referring the matter to the Deputy Commissioner of Cachar. The Deputy Commissioner, however, declined to interfere, and informed the Hylakandi Magistrate that he saw no illegality in his order. The Assistant Commissioner, on receipt of this communication, passed the following order on the 6th of September 1881—'Inform Messrs. Bradley and Jameson that the Deputy Commissioner declines to interfere as Collector, and that, therefore, my order under s. 518, Criminal Procedure Code, remains in force.'

* Criminal Reference, No. 241 of 1882, Letter No. 1116, from the order made by W. F. Meres, Esq., Officiating Sessions Judge of Sylhet, dated the 13th December 1881.

"The above order and the order directing the discontinuance of the Katti Cheera market on Thursdays appear to me to be bad in law: firstly, because the Assistant Commissioner had no power to pass an injunction without any limit as to time; and secondly, that he could not legally revive his order of the 6th September without further enquiry."

[582] The case was not argued.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by

Cunningham, J.—We think that the Magistrate, having, on the 25th August 1881, set aside his order of June 7th, 1881, and struck the case off the file, had no power to revive it (without a fresh proceeding) by his order of 6th September, and that he had no power, under s. 518 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to pass a perpetual injunction: see Gopi Mohun Mullick v. Taramoni Chowdrani (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 7). Orders under s. 518 not being judicial proceedings, we have no power to deal with the present case under s. 297; but we infer from the judgment in In the matter of the Petition of Chunder Nath Sen (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 293), that the order being, in our opinion, illegal, we can deal with it under the Charter. We, therefore, set it aside.

Orders set aside.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 7th March, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE PONTIFEX.

Juggut Mohinee Dossee.....Defendant

versus

Dwarka Nath Bysack and others.....Plaintiffs.

*Suits between Hindu inhabitants of Calcutta—21 Geo. III,
c. 70, s. 17—Difference in law applicable in Calcutta and the mofussil—
Equity and good conscience—Buildings on land—Ownership in land and buildings.*

At a Sheriff's sale, one Templeton bought a Hindu widow's interest in certain land in Calcutta; after passing through several hands, the land was purchased by the defendant. Between the possession of Templeton and the defendant, an intermediate holder built a house upon the land. The plaintiff, a reversionary heir to the estate after the widow's death, sued the defendant to recover possession, of the house and land. The defendant admitted the plaintiff's claim to possession, but contended that he was entitled to be paid a fair price for the buildings, or to remove the materials.

Held, that he was neither entitled to compensation, nor to remove the materials, and that the question raised in the suit could not be said to be a [583] question of either succession or inheritance so as to admit of the Hindu law being applied as directed by Geo. III, c. 70, s. 17, but that the law applicable to the case was the law of equity and good conscience as administered by the Courts of Equity in England.

The case of Thakoor Chunder Paramanick (B.L.R. Sup. Vol., 595) discussed.

APPEAL from the decision of WILSON, J.

One Dwarka Nath Bysack, the original plaintiff in this case, was one of the grandsons of Russick Loll Bysack, who died in 1821, leaving him surviving a widow and three sons—viz., Rajnarain, Rajkisto, and Joykisto, who, being the members of a joint family of the Bengal school, succeeded to the property of Russick Loll.

In 1826, Rajkisto died intestate, leaving him surviving his widow, Opoorba Chandra, his sole heiress. In 1829, Opoorba Chandra brought a suit for partition of the family property, in which suit one Templeton was attorney for all parties, and in this suit she obtained a decree declaring her entitled to an undivided one-third share in the family property and directing a partition; and in 1832, the Commission of Partition affirmed this allotment. Possession of her one-third share was formally given to her by the Sheriff on the 14th January 1833. Templeton, on the 25th July 1833, in order to recover the costs entailed in this suit, seized and put up for sale the right, title, and interest of Opoorba Chandra's share in the family property, and at the Sheriff's sale himself became the purchaser. The property at this date consisted of a piece of untenanted land in Shibtollah Street, containing about 14 cottahs.

On the 22nd August 1834, Templeton conveyed the property to Gooro Dass Dutt and Shamal Dass Dutt.

In 1843, Gooro Dass and Shamal came to a partition, when the part of the property, the subject of this suit, fell to Shamal Dass.

In 1849, Rajnarain Bysack died, leaving two sons, who, however, died prior to this suit.

In 1853, Shamal Dass Dutt died, leaving a son Rajendro Chunder, who, in 1855, built upon the land, and in 1860 conveyed the land and buildings to one Raipery Dossee, his aunt.

[584] In 1865, Joykisto Bysack died, leaving him surviving two sons, Gopaul Loll and Dwarka Nath Bysack (the original plaintiff in this suit).

On the 26th October 1869, Opoorba Chandra, the widow of Rajkisto Bysack, died; and on her death Gopaul Loll and Dwarka Nath, the only nephews of Rajkisto then alive, became entitled to the one-third share allotted to Opoorba on partition.

In 1870, Gopaul Loll died intestate, leaving four sons (who were made defendants in the present suit).

Early in 1878, Raipery divided the land conveyed to her into two parcels, such parcels being known as No. 40 and No. 41, Shibtollah Street; and on the 26th July 1878, she conveyed No. 40, Shibtollah Street, to the defendant Juggut Mohinee Dossee.

Early in 1881, about eleven and-a-half years after the death of Opoorba Chandra, Dwarka Nath Bysack brought this suit against Juggut Mohinee Dossee (making the sons of Gopaul Loll and a daughter of one of the sons of Rajnarain, who were the other reversionary heirs, defendants, as they refused to join with him in bringing the suit) to recover possession of the property, and asking for mesne profits from the 26th July 1878.

The defendant Juggut Mohinee, in her written statement, denied the identity of the land in suit with the land sold by the Sheriff to Templeton, and stated that Raipery had been in possession of the land for forty-five years adversely to the plaintiffs and the other reversionary heirs, and submitted that, assuming it to be identical with the land bought by Templeton, she was entitled to compensation at the rate of 4,000 rupees for the value of the buildings erected on the land by her predecessors in title with the acquiescence of the plaintiffs and the persons through whom she claimed, and that she was entitled to a further sum of Rs. 1,000 for repairs which she had executed.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. T. A. Apear for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Palit and Mr. C. Dutt for the Defendant.

At the hearing in the Court below, the defendant Juggut Mohinee admitted the facts stated in the plaint, and the identity of the [585] land, but claimed to be entitled to remove the buildings, or to compensation for them. An objection was also taken that the reversionary heirs not being plaintiffs, the suit could not proceed, being a suit for possession of the whole property. It was also admitted by the defendant Juggut Mohinee at the hearing, that the buildings were erected prior to the passing of Act XI of 1855. The question was also raised whether the case was governed by Hindu law as being a question of succession or contract within the meaning of s. 17, Geo. III, c. 70.

The reversioners were present in Court and consented to be joined as plaintiffs.

WILSON, J., held, that the case was not governed by Hindu law, not being a question of inheritance or contract; and that the defendant Juggut

Mohinee was not entitled to remove the buildings, or to compensation; that s. 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure had no application to the case; and that the reversioners might be added as plaintiffs, and granted an adjournment for that purpose.

Subsequently, a decree was given for the plaintiffs, declaring them entitled to the house jointly as heirs of their ancestor Rajkisto Bysack; the original plaintiff getting half, and the rest of the plaintiffs half between them; the lady taking a mother's share, and the decree to be one for possession and account of mesne profits from 26th July 1878: the defendant Juggut Mohinee to have credit for taxes, repairs, and all legitimate outgoings; and to pay the costs of suit up to decree, costs of account being reserved; the parties to have liberty to apply.

From this decision the defendant appealed.

Mr. Palit and Mr. C. Dutt for the Appellant.

Mr. Bonnerjee, Mr. T. A. Apear, and Mr. O'Kinealy for the Respondents.

Mr. Palit contended that the case was governed by Hindu law, and that the plaintiffs ought not to have been allowed to recover possession of the buildings; but if they did so, the appellant was entitled to have the value thereof paid him, and that the lower Court was wrong in giving the plaintiffs a decree [586] with costs, but should have given them only a partial decree without costs. The whole case is a question of succession. The question is, under what law does it fall? I say it is under Hindu law, and that, therefore, on the authority of the case of In the matter of Thakoor Chunder Paramanick (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 595), I am entitled to the buildings. [PONTIFEX, J.—That case does not apply to a person who knowingly builds on lands belonging to another.] The case of Russick Lall Muddock v. Lokenath Karmokar (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 688), shows that the Hindu law applies between Hindus in Calcutta. [GARTH, C.J.—With reference to Thakoor Chunder Paramanick's case (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 595), it is difficult to say how the usage is to be applied, for if a Hindu gets into possession of land improperly though bonâ fide, and builds on it, he gets the buildings; but if an Englishman did the same thing, he would not get the buildings.] Under the Regulation of the 17th April 1780, s. 27, all suits regarding inheritance, marriage, and caste, and other religious usages or institutions, the law of the Koran with respect to Mahomedans, and those of the shastras with regard to Gentoos, should be used; and in the following year this section was re-enacted with the addition of the word 'succession.' In the Statute-law relating to India, 21 Geo. III, c. 70, s. 17, enacted, that, between the native inhabitants of Calcutta, their inheritance and succession to lands, rents, and goods, and all matters of contract and dealing between party and party should be determined, in the case of Mahomedans, by the law and usages of Mahomedans, and in the case of Gentoos, by the law and usages of the Gentoos; and where one only of the parties shall be a Mahomedan or Gentoos, by the law and usages of the defendant. See Morley's Administration of Justice in India, p. 174. This is a case of succession between Hindus, and is therefore to be governed by Hindu law. See Sarkies v. Prosonomoyee Dossee (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 794, at p. 808), in the judgment of PONTIFEX, J. [GARTH, C.J.—The question is, what is meant by 'succession'? Does it mean the way in which property devolves? Is a question whether a house built on land forms part of the land [587] a question of succession?] Act VI of 1871 and Act XI of 1855, s. 2, show that the English rule does not apply. The case of Russick Lall Muddock v. Lokenath

Karmokar (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 688), is a case governed by Hindu law. No question of fact was there gone into as the case came on for settlement of issues; it was decided on the general principles of Hindu law. [GARTH, C.J.—The Court cannot take judicial notice of what the Hindu law is with regard to Hindu custom; that must always be proved.] Yes, but there the question was put on the general principles of Hindu law; and was decided on the point as to whether the mere fact of A being proved to be the tenant of B, did not give to B as such tenant a right to remove the buildings. There is nothing to distinguish Paramanick's case (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 595) from the present one, and Mr. Justice WILSON's decision is in direct opposition to Paramanick's case (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 595). In the case of Narayan Raghoji v. Bholagiri Gurnu Manjir (6 Bom. II. C. Rep., A. C., 80), the question of bona fides was distinctly said not to arise. In Mookta Soonduree Chowdram v. Muthooranath Ghose (22 W. R., 209), a house was sold to one person and the land on which the house stood to another, and there was no question either of succession or inheritance; but I quote it to show that buildings and lands in the mofussil are treated separately. There is no ruling to show whether English law applies to Hindus in questions of real property in Calcutta, but remarks have been made in different cases, viz., in the Mayor of Lyons v. The East India Company (1 Moore's I. A., 175), which points out that the English law of inheritance was applicable in Calcutta only so far as it was applicable to the state of things in India. As to how far English law is to be applied, and what is to govern the case where it is inapplicable to the habits and customs of the people, see Ram Coomar Coondoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee (1 L. R., 2 Cal., 233). In Shibdas Bandapadya v. Bamondas Mukhapadya (8 B. L. R., 237), it was held, that a house built upon land did not pass when the tenure was sold; and in Kinoo Singh Roy v. Nusseerooddeen Mahomed Chowdhry (17 W. R., 97), a tenant was allowed to remove a house he built [588] on land which was leased to him. As amongst Hindus and Mahomedans, English law has not been extended. The building having been erected with our money, we are entitled to have something allowed us, on the principle of Rani Asmut Koor v. Maharani Indurjeet Koor (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 1003).

Mr. O'Kinealy for the respondents.—It has been decided that, subject to s. 17 of the English Statute, the law prevailing here is English law. Savage v. Bancharam Tagore (Morton's Dec. by Montrieu, 105). The same thing is laid down in The Advocate-General of Bengal v. Ranee Surnomoyee Dossee (9 Moore's I. A., 387). I say it is no question of succession, but one of accession, and English law applies. The question is, whether or no the land is the property of Rajnarain: you cannot separate the house from the land. The case of Thakoor Chunder Paramanick (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 595) is not a rule of Hindu law. Regulation IV of 1793 enacts that the Zilla Courts are to decide these questions according to equity and good conscience. I shall show that the ruling in Paramanick's case (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 595) is not a rule of Hindu law, but is simply a usage which was found to act satisfactorily in the mofussil, and was decided according to equity and good conscience. The rules of equity and good conscience are not extended to Calcutta. Under the Hindu text the plaintiff is not entitled to take away the buildings, this being a case of contract. See Narada's Institutes by Dr. Jolly, sec. 21, chap. vi. The case of Shibdas Bandapadya v. Bamondas Mukhapadya (8 B. L. R., 237) is clearly evolved from rules of equity and good conscience, and will not therefore apply. The case of Parbutty Bewah v. Woomatara Dabee (14 B. L. R., 201) was a special case stated to the Court by both parties, and does not bear on the present case as there was a usage admitted.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (GARTH, C.J., and PONTIFEX, J.) :—

Garth, C.J.—The plaintiff in this case sues as reversionary heir of one Rajkisto Bysack to recover possession of a house [589] and land in the town of Calcutta, to which he claims to have become entitled on the death of the widow and heir of Rajkisto Bysack.

The widow's estate in this property was sold under an execution against her so long ago as the year 1833, and purchased by a gentleman named Templeton; and from Templeton it passed into the hands of several persons in succession, the last of whom is the present defendant. One of those persons, many years ago, built a house upon this land, which is known by the name of 40, Shibollah Street, and the only question in this appeal is, whether the plaintiff, who is admittedly entitled to the land, is entitled to the house also.

The defendant contends that the house is hers; and that she is entitled, at the option of the plaintiff, either to be paid by him a fair price for the house, or to be allowed a reasonable time, after the plaintiff has declared his option, for removing the materials of it, and restoring the land to the condition in which it was before the house was built.

The defendant has proved no usage or custom of Hindu law in support of this contention, but she relies mainly upon the Full Bench judgment in the case of Thakoor Chunder Paramanick (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 595) as laying down a general rule of Hindu law to that effect. Of course, if I took that view, I should feel bound to follow the Full Bench Ruling; and I observe that, in the case of Russick Lall Muddock v. Loknath Kormokar (1 L. R., 5 Cal., 688), a suit between landlord and tenant in Calcutta, that rule was followed by the learned Judge who tried this cause in the Court below. He seems, however, to have considered that it was a rule of Hindu law, and that, in a suit between Hindus, he was bound in a matter of contract to abide by it.

In this case the same learned Judge thought that the rule did not apply, because the question here was, not one of succession or inheritance or contract, within the meaning of the 21 Geo. III, c. 70, s. 17.

I confess that, after giving a good deal of attention to the Full Bench judgment, and to the authorities there referred to, I think that the law laid down is not intended specially as a [590] rule of Hindu law. The learned Chief Justice, it is true, quotes certain Hindu authorities relating to the law of landlord and tenant and joint proprietorship, but he also in support of his conclusions relies upon the Mahomedan law and the civil law, as well as upon Act XI of 1855 of the Indian Legislature.

It seems to me, therefore, that the Full Bench rather intended to deduce from these various authorities a rule of equity and good conscience to be generally observed in the mofussil; and in the mofussil probably, even in the present day, such a rule would work equitably. The sort of houses that are generally found there are, for the most part, readily removeable; and cutcha or semi-cutcha buildings, such as are erected by the poorer native population, have always been considered as in the nature of moveable property.

But in Calcutta the case is very different. The Full Bench Ruling, if generally applied there, would be productive of great inconvenience; and, moreover, we are bound in Calcutta according to the express language of the Charter, not by the law of equity and good conscience which prevails in the mofussil, but by the law of equity and good conscience which was administered by the Supreme Court (see ss. 19, 20, and 21 of the Charter of 1865). That law, I consider, is, generally speaking, the self-same law of equity which is administered in our Courts in England. We are bound of course, in suits between Hindus, to pay all due regard to any Hindu law or usage which can be shown to prevail in Calcutta; but in this particular case, as I before observed, no attempt has been made to establish any such law or custom, nor has a single authority been cited before us, which, in my opinion, justifies in any degree the appellant's contention. We have no proof whatever as to where, or by whom, the house in question was built; but the builder must have claimed under Templeton, and must be taken to have known perfectly well the limited nature of Templeton's estate. Had Templeton himself built the house, it is clear that, upon the widow's death, he would have had no right to remove it; and it is difficult to see how any one claiming under Templeton could have had a larger right than he had.

[591] I confess that I see no equity, but on the contrary a vast deal of injustice, in allowing a tenant for life to build upon a property in such sort as to ruin a reversioner if he were compelled to purchase the buildings, or, as an alternative, to deprive him of the use of his land during the many months which might be occupied by the representatives of the tenant-for-life in pulling down the buildings and removing the materials. What might be a very just law in the mofussil, would operate in large towns as a monstrous evil; and I believe that if the Appellant's contention were well founded, the consequences in Calcutta would be most disastrous.

I think, therefore, that the Court below was right, and that the appeal should be dismissed with costs on scale 2.

Pontifex, J.—The plaintiff is entitled to have this case decided on the footing that Templeton, the purchaser at the Sheriff's sale, was aware he was buying only the qualified interest of a Hindu widow. And that being so, the fact that Templeton, or any one claiming through him, built on the land would not, in my opinion, apart from any question of Hindu law, give him or them an equity entitling him or them as against the reversioner to remove the materials.

It has been argued that this is a question of 'succession,' and must, under 21 Geo. III, c. 70, s. 17, be governed by Hindu law.

It appears to me, however, that it is not a question of succession or inheritance.

The defendant in fact admits that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed to the house, subject only to a right in the defendant to be compensated, which right does not accrue to the defendant until after the moment of succession. The right to compensation, or the alternative right to take away the materials, if such rights existed, would not to my mind be rights of succession or inheritance. And it has not been shown that such rights exist in Hindu law except in the case of contracts for tenancies where rent is paid.

The statement of Narada referred to in the Full Bench case of Thakoor Chunder Paramanick (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 595) is confined to that state [592] of circumstances. Nor does that Full Bench case deal with the equity as a provision of Hindu law, but, as it appears to me, decides it as a rule of equity and good conscience applicable to the particular case, the property being in the mofussil and the rule of equity and good conscience being the rule applicable.

Nor would it necessarily follow that what might be a rule of equity and good conscience applicable to the country, would be equally applicable to Calcutta or a town. It would indeed be difficult to apply a rule like this to a town, and as the rule in Narada does not include the present case, I think it would be improper to extend it to that which the defendant only claims to be an analogous case.

We must, therefore, deal with the question according to the usual equities applicable to cases in Calcutta,—namely, equities administered by an English Court of Equity. And especially in this case the defendant, claiming as he does through Templeton, a European, can, I think, claim no greater or other equity than Templeton himself would have been entitled to claim.

I, therefore, think the plaintiff is entitled to recover free from any claim of the defendant to the materials of the house.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[RIGHT TO REMOVE BUILDINGS ERECTED BY ONE ON THE LAND OF ANOTHER.]

This case was decided on the express ground that, arising in Calcutta and not being a matter of contract, etc. (as in the case of landlord and tenant—5 Cal., 688), the law to be applied was the English Law, according to which (with certain exceptions) whatever is fixed to the soil becomes part of, and goes with, the soil.

The Indian law on the subject was discussed exhaustively by Sir V. BHASHYAM AYYANGAR, J., in (1903) 27 Mad., 211; 14 M.L.J. 25, which declares the tenant's right, before the determination of the tenancy, to demand compensation of the landlord or to remove fixtures; after that period, he cannot do so: (1911) 21 M.L.J. 891 (SANKARAN NAIR, J., dissenting).

The rights created by estoppel stand on a different footing. As to this, see 18 Bom. 66; 17 Bom., 736; 21 All. 496 P. C.

The case of (1895) 22 Cal. 820 (824) was under the Land Acquisition Act the tenant being in possession when the Act was applied, he was held to be the person entitled under it.]

[10 C.L.R. 359]

[593] FULL BENCH.

The 11th March, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE PONTIFEX,
MR. JUSTICE MORRIS, MR. JUSTICE MITTER, AND MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP.

Kishori Lal Roy.....Plaintiff

versus

Sharut Chunder Mozumdar..... Defendant.

Court-fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 17 Suit for possession and mesne profits—Stamp-fee payable on appeal.

For the purposes of determining the stamp-fee payable on an appeal to the High Court, in a suit for possession and for mesne profits, the claim for possession and mesne profits is to be taken as one entire claim.

Chedi Lal v. Kirath Chand (I. L. R., 2 All., 682) dissented from.

THIS was a reference to a Full Bench by GARTH, C. J., as to the proper amount of stamp-fee payable on an appeal to the High Court.

* Reference under s. 5 of Act VII of 1870.

The plaintiff, the appellant, brought a suit in the mofussil for possession of certain immoveable property, and also for mesne profits. The entire claim was valued at Rs. 1,24,997, of which sum Rs. 64,997 represented the value of the land, and Rs. 60,000 the amount of mesne profits.

In the lower Court the plaintiff recovered only a portion of the land which he claimed, the value of which was Rs. 3,395.

On appeal to the High Court, he valued his claim at Rs. 1,18,600, and proposed to pay stamp-duty upon that entire sum. The Registrar considered that this sum consisted of two distinct claims within the meaning of s. 17 of the Court-Fees Act,—that is to say, Rs. 61,602, being the difference between the value of the property claimed in the Court below, and the Rs. 3,395, the value of land recovered, and Rs. 56,998 for mesne profits,—and was of opinion that the appellant was bound to pay a stamp-fee not upon the Rs. 1,18,600 as a whole, but upon the two separate sums of Rs. 61,602 and Rs. 56,998. The appellant objected to pay the double stamp-fee, and the Registrar referred the matter to the Chief Justice. The Chief Justice was of opinion that a claim for possession and for mesne profits [594] should be considered as one claim; but inasmuch as the matter had been decided differently in Chedi Lal v. Kirath Chand (I. L. R., 2 All., 682), he referred the following question to a Full Bench,—i.e., whether, for the purpose of determining the stamp-fee payable on an appeal to the High Court, the claim for possession and mesne profits should be considered as distinct and separate claims within the meaning of s. 17 of Act VII of 1870.

Baboo Srinath Doss, Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy, and Baboo Tarucknath Sen for the Appellant.

The Opinion of the Full Bench was given by Garth, C. J.—I think that the question referred should be answered in the negative. Having regard both to the practice of the Courts and to the language of the Legislature, it seems to me, that, in this country, the policy of the law has always been to allow a plaintiff to enforce a claim for possession of land and for mesne profits, either in one suit or two, as he may think proper; but at the same time to induce him, if there is no reason to the contrary, to dispose of his whole claim in one suit only.

And there seems much good sense in this policy; because in the generality of such cases, the plaintiff's right to mesne profits follows his right to possession, in the same way that in a money claim, a right to interest follows the right to the principal sum. The Court which decides the question of possession has generally all the materials before it to decide at the same time the question of mesne profits; and it would be only entailing both upon the Court and the parties unnecessary expense and trouble, to try the claim in two different suits.

A rule of the old Sadr Court, dated the 15th of June 1849, was as follows:—

"The Court are pleased, upon re-consideration, to cancel prospectively the rule laid down in the last sentence of paragraph 6 of Circular Order No. 29, dated 11th June 1839, which requires that, in actions for real property, the mesne profits, unless relinquished, shall be included in the amount at [595] which the suit is laid, and to intimate that they may be made the subject of a subsequent suit, anything in rule 3, paragraph 4 of Circular Order No. 28, dated 30th September 1874, notwithstanding."

It would appear from this rule, that previously to the 15th of June 1849, a petitioner was bound to sue for possession and mesne profits in one suit; but that, after that date, he might, if he pleased, bring a separate suit for the mesne profits.

In accordance with this practice, the Legislature, in passing the Civil Procedure Code of 1859, seem to have contemplated the joinder, under ordinary circumstances, of claims for possession and mesne profits in one suit. Sections 8, 9, and 10 of that Code, which were so much discussed during the argument, appear to me to favour that view.

Section 8 allows several causes of action to be joined in one suit, provided they are by and against the same parties, and their total value does not exceed the jurisdiction of the Court.

Section 9 provides, that if two or more causes of action are joined in one suit, the Court may order separate trials, if it considers that such causes of action cannot conveniently be tried together.

And then s. 10 enacts, that, for the purposes of ss. 8 and 9, a claim for possession and for mesne profits shall be deemed to be distinct causes of action. This, I think, implies that a claim for possession and mesne profits, when joined in one suit, would, but for this last section, be considered as one cause of action; but that, for purposes of jurisdiction, and of allowing the Court to order separate trials, if necessary, such a claim was to be considered as embracing distinct causes of action.

It must be borne in mind that, in both the old and new Codes, the Courts were at liberty, in a suit for possession of land, to give mesne profits as well as possession, although the mesne profits were not claimed in the plaint; and s. 8, as I take it, was intended to restrain the Courts from giving mesne profits, where the value of the land recovered, plus the mesne profits awarded, would have exceeded the jurisdiction of the Court. See s. 196 of the old Code, and s. 211 of the new Code.

Those same sections, which I have just quoted (196 and 211) afford also, I think, another strong argument in favour of my view.

[596] It is admitted, that when, under the power thus given to the Courts, mesne profits are decreed as from the date of suit, the value of the land, plus the amount of the mesne profits awarded, is for the purposes of stamp-fee to be considered as one claim only. The plaintiff in such a case has only to pay an additional fee in proportion to the amount of the mesne profits.

Then let us suppose a case, where the plaintiff claims not only possession, but also mesne profits from the date of suit. Is he to pay a larger amount of stamp-fee than he would have paid if he had sued for possession only, and the Court had awarded the mesne profits without his asking for them? Why should he be charged upon a different principle in the two suits, when his claim is virtually the same in each? It seems to me that this would be an absurdity.

Then let us proceed a little further. Let us suppose that the plaintiff claims both possession and mesne profits, not from the date of the suit, but from a period antecedent to the date of the suit. Is he to pay stamp-fee in that suit as upon two distinct claims, when, if he had claimed mesne profits only from the date of suit, he could only be charged stamp-fee for the one claim? That again would be most unreasonable.

The Court could only give him the mesne profits from the time when he was entitled to possession, and whether he was so entitled as from the date of suit, or from a time antecedent to the date of the suit, the nature of his claim must be the same. For the purposes of the Court-Fees Act, the claim can hardly consist of several and distinct causes of action in the one case, and not in the other.

And then lastly, another strong argument in favour of my opinion consists in this. The Court-Fees Act of 1870 has now been the law of the land for nearly twelve years. It is admitted, that, until quite lately, claims for possession and mesne profits have always, for the purposes of stamp-fee, been treated as one claim only. This appears to have been the universal practice, both in the Mofussil Courts and in the High Court; and it can hardly be, that, for all these years, the Courts and the Government should have been under a mistake.

These suits for possession and mesne profits are matters in [397] this country of constant occurrence. The Government must have been well aware of the construction which had been put by the Courts upon s. 17 of the Court-Fees Act; and if, being aware of it, they have desisted all this time from any legislative action to change the practice, that seems a strong reason for believing, that they considered the practice to be in accordance with the intentions of the Legislature.

There is a very wholesome maxim of law "optimus legis interpret consuetudo"; and Mr. Broome in his work on Legal Maxims, 2nd edition, page 534, says this:—"Where a Statute uses language of doubtful import, the acting under it for a long term of years may well give an interpretation to that obscure meaning, and reduce that uncertainty to a fixed rule."

And I take it, that this principle is especially applicable, where the subject of interpretation is a matter of every-day occurrence. And when we find that, for a series of eight or ten years, a law which imposes a heavy tax upon litigation has received a particular interpretation in favour of the suitor, and a course of practice has prevailed for years, throughout the whole country, in accordance with that interpretation, I think that any Court of Justice ought to be very slow in changing that interpretation or course of practice to the prejudice of the suitor, unless it sees clear and weighty reasons for so doing.

Having regard to the nature of this reference, of course there will be no order as to costs.

[I. SUIT FOR POSSESSION AND MESNE PROFITS—

For the purposes of the Court Fees Act, such suits were deemed to relate to one subject only:—(1882) 8 Cal. 593; 17 Cal. 968; 19 Cal. 615; 16 All. 401 contra 1 All. 552; 2 All. 682; 12 Bom. 98. As regards appeal the entire claim has to be regarded:—(1909) 13 C.W. N. 815.

For the purpose of the rule as to splitting causes of action, they have been held to be distinct causes of action:—(1908) 31 Mad. 405 approving of (1887) 11 Mad. 210 and not following (1887) 11 Mad. 151. II. INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—USAGE—

The rule amounts to no more than this, that if the Act be susceptible of the interpretation which has been put upon it by long usage, the Courts will not disturb that construction—Fermoy Peerage case (1856) 5 H. L. C. 716." Pochin v. Duncombe (1857) 1 H. & N. 842 (856, 857), per Pollock, C. B. "Contemporaneous and continuous usage is of the greatest efficacy in law for determining the true construction of obscurely framed documents"—Hebbert v. Purchas (1871) L. R. 3 P. C. 605 (650).

When there are ambiguous expressions in an Act passed one or two centuries ago, it may be legitimate to refer to the construction put upon these expressions throughout a long course of years, by the unanimous consent of all parties interested, as evidencing what must presumably have been the intention of the legislature at that remote period :—Trustees of Clyde Navigation v. Laird (1883) 8 A. C. 658 (673), per Lord Watson. Construction long acquiesced in will not be departed from even if it appear to be incorrect, and a different construction would be arrived at, were the matter res integra :—Where a series of decisions have put a (particular) construction on an Act of Parliament, and have thus made a law which men follow in their daily dealing, it has been held, even by the House of Lords that it is better to adhere to the course of decisions than to reverse them because of the mischief, which would result from such a proceeding"—per Jessel, M. R., in Ex parte Willey (1883) 23 Ch. D. 118, 127. See also Mignault v. Malo (1872) L. R., 4 P. C. 123; Evantural v. Evantural (1869) L. R. 2 P. C. 462; London County Council v. Erith Overseers (1893) A. C. 562 (598).

III. LIMITATIONS ON THE APPLICATION OF THE RULE—INTERPRETATION BY USAGE—

1. The interpretation must have been established uniformly and for a long period :—8 years held to be insufficient in Danford v. McAnulty (1882) 8 A. C. 456 (463). As regards uniformity, see Reid v. Reid (1886) 31 Ch. D. 402 (410).

2. If the meaning is plain and the statute admits of only one plain interpretation, it is immaterial that a wrong meaning has for many years been ascribed to it :—"As to usage, I am clearly of opinion that it ought not to be attended to in considering an Act of Parliament; where the words of the Act are doubtful, usage may be called in to explain them :—R v. Hogg (1787) 1 T.R. 728, per Grose, J.

Where a statute speaking on some points is silent as to others, usage may well supply the defect; for where the statute uses language of doubtful import, the acting under it for a long course of years may well give an interpretation to that obscure meaning and reduce that uncertainty to a fixed rule * * * but it is quite plain that against a plain statutory law no usage is of any avail :—Magistrates of Dunbar v. Duchess of Roxburgh (1895) 3 Cl. & F. 325. Usage and practice for 80 years was discarded in Northan Bridge Co. v. R. (1886) 55 L. T. 759. See also 12 All. 129 (135); 27 Cal. 508; (1909) 13 C.W.N. 815.

3. For the maxim to apply, the statute should have been universally construed in a particular way.

"We understand that in acting upon the statute in Ireland a practice has been prevalent, though not universal, which is at variance with our opinion as to its proper construction. We conceive that the meaning of the Act is so clear that we ought not to give any weight to the practice"—Bank of Ireland v. Eran's Charity (1855) 5 H. L. C. 405.

We are interpreting a universal law, which cannot receive different constructions in different towns. It is the general law that this kind of property should be rated, and we cannot explain the law differently by the usage of this or that particular place :—R v. Hogg (1787) 1 T. R. 728.

FULL BENCH.

The 11th March, 1882.

PRESENT:

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE PONTIFEX,
MR. JUSTICE MORRIS, MR. JUSTICE MITTER, AND MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP.

Narain Chunder Chuckerbutty.....Defendant

Dataram Roy.....Plaintiff.*

Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 50—Registered and unregistered documents—Priority—Possession—Transfer of Property

Act (IV of 1882), s. 54.

A vendor sold the same property twice over to different people—once by an unregistered conveyance (the purchase-money being under Rs. 100), giving [598] to his vendee possession, and a second time to another person by a registered conveyance at a time when the first vendee was out of possession.

Held by the Court (PRINSEP, J., dissenting), in a suit by the first vendee to recover possession, that the fact of a vendor having given possession to the first and unregistered purchaser, even if such possession continued to the date of the second conveyance, did not necessarily prevent the operation of that part of s. 50 of the Registration Act which enacts that "a registered document shall take effect as regards the property therein comprised against every unregistered document relating to the same property."

The only case in which the title of the prior unregistered purchaser can prevail against the subsequent registered purchaser for value, is when the latter takes with notice of the title of the former.

Per PRINSEP, J.—A purchaser under a registered conveyance subsequently executed cannot succeed in a suit to eject one who holds possession under a prior but unregistered conveyance, registration of which is optional.

Per CURIAM.—Delivery of possession is not under the Hindu law essential to complete the title of a purchaser for value.

Per GARTH, C.J.—Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act virtually abolishes optional registration.

THE plaintiff purchased from Dino Nath Roy a four-anna share of one-half bigha of land, and took a conveyance, dated the 26th Choitro 1278 (7th April 1872). He also purchased from Jodu Nath Roy an eight-anna share of the same land, and took a conveyance in the name of his wife, dated the 29th Aughran 1279 (13th December 1872). The purchase-money in each case being under Rs. 100, registration was optional. The deeds were not registered, but the plaintiff obtained possession of the twelve annas so purchased, and remained in possession down to the 13th Jeit 1284 (25th May 1877), when he was dispossessed, according to the Munsif's finding, by defendant No. 2, Putit Maji, at the instigation of defendant No. 1, Khotter Mohun Chuckerbutty.

While the plaintiff was out of possession, Jodu Nath Roy purported to convey his original eight-anna share to the defendant Narain Chuckerbutty by deed, dated the 27th Bhadro 1284 (11th September 1872), for a consideration of Rs. 100. This deed was duly registered.

The plaintiff sued to recover the property. The defendant Putit Maji alleged that he held possession as tenant of Dino Nath Roy and Narain Chuckerbutty.

* Reference to Full Bench made by Mr. Justice Cunningham, Mr. Justice Prinsep, and Mr. Justice Wilson, in Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2603 of 1879.

[599] Both the lower Courts held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

The Munsif so held on the following grounds :—1st, that Narain Chuckerbutty “did not obtain legal possession of the land,” and that “delivery of possession is under the Hindu law essential to complete the title”; and 2ndly, that “registered documents will not prevail against unregistered written agreements accompanied by possession.”

The Subordinate Judge affirmed the Munsif's decree, on the ground that “it is a settled point of law that an unregistered kobala, supported by possession, shall prevail over a registered kobala without possession.”

The defendant Narain Chunder Chuckerbutty appealed to the High Court, and the case came before CUNNINGHAM and PRINSEP, JJ., who differed in opinion. The case was thereupon reheard before those two learned Judges and WILSON, J., by whom it was referred to a Full Bench.

Baboo Umakali Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Umbica Churn Bannerjee for the Respondent.

The following Judgments, in which the circumstances under which the case was referred and the opinions of the learned Judges who referred it are fully stated, were delivered by the Full Bench :

Prinsep, J.—In the case before us, the plaintiff, after being for some years in possession of lands conveyed to him under an unregistered deed, the registration of which, owing to the small value of the lands, was optional, has been ejected. About three months afterwards his vendor has sold again to a third person under a registered deed of sale, and in suing to recover possession, plaintiff finds himself opposed by this second purchaser, who maintains that, under his registered conveyance, his title is preferable to that of plaintiff under an unregistered deed of sale. The Subordinate Judge in appeal held that “it was a settled point of law that an unregistered kobala supported by possession shall prevail over a registered kobala without possession.”

[600] The second appeal was heard originally by a Division Bench consisting of CUNNINGHAM J., and myself, and in consequence of a difference of opinion was re-heard by us sitting with WILSON, J. We had determined to remand the case for retrial on the issues stated in the judgment now about to be delivered when the attention of CUNNINGHAM and WILSON, JJ., was drawn to a judgment delivered by FIELD, J., sitting with me in second appeal, and in accordance with their request, I agreed to have this case referred to a Full Bench. The facts of the present case, which I have already briefly stated, were, however, different from those of the case heard by FIELD, J., and myself. In the latter case the plaintiff, a second purchaser under a registered deed, sought to obtain possession of land already conveyed by his vendor to the defendant, who was in possession under an unregistered instrument, registration being optional, and I there held, following the precedent in Second Appeal No. 1122 of 1876, decided by MARKBY, J., and myself on August 20th, 1877, that defendant being in possession under a valid instrument, could not be ejected by plaintiff, the subsequent purchaser, under a registered deed. I would also explain that although I agreed in remanding the case now before us for retrial on certain issues, I had not agreed in the terms of the judgment to be delivered. As I had merely signified my general dissent and the grounds of the judgment had not been settled in consultation with reference to my opinion, the opinions of my learned colleagues cannot, I apprehend, be properly quoted or at most be regarded otherwise than their opinions subject to re-consideration for the settlement of judgment.

In this respect I would only refer to the remarks of Sir B. PEACOCK, C.J., in the Full Bench case of Mahomed Akil v. Asadunnissa Beebee (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 774, see pp. 817, 818; s.c., 9 W. R., 1, see pp. 29, 30).

I regret extremely that the opinions I entertain regarding the interpretation to be put on s. 50 of the Registration Act of 1877 are not in accordance with those of my learned colleagues. I have reconsidered the matter very carefully with the advantage of seeing the judgment that they propose to deliver, but I still find myself unable to agree.

[601] In all the successive enactments relating to registration of deeds since 1793 to the present day, the general rule has been that preference is to be given to a registered over an unregistered deed relating to immoveable property. Regulation XXXVI of 1793 and the Acts of 1843 declared that a registered deed should 'invalidate' an unregistered and previously executed deed; Act XVI of 1864, that it should have 'priority'; and Act XX of 1866 and the more recent Acts have enacted that any such instrument shall "take effect as regards the property comprised therein against every unregistered instrument." To use the words of Lord Chancellor Cairns in the case of Agra Bank v. Barry (L. R., 7 H. L., 135; at pp. 147, 148), any person reading over that Act of Parliament would perhaps "in the first instance conclude that it was an Act absolutely decisive of priority under all circumstances, and enacting that, under every circumstance that could be supposed, the deed first registered was to take precedence of a deed which, although it might be executed before, was not registered till afterwards. But by decisions, which have now, as it seems to me, well established the law, and which it would not be, I think, expedient in any way now to call in question, it has been settled that, notwithstanding the apparent stringency of the words contained in this Act of Parliament, still, if a person in Ireland registers a deed, and if, at the time he registers the deed, either he himself, or an agent whose knowledge is the knowledge of his principal, has notice of an earlier deed, which, though executed, is not registered, the registration which he actually effects will not give him priority over that earlier deed." Our Courts have consequently considered in each case whether the person in whose favour the second deed was executed had notice or knowledge of the previous transaction, and have been influenced by such considerations in applying the law.

The point I propose to consider is, whether having sold his right, title, and interest, and having put his vendee in possession of certain land under an unregistered but valid deed, a man can sell the same property over again to a third party, so as to give him a good title by reason of the conveyance being [602] registered. If the transaction were not reduced to writing, the law since 1871 has made it clear, that an oral agreement or declaration accompanied or followed by possession, confers a title which cannot be disturbed by subsequent recourse to the registration office, and so far an honest purchaser is protected against the fraudulent conduct of his vendor; but if the strict construction of the law which I understand my colleagues desire to adopt be maintained, one who to avoid the "uncertain testimony of a slippery memory" has the agreement committed to writing, but takes advantage of the law enacted expressly for the convenience of the poorer classes, and does not register his conveyance, remains at the mercy of his vendor until his possession has fructified into a perfect title by the lapse of twelve years. To me it appeared that the Legislature could not have contemplated such consequences, and I thus expressed myself:—

"I am unable to learn any valid reason for any difference between an unregistered and an oral agreement, both followed by delivery of possession, or why, where registration is optional, such a deed should be placed at a disadvantage; in other words, why because such an agreement has been reduced to writing, it should not be at least as good as the previous state of the same transaction before the terms agreed on were fixed and made certain by a permanent record. 'Such a construction of the law,' to quote a recent judgment of the Privy Council on the same Act, 'would cause great difficulty and injustice which it cannot be supposed the Legislature contemplated, and would be inconsistent with the language and tenor of the rest of the Act'—Mahomed Fwaz v. Brij Lal, 13th June 1877 (L. R., 4 I. A., 166 ; at p. 172). If the term were interpreted strictly, a person in the position of the respondent Fulmoni would have a title, not only uncertain, but dependent on the conduct of her vendor until she had perfected that title by a possession of twelve years, so as to enable her successfully to plead limitation. I find it impossible to conceive that the Legislature intended to countenance such a state of things, and therefore it appears to me that the rule laid down in the case of Salim Sheik must be followed, and that we must hold [603] that, notwithstanding the enactment of s. 48 of the Act of 1871, the full force of that rule is unaffected."

A contrary opinion has, however, been expressed in the case of Fazluddeen Khan v. Fakir Mahomed Khan (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 336 ; see p. 350). In that case it was held, that "the defendant can put his case no higher than that he and the plaintiff are two innocent purchasers; and if that is so, the fact that the plaintiff did register, while the defendant did not, is sufficient under s. 50 to compel us to hold that the plaintiff's registered deed must prevail against the defendant's unregistered deed." The effect of such a rule would be to declare that although the Legislature has said that, under certain circumstances, an unregistered instrument shall be received as evidence of the absolute title it confers, and although this title be confirmed by possession obtained under it, an instrument conveying the same title to a third party, executed subsequently by the same person but registered, shall nullify the previous title long enjoyed without any question: so that, although the proprietor of certain land sells it fairly and honestly under a valid instrument, he shall have the power to convey what no longer remains with him to a third party, and unless it can be shown by the prior purchaser that the later purchase was made with notice or knowledge of his title, he will find that he has lost what he has long enjoyed in security. I cannot believe that the Legislature could deliberately have devised such a trap for the ruin of the poorer and more ignorant classes of the community, that it should on the one hand have benevolently declared its intention to spare them the expenses of registration wholly disproportionate to the value of such small transactions, but that at the same time it should have obscurely enacted, that a long possession held under such a valid title might be at once annulled by the dishonesty of the vendor. I can quite understand the great importance of a perfect system of registration, and of the security so afforded to persons inclined to invest money in land; but in smaller transactions,—that is to say, where the value of the property is less than Rs. 100, and registration is consequently optional, such investors should be put on their [604] guard, and should be especially cautious in making full enquiry regarding possession of the particular property.

Where the particular instrument confers anything short of an absolute title, and is in the nature of a mortgage on the land, and is unregistered, I can see no objection to preference being given to a subsequently executed but registered deed. In such a case the rights of the executant of the instrument would still remain to some extent so as to enable him to deal with another party, and in the competition between two such instruments 'priority' may be given to the registered deed, or the registered deed may 'take effect' before the unregistered one. But where the executant has already divested himself by a valid instrument and by delivery of possession, he cannot, in my opinion, convey to another what no longer remains with him. The second purchaser is, in my opinion, in no better position than one who buys from a man who never had any title at all.

In the case of Raja Sahib Perhlad Sen v. Baboo Budhu Singh (12 Moore's I. A., 301, at pp. 306, 307; s.c., 2 B. L. R., P. C., 111, at p. 117), their Lordships of the Privy Council thus expressed themselves:—"They (that is, the Judges of the lower Court) seem to have ruled that the effect of the execution of a bill of sale by a Hindu vendor is, to use the phraseology of English law, to pass an estate irrespective of the actual delivery of possession, giving to the instrument the effect of a conveyance operating by the Statute of Uses. Whether such a conclusion would be warranted in any case is, in their Lordships' opinion, very questionable. It is certainly not supported by the two cases cited in the judgment under review, in both of which actual possession seems to have passed from the vendor to the purchaser. To support it, the execution of the bill of sale must be treated as a constructive transfer of possession, but how can there be any such transfer, actual or constructive, upon a contract under which the vendor sells that of which he has not possession, and to which he may never establish a title? The bill of sale in such a case can only be evidence of a contract to be performed in futuro, and upon the happening of a contingency of which the purchaser may claim a specific performance, if he comes into Court, [605] showing that he has himself done all that he was bound to do."

Section 27 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) declares, that "except as otherwise provided by this chapter, specific performance of a contract may be enforced against

(a) either party thereto :

(b) any other person claiming under him by a title arising subsequently to the contract, except a transferee for value, who has paid in money in good faith and without notice of the original contract."

The following illustration is given of this latter clause:—A contracts to sell certain land to B for Rs. 5,000. B takes possession of the land. Afterwards A sells it to C for Rs. 6,000. C makes no enquiry of B relating to his interest in the land. B's possession is sufficient to affect C with notice of his interest, and he may enforce specific performance of the contract against C.

Our Courts have refused to hold, that, in order to perfect a title, possession must have been given, but they have never held that a title followed by possession is not a perfect title, so far as its former proprietor is concerned, and if it is good as against him, it must, in my opinion, be good against any one deriving a subsequent title from him. If a vendee in possession under an unregistered conveyance (registration of which is optional) be ejected by a third party, he is competent to sue to recover possession on his title, and if he can alone do so, his vendor can have nothing to convey to any one else.

Some observation has been made regarding the manner of obtaining possession of land in some instances, generally known as symbolical possession,—that is, by sticking up a bamboo in some prominent place accompanied by beat of drum or some sort of proclamation, and it has been stated that such a practice would convey insufficient notice of any change of possession. If such a proclamation be properly made, I have no doubt that it would convey notice to the ryots who would consequently be in a position to communicate the information to any person making enquiries regarding possession, but this is not the only way of getting possession of land, and whatever argument might be derived from it, would not apply to cases such as we [606] have now before us, in which registration is optional. In transactions regarding immoveable property of less value than Rs. 100, the property would generally be ryoti lands—not extensive zamindaries—lands probably not comprising an entire mouza.

On such considerations as these, I have, in the two cases already mentioned, held, that a purchaser under a registered conveyance subsequently executed cannot succeed in a suit to eject one who holds possession under a prior but unregistered conveyance, registration of which is optional. The unanimity of my learned colleagues has made me have much hesitation in adhering to those decisions, but after long and careful consideration I find myself unable to concur in their opinions. The point under discussion is one of very considerable importance, and it is therefore to be hoped that an early opportunity will be taken by the Legislature of clearly expounding the law in this respect.

In the present case, where the second sale was made while the unregistered and prior purchaser was out of possession, I am not unwilling that a retrial should be held on the issues stated in the judgment of my learned colleagues, but I am bound to say that further consideration has made me inclined to agree with the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice FIELD, that having once sold, the vendor has no title to convey to any one else.

Pontifex, J. (after setting out the facts, continued).—Two of the learned Judges who referred this case were of opinion, that none of the grounds relied upon by the lower Courts were correct statements of the law.

They were of opinion that the ruling in the case of Fuzluldeen Khan v. Fakir Mahomed Khan (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 336) was correct,—namely, that the fact of a first purchaser under an unregistered conveyance having obtained possession, even if such possession continued at the date of a second registered conveyance, did not necessarily prevent the operation of s. 50 of the present Registration Act, which enacts broadly, that a registered document “shall take effect as regards the property therein comprised against every unregistered document relating to the same property.”

They were further of opinion upon the authorities, that the only case in which the title of an unregistered purchaser for a [607] less consideration than Rs. 100 can prevail against a subsequent purchaser for value, who registers, is when the latter takes with notice of the title of the former; because a vendor who sells property for less value than Rs. 100, by an unregistered kobala, gives a title perfectly good as against himself. If such vendor afterwards sells to another, so as to defeat that title, he commits a fraud on the first purchaser, and if the second purchaser takes with notice of the first purchaser's title, he has notice of, and is party to, the fraud; and his title therefore will not be allowed to prevail against that of the first purchaser.

Being of opinion that neither the Munsif nor the Subordinate Judge had directed their minds to what was the actual point in the case, viz., whether the appellant took with notice of the previous sale to the plaintiff, two of the learned Judges who have referred this case were of opinion that it should be remanded to the Munsif, in order that the question of notice might be properly tried, with an instruction that, in determining it, the long continued possession of the plaintiff would be an important circumstance for consideration, though it would not be conclusive; more especially, as the plaintiff was not in actual possession at the date of the appellant's alleged purchase. The facts and circumstances attending his dispossession might, however, be material if known to the appellant.

But before their intended order of remand was in fact made, a Division Bench, consisting of PRINSEP and FIELD, JJ. (and therefore containing one of the Judges before whom the present case came) had delivered judgments in the case of Dinonath Ghose v. Anluck Ami Dabee (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 753), which was of a similar character to the present, with this difference, that the first unregistered purchaser obtained possession, and continued in possession up to the date of the registered conveyance to the second purchaser.

In dealing with that case, Mr. Justice PRINSEP decided in favour of the first unregistered purchaser, on the ground that the second and registered purchaser "presumably had notice of title of the first purchaser in the fact of possession having been given,"—that is, from the fact of the first purchaser being in possession at the time of the second purchase.

[608] This possibly might on the facts of that case have been a sufficient ground for the correct decision of it; though if it was intended to lay down that possession alone was in all cases sufficient notice, we think the proposition would be stated too broadly; because, in many conceivable cases, of which the case of Fuzluddeen Khan v. Fakir Mahomed Khan (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 336) furnishes an example, such possession might reasonably be accounted for without necessarily affecting the second purchaser with notice of the first purchaser's title, and so making him a participator in the fraud of the common vendor.

Mr. Justice FIELD, however, in his judgment appears to have agreed with the dictum of the Subordinate Judge in the present case, that "it is a settled point of law that an unregistered kobala supported by possession shall prevail over a registered kobala without possession." Indeed he would seem to have gone further, and to have been of opinion that a purchaser under an unregistered deed, who obtains possession for a single day, must be preferred to a subsequent purchaser under a registered deed, though the first purchaser may be out of possession at the date of such second registered conveyance. For though in one part of his judgment he states the case before him to be "a case of possession" (meaning continuing possession) "and a prior unregistered conveyance, registration of which was optional, versus a subsequent registered conveyance and nothing more," he does in fact deal with the question as follows:—"If A sells property to C on the 1st of January 1880 by an instrument which the law does not require to be registered, and which therefore although unregistered is admissible in evidence to prove the transfer and the title of the transferee; and if this legal conveyance made in legal form is further followed immediately by delivery of the possession of the property to C, upon what principle can it be reasonably contended that A has on the 1st of February of the same year any right which he can convey to X?"

But this is merely stating in other words the proposition in the report of the case of Fuzluddeen Khan v. Fakir Mahomed Khan (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 336 see p. 338)—viz., "when a man sells property of less value than [609] Rs. 100 by an unregistered deed, that deed will give a valid title, and the title of the vendor will cease from the date of its execution. Therefore he will have no power to reconvey the same property three months later to another person"—a proposition which was directly overruled by considered judgments in that case; and which represents the conditions occurring in almost every case under the English Registration Acts.

It is true that Mr. Justice FIELD refers to the fact of possession having been given to the first purchaser; but possession had also been given to and maintained by the first purchaser in the case of Fuzluddeen Khan v. Fakir Mahomed Khan (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 336). So that the latter case was in that respect on all fours with the case before Mr. Justice FIELD; and the continued possession of the first purchaser carried his case further than the alphabetical case put by Mr. Justice FIELD. It seems doubtful whether that learned Judge construes the words "accompanied or followed by possession" as meaning a continued possession down to the date of the second conveyance. In the alphabetical case put by him, it would seem that he did not consider continued possession necessary; as there he bases his argument on the vendor having parted with his estate, and having nothing further to convey; but in the latter part of his judgment he deals with the case of continued possession: for he says:—"In giving effect to the prior unregistered conveyance and possession, there is no real hardship done to the later registered purchaser, who, if he had used ordinary precaution, would have been able to discover that his vendor had no possession to give him."

Mr. Justice FIELD also seems to have been inclined to support the dictum of the Munsif in the present case, "that delivery of possession is under the Hindu law essential to complete the title" of a purchaser for value. The observations of Mr. Justice FIELD on this point, though apparently considered by him to be extra-judicial, do in fact seem to influence his entire judgment and his construction of the Registration Act.

It was only in consequence of the judgments delivered in Dinonath Ghose v. Auluck Moni Dabee (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 753), that two of the three learned Judges, before whom the present case originally came, [610] considered it advisable to refer it to a Full Bench. But we understand that those two learned Judges themselves dissented from the statements of law contained in the judgment of Mr. Justice FIELD.

After giving due consideration to the judgment of Mr. Justice FIELD in Dinonath Ghose v. Auluck Moni Dabee (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 753), we agree with Justices CUNNINGHAM and WILSON, two of the referring Judges, that none of the grounds relied upon by the lower Courts in the present case were correct statements of the law.

We are of opinion that the fact of the vendor having given possession to the first and unregistered purchaser, even if such possession continued to the date of the second conveyance, does not necessarily prevent the operation of that part of s. 50 of the Registration Act which enacts broadly that a registered document shall "take effect as regards the property therein comprised against every unregistered document relating to the same property;" and that the only case in which the title of the prior unregistered purchaser can prevail against the subsequent registered purchaser for value is when the latter takes with notice of the title of the former. We think that the observations of Lord CAIRNS in the (lately reported) case of the Agra Bank Limited v. Barry (I. L. R., 7 H. L., 135, at pp. 157, 158), are applicable to cases under s. 50 of the Indian Registration Act. We are further of opinion, that delivery of possession is not, under the Hindu law, essential to complete the title of a purchaser for value.

The universal practice in this province has for years been to consider that a proper deed of conveyance for valuable consideration by itself passes the vendor's title. It is a matter of every-day practice that mofussil properties are conveyed by deed executed in Calcutta. The Registration Acts themselves are founded on the sufficiency of the execution of a duly registered deed to convey the vendor's interest ; and indeed it would seem to be a necessary implication from the language of s. 48 of the present Act, that even an oral transfer without delivery of possession would effectually pass the property as against the vendor and all persons claiming under him otherwise than by a duly registered conveyance. Legislation has for [611] years, as in the matter of sales in execution, proceeded on the same foundation.

We feel bound emphatically to negative the proposition that delivery of possession is necessary to give full validity and effect to a transfer for valuable consideration. Indeed in this country the actual possession of the land seldom accompanies its transfer by deed. In the great majority of cases actual possession is with, and continues with the ryot. It is difficult to understand how 'possession' can be given in cases where the ryot is not a party to the conveyance. The Procedure Code in such cases directs that symbolical possession shall be given ; but this of course only applies to execution cases. It seems to us that to hold that "delivery of possession of the property sold is essential to complete the title of the vendor" as suggested by Mr. Justice FIELD, would be to hold that the greater part of the transfers of property by deed in this country are ineffectual to convey the land.

We agree with the learned Judges who have referred this case that it must be remanded to the Court of the Munsif for re-trial, with liberty to the parties to adduce fresh evidence, if so advised, in order that the following questions may be determined :—

First.—Was the appellant a bonâ fide purchaser for value ? and Second. If the appellant was a bonâ fide purchaser for value, was he affected by notice of the plaintiff's title ?

If the appellant was a bonâ fide purchaser for value, and was unaffected by notice of the plaintiff's title, the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed. Otherwise the plaintiff is entitled to recover against the appellant.

The costs of this appeal and reference will abide the result of such trial.

Garth, C.J. I would only add with reference to the judgment which has been delivered by my learned brother PRINSEP, that I entirely agree with him as to the injustice which has frequently been done by the system of what is called 'optional registration.' With the professed object of relieving poor people from a burthen, the law of optional registration has made them in numbers of cases the victims of fraud and litigation. [612] I have already expressed my opinion very strongly to the Government upon that subject.

And as to the suggestion of my learned brother, that the Legislature should interfere to prevent this unhappy state of things, it has already, as I understand, been carried out.

As I read the Transfer of Property Act, which was passed the other day, s. 54 does virtually abolish optional registration. No transfer can now be made, after that Act comes into operation, by any instrument in writing, unless it is registered.

It is true that, in the case of possessory interests, the value of which is less than Rs. 100, an oral transfer coupled with possession will pass the property ; but there will be no such thing as a transfer in writing, unless it is registered.

And by that same section, as I take it, the point which has been raised by my brother FIELD, and which we have decided to-day, has also been set at rest.

A registered transfer without delivery of possession will pass any interest in land, whether in possession or otherwise; and when the value of the interest amounts to Rs. 100, there is no other means of transferring it.

It was mainly for these reasons that I considered the recent Transfer of Property Act would prove so beneficial to this country.

Case remanded.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 8th March, 1882.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM AND MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM.

Golam Ali Mundul.....Defendant

Golap Soondery Dossee.....Plaintiff.*

Landlord and tenant Right of occupancy—Ejectment—Abandonment of holding—Failure to pay rent—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, ss. 6 and 22.

When a tenant, having a right of occupancy, abandons his holding and ceases to pay rent for five years it is not a right construction of s. 22 of Beng. [613] Act VIII of 1869, to say, that the landlord may not put another tenant into possession without the formality of a suit.

Section 6 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 expressly limits the duration of occupancy right by the words "so long as he pays the rent payable on account of the same," and distinct abandonment and cessation to pay rent disentitle the tenant from enforcing the rights which he may have previously enjoyed.

THIS was a suit for possession of land by declaration of plaintiff's right thereto. The facts of the case are set forth in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, the material portion of which was as follows:—

"The dispute is with respect to a holding which admittedly belonged to Bhugwan Ghose, the husband of the plaintiff. It is an admitted fact that Bhugwan Ghose died in or about the month of Aughran 1285 (November-December 1879). The plaintiff's witnesses say he died in Aughran 1285. The defendant Golam Ali, in the ninth paragraph of his written statement, says, that Bhugwan died in Pous 1285 (Decomber-January 1879). The holding comprises seventeen bighas of land, and it bore a rent of Rs. 4-4. It was settled with Golam Ali at a rent of Rs. 7-6 on the 3rd of March 1879. The plaintiff stated that she was dispossessed on the 7th of June 1879. On the 23rd of June 1879, she, through her relation, Moti Lal Ghose, appears to have lodged a complaint in the Criminal Court; but as no relief was obtained, she instituted the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, on the 24th of July 1879. Her suit has been dismissed. The finding of the first Court about the nature of Bhugwan's right is not clear. It was disposed to find that Bhugwan had a right of occupancy, but has not found it in so many terms. At one part of its judgment it says:—'The plaintiff's husband could only acquire a right of occupancy under s. 6.' At another place the first Court observes, 'although the plaintiff's husband might have once acquired a right of occupancy in the land, he failed to retain the acquisition by neglecting to pay rent to the maliks for five years.' There can be no doubt on the evidence that Bhugwan had a right of occupancy. The witnesses examined on the side of the plaintiff prove that Bhugwan was in possession for twenty or thirty years, and before him his father was in possession. The first Court does not disbelieve those witnesses, and I do not find their evidence untrustworthy. I find that Bhugwan had acquired a right of occupancy in the holding.

[614] "The plaintiff states in her plaint that her husband had a karni tenant's right. The term karni is used to distinguish it from a ucca tenant's right. There being no question about the nature of Bhugwan's right, the only question is whether his conduct was such as to lead to the inference that he had given up his jote. It is not pretended that he had directly given it up, but the Court finds that (i) there was no evidence on the side of the plaintiff that any rent was paid for the last five years; and (ii) that the land remained uncultivated for a period of five years. If these findings are correct, there can be very little doubt that, keeping in view the ruling of the High Court noticed by the learned Munsif—Hemnath Dutt v. Ashgur Sirdar (I.L.R., 4 Cal., 891)—the conclusion arrived at is right. The evidence on the side of the plaintiff is, that so long as Bhugwan was alive, he cultivated the major portion of the lands, and even after his death his widow got it cultivated; but the defendant forcibly dispossessed her in June 1879. The first Court does not say that the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses is not reliable. The Court below observes—'that the plaintiff's witnesses admit, that about half the area in suit had lain uncultivated for the last four or five years. The maliks say that the whole land in suit had remained in that condition.' It is not 'about half the area.' The only witnesses on the plaintiff's side who speak of the land remaining fallow are witnesses Nos. 3 and 8. No. 3 says, that four bighas and odd cottahs of land were fallow in 1285 and 1286, and witness No. 8 says, that it is only about two or three bighas which remained in an uncultivated state in 1285. Then the maliks have not given their evidence; what they stated in their written statement is no evidence. There is no clear finding that Bhugwan was not in possession of the land up to the time of his death, or that, after his death, the plaintiff was not in possession. There is a clear finding that no rent was paid for five years."

[The learned Judge then went through the evidence on this point and came to the conclusion that "the evidence to prove the payment of rent is certainly very meagre."]

"When Bhugwan, and after his death his widow, continued to remain in possession, non-payment of rent would not justify the landlord to re-enter without in any way determining the tenancy. Section 22 of the Rent Law (Beng. Act VIII of 1869) distinctly rules that no ryot having a right of occupancy shall be ejected otherwise than [615] in execution of a decree or order under the provisions of the Rent Act. That being so, in my opinion the plaintiff is entitled to possession. In reversal of the judgment of the first Court, the suit of the plaintiff is decreed with costs of both Courts. The plaintiff will get possession of the land claimed."

From this decision the defendant appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Lall Mohun Dass and Baboo Rashbehary Ghose for the appellant argued, that the facts, as found by the Judge of the lower Appellate Court, showed that the plaintiff had no title to the land; she could not, therefore, recover possession unless in a suit brought under s. 9^{*} of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) see Jonarudan Acharjee v. Haradhun Acharjee (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 1020; s.c., 9 W. R., 513). Even if there was an illegal ejection within the meaning of the Rent Act, the present suit is improperly framed. Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 6 is clear to show that non-payment of rent determines the right of occupancy.

Baboo Nil Madhub Bose and Baboo Mokomul Nath Roy for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by Cunningham, J. In this case the plaintiff states that her husband had a permanent tenancy of seventeen bighas at a rent of Rs. 4-4; that, in 1286, the principal defendant (who is a tenant under the pro forma defendants) dispossessed her, and she prays for possession of the property by declaration of her right.

The first Court found (i) that there was no evidence as to any grant commencing the plaintiff's husband's tenancy, and that the plaintiff could claim occupancy rights only under s. 6 of the Rent Act; (ii) that no rent was paid to the owners from 1281 to 1285; (iii) and that, consequently, the plaintiff's husband had forfeited his occupancy rights.

The lower Appellate Court found that the plaintiff's husband had a right of occupancy and acquiesced, apparently, in the finding that no rent was paid for five years. But the Judge considers that, as the plaintiff's husband, and after his death, the [616] plaintiff, were in possession of the property, the mere non-payment of rent for five years did not justify re-entry on the part of the landlord, inasmuch as s. 22 of the Act provides that no tenant having a right of occupancy shall be ejected otherwise than in execution of a decree or order. This part of s. 22 is, however, only applicable to cases in which the tenant has a subsisting right under s. 6, and upon the facts found we consider that the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree according to her prayer giving her possession on declaration of her rights as an occupancy tenant. Whatever rights s. 22 may confer on occupancy tenants, we do not think that the intention can have been that where a tenant abandons his holding and ceases to pay rent for five years, his landlord should not be able to put another tenant in possession without

* [Sec. 9. - If any person is dispossessed without his consent of immoveable property otherwise than in due course of law, he or any person claiming through him may, by suit instituted within six months from the date of the dispossession, recover possession thereof, notwithstanding any other title that may be set up in such suit.

Nothing in this section shall bar any person from suing to establish his title to such property and to recover possession thereof.

No suit under this section shall be brought against the Government.

No appeal shall lie from any order or decree passed in any suit instituted under this section, nor shall any review of any such order or decree be allowed.]

recourse to the formality of a suit. Section 6 of the Act expressly limits the duration of occupancy rights by the words "so long as he pays the rent payable on account of the same," and we think that distinct abandonment and cessation to pay rent disentitle the tenant from enforcing the rights which he may formerly have enjoyed. We, therefore, admit the appeal, and restore the finding of the original Court with costs.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The 15th March, 1882.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM AND MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM.

In the matter of the Petition of Munshi Sheikh and others.

The Empress

versus

Munshi Sheikh and others.

Confession of an accused person - Examination of the accused - Question and answer - Recording examination - Statement of accused - Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 316.

The confession of an accused person was recorded in a simple narrative form instead of in the shape of question and answer as required by the Code [617] of Criminal Procedure, s. 346. There was nothing in the character of the confession, or in the circumstances of the case, to lead to the inference that the accused had been prejudiced by the error.

Held, that the error did not affect the admissibility of the statement in evidence.

IN this case the appellants were, with others, convicted of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, and were sentenced to six years' rigorous imprisonment by the Sessions Judge of the 24-Parganas. The appellants had previously confessed the crime when examined by the Magistrate, but these confessions were not recorded in the form of question and answer, but were written out in a narrative form. The learned Judge directed the jury that if they considered those confessions to have been voluntary, genuine and credible, they might convict the appellants on those confessions alone. The jury found the prisoners guilty. The latter appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Boido Nath Dutt and Baboo Tara Prosonno Sen for the Appellants.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by

* Criminal Appeal, No. 94 of 1882, against the order of H. Beverley, Esq., Additional Sessions Judge of the 24-Parganas, dated the 14th December 1881.

Cunningham, J.—We are of opinion that there has been no misdirection in this case. The main ground urged before us in appeal is, that the confessions of two of the accused were recorded in a simple narrative form instead of in the shape of questions and answers. If we could infer from the character of the confessions or from the circumstances of the case, that this mode of recording the confessions had resulted in any prejudice to the prisoners, we should of course deem it necessary to direct a new trial. But there is nothing from which we can draw this inference; and we, therefore, think that, having regard to the concluding paragraph of s. 346,* we are not at liberty to hold that there has been a misdirection, merely because the Judge allowed these confessions to go to the jury.

With regard to the accused Munshi Sheikh, the question does not arise, because the Judge told the jury that, as far as he was concerned, they must, before convicting him, satisfy themselves [618] that there was sufficient evidence to justify his conviction independent of the confession.

We think, therefore, that, as far as the matter of the irregularity of the mode of recording the confessions goes, the conviction must be upheld.

Conviction upheld.

NOTE.—A similar point was decided by a Full Bench of the High Court, consisting of CARTER, C. J., and KEMP, JACKSON, MACPHERSON, and AINSLIE, JJ., on the 26th of March 1877, in Criminal Appeal, No. 67 of 1877, the case of Pilu Maya v. The Queen.

The decision was given on a reference to the Full Bench made by MACPHERSON and BIRCH, JJ., the terms of which are as follows:—

“In this case the prisoner has been convicted of murder, the offence having been committed on the 10th of September last. He was committed by Mr. Luttinan Johnson, the Magistrate of Cachar, for trial before the Sessions Court. In the course of the enquiry preliminary to commitment, the prisoner was twice examined by the Magistrate. If the statements made by him on the occasions of these examinations are admissible in evidence, the conviction can be supported. But if those statements are not admissible, then there clearly is no evidence to warrant conviction. The question is, whether the statements made by the prisoner on those two examinations are, under the circumstances, admissible.

“The first examination of the accused was on the 21st of September. The Magistrate, in his own hand, recorded fully in English each question and answer, and at the end he signed the memorandum and added, ‘Note—The police connected with the case were

* [Sec. 346:—Whenever an accused person is examined, the whole of such examination, including every question put to him and every answer given by him, shall be recorded in full, and shall be shown or read to him, and he shall be at liberty to explain or add to his answers.

When the whole is made conformable to what he declares is the truth, the examination shall be attested by the signature of the Magistrate or Sessions Judge, who shall certify under his own hand that it was taken in his presence and in his hearing, and contains accurately the whole of the statement made by the accused person.

In cases in which the examination of the accused person is not recorded by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge himself, he shall be bound, as the examination proceeds, to make a memorandum thereof in the vernacular of the district, or in English, if he is sufficiently acquainted with that language; and such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge with his own hand, and shall be annexed to the record. If the Magistrate or Sessions Judge is precluded from making a memorandum as above required, he shall record the reason of his inability to do so.

The accused person shall sign or attest by his mark such record.

If the examination be taken in the course of a preliminary inquiry, and the Court of Session find that the provisions of this section have not been fully complied with, it shall take evidence that the prisoner duly made the statement recorded: Provided that if the error does not prejudice the prisoner, it shall not be deemed to affect the admissibility of the statement so recorded.]

carefully excluded from the Court, and the accused was given every opportunity of correcting any of his statements. His manner was that of a person speaking the entire truth.' And this note is initialed by the Magistrate and dated the same 21st of September. Simultaneously a Mohurir, in the presence of the Magistrate, recorded in the vernacular all the answers given by the prisoner, but the questions put are not recorded in the vernacular. At the end of this vernacular record, the Magistrate certifies, 'taken in my presence and hearing, and contains accurately the whole of the statement made by the accused person,'—and this certificate is signed and dated by the Magistrate. To this the Magistrate appends a Note—'the clerk has unfortunately omitted questions. They are, however, entered fully in my memorandum,'—and this he signs. After that, a few words seem to have been added on the same day by the prisoner. They are recorded by the Magistrate in his own hand in his memorandum, and simply signed by him: and they are recorded by the clerk in the vernacular and initialed by the Magistrate.

"On the 12th of October, the prisoner was further examined by the Magistrate. The questions and answers are fully recorded both in the English memorandum and in the vernacular, and the record is duly attested by the Magistrate. But neither [619] the record of the examination of the 12th October, nor the previous record of the examination of 21st September, were signed by the accused person, as required by s. 346. Nor is there anything to show that the record of the examination, every question and every answer, was shown or read to the accused, as directed by the first clause of s. 346.

"In this particular case, we have no doubt that the examination of the accused was in fact carefully conducted by the Magistrate, and that all the questions and answers are accurately recorded, as regards the first examination, in the Magistrate's English memorandum, and as regards the second examination, in both the vernacular and English. The error is one which, in our opinion, does not prejudice the prisoner, unless we are bound to hold as matter of law that the mere omission to comply with the provisions of s. 346 does prejudice him. The Bombay High Court apparently considers that such an error necessarily does prejudice the prisoner, and is incurable, and that the statement of the accused, unless recorded strictly as directed by s. 346, is inadmissible—see Reg. v. Bai Ratan (10 Bom. H. C. Rep., 166); but the last clause of s. 346 seems to contemplate the admissibility of such records although not strictly in form, provided the error does not prejudice the prisoner. The following cases bearing on the subject are reported:—Queen v. Nussuruddin (21 W. R., Cr., 5), Queen v. Kala Chand Pal (24 W. R., Cr., 29), Queen v. Chunder Bhattacharjee (24 W. R., Cr., 42), Queen v. Wazir Mundul (25 W. R., Cr., 25), Reg. v. Daya Anand (11 Bom. H. C. Rep., 44), Reg. v. Deva Dayal (11 Bom. H. C. Rep., 237), Reg. v. Shirja (I. L. R., 1 Bom., 219). As the question is of great importance, and opinion seems divided, we think the matter should be referred for the decision of a Full Bench.

"The questions referred for the opinion of the Full Bench are:—First,—Whether the omission to obtain the signature or attestation of the accused person as directed by s. 346 necessarily prejudices the prisoner within the meaning of the last clause of that section and renders the record inadmissible? Secondly,—Whether the omission to obtain the signature, &c., of the accused person, as required by s. 346, or the omission to record in the vernacular the questions put to the accused person, or both these omissions taken together, necessarily render the record inadmissible, even although it appears from the Magistrate's certificate that, taking the English memorandum together with the vernacular, the whole of the questions and answers are fully recorded? Thirdly,—Whether the defect can be cured by taking further evidence now, supposing that it can be proved that in fact the record was duly read to the accused person?

Baboo Joy Gobind Shome for the Prisoner.

Baboo Juggodamund Mookerjee for the Crown.

The Opinion of the Full Bench was delivered by

GARTH, C.J.—As regards the first point stated for our opinion, it now appears that the statement made by the prisoner does purport to bear his signature, and in the absence of any [620] evidence to the contrary, and there being no defect in the certificate endorsed by the Magistrate in compliance with the directions of s. 346, we must take it that the signature is that of the accused person. Then secondly, as to the omission on the part of the Magistrate to record in the vernacular the questions put to the prisoner, it is clear that in this instance the prisoner is not, and cannot have been, prejudiced in any way by the omission. The questions were of such a nature that it is perfectly immaterial to the sense and meaning of the prisoner's statement whether they were recorded or not.

The case will go back to the Bench which referred it for disposal.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Dhunput Singh.....Plaintiff

Shoobhudra Kumari and another.....Defendants.*

*Ward of Court—How far incapacitated from contracting—Reg. X of 1793—

On a reasonable construction of the whole of Reg. X of 1793, a ward of Court, duly constituted as such, is not thereby absolutely incapacitated from contracting, but the power of the ward to contract is taken away so far as regards all property which, under the provisions of the law, comes under the charge and control of the Court of Wards.

The view taken by the Courts of the Regulation and Acts concerned with the Court of Wards in Bengal is, that although the possession of a revenue-paying property is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards attaching, yet when once that jurisdiction has attached, all the property of the ward comes under the control and management of the Court.

Mahomed Zahoor Ali Khan v. Thakooranee Rutta Koer (11 Moore's I. A., 468) considered.

IN the year 1865, one Shoobhudra Kumari, the widow of one Kunwar Udoy Chunder, and Jomuna Kumari, the widow of a brother of Kunwar Udoy Chunder, applied to the Court of Wards to take over the management of their estates. The Collector reported on the matter, and advised that the widows

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 66 of 1881, against the decree of A. J. R. Bainbridge Esq., Judge of Moorsheadabad, dated the 25th January 1881.

[621] might be taken to be disqualified proprietors, under s. 2 of Reg. X of 1793; and on this report, and on the approval of the Government, the Court of Wards, on the 18th June 1866, took over the management of the widow's estates.

In 1876, Shoobhudra petitioned the Court of Wards to release her share of the estate. The other widow did not join in the application. The Court of Wards, finding that the estate was still in debt, refused the application.

Shoobhudra, being in want of funds for puja ceremonies and to pay off the law expenses occasioned in 1876, borrowed from one Dhunput Singh, on the 3rd February 1876, Rs. 6,000, and executed in his favour a bond agreeing to repay the advance in the month of June 1877, with interest at one per cent. per mensem, and at the same time, as further security, mortgaged certain properties to Dhunput Singh.

Dhunput Singh, on the 22nd June 1880, brought this suit on the bond to recover Rs. 6,000 as principal and Rs. 3,100 as interest, making the manager on behalf of the Court of Wards and the widow defendants.

The manager put in a defence denying the bond, and contended that the entire estate was vested in the Court of Wards by virtue of the Regulation, the effect of which was to render Shoobhudra disqualified from contracting debts and incapable of being sued. The widow put in no appearance.

The District Judge held, that the estate was not liable, but finding that the bond had been executed by the widow, he found that the widow was personally liable, inasmuch as the Regulation did not declare that she should be disqualified from contracting: and he, therefore, gave the plaintiff a personal decree against the widow for Rs. 9,100, allowing the Court of Wards to recover their costs from him.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, and the Court of Wards put in a cross-appeal, contending that the Court was not right in giving a personal decree against the widow.

Mr. Branson (with him Baboo Sreenath Das and Baboo Gurudas Banerjee) for Dhunput Singh.—The widow was never [622] properly constituted a ward of Court, the procedure provided not having been followed. The case is similar to that of Mahomed Zahoor Ali Khan v. Thakooranee Rutta Koer (11 Moore's I. A., 468); that case was decided on Reg. LII of 1803, and the Reg. X of 1793 is nearly verbatim the same. The widow, if she was a ward of Court, was not incapacitated from contracting, and there is no express provision to that effect in the Regulation of 1793, or in any of the Acts amending the Regulation. And the fact that the Court of Wards Act (Beng. Act IX of 1879) does provide for this, shows that the former Regulations and Acts did not intend that she should be incapacitated; she was only incapacitated from contracting with properties directly in the hand of the Court of Wards—Musst. Kustoora Koomaree v. Monohur Deo (W. R., January to July, 1864, p. 39). Section 11 of the Contract Act points out the persons who are incapacitated from contracting, and the widow does not come within that section.

Mr. Kilby and Baboo Anoda Pershad Bannerjee for the Court of Wards.—The requirements of s. 4 of Reg. X of 1793 have been complied with, and the estates, therefore came properly into the hands of the Court of Wards. The case of Mohomed Zahoor Ali Khan v. Thakooranee Rutta Koer (11 Moore's I. A., 468) did not go into the question as to whether the widow was incapacitated from contracting; it was decided on the ground that the relation of ward and guardian had not been completely constituted. Under the Board of Revenue's Circular Orders, rule 2, at p. 340 of Mr. Chapman's edition, the Court of Wards has jurisdiction over all the property of a ward. As regards our cross-appeal, s. 51 of Beng. Act IX of 1879 shows that all suits should be brought against the manager, and not against the ward, the personal decree against the widow is wrong.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—In this case the plaintiff, Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadoor, sues Rani Shoobhudra Kumari, a lady whose estate is under the management of the Court of Wards, and he seeks to [623] recover Rs. 9,100, being Rs. 6,000 principal and Rs. 3,100 interest, due upon a bond dated 3rd February 1876, which is found to have been executed by the Rani. He also seeks to have certain property (which is specified in the schedule annexed to the plaint) declared liable to be sold in execution for the realization of the amount claimed by him. Three questions arise for our decision in the case. The first is—Was Rani Shoobhudra Kumari duly constituted a ward of Court under the law relating to the Court of Wards at that time in force? The second is—If she was duly constituted a ward of Court, was she thereby incapacitated from contracting on any account whatever? The third question, which must be decided in order to dispose of this case, is—Whether Rani Shoobhudra Kumari, if duly constituted a ward of Court, but not thereby absolutely incapacitated from contracting, was yet incapable of contracting to this limited extent that she could not bind her property, or any portion of that property which came under the management of the Court of Wards?

As to the first of these points, it has been contended before us, upon the authority of the case of Mahomed Zuhoor Ali Khan v. Musst. Thakooranee Rutta Koer (11 Moore's I. A., 168), that the Rani was never properly constituted a ward of Court; and reliance has been placed upon the following passage to be found at p. 477 of the report:—"The provisions of such a law should be strictly pursued, in order to effect the disqualification of any particular person." Now, in that case it appears that the property in question had previously belonged to a lady named Maha Koer. She was declared a disqualified female under the provisions of Reg. LII of 1803—a Regulation applicable to the ceded and conquered provinces, and which is almost verbatim the same as Reg. X of 1793, applicable to the Lower Provinces of Bengal. Maha Koer died in 1853, and she was succeeded in the ownership of the property by Rutta Koer, her sister. The property was alleged to have remained in charge of the Court of Wards, although there were in the case circumstances which went a long way to rebut this allegation; but beyond doubt, no proceedings were taken under the Regulation to have Rutta [624] Koer declared a disqualified proprietor: and upon the ground that the course of proceeding provided by the Regulation for having a disqualified proprietor made a ward of Court had not been followed, the Privy Council came to the conclusion that the mere fact of the property remaining under the charge of the Court of Wards, without the necessary steps being taken to have the disqualified proprietor declared a ward of Court, was not sufficient to make the provisions of the Regulation applicable to the lady, or, in other words, to render Maha Koer a ward of Court. In the present case, we think that the circumstances are widely different. Section 4 of Reg. X of 1793 provides, that the "Collectors of the revenue are to ascertain and report to the Board of Revenue, both now and hereafter, what proprietors in their respective zillas may come within the description of disqualified landholders specified in s. 2." Now it appears from the document to be found at p. 29 of the Paper-book, —viz., a letter from the Collector of Moorsshedabad to the Commissioner of Rajshahye, dated 11th May 1865, that Mr. C. Mackenzie, the Collector of Moorshedabad, did in fact make to the Board of Revenue, through the Commissioner, the report required by s. 4 of the Regulation. We have then a document at page 30 of the Paper-book, which is a copy of a letter from the Under-Secretary to the Government of Bengal, in which the Under-Secretary is directed to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from the Secretary to the Board of Revenue, and in reply to state that the Lieutenant-Governor approves of the estates in the district of Moorshedabad, acquired under a deed of gift by the widows of Bahoo Kirtu Chunder and Uday Chunder, and which they are represented as incapable of managing, being taken under the management of the Court of Wards. From the substance of this letter and also from the copies of the several memoranda by which a copy of this Government letter was forwarded to the Collector of Moorshedabad, it appears that this letter of Government relates to the same matter as the copy of the letter of the Collector of Moorshedabad to be found at page 29 of the Paper-book. Now, under cl. 1 of s. 5 of the Regulation, "if a proprietor of land shall be reported disqualified solely from being a female, the [625] Board of Revenue, in their capacity of a Court of Wards, shall immediately proceed to take the estate under their care, reporting the circumstance to the Governor-General in Council, who reserves to himself the power of declaring any female proprietor, whom he may deem competent to the management of her own estate, exempt from the operation of this Regulation." It is clear from this provision that the Board of Revenue, upon the report of the Collector, is required to take under its care the estate of a disqualified female proprietor; and that the report there required to be made to the Governor-General is merely for the purpose of enabling the Governor-General to exercise the discretion vested in him by the Regulation— a discretion that is to declare any female proprietor to be competent to manage her own estates. That discretion, we may observe, was subsequently transferred to the Court of Wards by s. 3 of Reg. X of 1793. But it is clear that the sanction of the Government is not a condition precedent to the action of the Board, and it is evident from the other proceedings in this case that the Board of Revenue did, as a matter of fact, take over the property of the two widows, whose names are mentioned in the Collector's letter already referred to. Under these circumstances, the Board of Revenue, as a Court of Wards, having taken charge of the lady's estate, and the matter having been reported so as to give Government an opportunity of exercising its discretion, if it saw fit, to declare the lady competent to manage her estate, we are of opinion that the requirements of the Regulation were substantially complied with, and that, in consequence, the Rani was duly constituted a ward of Court. It is to be observed that the Rani became a ward of Court while Reg. X of 1793 was in force, and that; so far as this case is concerned, the provisions of the subsequent Acts of the Bengal Council, IV of 1870 and IX of 1879, have no application.

We now come to the second point, — viz., whether a person who has been duly constituted a ward of Court is thereby absolutely incapacitated from contracting or incurring debts of any kind. It is to be observed that no express provision is to be found upon this point either in Reg. X of 1793 or Reg. LII of [626] 1793, or in any of the Acts by which those Regulations were amended, nor yet in the consolidated Beng. Act IV of 1870. The last Court of Wards Act (Beng. Act IX of 1879) does contain in s. 60 the following express provision:—"No ward shall be competent to create, without the sanction of the Court, any charge upon, or interest in, his property or any part thereof." It is to be observed that if the proper construction to be placed upon the old Regulations or the Act of 1870 were this, that a ward of Court is absolutely incapable of contracting, the provision contained in s. 60 of Beng. Act IX of 1879 would have been unnecessary. Considerable reliance has been placed upon the case of Mahomed Zahoor Ali Khan v. Thakooranee Rutta Koer (11 Moore's I. A., 468), which has already been referred to. It is true that in that case the bond was a simple money-bond (see page 472 of the report), and it is also true that one of the questions presented for decision to their Lordships of the Privy Council was the wide question—Had the defendant the power to contract debts? and, as their Lordships point out in their judgment at page 475 of the report, not the more limited question—Whether she had power by contract to charge her land with debts? Having stated the questions which were in dispute in that particular litigation, their Lordships proceed to say: "Under these circumstances, the principal questions to be considered on this appeal are, whether the estate and property of Rutta Koer were in fact under the charge of the Court of Wards when the bond is alleged to have been executed; and if so, whether such custody or charge was of a character which made her what is called, under the Regulation to be presently referred to, a disqualified female, and incapacitated her to contract debt in any way." Their Lordships found that the estate and property of Rutta Koer were in fact under the charge of the Court of Wards when the bond was alleged to have been executed. They further found that this custody or charge was not of a character which made her a ward of the Court; but they did not proceed to decide, and under the circumstances of that case it was not necessary to decide, whether, if the provisions of the Regulation had been properly applied to Rutta Koer so as to [627] make her a ward of the Court, this would have incapacitated her to contract debt in any way, or would merely have incapacitated her to contract debt so as to bind the property which came under the management of the Court of Wards. Their Lordships say in one part of their judgment: "There is no pretence for saying that, but for the application of this Regulation to her, Rutta Koer was incapable of contracting the debt in question. The Regulation itself does not in terms declare the incapacity, or define the circumstances in which it is to arise. The provisions of such a law should be strictly pursued in order to effect the disqualification of any particular person; and no one should lose her natural liberty of contracting debts unless the relation of ward and guardian between her and the Court of Wards be regularly and completely constituted." The Privy Council decided that the relation of ward and guardian had not been regularly and completely constituted; and this being so, it was immaterial and unnecessary to say what would have been the effect as regards the simple bond-debt, which was the subject of that suit, if that relation had been regularly and completely constituted. Under these circumstances, we do not feel that the decision of the Lords of the Privy Council has affected the question which we have to decide.

Section 11 of the Indian Contract Act provides, that "every person is competent to contract who is of the age of majority according to the law to which he is subject, and who is of sound mind, and is not disqualified from contracting by any law to which he is subject" Now the mortgage-bond, which forms the subject of the present suit, was executed after the Contract Act came into force; and the Rani was without question of the age of majority at the time. We have already observed that there is no express provision to be found in any of the Regulations or Acts prior to 1879 which disqualifies a Ward of Court from contracting; and this being so, we think that if capacity to contract existed apart from the provisions of the Regulations and Acts applicable to the Court of Wards, such capacity cannot be presumed to be taken away by anything contained in any of the Regulations or Acts prior to 1879, unless we can find that this result follows by necessary implication from a reasonable construction [628] of these enactments. Turning now to Reg. X of 1793, s. 2 enacts that "the superintendence of the Court of Wards extends to the persons and estates of all proprietors disqualified, under the rules prescribed for the Decennial Settlement, for the management of their own lands " Section 15 provides, that "the manager is to have the entire care of the estate, real and personal. He will, therefore, have the exclusive charge of all lands, malguzari or lakheraj, as well as all houses, tenements, goods, money and moveables of whatever nature, belonging to the proprietor whose estate may be committed to his charge, excepting only the house wherein such proprietor may reside, the moveables wanted for his or her use, and the money allowed for the support of the proprietor, and his or her family entitled to a provision, which are to be left to the care of the guardian, where distinct guardians may be appointed." Now, it is clear from this language that the house and the money allowed for the support of the proprietor (and we may notice that a female proprietor may, under s. 22, herself receive and disburse the allowance fixed for their maintenance) are in the disposing power of the ward; and that so far as regards those portions of the estate, it is clear that the ward must retain the power of contracting. Then, under s. 32, minors and other disqualified landholders having guardians, as described in s. 22, shall not be sued but under the protection and joint name of their guardians. It will appear, on a reference to s. 22, that a female proprietor who is not disqualified by minority, idiotism, lunacy, or other natural defect or infirmity rendering her incapable of attending to the care of her own person and maintenance, would not necessarily require a guardian; and this being so, a female proprietor could be sued without a guardian. This, we may observe, has been altered by the Act of 1879. So far as regards that portion of the estate which, under the provision of s. 15, came under the charge of the manager, who is by that section declared to have the entire care of the estate, real and personal, it is obvious that this provision of the law would have been practically nugatory if the ward could contract so as to affect those portions of the estate. We think, therefore, that the reasonable construction to be placed upon the whole of the [629] Regulation read together is, that, so far as regards the property which by the Regulation came under the charge of the manager and the control of the Court of Wards, the ward became incapable of contracting. This is a view which we think to be consonant with the whole of the provisions of the Regulations read together, and which is further supported by some authority (see the case of Musst. Kustoora Koomaree v. Monohur Deo (W. R., January to July, 1864, p. 39). Section 60 of the present Court of Wards Act (Beng. Act IX of 1879) therefore, merely states in express language what, in our opinion, is the result of a reasonable construction of the old Regulations.

Upon this second point then, the conclusion at which we arrive is, that a ward of Court, duly constituted as such, is not thereby absolutely incapacitated from contracting. But with reference to the third point, which must be decided in order to dispose of this case, we are of opinion, that the power of the ward to contract is taken away so far as regards all property which, under the provisions of the law, comes under the charge and control of the Court of Wards.

Then it has been contended, that so far as regards one of the three properties which form the subject of the mortgage-bond, viz., Patni Mehal Kohinagar, this property did not come under the management and control of the Court of Wards. It is said that this was the stridhan of the Rani; that it did not come to her by the deed of gift, dated the 26th February 1865; nor did it descend to her from her husband by right of inheritance; and that, therefore, so far as regards this property, the Court of Wards could have no jurisdiction.

We are not able to concur in this argument. The view which, according to our experience, has been taken of the Regulations and Acts concerned with the Court of Wards in these provinces is, that although the possession of a revenue-paying property is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards attaching, yet once that jurisdiction has attached all the property of the ward comes under the control and management of the Court. Section 15 of Reg. X of 1793 is in support of this view, and the provisions of the later Acts are still more precise upon this [630] point. We may further refer to a Circular Order of the Board of Revenue, which is to be found at page 340 of Mr. Chapman's Edition of the Board's Circular Orders. Rule 2 says:—"Whenever a disqualified proprietor comes under the superintendence of the Court of Wards, the jurisdiction of the Court extends over all his property, including lands held without payment of revenue, and shares in revenue-paying lands held in common tenancy with other not disqualified proprietors. The Court of Wards is, therefore, to take charge of such property." It may be quite possible that if the Court of Wards had not taken charge of the Patni Mehal Kohinagar, the plaintiff in the present case might be entitled to enforce his lien against that property; but we think, having regard to the express provisions of the Regulations, that the presumption is that the Court of Wards did take charge of this property, and as this presumption has not been rebutted, we think that the plaintiff is not entitled to have any decree affecting this property. The result will be that this appeal must be dismissed on all the grounds which have been argued before us.

There is then a cross-appeal by the Court of Wards on behalf of the Rani to the effect that the lower Court ought to have dismissed the entire claim of the plaintiff, and not to have passed a decree personally against Rani Soobhudra Kumari. Now, we think that if Soobhudra Kumari was competent to contract in respect of matters or property other than that which came under the control and management of the Court of Wards, it must follow, as a necessary consequence, that she can be made liable upon her contracts according to the usual procedure in force in this country. Reliance has been placed upon s. 51 of the present Court of Wards Act (Beng. Act IX of 1879), which came into operation before the present suit was instituted. This section, laying down a different provision from that contained in s. 32 of the old Regulation, provides, that "in every suit brought by or against any ward, he shall be therein described as a ward of Court; and the manager of such ward's property, or if there is no manager, the Collector of the district in which the greater part of such property is situated, or any other Collector whom the Court [631] of Wards may appoint in that behalf, shall be named as next friend or guardian for the suit, and shall in such suit represent such ward, and no other person shall be ordered to sue or be sued as next friend or be named as guardian for the suit by any Civil Court in which such suit may be pending." This is, however, a provision of procedure. We think it was not intended to affect, and cannot affect, any liability which may be incurred by a ward in so far as he (and under the Bengal General Clauses Act, V of 1867, the masculine includes the feminine) is concerned. In the Courts of England there are many instances in which a minor or a female can only be sued by a next friend or guardian; but, so far as we are aware, this practice does not operate to remove or destroy the personal liability of such minor or female under the law in force in that country. We think, therefore, that the decree of the lower Court declaring the Rani to be personally liable is one with which we ought not to interfere. We may remark, in conclusion, that no argument has been raised before us that because the bond in this case was a mortgage-bond, a personal liability could not be enforced thereupon.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs. The cross-appeal will be also dismissed ; but we think it unnecessary to make any order as to costs.

Appeal and cross-appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 3rd March, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BOSE.

Chunder Coomar Mitter.....Plaintiff

Sib Sundari Dasse.....Defendant.*

Res judicata—Appeal—Point decided by lower Court, but not dealt with on appeal.

In a suit for enhancement of rent, the Munsif found that the service of notice was sufficient, but that the rent could not be enhanced. On appeal, the District Judge found that the service was insufficient, and dismissed the [632] suit, expressly declining to consider the question whether the rent was enhanceable. In a subsequent suit for enhancement, by the same plaintiff against the same defendant, the Munsif found that no sufficient ground for enhancement had been made out, and dismissed the suit. On appeal, the District Judge agreed with the Munsif on this point, and held also, that the decision of the Munsif in the first suit, that the rent could not be enhanced, was res judicata.

Held, that where the decision of a lower Court is appealed to a superior tribunal, which for any reason does not think fit to decide the matter, the question is left open, and is not res judicata.

THIS was a suit for arrears of rent at an enhanced rate after notice. The grounds of enhancement were increase in quantity of holding discovered on measurement, and too low rates of rent as compared with rates of similar neighbouring tenants for corresponding lands.

The defendant pleaded non-service of notice and insufficiency of notice ; that the land was not subject to enhancement ; and that there were no grounds for enhancement. It appeared that, in 1875, the plaintiff had brought a suit against the defendant for enhancement of rent. In that suit issues as to the service of notice, and as to the liability of the tenure to enhancement were raised, and it was found that the notice had been served, but that the tenure was not liable to enhancement.

There was an appeal and a cross-appeal against that decision, the defendant appealing on the point of service of notice. The cross-appeal was decided in favour of the cross-appellant, and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed on the ground that the notice had not been served, the Appellate Court expressly declining to enter on the question as to the enhanceability of the tenure.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 842 of 1880, against the decree of J. R. Hallett, Esq., Acting Judge of Rungpore, dated the 14th February 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Denobundhu Roy, Second Munsif of Kurigram, dated the 4th June 1879.

In the present suit, the lower Court held that there was no sufficient ground for enhancing the rent, and gave the defendant a decree. On appeal, the District Judge agreed with the lower Court and dismissed the appeal, holding further, that the decision of the Munsif in the suit of 1875 operated as res judicata.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Nil Madhub Bose for the Appellant.

[633] Baboo Kali Churn Banerji for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and BOSE, J.) was delivered by

Garth, C.J.—This is a suit for enhancement, and three questions have been raised by the defendant : first, that no notice of enhancement was served ; secondly, that the rent was not enhanceable ; and thirdly, that there were no grounds for enhancing it.

The Munsif found that notice had been served ; but as to the other points,—namely, whether the rent was enhanceable, and whether there were any grounds for enhancing it, —he found them against the plaintiff. For the purpose of proving that the rent was not enhanceable, the defendant relied upon a decree which was passed in a suit for enhancement brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendant in 1875. In that suit there were two issues : first, whether there was a proper notice of enhancement ; and secondly, whether the rent was enhanceable. The Munsif found that the service of notice was sufficient, but he also found that the rent could not be enhanced. Upon these findings, there were two appeals to the Subordinate Judge—one by the plaintiff, upon the ground that the second issue had been improperly found against him, and the other by the defendant, upon the ground that the notice was not sufficient. The last point was the only one which the Subordinate Judge thought it necessary to try. He found that the service of notice was not sufficient, and consequently that the suit was properly dismissed. He, therefore, thought it unnecessary to go into the other question ; and although he dismissed the appeal of the plaintiff, he did not decide the question which it involved. He expressly says so. In this suit the Munsif does not say whether the decision in the former suit was a res judicata or not ; but upon appeal to the District Judge, he considered that, as the decision of the Munsif in the former suit was not expressly overruled by the Appellate Court, it was res judicata in this suit, and prevented the plaintiff from contending here that the rent was enhanceable. But in this he was wrong. When the decision of a lower [634] Court is appealed to a superior tribunal, and that tribunal for any reason does not think fit to decide the matter, it is left an open question. We have held so here over and over again ; and it is not because in point of form the appeal in the first suit was dismissed, that the decision of the Munsif can be considered as confirmed.

The judgment of the District Judge in this point was erroneous. But then there is another issue which the District Judge has decided in favour of the defendant, which in this suit is fatal to the plaintiff. That issue was, whether there were any sufficient grounds in this suit for enhancing the rent ? The Munsif found that issue against the plaintiff, and the lower Appellate Court agrees with him, so that even supposing the tenure to be enhanceable, the suit must stand dismissed ; and it would be useless to send it back for retrial. It may be doubtful how far the District Judge means to decide upon other grounds, whether the rent was enhanceable. That is a matter with respect to which we say nothing, because we do not wish to prejudice the rights of either party in the future.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The 31st March, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

In the matter of the Petition of Uttom Koondoo and another.

The Empress

versus

Uttom Koondoo and another.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 411, 413—Offences of different kinds—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), ss. 283, 453—Defect in procedure—Reduction of punishment—Course to be followed at trial.

A prisoner cannot be tried at the same trial for receiving or retaining (s. 411, Penal Code), and habitually receiving or dealing in (s. 413), stolen property. The proper course is to try the accused first for the offences under [636] s. 411, and if he is convicted, to try him under s. 413, putting in evidence the previous convictions under s. 411, and proving the finding of the rest of the property in respect of which no separate charge, under s. 411, could be made or tried by reason of the provisions of s. 453 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

UTTOM KOONDOO and Krishno Moni Telani were committed on seven separate charges of dishonestly retaining stolen property (s. 411), and of habitually dealing in stolen property (s. 413 of the Penal Code).

The Sessions Judge tried these seven charges together, and recorded the following finding:—"Concurring with the assessors, the Court finds that Uttom Koondoo and Krishno Moni Telani are guilty of the offences specified in the first seven headings of the charge, viz., that they dishonestly retained stolen property belonging to Nobin Ghose, Mudun Shaha, Meer Jhan, Sonatun Ghose, Naba Kumar Chatterjee, Tamizudden, and Porashoola, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be stolen, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 411 of the Penal Code; and the Court directs that the said Uttom Koondoo be sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for five years, and Krishno Moni Telani to rigorous imprisonment for three years. Further, that Uttom Koondoo pay a fine of Rs. 100, and in default suffer rigorous imprisonment for one year."

* Criminal Appeal, No. 143 of 1882, against the order of T. Peterson, Esq., Sessions Judge of Jessore, dated the 1st January 1882.

The prisoners appealed against this order to the High Court.

No one appeared on either side at the hearing.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J. (who, after setting out the facts, continued) :—There is no finding or sentence under s. 413 of the Penal Code. The Sessions Judge erroneously speaks of the "seven headings of the charge." There were seven distinct charges, not seven headings of one charge. Upon conviction on a single charge under s. 411, three years is the maximum term of imprisonment that could have been directed. Regard being had to the provisions of s. 453 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the prisoner could not have been charged and tried at the same [636] time for more than three offences of the same kind. The Sessions Judge was, therefore, wrong in trying the seven charges together. The appellants do not, however, complain of this irregularity in procedure; and it does not appear that the irregularity has occasioned a failure of justice either by affecting the due conduct of the prosecution or by prejudicing the prisoners in their defence (s. 283, Code of Criminal Procedure). We, therefore, think it unnecessary to set aside the proceedings of the Sessions Judge and direct a new trial; but the conviction and sentence must be set aside, and the prisoners will be convicted upon the three charges concerned with the property of (i) Nobin Ghose, (ii) Meeajan, and (iii) Porashoola. For the first and second offences the prisoners will be sentenced each to one year's rigorous imprisonment in respect of each charge. For the third offence Uttom Koondoo will be sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment, and Krishno Moni Telani to one year's rigorous imprisonment. We think a sentence of fine unnecessary.

We may observe that the prisoners could not be tried at the same trial for receiving or retaining (s. 411) and habitually receiving or dealing in (s. 413) stolen property, these two offences not being offences of the same kind (s. 453, Code of Criminal Procedure). The proper course would have been to try the accused first for the offences under s. 411, and then, if he were convicted, to try him for the offence under s. 413, putting in as evidence the previous convictions under s. 411, and proving the finding of the rest of the property in respect of which no separate charge, under s. 411, could be made or tried by reason of the provisions of s. 453, Code of Criminal Procedure. As, however, the punishment awarded under s. 411 is, in our opinion, sufficient, it is unnecessary to proceed further under s. 413. The appeal will be dismissed, the conviction and sentence being altered as above directed.

Sentence altered.

[637] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 4th May, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE WHITE.

Alangamonjori Dabee.....Plaintiff

versus

Sonamoni Dabee.....Defendant.

Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), ss. 2, 3, and 6—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 98, 99 and 101—Gift to unborn persons—Statutes, Construction of.

A gift by will to persons unborn at the time of the death of the testator, whether made prior or subsequently to the passing of the Hindu Wills Act, is void.

The words “to create an interest,” in the fifth proviso to s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act, apply both to the quantity and quality of the interest created, and in their natural and ordinary meaning include the capacity of a donee to take.

In construing an Act of the Government of India passed in the form peculiar to the Hindu Wills Act, the sound rule of construction is to give their full and natural meaning to the provisos, and only to give effect to the enactments contained in the applied sections and chapters so far as the latter do not contravene the full and natural meaning of the provisos.

APPEAL from the decision of WILSON, J., dated 21st August 1881.

In March 1873, one Chandranath Chowdhry died, leaving him surviving a widow, Alangamonjori Dabee (the plaintiff in the present suit), his mother Sonamoni Dabee (the defendant in the present suit), three unmarried daughters, Rajranee Dabee, Hurridasi, and Siddessori (of whom Hurridasi died intestate and unmarried, and Rajranee is at present alive and married, and Siddessori, since the institution of the present suit, has also been given in marriage), and three sisters. The testator, by his will, left certain property to his sons, or failing sons to his daughter's sons, giving a monthly allowance to any daughter who should be childless or become a widow, and to his mother and sister maintenance as soon as the daughter's sons should succeed to the property. Sonamoni took out probate and took possession of the whole estate. The testator's widow then brought this present suit, charging misappropriation, and praying for a construction of the will, and contending that she, as heiress-at-law, was [638] entitled to the estate during her life, and asking for an account. The defendant denied the charges of misappropriation.

The case came on for settlement of issues, when the principal controversy was as to the validity of the gift to the daughter's sons and of other gifts dependent on the principal gift.

Mr. T. A. Apcar and Mr. Mitra for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Allen for the Defendant.

WILSON J., gave a judgment (which will be found reported in I. L. R., 8 Cal., 159) holding, that the will being governed by the Hindu Wills Act, the bequest to the daughters' sons was valid; but that the plaintiff had a sufficient interest under the will to entitle her to an account.

The plaintiff appealed.

Mr. Evans and Mr. Palit for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (GARTH, C.J., and WHITE, J.) :—

White, J.—The law is clear that, prior to the passing of the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), a gift by will to a person unborn at the time when the testator died was void, with a few exceptions which we need not consider now, as they have no application to the present suit.

The law was so declared in 1873 by PEACOCK, C.J., and NORMAN, J., overruling PHEAR, J., and also by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 1872, affirming on this point the decision of the first-named Judges, in the case of Jatendra Mohun Tagore v. Ganendra Mohun Tagore (4 B. L. R., O. C., 103; s.c., on appeal to P. C., 9 B. L. R., 377; L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 47.)

I believe that the decision in the Tagore case (4 B. L. R., O. C., 103; s.c., on appeal to P. C., 9 B. L. R., 377; L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 47), so far as it declared the invalidity of a bequest to persons unborn at the testator's death, came with surprise upon some members of the Profession, if not upon the Profession generally; and that, until that decision, it had at least been taken very much for granted that such bequests were valid.

[639] When the Hindu Wills Act, however, was passed, and came into force, the law had been settled in the way I have mentioned by the highest authority known in our Courts.

The question to be determined here is, whether the Legislature have changed the law in this respect, and whether such a gift is now valid by virtue of the Hindu Wills Act, s. 2, which, amongst other sections of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, extends to the wills of Hindus made on or after the 1st of September 1870, the 99th, 100th, and 101st sections of the Indian Succession Act.

I may observe in the first place, that the preamble of the Hindu Wills Act does not disclose any intention in the Legislature to extend the testamentary power of Hindus; the sole objects of the Act being, as there stated, to "provide rules for the execution, attestation, revocation, revival, interpretation, and probate of the Wills of Hindus."

The sections of the Indian Succession Act above referred to occur in that chapter of the Act which relates to Void Bequests. Section 99, after laying down the rule that a bequest is void, "when made to a person by a particular description, and no such person exists at the testator's death," permits an exception when such person stands "in a particular degree of kindred to a specified individual, but his possession is deferred by reason of a prior bequest." Section 100 provides in effect that the deferred bequest must comprise the whole of the remaining interest of the testator in the thing bequeathed; and s. 101 contains a rule against perpetuities, which necessarily recognizes the exception contained in s. 99.

Did the Legislature, in passing the Hindu Wills Act, intend that the exception mentioned in the 99th section should extend to the case of Hindu wills executed after the 1st of September 1870; and, by thus conferring upon Hindu testators the power of bequeathing their property to unborn persons answering a certain description, change the law as laid down in the authority which I have cited?

This question might perhaps have admitted of an affirmative answer but for the fifth proviso in s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act, which enacts, that "nothing in the Act contained shall authorize [640] any Hindu to create in property an interest which he could not have created before the 1st of September 1870."

The words "to create in property an interest" apply both to the quantity and quality of the interest created, and in their natural and ordinary meaning include the capacity of a donee to take. A deceased Hindu testator may be said to create an interest in property which he could not have previously created as well when he makes a gift of his estate in-tail-male as when he makes a gift to a person unborn at the date of his death.

The proviso in question was, in my opinion, introduced into the Hindu Wills Act, for the very purpose of preventing the application to Hindu testators of the specific sections mentioned in s. 2 of the Act from being construed into an enlargement of their testamentary power.

But it has been contended, and successfully contended, in the Court below, that a narrower construction should be put upon the language of the proviso, and that its operation should be confined to the capacity to take on the part of the donee.

The consequence of giving the wider meaning to the phrase is stated in the judgment of the lower Court to be, that "the whole of s. 99, except the first clause, is inoperative; s. 100 is entirely so; and s. 101 is inoperative, because it falls short of the restrictions existing without it." The learned Judge considered himself bound to avoid this consequence, and therefore read the phrase in the narrower sense, which allowed of full effect being given to the sections referred to. I may add that the argument of the learned Judge may be reinforced by a reference to the second clause of the 6th section of the Hindu Wills Act, which provides, that, in applying ss. 99, 100, and 101, 'son,' 'sons,' 'child,' 'children,' shall be deemed to include an adopted son, &c.

In arriving at this decision the learned Judge has applied a canon of construction, which has long been applied in construing English Acts of Parliament, and which is thus stated in the case cited by him—Reg. v. Bishop of Oxford (L. R., 4 Q. B. D., 245). "A Statute ought to be so construed, that, if it can be prevented, no clause, sentence or word shall be superfluous, void, or insignificant."

I do not for a moment deny that that canon is the correct [641] one to apply to many of the Acts of the Government of India, or that if it is the appropriate rule to apply here, the decision of the Court below is correct.

But the Hindu Wills Act is not drawn in the ordinary form of a Statute, or indeed of an Act of the Government of India. It does not enact a series of provisions relating to Hindu wills, but, in point of form, it applies to certain Hindu wills certain portions only of the Indian Succession Act, and it does this by mentioning only the numbers of particular sections and the numbers of particular parts or chapters or portions of parts or chapters of the principal Act.

The sections and parts and portions of parts so specified are applied bodily and in globo as it were, without any limitation and without any adaptation of the sections to the peculiar law or custom or circumstances of Hindus.

Hindus were expressly excluded from the operation of the Indian Succession Act when it was passed, and although it is not improbable that the Legislature, even at that time, contemplated that, at some future day, the Act might be extended to Hindus, the Legislature must have considered in 1865 that the Act, as it then stood, was not in all respects suited for Hindus, otherwise Hindus would have been included.

It is obvious, that an unqualified extension to Hindus of a large number of sections and parts of an Act, in its origin passed for persons other than Hindus, would be attended with some most unexpected and undesired results, unless the operation of the applied sections were controlled.

The 3rd section, accordingly, enacts five provisos, the object of which, as it appears to me, is to prevent, so far as Hindus are concerned, the wholesale application, as it were, of the sections and chapters mentioned in s. 2 from directly or indirectly altering or affecting the Hindu law in those matters to which the provisos relate, and from thus introducing changes not contemplated by the Legislature.

Hence, in construing an Act of the Government of India passed in the form peculiar to the Hindu Wills Act, I think the sound rule of construction is to give their full and natural meaning to the provisos, and only to give effect to the enactments [642] contained in the applied sections and chapters, so far as the latter do not contravene the full and natural meaning of the provisos; and that this is the sound rule of construction, although the result of carrying it out may be, and in the present case is, that some of the applied sections are rendered nugatory.

This also appears to me to be the only safe rule in dealing with an Act like the one now before us. To construe such an Act by the canon laid down in the case cited would be to introduce changes into the Hindu law by a side wind, as it were, and also when there is no clear expression on the part of the Legislature of an intention to alter that law.

I therefore reverse the decree of the Court below so far as it declares the validity of the bequest to the daughters' sons who were unborn at the death of the testator, and the validity of the other gifts in the will dependent on that bequest.

There will be a declaration that that bequest and the gifts dependent upon it are void, and that the plaintiff is entitled, as heiress of her deceased husband, to succeed to a widow's estate in the residue of his property.

Costs of the appeal to come out of the residuary estate.

Garth, C.J.—I am of the same opinion. I fully appreciate the arguments upon which the judgment of the Court below proceeds, and there is no doubt that, generally speaking, the rule of construction which is laid down in the Bishop of Oxford's case (L. R., 4 Q. B. D., 245) is the correct one.

But, as regards the Hindu Wills Act, I cannot help thinking that there is much truth in what fell from Mr. Justice PONTIFEX in the case of Cally Nath Naugh Chowdry v. Chunder Nath Naugh Chowdry (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 378; s.c., 10 C. L. R., 207), that the difficulty in construing that Act arises "from the mode of legislation": from the way in which upwards of 150 sections of the Indian Succession Act have been imported into s. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act, without sufficient consideration, as to whether some of those sections, which were quite appropriate in the first Act, were equally so in the second. I doubt, for instance, whether it ever occurred to the learned [643] authors of the Hindu Wills Act, that, in introducing ss. 99 and 100 of the Succession Act into s. 2 of the Wills Act, they were enacting provisions which were either inconsistent with the last proviso of s. 3 of that Act, or which would bring about a radical change in Hindu law.

And there is also much truth, as it seems to me, in another observation made by Mr. Justice PONTIFEX,—namely, that, at the time when the Hindu Wills Act was passed, it was by no means finally decided, that by Hindu law property could not be bequeathed to a person not in being at the time of the testator's death. This point could hardly be said to have been conclusively settled, until judgment was given in the Tagore case (9 B. L. R., 377; s.c., L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 47) by the Privy Council in the year 1872.

My opinion of this case proceeds upon two main points:—

1st.—I think it clear from the preamble of the Hindu Wills Act, that it was merely passed for the purpose of providing rules for the execution, attestation, and interpretation of Hindu wills, and was not intended to introduce any material change in Hindu law. This is not only apparent from the language of the preamble itself, but also from the fact, that the Act only extends to the Province of Bengal and to the Presidency-towns of Madras and Bombay. It could never have been intended to make an important change in the Hindu law in those portions only of the Empire, and to leave that law unchanged in all the other provinces.

2ndly.—I think that the last clause of s. 3 ought not to be read in the restricted sense which is attributed to it by the learned Judge in the Court below. If a Hindu testator leaves a life-estate in land to a person who is not born at the time of the testator's death, that is, in my opinion, an attempt "to create an interest in property which he could not have created before the Act." In other words, the prohibition, as it seems to me, extends to the person who is to take the interest, as well as to the interest itself.

Record of inferior Court—Explanation of order passed—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872) s. 295—Indefinite period of imprisonment in default of security, order for.

Where a Sessions Judge has, under s. 295 of Act X of 1872, called for the record of an inferior Court, he is, before referring the case to the High Court for orders, bound to call upon the inferior Court for an explanation of the order passed, and should submit such explanation, together with the rest of the record, to the High Court.

* Criminal Reference, No. 90 of 1882, Letter No. 120, from the order made by C. A. Kelly, Esq., Sessions Judge of Pubna and Bogra, dated the 19th April 1882.

An order directing an accused "to be imprisoned until he gives security," is bad; a definite period for such imprisonment, not exceeding one year, should be stated in the order.

ONE Mailamdi Fakir charged Toripulla Pramanik under s. 352 of the Penal Code with assault.

The case was tried summarily by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates, who convicted him, and sentenced him to a fine of Rs. 10, and in default to fifteen days' rigorous imprisonment; and further bound him over to enter into a personal recognizance in Rs. 100, with two sureties for a like amount, to keep the peace for one year, and in default to simple imprisonment until the order was complied with.

The Sessions Judge, after expressing his opinion that the order was bad, without calling upon the Honorary Magistrates for an explanation, referred the case to the High Court.

No one appeared for the Parties.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by McDonell, J. There has been great delay on the part of the Sessions Judge in making this reference. The explanation [645] of the Honorary Magistrates who sat on the Bench and are alive ought to have been submitted. The record says that the charge was under s. 352; and there is no serious contention that anything else was intended. So much of the order as directs the accused to be imprisoned until he gives security is bad, and a definite period not exceeding one year should have been inserted in this part of the order.

Under all these circumstances we think it will be sufficient to set aside so much of the order as requires recognizance and security to keep the peace, and we set aside this portion accordingly.

Order varied.

Promissory note—Acknowledgment—Stamp Act (I of 1879), s. 34.

The plaintiff sued on two documents, signed by the defendant, each bearing a one-anna stamp, in one of which a sum of Rs. 203 was stated to be "due to you, and payable on the 16th July;" and in the other a sum of Rs. 515 was mentioned "for which I give you this writing, the whole amount of which will be paid up in full on the 3rd August"

Held, that the documents were not mere acknowledgments, but promissory notes, and being payable otherwise than on demand, were not sufficiently stamped, and consequently not admissible in evidence under s. 34, Act I of 1879.

* Case stated for the opinion of the High Court under s. 7 of Act XXVI of 1864, by H. Millet, Esq., First Judge, Calcutta Court of Small Causes.

THE following case was stated for the opinion of the High Court by the First Judge of the Calcutta Small Cause Court.

"This suit is brought by the plaintiff on the following cause of action : 'For money due on two acknowledgments of difference in the price of Government securities of the value of Rs. 25,000 each, of which the defendant promised to deliver to [646] the plaintiff under contracts dated the 3rd and 15th June 1879 respectively, and which the defendant failed to deliver in terms of the said contracts'.

"The two documents referred to, and called in the cause of action 'acknowledgments,' have admittedly been signed by the defendant, but his pleader has taken the objection that they are not sufficiently stamped, they being promissory notes and not acknowledgments merely. The decision on this point remained in abeyance until I had decided a plea of minority put in by the defendant : on hearing the evidence I was not satisfied that the defendant was a minor, and so rejected the plea.

"The two documents relied on are in Nagri, but the following translations have been made by one of the officers of the Court.

That paper I could not hold, and made up with you by making the difference at the rate of rupees 2-1, by which the loss amounts to rupees (515-10) five hundred and fifteen and annas ten, for which I give you this chitta (writing), the whole amount of which will be paid up in full of this bill on 3rd, [647] 4th August, and to which no objection will be made. "If they are acknowledgments, as suggested by the plaintiff's pleader, they are correctly stamped, as they bear a stamp of one anna each ; but if promissory notes, as suggested by the defendant's pleader, the Court has no power to stamp them, promissory notes being excluded from the provisions of s. 34 of the Indian Stamp Act, 1879.

"No interpretation is given of 'promissory notes' in the Indian Stamp Act, 1879; but it may be said that whatever the words used in the document are, they must amount to a promise to pay. In one document the words used are 'payable on the 15th, 16th July,' in the other 'the full amount of which will be paid in full of this bill on 3rd, 4th August.' Both, in my opinion, amount to a promise by the person signing to pay on the dates specified.

"The English cases, to some extent, depend on Statute, but so far as they can be considered as a guide, they seem to show that a document of this description is a promissory note. In Morris v. Lee (2 Lord Raymond, 1396), the defendant promised 'to be accountable to A or order for £100 value received,' and it was held to be within the Statute as importing a promise to pay. White v. North (3 Ex., 689), also turned on Statute-law, and a suggestion was thrown out by the Court that the document in question could not be a complete instrument, because the time for payment was not fixed. In an older case - Casborne v. Dutton (Selwyn's N. P., 12 Ed., 426)—the words were 'to be paid on demand;' and it was held, these words amounted to a promise to pay. If any distinction can be drawn between the words 'payable,' 'which will be paid,' or 'to be paid,' it might be said that one document would constitute a promissory note and another not, but they all appear to me to mean the [648] same thing, and in effect to constitute a promise to pay by the person signing.

"I am of opinion, therefore, that both the documents in question are promissory notes, and, as such, cannot be stamped by the Court and received in evidence.

"No other evidence has been offered by the plaintiff of proof of his debt, he relying exclusively on the documents in question.

"The plaintiff's pleader has requested me to refer the point to the High Court, which I accordingly do, as follows:—

"1. Whether the two documents in question are sufficiently stamped according to law?

"2. Whether, if not sufficiently stamped, the Court can stamp them, and receive them in evidence under the Indian Stamp Act, 1879?

"Putting the questions in the above form will leave it open to the Honourable Judges of the High Court to decide—whether the documents are mere acknowledgments, or agreements, or promissory notes; or whether, if promissory notes, they can be stamped by the Court.

"Contingent on the opinion of the High Court my Judgment will be for the defendant."

[649] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 20th January, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Badri Roy and another.....Defendants

versus

Bhugwat Narain Dobey and others.....Plaintiffs.¹

Hindu Law - Partition - Mitakshara Law - Share of grandmother - Self-acquired property of father on partition - Partition of revenue-paying estate - Jurisdiction of Civil Court.

Under the Mitakshara law, a grandmother, on partition, is entitled to a share in the joint family property.

Semble.—The rule of law, to be found in the 2nd Vol. of Vyavastha Chaudrika, pp. 356-359, which lays down that, when the father makes the partition of his own choice, his mother is not entitled to a share, is intended to apply only to the self-acquired property of the father.

Partition of an estate paying revenue to Government cannot be effected in a Civil Court. ON the 8th September 1874, one Badri Roy purchased at an auction-sale the right, title, and interest of one Gondom Dobey, in a four-anna share in a certain mouza paying revenue to Government, and at the same time took an assignment of a mortgage-deed on the property from one Gopi Lal.

The wife, son, and mother of Gondom Dobey alleged, that their rights had not passed to Badri Roy under the sale, and brought this suit to recover possession of a three-anna share out of the four annas purchased by Badri Roy, and of which he was in possession, and also for wasilat.

The defendant Badri Roy denied his liability for wasilat, and maintained that, under the Mitakshara law, the sale against Gondom, who was the managing member of the family, passed the entire interest of the family.

The following issues were raised before the Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot :—

1.—Are the female plaintiffs entitled to a share in the ancestral property under the Hindu law ?

[650] 2.—Was the debt contracted by the judgment-debtor for the benefit of the joint family ? If so, are not other members of the family bound by his acts ?

3.—To what share, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled, and are they entitled to wasilat ?

The Subordinate Judge found that the female plaintiffs were entitled, on partition, to take each a share equal to that of a son, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a three-fourths share in the property ; and, disallowing the claim for wasilat, gave the following decree :—“ I would therefore pass a contingent decree in favour of the plaintiffs, declaring their title to take a three-fourths share of the property on a partition to be held with the defendants in the execution department, upon their contributing a three-fourths share of the debt discharged, or paying Rs. 718-8 annas to the defendant auction-purchaser."

The defendants appealed to the High Court. The plaintiffs brought a cross-appeal on the question of mesne profits, and on the ground that the Judge should not have ordered them to pay Rs. 718 on account of Gopi Lal's decree.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Aubinash Chunder Banerjee for the Appellants.

Baboo Rajendro Nath Bose and Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.), was delivered by Mitter, J. -This is a suit to recover possession of three annas out of four annas of Mouza Bhugwanpore Gidha, a revenue-paying estate, with wasilat. The plaintiff No. 1 is the son of Gondom Dobey, the defendant No. 2; and the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 are mother and grandmother of the plaintiff No. 1. The plaintiff No. 4 is the purchaser of a share of the disputed property from the plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2 and 3.

It appears that the aforesaid four annas formed one of the properties belonging jointly to the plaintiff No. 1 and Gondom Dobey. In execution of a decree against Gondom Dobey, the [651] right, title, and interest of the debtor in Mouza Bhugwanpore were sold on the 8th September 1873, and purchased by the first defendant. The purchaser took possession of the whole four annas. The plaintiffs contend, that only the father's interest in the property was sold, and that as, on partition of the joint family property, that share would be one anna, the son, the mother, and the grandmother receiving each one-anna share, the plaintiffs seek to recover possession of three annas.

The defendants state that the whole of the family property was sold to satisfy the decree, which was obtained by one Portab Singh on a bond executed by Gondom, who raised this loan for joint family purposes; that, after purchasing this property, the first defendant took an assignment of a mortgage decree upon the mouza in question from one Gopi Lal; that, under any circumstances, he is not liable for mesne profits.

The lower Court finds that the debt incurred to Portab by Gondom was contracted for immoral purposes; that what was sold in execution of Portab's decree was only the interest of the father; that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover mesne profits; and that the decree of Gopi Lal was a valid charge upon the property in dispute. Upon these findings of fact, the lower Court made a decree in the following terms: -"I would therefore pass a contingent decree in favour of the plaintiffs, declaring their title to take a three-fourths share of the property on a partition to be held with the defendants in the execution department, upon their contributing a three-fourths share of the debt discharged, or paying Rs. 718-8 annas to the defendant, auction-purchaser."

The decree, so far as it directs partition to be effected in the course of the execution thereof, is erroneous: because no partition of a revenue-paying estate can be effected through the Civil Court; and also because, even if the partition could be effected through the Civil Court, it should not have been left to be carried out in the course of the execution of the decree. If the other portion of the decree be correct, the error pointed out above will have to be rectified.

The defendants have appealed on the ground that the auction sale mentioned above conveyed the whole of the family pro-[652]perty. The plaintiffs, in their appeal, question the decree on two grounds: (i) because it does not award mesne profits, and (ii) because the order of the payment of Rs. 718-8 on account of Gopi Lal's decree is erroneous. The defendants further contend that, even if the finding of the lower Court, that only the father's interest passed by the auction-sale, be correct, the grandmother, the plaintiff No. 3, is not entitled to any share.

The first question to be determined is what was sold in the execution of the decree of Pertab. We are of opinion that the decision of the lower Court upon this point is correct.

The defendants have produced only the decree and the sale-certificate, which, as usual, recites that only the right and interest of the debtor were sold. There is nothing on the face of the decree which shows that the father was sued as representing the joint family. That being so, we think the decision of the lower Court upon this point is right. We are also of opinion that the decision of the lower Court, as regards the claim for mesne profits, and the liability of the plaintiffs in respect of their share of Gopi Lal's decree, is correct. The plaintiffs, after the auction-purchase, having, without any protest, allowed the defendant Badri Roy to take possession of the whole four annas of the mouza in suit, are not entitled to recover mesne profits from the latter, who honestly believed that he acquired good title to the said share. As regards Gopi Lal's decree, it not having been shown that the debt, which was the foundation of it, was contracted by the father for immoral purposes, the lower Court is right in holding that the plaintiffs are liable for this decree to the extent of their share.

We are also of opinion that the grandmother, on partition, is entitled to a share. The latest decision upon the point, the case of Sibbosondery Dabia v. Bussomully Dabia (I. L. R., 7 Cal. 191), takes the same view. All the authorities upon this subject are collected in the 2nd Vol. of Vyavastha Chandrika, pp. 356 to 359. They clearly support the view we take of this question. There is one passage, however, upon which appellants' pleader relies, viz., the one in which it is laid down that, [653] when the father makes the partition of his own choice, his mother is not entitled to a share. As regards this passage, it is sufficient to point out that, in this case, the partition is not being effected by the choice of the father. But we are also inclined to think, that this rule of law applies only to the self-acquired property of the father.

Both appeals therefore fail; but, for the reasons above given, the decree of the lower Court in its present form cannot stand. Instead thereof we make the following decree, viz.:—That the plaintiffs do recover possession of three-annas of the property in dispute on payment to the auction-purchaser, defendant, of Rs. 718-8, and the plaintiffs further recover costs in both Courts with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum.

Appeal dismissed—decree varied.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. ii, art. 127.—Suit for possession and partition—Acquiescence in alienation.

In a suit to obtain a share by partition of a joint family property, the interest of the plaintiffs' father having been sold in execution of a decree, limitation is to be computed from the time when exclusion from his share first becomes known to the plaintiffs.

ON the 22nd February 1878, the plaintiffs, the sons and grandsons of one Chowdhry Raghurur Dutt, sued to recover possession from the defendants, the heirs of one Nubi Buksh, of a one-anna ten-gandas three cowries and two krant share in certain joint ancestral property, and to have the several shares determined by partition.

[654] The plaintiffs stated that they owned and held jointly with their father under the Mithila law a two-anna one-ganda and one-cowrie share in certain mouzas; that their father became indebted to one of the present defendants, one Lachmessur Singh, on account of rent, under a ticca lease taken by their father, and that Lachmessur instituted a suit against him for such rent and obtained a decree on the 22nd April 1862; that, in execution of this decree, Lachmessur attached the right and interest of Chowdhry Raghurur Dutt in a two-anna share in one of the mouzas belonging to the family; and that, at the auction-sale, one Nubi Buksh, on 24th February 1866, became the purchaser, and forcibly dispossessed the present plaintiffs. They further alleged that, at the time the ticca lease was executed by their father, they themselves had attained their majority, and that they had not consented to the lease.

The defendants contended that the suit was barred by limitation, they having obtained possession through their ancestor Nubi Buksh, at and from the 13th January 1866; and in support of this, they produced from amongst the execution-proceedings an order of attachment, the date of which was illegible, but which set out that the under-tenants were to cease paying rent to the holders of the share with effect from 13th January 1866; they further contended that the plaintiffs were bound by the acts of their father in connection with the ticca lease, as he was then acting as manager on their behalf.

The Subordinate Judge found that the actual date of the sale was the 24th February 1866, and that the actual date on which the auction-purchaser was put into possession by the Nazir was the 17th August 1866, and that the period of limitation should be computed from that date, and that, therefore, the suit was not barred. He further found that the suit was not one for the reversal of the ticca potta, and consequently that it was not necessary to try the question as to whether the ticca tenure for the arrears of which the auction-sale was held, was acquired for the benefit of all the members of the family, and that it was not open to the defendants to say that the plaintiffs' rights were sold at the auction-sale, inasmuch as they were not parties to the rent suit. He, therefore, decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiffs.

[655] The defendant appealed to the District Judge, who found that the sons of Raghobur Dutt had not objected to their father taking the ticca lease, nor taken any objection to it until the time of this suit; and with respect to the question of limitation, that it should be computed from the 13th January 1866, from which date the rents payable to Chowdhry Raghobur Dutt, as head of the family, ceased to be payable to him; and he, therefore, considered the suit barred under art. 126 of sched. ii of Act XV of 1877, and reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—We think that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct, although we do not agree with the Judge in holding that art. 126 of Act XV of 1877 applies to this case. This was not a suit to set aside a father's alienation of ancestral property. In the first place, it was a suit for partition; and in the next place, it was a suit not to set aside an alienation made by the father, but to obtain a share by partition of a joint family property, the interest of the father having been sold in execution of a decree. That being so, art. 127 would apply. Under that article, a person excluded from joint family property and bringing a suit to enforce his right to a share therein must bring that suit within twelve years from the date or time when the exclusion becomes known to him. Now, in this case, upon the finding of the District Judge, the plaintiffs became aware of the alleged exclusion on the date of the attachment. The District Judge was, therefore, right (under art. 127) in holding that the plaintiffs' claim was barred by limitation, inasmuch as the suit was brought more than twelve years after the date of the attachment. We have dealt with the question of limitation [656] with reference to the provisions of Act XV of 1877, no question as to the applicability of the proviso under s. 2 of that Act having been raised in the lower Courts.

On the merits we also think that the District Judge's decision is correct. He found from the circumstances proved in the case that the plaintiffs, the sons, although they were adults at the time when the ticca lease was taken, were consenting parties to the transaction, and not only were they consenting parties to it but that they stood by and remained silent for a long time (nearly twelve years) without questioning the validity of the transaction. Upon these facts, the District Judge came to the conclusion that the original lease was a transaction in which the sons consented to the father acting on behalf of the whole joint family, and that afterwards they acquiesced in the sale of the property.

The suit has been properly dismissed, and the appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[On Appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.]
Act XL of 1858 Guardian and ward Minors—Relation of manager of joint estate to co-sharers under age—Effect of separation in estate.

A co-sharer in ancestral family estate, under the Mitakshara law, the co-proprietors being minors, though he may have power to manage the estate is not, in consequence, the guardian of such minors for the purpose of binding them by the execution of a bond charging the estate: nor is the eldest male member of the family, being of full age, guardian of such minors for the purpose of defending suits brought against them for money advanced in respect of the estate, unless he has obtained a certificate of administration under Act XL of 1858, s. 3. That Act shows that he is not guardian of the [657] minors; the care of whose persons and property (unless taken under the protection of the Court of Wards, by s. 2) are subject to the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts.

A family having become separate in estate with apportionment of a debt, once joint, among its several members, the sons of one of the latter, on their father's decease, are not liable for the whole debt for which he, at one time, was responsible jointly with the rest of the family, but only for his portion of the debt.

APPEAL from a decree of the High Court of Bengal (7th August 1879), modifying the order of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore (8th February 1877).

The question on this appeal was, whether or not the shares in an ancestral estate belonging to minor members of a family, living under the Mitakshara law, were chargeable in satisfaction of a decree obtained against them, in regard to the circumstances under which it had been obtained.

Ancestral estate in the Bhagalpore District belonged to three brothers,—Lalji Singh, Sheonandan Singh, and Harnandan Singh,—jointly with their cousin Nilkant Persad Singh, descended from a common great-grandfather. Lalji Singh died in 1866, leaving two sons, the present respondents, and a widow, their mother.

Harnandan Singh died in August 1870, having, in April of that year, executed a deed to Durgapersad, a banker, admitting, on behalf of the family, a debt of Rs. 16,348, and mortgaging the family property. At the end of 1870, Sheonandan Singh and his nephews, the minor sons of Lalji Singh, deceased, became separate from Nilkant Persad Singh.

The widow obtained in the Court of the District Judge, under Act XI. of 1858, an order for a certificate of guardianship of her two sons, empowering her to manage the estate of her deceased husband, Lalji Singh. But, on the 16th of February 1872, the High Court, on Sheonandan's appeal, on the ground that the widow of a brother was not entitled, under the Mitakshara law, to the management of a portion of the family property equal to her husband's share, reversed this order. The widow then remained guardian only of the persons of her children: see the report of these proceedings in Sheonandan Pershad Singh v. Mussamat (Chaneshyam Kooeree (17 W. R., 237).

[658] On the 11th of September 1875, Durgapersad, the banker above-mentioned, obtained a decree on the bond of April 1870 against the two minor sons of Lalji Singh, deceased, co-defendants with Sheonandan Persad Singh, who was described in the decree as defendant "for himself and as guardian of his two nephews."

These minors, suing by their mother as their guardian, in August 1876 brought the suit against Durgapersad, out of which this appeal arose, alleging that the decree of 11th September 1875 had been made in a suit in which they had not been properly represented, and had been obtained upon a mortgage bond not duly executed on their behalf. They, therefore, prayed for the exemption of their shares in the ancestral estate from liability on this account.

The defence was, that the debt, for which the mortgage-bond had been executed and for which the decree had been made, was an ancestral debt incurred for the family necessities, and that adjustments thereof had been, from time to time, made by different members of the joint-family for the others, the adjustment by Harnandan in 1870 having been one of them.

The Subordinate Judge, referring to the judgment in Hunooman Persad Panday v. Mussamat Babooee Munraj Koonweree (6 Moore's I. A., 393), found that the debt had not been contracted from necessity, nor for the benefit of the minors; and that Durgapersad had not inquired as to the existence of any necessity: also that, in the suit which had resulted in the decree of 11th September 1875, the minors had not been legally represented, nor were they liable on the bond of 1870. An order was accordingly made that the decree was not to be executed against the minors' shares.

On appeal, the High Court (MITTER and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) modified this decree.

The High Court concurred with the first Court in finding that, in the suit which resulted in the decree of the 11th September 1875, the minors were not properly represented. Then, in effect after upholding the finding of the first Court also as to the debt secured by the bond not being binding on the

[659] minors, the High Court differed from the Subordinate Judge in his conclusion, deciding as follows :—

“ But the balance which was due to the defendant's kothi from the plaintiffs' family at the time of Lalji's death, stands upon a different footing. It amounted to Rs. 10,623. The plaintiffs, the sons of Lalji, would be bound to pay their father's debt, unless it be proved that they are of such a nature as would not be obligatory upon them under the Mitakshara law. This the plaintiffs have entirely failed to establish. But the original debt due from the plaintiffs' family has been apportioned amongst the several members who have now separated. The plaintiffs, whose share in the family property is one-sixth, are, therefore, liable to that extent for the amount which was due from their father and the other members of the family at the time of his death.

“ The next question we have to determine is, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to a perpetual injunction upon the defendant, restraining him from executing the decree, dated the 11th September 1875, although, upon the finding in this suit, it is clear that they are liable for a portion of the debt secured by the bond which was the foundation of that decree. In justice and equity, we think the plaintiffs are entitled to be relieved from the liability of the decree of the 11th September 1875, to the extent to which their non-liability is established in this case. In the case of Lalla Bunseedhur v. Koonwur Bindeseree Dutt Singh (10 Moore's I. A., 454), the Sadr Dewany Adawlut made the decree in favour of the minor, making, at the same time, such provision in it as ensured the payment to the creditor of the amount found justly due to him. The Judicial Committee approved of this course.

“ The plaintiffs, therefore, are entitled to a declaration, that they are not liable under the decree of the 11th September 1875 further than to the extent to which their liability has been established in this case. They are bound to pay interest at the rate at which the loan was carrying interest at the time of Lalji's death, —i.e., at the rate of 18 per cent. per annum, till [660] the date of the bond, —i.e., 6th Bysakh 1277 (18th April 1870), and from the last-mentioned date to the date of the institution of the suit resulting in the decree of the 11th September 1875, at the rate stipulated in the bond, —i.e., 13½ per cent. per annum, and from the date of the institution of that suit to the date of realization at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. A perpetual injunction is to issue upon the defendant not to execute the decree of the 11th September 1875 against the minor plaintiffs or their heirs and representatives, after they have realized under it one-sixth of Rs. 10,623, with such interest as is mentioned above.

“ The costs of this suit, both in this as well as in the lower Court, are to be apportioned according to the result of our decision.”

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the Appellant.

Mr. J. Graham, Q. C., and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe for the Respondents.

For the appellant it was argued, that the decree of 11th September 1870 was well founded on the liability of the sons to pay the debt of their father; that a certain portion of the debt claimed having been rightly treated as payable by the sons, it was incumbent on them to show, but they had not shown, that the rest of it was of a different character, and was such that no liability for it attached to them. Reference was made to Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage, Chap. IX; and the cases of Hunooman Persad Pandey v. Mussamul Babooee Munraj Koonweree (6 Moore's I. A., 393) and Lalla Bunseedhur v. Koonwur Bindeseree Dutt Singh (10 Moore's I. A., 454).

Counsel for the respondents were not called upon.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir B. Peacock.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the High Court in a suit brought by the respondents, who are infants, in the name of their guardian, against the appellant, in the Court of Bhagalpore. The object of the suit was to prevent the appellant from executing a decree which he had obtained [661] against the respondents. The case arose in this way: The plaintiffs and Sheonandan and Harnandan were members of a joint Hindu family and joint proprietors of an ancestral family estate situate in the district of Bhagalpore and subject to the Mitakshara law. The suit in which the decree was obtained was brought on a bond, dated 21st of April 1870, for Rs. 16,348, executed by Harnandan on behalf of himself and as uncle and guardian of the present plaintiffs. Harnandan was not at the time when he executed the bond the guardian of the present plaintiffs, or at any time the manager of the estate; the elder brother, Sheonandan, after the death of Lalji, the father of the present plaintiffs, was the manager. The suit in which the decree about to be executed was obtained was brought against Sheonandan and the present plaintiffs. The present plaintiffs being minors, the suit was stated to be brought against Sheonandan as heir of Harnandan, and against the present plaintiffs under the guardianship of Sheonandan and Mussamat Ghaneshyam Konwari, mother and guardian of the minors. It turned out that the mother was not the guardian; that although a certificate of guardianship had been granted to the mother, that certificate had been set aside, and that the mother really was not the guardian. An ex parte decree was obtained against the defendants; but the mother came in and asked to have the decree set aside upon the ground that no notice had been served upon her. The Court ordered that the case should go down for another trial, but upon the second trial, the Judge who tried the case struck off the name of the mother and did not allow her to appear as the guardian of the infants. The suit was decreed against Sheonandan Persad and the plaintiffs for the total amount of the bond, with interest. The plaintiffs contend that that decree was not binding upon them, inasmuch as they were infants at the time, and were not represented by a guardian. On the other hand, it is contended, that Sheonandan Persad, who was named as guardian in the suit, was their guardian, he being the co-proprietor and manager of the estate. It is clear that the manager of an estate, although he may have the power to manage the estate, is not the guardian of infant co-proprietors of that estate for the purpose of binding them by a bond, [662] as Harnandan did, or for the purpose of defending suits against them in respect of money advanced with reference to the estate. Act XL of 1858, passed for making better provision for the care of the persons and properties of minors in Bengal, enacted (s. 2) that, "except in the case of proprietors of estates paying revenue to Government, who have been or shall be taken under the protection of the Court of Wards,"—which does not apply to this case—"the care of the persons of all minors (not being European British subjects), and the charge of their property, shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the Civil Court." That shows that Sheonandan Persad, although he was a co-proprietor and manager of the estate, was not the guardian of the infants, who, according to the Act, were subject to the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. Then s. 3 enacts, that "every person who shall claim a right to have charge of property in trust for a minor under a will or deed, or by reason of nearness of kin or otherwise, may apply to the Civil Court for a certificate of administration; and no person shall be entitled to institute or defend any suit connected with the estate of which he claims the charge until he shall have obtained such certificate." No certificate was obtained by Sheonandan Persad; and although it is stated that he was the guardian of the infants, he clearly was not the legal guardian, and had no right to defend that suit in their name. The decree in the suit, therefore, was not binding upon the infants. The plaintiff in that suit attempted to execute his decree against the property of the infants. The Judge of the first Court says:—"Sheonandan Persad's entire ancestral property, and what he had inherited after the death of Harnandan as his legal heir, were sold for satisfaction of several decrees." He had, therefore, no property upon which the decree could be executed; and therefore the plaintiff in that suit attempted to execute the judgment which he had obtained against the minors by seizing their property in execution of the decree. The object of the suit under appeal was to declare that the plaintiff in the former suit was not entitled to execute the decree against the infants' property and to restrain them from executing it against that property.

Then it was attempted to show that, although the decree had [663] been obtained against the infants without their having been represented by a guardian, still the suit was brought for a debt for which they were liable. Whether that could justify the execution of the decree it is not necessary now to inquire, because the Courts below went into the question whether the bond was given for a debt for which the infants were liable, and held that it was not. After stating all the facts of the case, the Judge says: "It would appear that the debt was contracted by a person who was not manager of the plaintiffs' estate; that it was not for any unavoidable or pressing necessity, or for any benefit of the estate of the plaintiffs; that the defendant did not inquire into those matters; and that he obtained a decree in a case wherein the plaintiffs were not properly represented. The decree cannot, therefore, be enforced against the person or property of the plaintiffs."

The case was appealed to the High Court, and that Court came to the same conclusion with reference to the greater portion of the debt included in the bond, viz., that the money had not been borrowed on account of any necessity; that it had not been borrowed for any benefit to the estate; and that no inquiry had been made by the plaintiff in the suit, at the time when he advanced the money, as to whether those advances were necessary for the protection of the estate or for the benefit of it; and the High Court therefore upheld the decision of the first Court to a certain extent. But then they found that a portion of the debt for which the bond was given was a debt which was due from Lalji, the father of the present plaintiff; and they held that although the present plaintiffs might not be liable upon the decree, they were bound to pay the debt due from their father. The debt which was due from their father was a sum of about Rs. 10,623. The High Court, however, did not award the whole of that sum against the plaintiffs. After stating that the father was liable for the original debt to the extent of that amount, they say, "But the original debt due from the plaintiffs' family has been apportioned amongst the several members, who have now separated. The plaintiffs, whose share in the family property is one-sixth, are therefore liable to that extent for the amount which was due from their father and [664] the other members of the family at the time of his death." It is objected that the decision of the High Court was wrong in that respect, and that if the plaintiffs were liable for the debt of their father, they were liable for the whole amount of the debt. But it appears to their Lordships that the plaintiffs were not liable for the whole debt for which their father and the other joint members of the family were originally liable, the debt having been apportioned amongst the several members of the family, who had separated, and several bonds given for the several portions of the debt. It appears, therefore, to their Lordships that the High Court was right, and that the infants were not bound to pay the whole of the debt for which the father was at one period jointly liable with the other members of the family, and that they were liable only for the father's portion of the debt.

Under these circumstances, their Lordships are of opinion that the High Court came to a correct decision; and they will humbly advise Her Majesty that the decree of the High Court be affirmed. The appellants must pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

I. THE HEAD-NOTE IS DEFECTIVE AND MISLEADING—

The official head-note is both defective and misleading. The portion as regards guardianship is only an obiter dicta, vide para. II infra; and that as regards apportioned debt is erroneous, vide para. III infra. The case is best described in (1884) 8 Bom. 395 (396, 397):—“A member of a joint family, who was neither the guardian of certain minors nor the manager of the family estate, had affected to deal with the interests of the minors by executing a money bond in the name of himself and them, and a decree had been obtained by the obligee against the real manager personally and as guardian of the minors in virtue of his being the co-proprietor and manager of the estate; and the object of the suit, by the quondam minors, was to prevent the obligee from executing his decree against them. Their Lordships held that “the manager, although he may have the power to manage the estate, is not the guardian of infant co-proprietors of that estate for the purpose of binding them by a bond . . . or for the purpose of defending suits in respect of money advanced with reference to the estate”; and they proceeded to consider the provisions of the Bengal Minors' Act, XI, of 1858, which corresponds is most particulars with the Bombay Minors' Act, XX of 1864. No doubt, it would seem, from their Lordships' remarks on the Act, that an application for the appointment of an administrator of the interest of minors in a joint family estate is contemplated, but it is obvious that their Lordships were not considering the general principle of the Act with reference to the estate of an undivided Hindu family, and we think their observations must be read strictly with reference to the particular case then under consideration.”

II. NO GUARDIAN CAN BE APPOINTED FOR A MINOR MITAKSHARA COPARCENER IN RESPECT OF HIS SHARE IN JOINT FAMILY PROPERTY—

“It has been well settled by a long series of decisions in India that a guardian of the property of an infant cannot properly be appointed in respect of the infant's interest in the property of an undivided Mitakshara family. And in their Lordships' opinion those decisions are clearly right, on the plain ground that the interest of a member of such a family is not individual property at all, and that therefore a guardian, if appointed, would have nothing to do with the family property”—Gharib-ul-lah v. Khalak Singh (1903) 25 All. 407 at 416; 30 I. A. 165 at 170. The Privy Council have, in these observations, settled that the apparently contrary dicta in this case are obiter dicta, and recognised the authority of cases in India to the same effect:—(1898) 20 All. 400; (1894) 19 Bom. 309; (1891) 19 Cal. 301; (1895) 17 All. 529; (1884) 8 Bom. 395; (1880) 10 Bom. 21. Those cases dealt also with the statutory provisions on the subject, XL of 1858, XX of 1864; VIII of 1890; (1892) 14 All. 498; (1887) 12 Bom. 18; (1882) 6 Bom. 593, were earlier cases on the subject; (1888) 11 Mad. 309 was with reference to the Boundary Act of 1860.

III. SON'S LIABILITY FOR PARTITIONED DEBT—

The head-note to this case gives the impression that this case is an authority for the position that the son is liable to the extent apportioned to the father, even though the father might be liable to the creditor for the whole debt. But this is wrong. *For, at the end of the judgment, p. 664, Sir Barnes Peacock says : " But it appears to their Lordships that the plaintiffs were not liable for the whole debt for which their father and the other joint members of the family were originally liable, the debt having been apportioned amongst the several members of the family, who had separated, and several bonds given for the several portions of the debt."

As regards the liability of the son for the debt of the father, incurred before, but enforced after partition, see 22 Mad. 519 : 9 M. L. J. 127.

IV. MINOR COPARCENER WHETHER A NECESSARY PARTY TO THE SUIT OR TRANSACTION—

He is not, and the manager represents him : see Doulat Ram v. Mehrehand (1887) 15 Cal. 70 ; (1910) 33 All. 71 ; (1898) 22 Mad. 461 ; (1899) 26 Cal. 319.

But it has been held, that when the minor is a party to the suit, the formalities prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code should be conformed to, in order to bind him :— (1913) 36 Mad. 295 P.C. cf. (1901) 23 All. 459 (married woman cannot defend, as guardian ad litem) ; 11 Cal. 509 (written order of permission not necessary).]

[On Appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.]

Construction of patta Mukurari ijara—Absence of words of inheritance.

The word 'mukurari' does not necessarily import perpetuity, although it may do so. Used in connection with the grant of an ijara in a patta, this word is not inconsistent with such interest, being only for life.

By a patta was granted a mukurari ijara at a fixed rent in a mouza, consisting mainly of waste lands, part of the grantee's zamindari, without words [665] of inheritance. On the death of the grantee, who brought the land under cultivation and died in possession many years after, the question arose whether the patta was for life, or for a heritable and transferable estate.

Held, that there being in the patta no words importing perpetuity, notwithstanding the use of the word 'mukurari,' the question was whether the intention of the parties that the grant should be perpetual, was shown with sufficient certainty in any other way : e.g., by the other terms of the instrument, its objects, the circumstances under which it was made, or the conduct of the parties to it. Held also, that such intention was not shown.

APPEAL from a decree of the High Court of Bengal (30th August 1879), reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore (23rd June 1877).

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by the respondent, the son and heir of the late Moharaja Jaimangul Singh, Zamindar of Pargana Gedhour, Zilla Monghyr, against the successors in estate of Roghunath Singh, who died in 1875. The latter had been tenant to the Moharaja, having obtained from him, in the year 1798, a patta granting to him a mokurari ijara of Mouza Balwani, uncultivated land belonging to the Moharaja's recently-settled zamindari of Gedhour. In this suit the respondent claimed possession of Mouza Balwani, on the ground that, according to the patta, the mokurari ijara was only for the life of Roghunath Singh, and that consequently, on his death in 1875, the right of possession attached to the Moharaja's estate had devolved on his successor. The defence was, that the mokurari ijara was hereditary and transferable, and that, therefore, Roghunath Singh's heirs and assigns were entitled to the possession, whilst they continued to pay the fixed rent. The patta is set forth in their Lordships' judgment, where all the facts material to this report are stated.

The suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore, who was of opinion that, by the patta, there was a grant in perpetuity.

On appeal to the High Court that decision was reversed, and the plaintiff was declared entitled to recover possession of the property in suit, with the mesne profits claimed.

The judgment of the Divisional Bench of the High Court [GARTH, C.J., and PRINSEP, J.] is reported in the Indian Law Reports, 5 Calcutta Series, 550.

[666] On this appeal,

Mr. J. F. Leith, Q.C., and Mr. R. V. Dwyne appeared for the Appellants.

Mr T. H. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe for the Respondent.

For the appellants it was argued, that an hereditary and permanent interest was granted by the patta of 1798, although express words of inheritance were not contained in it. The patta followed in its terms the Government grant to the Raja. Words of inheritance were not strictly required by Hindu law and usage in order to create a permanent interest. In Joba Singh v. Meer Nujeeb-Oolla (4 Sel. Rep., 271), where there had been a long possession by the tenant and his predecessors, a patta not containing words of inheritance was construed as if it contained them. In Dhunput Singh v. Gooman Singh (11 Moore's I. A., 433, at p. 463; s.c., 9 W. R., P. C., 3, at p. 7), the evidence of recognition of the hereditary character of a grant, and of long continued possession, received effect. In this case the state of things at the date of the patta, and the conduct of the parties, especially in certain litigation which had taken place, showed that the grant was of a permanent interest. The obligations imposed would hardly have been undertaken by them for less than an hereditary interest, for which a rent, adequate in regard to the state of the land, had been reserved.

For the respondent it was contended that the interest granted by the patta was only for life. Although evidence might supply the want of words of inheritance, yet a patta not containing such words was, prima facie, not perpetual, as appeared from the decision of Dhunput Singh v. Gooman Singh (11 Moore's I. A., 433, at p. 463; s.c., 9 W. R., P. C., 3 at p. 7). The case of Joba Singh v. Meer Nujeeb-Oolla (4 Sel. Rep., 271) rested, also, on the existence of intention to create a permanent interest. Here no such intention had been shown. A patta, notwithstanding the use of the expression 'mokurari,' did not, of itself, convey an hereditary interest, unless such terms as 'ba farzandan,' or 'naslan bád naslan,' or other words denoting descents, were contained in it; a proposition established by [667] many decisions of the Indian Courts since 1827. Reference was made to "Dyaram v. Bhobindur Naraen" (1 Sel. Rep., 131), "Joha Singh v. Meer Nujeeb-Oolla" (4 Sel. Rep., 271), "Doed Nemoo Sircar v. Watson" (Morton's Dec., 255), "Ameeroon Nissa Begum v. Maharaja Hetnarain Singh" (S. D. A. (1853), 648), "Soulutoonnissa v. Savi" (S. D. A. (1859), 1575), "Sorobur Singh v. Raja Mohender-narain Singh" (S. D. A. (1860), 577), "Raja Modenarain Singh v. Kantlall" (S. D. A. (1859), 1573). In "Mussamut Lakhu Kowar v. Roy Hari Krishna Singh" (3 B. L. R., A. C., 226), it was held, that the words 'mokurari istemrari' in a patta conveyed a right in perpetuity. See also "Karunakar Mahati v. Niladhiro Chowdri" (5 B. L. R., 652). But this had not been supported on appeal in the case of "Dhunput Singh v. Gooman Singh" (11 Moore's I. A., 433; s.c., 9 W. R., P. C., 3). The word 'maurasi' was the apt expression for an hereditary interest: see W. Macnaghten's note on this subject in the report of "Dyaram v. Bhobindur Naraen" (1 Sel. Rep., 131). In connection with the words in the patta, and their meaning, were cited—"Munrunjun Singh v. Raja Leelanund Singh" (3 W. R., 84), "Raja Leelanund Singh v. Thakoor Monorunjun Singh" (5 W. R., 101), "Baboo Gopal Lall Thakoor v. Telukchunder Rai" (10 Moore's I. A., 183), "Raja Suttosurrin Ghosal v. Mohesh Chunder Mitter" (12 Moore's I. A., 263), "Lekraj Roy v. Kunhya Singh" (L. R., 4 I. A., 223). Reference was also made to Reg. VIII of 1793, s. 16, as showing how certain mokurari leases had been dealt with by the Legislature as life-tenures at the Permanent Settlement.

Mr. Leith, Q. C., replied.

[668] Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir R. Couch.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Calcutta whereby the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalporo was reversed, and the respondent, the plaintiff in the suit, was awarded possession of Mouza Balwani with mesne profits thereof from the 22nd of August 1876, together with interest and costs.

Mouza Balwani is situate within, and forms part of, Pargana Godhour, the respondent's ancestral zamindari. On the 21st of February 1798, a patta was granted by the Government to Raja Gopal Singh and Raja Bharat Singh, therein described as zamindars of Pargana Gedhour, in which it is stated that the annual consolidated jama of the said Pargana, inclusive of the ganjats, markets, bazaars, all sayers and motahariffas, and also of rent-free lands held under sanads and without sanads, had, together with the fee of kanungos, been fixed and assessed permanently at sicca Rs. 15,001 from 1205 Fasli. In the register of Pargana Godhour for the year 1205 Fasli, the gross proceeds of Mouza Balwani are entered as Rs. 6-3-10, and the sudder jama as Rs. 4-1-5, and it is not disputed that at that time it was almost wholly in jungle and unprofitable. It appears from the thakbust map, which was prepared in 1846, that the entire area of the mouza is 7,500 bighas, of which 3,000 were then under cultivation.

On the 28th Kartick 1206 Fasli, corresponding with the 21st of November 1798, Raja Gopal Singh granted to Roghunath Singh, the father of the appellant Ram Lall Singh, a patta in the terms following:—

"I have acquainted myself with the contents of this.

* Reg. VIII of 1793, s. 16, enacted, that mokurari leases to persons not the actual proprietors of the lands included in such leases, if granted or confirmed by the Government, or obtained previously to the Company's accession to the Diwani, should be continued during the lives only of the lessees, subject to an abatement of the fixed jama for the authorized sayyer resumed or abolished; and on their death the settlement to be made with the actual proprietor of the soil.

"The stipulation of patta granted, on receipt of kubulyat, to Roghunath Singh, mokurari ijardar of Mouza Balwani, appertaining to Pargana Gedhour, in the Sircar and province of Behar, on behalf of Raja Gopal Singh, is to the effect and purport following :—

"Whereas the mokurari ijara patta of the said mouza is granted from 1206 F. S., at a consolidated jama specified below, inclusive of malikana subject to no objection or excuses on the score of calamities of weather together with fisheries and fruit trees ; with the exception of abkari and toddy gunjas bazaars, hats, all [669] sayer, mothurfa (taxes levied on professions), lakheraj lands, covered by sanads and not covered by sanads, rosum of rosumdars, daily allowances of rozanadars and chandads of chandadars ; the above-named person should, with ease of mind, make cultivation and improvement, pay the above amount year after year, crop season after crop season, instalment after instalment, as per kistbandi, in full, into the treasury of this Sircar (raj), raise no objection whatever on the score of drought, inundation, hailstorms, deaths and desertions, but himself bear the losses arising therefrom. In addition to the above jama, whatever profits may be derived from salutary improvement in cultivation by him shall belong to the mokuraridar, the Sircar having nothing to do with the same. In case of non-payment of instalments agreeably to the kistbandi, month after month, the mutsuddis of the Sircar shall have authority to realize the arrears by sale of the goods and chattels of the abovenamed, to send a sazawal or attaching officer to the said village, and make and receive the collections. The expenses of entertaining sazawal, tehsildar, and others shall be borne by the abovenamed. He should keep the tenants of the said village satisfied and contented by his good treatment, and make collections from the tenants according to order of Government, agreeably to pattas of nakdi and bhaoli lands to be granted to them, and never demand any sum in excess. He should not in any way commit oppression upon tenants, so that they may be able to stand to their engagements, and he should not oust them until the determination of their leases. He should grant receipts to the tenants upon payment of rent, instalment after instalment. He should not give a single span of land in the said village without asking permission, and without consent of the huzoor, nor resume any previously granted without the orders of the huzoor. Should the said lakheraj lands be hereafter resumed under orders of the huzoor, and the huzoor be pleased to make a settlement of the rent thereof with the ticca mokuraridars, then the abovenamed shall pay the rent thereof according to the settlement to be made by the huzoor. He should not suffer a single span of the land on the limits and boundaries to pass and to be included in the boundary of others. Should it so happen, he should of his own accord inform the Sircar of it, have the matter settled with the aid of the Sircar, and maintain and preserve the boundaries and limits of the said mouza. He should not allow thieves and paddlers to settle within the estate leased to him. God forbid ! should anybody's property be robbed and plundered, he should trace out the thieves and robbers with the property, and produce them [670] before the thanadar or the district authority. Should the thanadar apprehend the robbers and apply to him for aid, he shall forthwith afford assistance to him. He should bring without fail to the notice of the huzoor whatever property may be found belonging to dead persons, or that is deserted or lying buried under ground, without heirs to claim it. He should act in strict conformity with the orders already passed or to be hereafter passed by the huzoor for regulating settlement of rent with tenants and malgulzars of all classes, and should never raise any excuse or objection whatsoever. He should not demur or put forward any excuse in this, and should act up to the above.

Roghunath Singh executed a corresponding kabuliat bearing the same date.

The other appellants are the representatives of the defendants in the suit, who derived their title from Roghunath Singh and denied the plaintiff's title; and no question is raised in this appeal as to their derivative title, nor as to Raja Bharat Singh not having joined in the patta.

On the death of Raja Gopal Singh, in or about October 1812, his son Raja Jaswant Singh declined to receive the rent of Mouza Balwani, alleging that his father had taken possession thereof at the end of the year 1219 Fasli under Reg. VII of 1799, and that a fresh patta had been granted to Roghunath Singh for eleven years from 1220 Fasli, at the yearly rent of Rs. 51. Thereupon summary proceedings were taken by Roghunath Singh to compel the Raja to receive his rent at the old rate, the result of which was that Jaswant Singh [671] was referred to a regular suit if he desired to substantiate his allegation.

On the 13th of February 1821, Raja Nawab Singh, the younger brother and successor of Jeswant Singh, who had died in the previous year, brought a suit in the Court of the Registrar of Monghyr against Roghunath Singh and his surety, to recover the rents then due for Mouza Balwani under the alleged lease for eleven years. In his answer, Roghunath Singh asserted that he held under the patta of 1798, and denied the eleven years' lease. And the District Judge, by a decree, made on the 9th of January 1826, on appeal from the decision of the Registrar, directed that Roghunath Singh should remain in possession in accordance with the patta of 1798, and pay the rent therein reserved.

In 1869, the respondent succeeded to the zamindari, and on the 24th of July 1875, Roghunath Singh died. This suit was brought on the 22nd of August 1876, and the only question in the appeal before their Lordships is whether the patta is a lease for life or in perpetuity.

Their Lordships were referred by the learned counsel for the respondent to several cases in the late Sudder Court, in which it was ruled that a lease at a fixed rent without more did not import perpetuity, and that to create a perpetual lease the addition of the words “from generation to generation,” or other words importing perpetuity, were necessary.

On the other hand it was held by the High Court at Calcutta, in a case of ghatwali tenure, where the words “mokurari istemrari” were used, that the holding was perpetual—Munorunjun Singh v. Leelanund Singh (3 W. R., 84) and Raja Leelanund Singh v. Thakoor Munorunjun Singh (5 W. R., 101).

But this Committee, on an appeal from that decision, held, that these words might mean either permanent during the life of the person to whom the grant was made, or permanent as regards hereditary descents (13 B. L. R., 124).

In the present case the word 'istemrari' is not used. The instrument is called "the mokurari ijara patta," and their Lordships, in the case of the Bengal Government v. Nawab [672] Jafir Hossein Khan (5 Moore's I. A., 467, at p. 498), stated their opinion to be, that though 'mokurari' might import perpetuity, that was not the necessary meaning of the word.

The question then is, whether the intention of the parties is shown by the other terms of the instrument, the circumstances under which it was made, or the subsequent conduct of the parties, with sufficient certainty, to enable the Courts, in the absence of words importing perpetuity, to pronounce that the grant was perpetual? The Subordinate Judge held, that the patta was intended to be hereditary, because it appeared that the mouza was covered with jungle when the mokurari was granted, and that it had since been brought under cultivation through the exertions and labour of the original mokuraridar and his representatives, and therefore it might, "consistently with the principles of equity, be presumed that the lessor and lessee must have thought at the time that the lease in question should be granted in perpetuity, because it is void of reason to suppose that the lessee should have taken the lease for his life, and brought it under cultivation at heavy expense and through great exertion." As to the subsequent conduct of the parties he said, that "if the representatives of Gopal Singh had considered the lease as one for life, they would have never adopted such steps as were incompatible with their position and dignity to cancel such life-interest as was thought by themselves to last only for a few days, and Roghunath Singh himself would not have described the mokurari as a permanent one." Their Lordships are unable to see the force of this observation; but it appears from it that the Subordinate Judge did not fail to consider everything that he thought might show the intention of the parties. It is, therefore, to be remarked that he did not refer to any of the provisions in the patta or of the words used to express them. Apparently he thought they did not show any intention that the patta was to be perpetual.

The High Court agreed with the Subordinate Judge that the lease was granted with a view to the improvement of the mouza, but thought that this did not show it was intended to be [673] hereditary, and referred to some of the provisions which they said seemed necessarily to imply that a substantial interest in the property remained in the Raja, and were quite inconsistent with his having permanently parted with that interest. Their Lordships do not concur in all the views taken by the High Court of these provisions, but on the other hand they do not find in them sufficient to show an intention that the lease should be permanent. They are consistent with either intention.

A case in the High Court at Calcutta, printed in the Record, was referred to by the learned counsel for the appellants, in which Mr. Justice MITTER said,—"We do not find it usual that tenants taking upon themselves the trouble and outlay for clearing and reclaiming jungle lands are contented with anything short of hereditary interest in them." But the judgments of the learned Judge and the lower Court are expressly stated to be founded upon the fair construction of the terms of the grants, and the surrounding circumstances attendant on the execution of them, as well as the conduct of the plaintiff in connection with that and similar other tenures in his zamindari. The learned Judge only refers to what is usual as a circumstance which supports his view.

Their Lordships would repeat what was said by this Committee in Dhunput Singh v. Gooman Singh (11 Moore's I. A., 465), where it was proved that the hereditary character of the patta had been recognized by the successive zamindars. "If, on the one hand, it is improbable that the grantee should undertake such an obligation without some fixity of tenure and some assured and permanent interest in the lands, it is, on the other hand, equally improbable that the grantor should part for ever with all his interest in the improveable value of the lands."

As the appellant is unable to point to any words in the patta importing perpetuity, it appears to their Lordships, upon a consideration of the object of the patta and its language and provisions, as well as the surrounding circumstances, that the intention to grant a perpetual lease does not sufficiently appear; and they are, therefore, unable to say that the decision of the [674] High Court is not the right one. They will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal, and the costs thereof will be paid by the appellants.

Appeal dismissed.

Second Appeal—Remand—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 562, 588, cl. 28.

On an appeal from an order under s. 562 of the Civil Procedure Code remanding the case, the High Court cannot consider the facts on which the lower Appellate Court passed the order of remand. All that it can do under s. 588, cl. 28, is to consider whether, on the findings of fact by the lower Appellate Court, that Court was right in remanding the case.

* Appeal from Appellate Order, No. 285 of 1881, against the order of Baboo Jibun Krishna Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Pubna, dated the 10th August 1881, reversing the order of Baboo Dwarkanath Bhattacharjee, Munsif of Sherajunge, dated the 28th April 1881.

Bahoo Preonath Pundit for the Appellant.

Baboo Mohiny Mohun Roy and Baboo Gurudas Banerjee for the Respondent.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and BOSE, JJ.), which was delivered by Prinsep, J.—The only ground taken before us in this appeal is, that it being an appeal from an order under s. 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure remanding the case, the appellant in second appeal is entitled to ask us to consider the facts on which the lower Appellate Court passed the order of remand. It [675] appears to us that this is altogether opposed to the principle of the Code of Civil Procedure, which, except in the cases provided for in chap. xlii, allows no second appeal. As we understand s. 588, cl. 28, we are competent merely to consider whether, on the findings of fact by the lower Appellate Court, that Court was right in remanding the case under s. 562. It would be a striking anomaly if it were possible, on an appeal such as this against an interlocutory order, for us to do more than we could do against the final order passed in the same case, --that is to say, to deal with findings of fact by the lower Appellate Court.

We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Suit for arrears of rent—Ejectment—Beng. Act VIII of 1869 s. 59.

The term 'under-tenure,' as used in s. 59 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, is not confined to a tenure intermediate between the zamindar and the ryot but includes any tenure which "by title-deeds, or by the custom of the country, is transferable by sale," and therefore a zamindar, who has obtained a decree for arrears of rent against a ryot who has a transferable jote, is not entitled to eject the ryot, but his only remedy is to sell the holding under s. 59 of the Act.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 340 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Bhugwan Chunder Chuckerbutty, Subordinate Judge of Rungpore, dated the 24th November 1879, modifying the decree of Baboo Alat Behary Ghose, Second Munsif of Rungpore, dated the 12th September, 1879.

Nund Lall Ghose v. Seedee Nazir Alli Khan (S. D. A. Vol. II, 1860, p. 382) followed.

IN this case the plaintiff, a zamindar, had obtained a decree against a ryot for arrears of rent. It was found in the lower Court that the jote was of a transferable nature. The decree provided that, if the amount due was not paid within twenty-one days, the defendant should be ejected. The defendant appealed, and the lower Appellate Court held, that the jote being of a transferable nature, the defendant could not be ejected. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

[676] Baboo Sreenath Dass and Baboo Kishory Mohun Roy for the Appellant.

Mr. Mendies for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and BOSE, JJ.) was delivered by Prinsep, J.—The plaintiff in this case on appeal contends, that, having obtained a decree for arrears of rent, he is entitled to an order for ejectment within the terms of s. 52 of the Rent Act. The lower Appellate Court has held, that the defendant, having a transferable jote, is protected against ejectment, and that the only remedy which the plaintiff has, is under s. 59 to sell that holding.

It is argued on behalf of the appellant, by Baboo Sreenath Dass, that, although the zamindar might have the right of sale, he is entitled, if he so desires it, to eject the ryot, and he maintains that s. 59 does not apply to a jote such as it has been found the defendant holds, she being a cultivating ryot, but to intermediate tenures between the zamindar and the cultivating ryots.

It is a matter of some surprise to us to find that, although the present Rent Law has been in force for more than twenty years, this point should not have been determined by the High Court. The only case at all in point is that of Nund Lall Ghose v. Seedee Nazir Ally Khan (S. D. A., Vol. II, 1860, p. 382). In that case, it is true, the tenure was a ganti-tenure of some considerable dimensions, but the rule laid down by the Court in that case is, in our opinion, equally applicable to the conditions of the present case. Following that decision, in our opinion, the term 'under-tonure,' as used in s. 59, is not confined to a tenure intermediate between the zamindar and the ryot, but it would include any tenure which, to use the words of s. 59, "by title-deeds or the custom of the country is transferable by sale."

In this view, we think that the lower Appellate Court was right in holding that plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for ejectment.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL from the decision of WILSON, J., dated 20th July 1881.

The hearing of this case in the lower Court will be found reported in I. L. R., 7 Cal., 665. The suit was for an injunction to restrain the defendants from trespassing on, or in any way using, a certain lane, to which the plaintiffs laid claim under an express grant from the original owner of the property. The defendants contended that the lane had been dedicated by one Bydonauth Dutt to the public as a passage to the lands of his tenants, and that they had used the lane in question for more than twelve years before suit.

Mr. Bonnerjee (with him Mr. Allen) for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Jackson (with him Mr. Mittra) for the Defendants.

Mr. Justice WILSON found that the defendants had a right of way over the lane, and that the plaintiffs had not proved a title to the soil of the lane, but only a right of way over it, and granted an injunction restraining Tarasoodery and Shama Churn Dey (two of the defendants) from using their mehter's doors for cleaning their privies into the lane or otherwise using the lane in connection with the cleaning of their privies, except merely for the carriage of the night-soil from their premises to the street; and he dismissed the suit against the other defendants.

The two defendants against whom the injunction had been granted appealed; and the plaintiffs brought a cross-appeal.

Mr. Phillips and Mr. Mittra for the Appellants in the first appeal and Respondents in the cross-appeal.

Mr. Evans, Mr. Bonnerjee, and Mr. Allen for the Respondents in the first appeal and appellants in the cross-appeal.

[678] The Judgments of the Court were delivered by both GARTH, C.J., and PONTIFEX, J., in which they agreed with the Court below for substantially the same reasons, first, that the plaintiffs had failed to prove a title to the soil of the lane, and could be considered as entitled only to a right of way over it; secondly, that the defendants had a right of way over the land and a right to use the lane for the purpose of carrying away nightsoil from their premises in such way as would least affect the plaintiffs in the enjoyment of their premises; and thirdly, that this suit had been rightly dismissed as against the defendants against whom it had been dismissed in the lower Court. But being unable to agree with the Court below as regarded the injunction granted against the appealing defendants, their Lordships reversed so much of the decree as granted the injunction, and dismissed the suit against all the defendants.

Appeal allowed.

Notice of dissolution of partnership—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 264—

Jurisdiction—New trial, Ground of.

Section 264 of the Contract Act is not intended to be an exhaustive exposition on the question of notice of a dissolution of partnership.

The mode of notification of dissolution required in the case of old customers, who are known to the firm as having dealt with it, is an express or specific notice by circular or otherwise. But in the case of the general public, the most effectual public notice which can reasonably be given is requisite.

Roop Chund Pundit v. Madhub Chunder Bose (see note, post, p. 681) overruled.

A new trial may be granted on the ground of want of jurisdiction in the Court, though such ground was not formally raised or recorded at the original hearing.

THIS was a suit brought in the Calcutta Court of Small Causes on a promissory note signed by a firm under the name and style of 'Greeschunder Mookerjee & Co.'

[679] The suit was brought against Edujlee Cowasjee Bijnee, Shamasoodery Dabee, and Kally Puddo Mookerjee. The first defendant alone appeared and defended, denying the partnership and denying his indebtedness; and although not formally recorded at the trial, a plea of want of jurisdiction was raised on a day subsequent to the delivery of judgment. The Judge decided the case against the defendants.

A new trial was applied for on the ground (amongst others) that the Court had not considered the plea of want of jurisdiction. The Judges before whom the application was made differed in opinion; and, in consequence of such difference, a new trial was allowed.

At the re-hearing the following facts were admitted :—

1st.—That the first defendant carried on business with the other defendants up to the 29th February 1880.

2nd.—That a deed of dissolution of partnership was executed between the first defendant and the other defendants, dated 21st May 1880, in which it was recited that the dissolution took effect on and from the 29th February 1880.

* Case stated for the opinion of the High Court under s. 55 of Act IX of 1850.

3rd.—That notice of dissolution was advertised on the 27th May 1880 in the 'Englishman,' 'Daily News,' and 'The Statesman,' and in the 'Exchange Gazette' of the 27th and 28th May 1880.

4th.—That there was no advertisement in the 'Calcutta Gazette' or in the 'Gazette of the Government of India,' or any direct notice to the plaintiff.

5th.—That the promissory note sued on was given to the plaintiff in the name of 'Greeschunder Mookerjee & Co.,' on the 23rd April 1881, fourteen months after the interest of the first defendant in the firm had ceased.

6th.—That the first defendant had not, since the 29th February 1880, carried on any business in Calcutta, except so far as he might be considered to have been a member of the firm of Greeschunder Mookerjee & Co., under s. 264 of the Contract Act, and that he had not resided, or personally worked for gain, in Calcutta since February 1880.

7th.—That there had been other dealings with the plaintiff [680] before the dissolution of the partnership, but unconnected with this promissory note.

The officiating First Judge (Mr. MacEwen) was of opinion, that although the first defendant might be liable, having regard to the decision in the case of Roop Chund Pandit v. Madhub Chunder Bose (see note, post, p. 681), yet it did not necessarily follow that the liability could be enforced in the Calcutta Court of Small Causes, inasmuch as the first defendant only carried on business in Calcutta constructively, and section 28 of Act IX of 1850 implied the carrying on of business in which a defendant had an actual interest; and that s. 264 of the Contract Act did not affect the construction to be put upon s. 28 of Act IX of 1850; the expression 'affected' in s. 264 of the Contract Act had reference only to the right of a party dealing with the firm to recover his money when no public notice had been given, but could not confer on the Court jurisdiction unless it existed independently of s. 264.

The Second Judge (Baboo Koonjolall Banerjee) was of opinion that there being no evidence that the plaintiff had any notice of the dissolution of the partnership, there had been no legal dissolution of that partnership, and therefore, that it must be taken to be subsisting, and that inasmuch as the other partners of the firm carried on business in Calcutta, the Court had jurisdiction.

Judgment was, therefore, given in favour of the plaintiff, contingent on the opinion of the High Court, on the following questions:—

1st.—Whether, having regard to the facts as stated, the suit should not be dismissed as against the first defendant and decreed against the second and third?

2nd.—Or whether judgment should not be given against all the defendants?

3rd.—Whether, in consequence of the plea of want of jurisdiction not having been formally raised at the original hearing, and there being nothing on the face of the record to raise the plea, the new trial should not have been refused; and if so, whether this new trial is not ab initio bad.

Mr. Trevelyan for the plaintiff contended that the questions of jurisdiction and partnership were, in this case, one, inasmuch as, [681] if the notice given of the dissolution was insufficient, the partnership would be in existence, and the Court would have jurisdiction. As to the notice of dissolution required, it should be such as would be likely to reach all the public living in places where the partners carry on their business. The notice here was advertised in the daily papers, and in the 'Exchange Gazette.' Was that sufficient notice to the plaintiff, who does not understand English?

Mr. Allen for the defendant.—An advertisement in the 'Exchange Gazette' is sufficient notice of dissolution, and is a sufficient 'public notice' under s. 264 of the Contract Act. The Legislature, when intending that matters should be made public, give the way in which these matters should be published;—see ss. 347 and 354 of the Code of Civil Procedure. "The local Official Gazette and the public newspapers" are mentioned. These channels have, we contend, been made use of by us. The case of *Roop Chund Pundit v. Madhub Chunder Bose says, that no notice save one published in the 'Official Gazette' is good. [GARTH, C.J.—In that case the question referred was whether a dissolution should be advertised in the 'Calcutta Gazette' or in the 'Gazette of the Government of India,' but the deed of partnership stipulated that any dissolution should be advertised in the 'Calcutta Gazette.' When you look at s. 264, it does not follow that persons dealing with a firm will be affected even if a public notice has been given,—i.e., the converse of the proposition stated in the section is not affirmed.] I read the section as meaning, that if a special notice is given, there need be no public notice. Section 264 is an amendment of the existing law, and not a definition of it. The Contract Act is stated in the Preamble to be an Act to define and amend the [682] law of contracts existing before the Act was passed. In England, the 'London Gazette' is the gazette used for the publication of bankruptcies, because it is the gazette used in the mercantile world, and I apply the same reason for the use of the 'Exchange Gazette' here. On the question of jurisdiction, I contend that it was raised in the lower Court; it was raised in the new trial. The Court allowed me to raise the question, and it was at an end, as I obtained a new trial. The Second Judge has now tried to refer the question. I say he cannot do so, as it was finally decided in the Small Cause Court.

The Opinion of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and WHITE, J) was given by Garth, C.J.—Having heard these questions properly argued, I am satisfied that, in the case of Roop Chund Pundit v. Madhub Chunder Bose (ante, p. 681 n), Mr. Justice PONTIFEX and myself were wrong in holding that, as a matter of law, the Official Gazette was the only proper medium of publication under s. 264 of the Contract Act. I discussed this subject with Mr. Justice PONTIFEX before he left the Court, and I am authorised by him to say, that he quite agrees with me in so thinking.

In that case, unfortunately, we had not the advantage of hearing counsel; and we rather took it for granted, without sufficiently considering the relative character of the two publications, that the Official Gazette in Calcutta was, in most material respects, the same sort of paper as the 'London Gazette' in England. But in fact this is not so. The 'London Gazette' has not only a large and general circulation in the commercial world, but it is the usual and now almost the invariable mode of advertising new partnerships, dissolutions of partnership, bankruptcy and insolvency notices, and all that class of news.

* The opinion of the High Court, GARTH, C.J., and PONTIFEX, J., in this case, was as follows:—

We think that the notice of dissolution required by s. 264 of the Contract Act should be published in the Official Gazette; the publication of such a notice in the 'Calcutta-Exchange Gazette' would clearly not be sufficient.

We may add that, with respect to old customers of a firm as distinguished from subsequent purchasers after a dissolution, it would probably be necessary that, besides the advertisement in the Gazette, special notice by circular or otherwise should be proved.

The 'Calcutta Gazette,' on the other hand, deals principally with official matters. It does indeed contain a number of advertisements of partnerships, insolvencies and the like, but not nearly the same amount of such information as the 'London Gazette,' and we have reason to believe, that, in the commercial [683] world, especially among the natives, its circulation is not nearly so wide as that of the 'London Gazette' in England.

So far as we can ascertain, the 'Exchange Gazette,' although not properly speaking, a newspaper, has a larger circulation, especially in the native quarters of this city, than the Official Gazette; but having considered the question referred to us very carefully, I am not prepared to say, that, as a matter of law, the publication of a notice of dissolution of partnership in either of those papers, or in both, is always sufficient public notice within the meaning of s. 264 of the Contract Act.

I think, moreover, that the question of sufficiency of notice, whether public or otherwise, is one rather of fact than of law. It may be a question of law, to what sort of notice any particular customer, or class of customers, is entitled; but how far in each case such notice may have been actually given, must generally be a question of fact.

I confess that I feel great difficulty in ascertaining the true meaning of s. 264 of the Contract Act; especially as regards old customers, who, like the plaintiff in the present case, have dealt with the firm before its change or dissolution. I suppose the section means, that all persons dealing with a firm, whether old customers or new, will be affected by any dissolution of the firm or any change of its members if they have actual notice of the fact. This would be quite in conformity with the law of England. But supposing they have no actual knowledge of the fact, is it intended that all persons dealing with the firm, whether old or new customers, are to be bound by public notice of such dissolution or change, whatever the words 'public notice' may mean? The defendant contends, that this is the true meaning of the section; and there is certainly some difficulty in giving a meaning to the words "of which no public notice has been given" unless they are read in that way. And yet I cannot but believe, that if it had been intended to introduce such a serious change into the law, as that construction would involve, the language used would have been much more clear and explicit, and that the rule would have been laid down in an affirmative and not in a negative form.

It is possible that the section was not intended to apply to [684] old customers at all, but only to the general public after the dissolution. But however that may be, I think, after careful consideration, that the section was not intended as an exhaustive exposition of the law, and that we must look elsewhere in the Act for a rule to guide us on this occasion.

The law which regulates the liability of partners for the acts of their co-partners is a branch of the law of agency; and in the absence of any specific rule upon the subject under the head of partnership, we must look to the law of agency for the solution of our present question. Each partner is the agent of his co-partners for the purpose of conducting debts and obligations in the usual course of partnership business (see ss. 249^{*} and 251[†] of the Contract Act, Lindley on Partnership, 3rd edition, p. 248). And when this agency has once been established, it does not cease as regards third persons, until its termination has become known to them (see s. 208[‡] of the Contract Act).

In the case, therefore, of a dissolution of the partnership, or of the retirement of one of its members, the agency as between the partners themselves would cease from the time of such dissolution or retirement; but as regards third persons, the agency would continue until it had been duly notified. And the mode of notification which the law requires is different in the case of old and known customers of the firm from what it is in the case of other persons. In the case of old customers, who are known to the firm as having dealt with it, an express or specific notice by circular or otherwise should be given (see Lindley on Partnership, 3rd edition, pp. 429 and 430, and the cases there cited). But as regards persons who have not dealt with the firm (or, in other words, the general public), it is impossible in a large community to give any specific notice; and therefore, as regards them, the most effectual public notice which can reasonably be given is sufficient to terminate the agency (see Lindley on Partnership, 3rd edition, p. 430). What is such a public notice must depend upon circumstances, upon the locality, and whether there are any and what newspapers in circulation there, or upon what are the usual means of giving public notice in the neighbourhood. And this, as I have said before, will generally be a question not of law, but of fact.

[685] In this particular case the plaintiff was an old and known customer of the firm. There was no reason why he should not have had express notice of the retirement of the first defendant; and as he had no such notice, and is not proved to have been aware of the fact, we are of opinion that the first defendant was liable upon the promissory note.

Another objection was then taken, that the first defendant was not subject to the jurisdiction of the Court; and as to this the first question is, whether, under the circumstances, that defendant was entitled to raise the point when moving for a new trial. We think it was in the discretion of the Court whether it should be raised or not; and as it was allowed to be raised, and formed one of the grounds on which the new trial was granted, we think that the first defendant was at liberty to insist upon it when the new trial was had.

In our opinion it is a good answer to the suit.

The question turns upon whether Eduljee, the first defendant, was, within the meaning of s. 28 of the Small Cause Courts Act, carrying on business within the Calcutta jurisdiction at the time of bringing the action or at the time when the cause of action arose. We understand, although it is not so expressly stated in the case, that, at both those periods, Eduljee was absent

Partner's liability for debts of partnership.

†[Sec. 251:—Each partner, who does any act necessary for or usually done in carrying on the business of such a partnership as that of which he is a member, binds his co-partners to the same extent as if he were their agent duly appointed for that purpose.]

Partner's power to bind co-partners.

When termination of agent's authority takes effect as to agent and as to third persons.

‡[Sec. 208:—The termination of the authority of an agent does not, so far as regards the agent, take effect before it becomes known to him, or, so far as regards third persons, before it becomes known to them.]

from Calcutta and living at Bombay. He had dissolved partnership with his co-defendants on the 21st of May 1880; but from his omission to give notice to the plaintiff, who was an old customer of the firm, had not determined, as between himself and the plaintiff, the agency of his co-defendants to bind him by a promissory note executed in the name of the old firm, and he is therefore liable upon the note.

Is this a carrying on business by him within the meaning of the above section? We are of opinion that it is not. Since the dissolution of the partnership, Eduljee has taken no part nor had any interest in the business. If he can be said to carry it on, it is only in the sense that he has not, as against the plaintiff and other old customers, properly put an end to the authority of his former partners to bind him by their acts done in the partnership name. We are not prepared to dissent from the authorities cited in the reference of Subheraya Mudali v. The [686] Government (1 Mad. H. C. Rep., 286) and Mitchell v. Hudson (23 L. J., Q. B., 273), which lay down, that the carrying on of business must be personal on the part of a defendant, if it is sought to bring him within the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court on the ground of carrying on business.

As the result of our judgment will be, that the plaintiff can get no decree against the first defendant in the Calcutta Small Cause Court, and it is doubtful whether, if he accepts a decree against the two other defendants in that Court, he will not lose his remedy against the first defendant, we think, that the plaintiff should have an opportunity afforded him to elect, whether he will accept a decree against the two last defendants alone, or will submit to a nonsuit with a view to hereafter suing the first defendant in some other Court.

If the plaintiff declines to submit to a nonsuit, our answer to the two first questions submitted to us by the Small Cause Court is:—

1. That, upon the facts stated, the suit should be dismissed against the first defendant Eduljee, and decreed against the second and third defendants alone.

2. Our answer to the question submitted at the instance of the plaintiff's vakeel is, that the now trial was properly granted.

As it is stated in the case that the first defendant undertook to have the case argued by the Counsel in this Court at his own expense, we shall make no order as to costs.

MR. JUSTICE FIELD AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Krishtokishore Dutt and others.....Judgment-debtors

versus

Rooplall Dass and another.....Decree-holders.*

Form of decree -- Drawing up of decree -- Duty of decree-holder --

Execution of decree in two or more districts.

It is the duty of the judgment-debtor as well as the decree-holder to see that the decree is properly drawn up; and if he does not do so, the Court will execute it according to its terms.

A decree may be executed simultaneously in two or more districts.

Saroda Prosand Mullick v. Lutcheemput Singh Doogar (14 Moore's I. A., 529; S. C. 10 B. L. R., 214) followed.

IN this case the judgment and order of the Court below were as follows:—

“ In the application for execution of decree the decree-holders state that the properties which the judgment-debtors have within the jurisdiction of the Court are not sufficient to liquidate the debt due under the decree, and pray that the properties which the judgment-debtors have in the districts of Burrisaul, Furreedpore, and the 24-Parganas be also attached, and the amount covered by the decree be realized by selling those properties. The properties which the judgment-debtors possess in the districts of Burrisaul and Furreedpore have already been directed to be attached under this Court's order of the 1st instant. Against the said order the judgment-debtors have raised an objection, stating that, in an execution case, this Court has no power to pass an order directing the attachment of properties lying within the jurisdiction of another Court. This objection appears to be well founded. The only thing this Court can do towards the execution of the decree, is to forward a certificate to the Court within the jurisdiction of which the property lies. See Saroda Prosand Mullick v. [688] Lutcheemput Singh Doogar (14 Moore's I. A. 529; S.C. 10 B. L. R. 214). It appears from the ruling in that case that this Court can forward certificates to one or more Courts, keeping the decree in the course of execution on the file of this Court.” The following order was passed: “ Ordered, that the decree in question be kept on the file of this Court in the course of execution; that copies of the decree and of this order, accompanied by a certificate, be forwarded to the authorities in the districts of Backergunge and Furreedpore; that the decree-holders should, in the first place, cause the properties of the judgment-debtors lying within the jurisdiction of this Court to be attached and sold; that, in case the whole of the amount due to them under the decree be not realized by means of the sale aforesaid, then they, the decree-holders, shall be at liberty to realize the portion of the decretal amount which may remain unrealized by the sale of the properties which the judgment-debtors possess in the districts of Backergunge and Furreedpore. This order, however, will not preclude the decree-holders from causing, in the first place, under the certificates hereinbefore referred to, the properties of the judgment-debtors lying within the jurisdiction of another Court to be attached. But it is stated that the decree-holders have not at present applied for a certificate of attachment of the judgment-debtors' property lying in the district of the 24-Parganas."

From this order the judgment-debtors appealed.

Baboo Bama Churn Banerjee for the Appellants.— There is no provision in the Procedure Code of 1877 by means of which a decree may be executed concurrently by the Court which passed it and by other Courts. The case of Saroda Prosad Mullick v. Lutcheemee Singh Doogar (14 Moore's L. A., 529; s.c., 10 B. L. R., 211) was a case under Act VIII of 1859. Besides, this is a mortgage-decree under which the Court is bound to sell the mortgaged property first, and there is no allegation that it is insufficient.

Babu Mohony Mohun Roy and Baboo Lall Mohun Dass for the Respondents.

[689] The Judgment of the Court (FIELD and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J. We think there are no grounds for this appeal. The suit was brought to recover a sum of money which was secured by a mortgage. The decree declared that the amount claimed was due to the plaintiffs, and it further declared that, for the recovery of the amount, the property mortgaged could be made liable; in other words, it was a decree in the nature of a money-decree, which also contained a declaration of lien upon certain property. But the decree did not say in express language that the amount decreed was to be recovered in the first instance from the mortgaged property; and that any balance not recovered therefrom might be recovered from the other property belonging to the judgment-debtors. It is now contended before us that, although these express words are not to be found in the decree, it ought to be construed as if they had been actually inserted. We think that we cannot accede to this contention. If the appellants were dissatisfied with the decree in the particular form in which it was drawn up, they should have applied to the Court which passed such decree to amend it by inserting words which would have precluded the decree-holders from proceeding against any other property belonging to the judgment-debtors, until they had first exhausted the property included in the mortgage-bond.

The second contention raised before us is, that the decree cannot be simultaneously executed in more than one district. The decree was a decree of the Dacca Court, and the mortgaged property is situated not in Dacca only, but in other districts; and the judgment-debtors are further stated to have property in the districts of Burrisaul, Furreedpore, and the 24-Parganas. With reference to clause (b) of s. 223¹ of the Code of Civil Procedure, the decree-holders stated in their application for execution, that the whole of the decretal amount could not be recovered from the property situate in the Dacca district and it was, therefore, a proper case for sending a certificate to other districts to have the decree executed in them. We may observe that s. 239 empowers

* [Sec. 223: A decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it or by the Court to which it is sent for execution under the provisions hereinafter contained. The Court which passed a decree may, on the application of the decree-holder, send it for execution to another Court,

* * * *

(b) if such person has no property within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree sufficient to satisfy such decree and has property within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such other Court, or the Court in any other district to which a decree is sent for execution to stay such execution, in order to enable the judgment-debtors to make any necessary application to the Court by which the decree was made, and that the effect of the provisions contained in this section is to alleviate any hardship that might be the result of more than the decretal amount being realized by simultaneous executions in more than one district. The proposition contended for, viz., that a decree can be executed in one district only, and cannot simultaneously be executed in two or more districts, is a proposition which is opposed to the decision of the Privy Council in Saroda Prosaud Mullick v. Lutchnieput Singh Doogar (14 Moore's I. A., 529; S.C. 10 B. L. R., 214) and to several decisions of this Court, and is, in our opinion, wholly untenable.

This appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 16th March, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM AND MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM.

Chunder Nath Mullick and others.....Defendants

Nilakant Banerjee.....Plaintiffs.*

Mortgage by executors—Suit on mortgage—Administration-suit—Writ of fifa—Sheriff's sale—Execution of decree—Lis pendens—Sale in execution of decree.

In a suit by the representatives of P. D., against his brother A. D., and after A. D.'s death against his executors, it was found that there was over Rs. 1,32,400 due to the plaintiff from the estate of the deceased ; and, on the 29th of August 1866, the executors were ordered to pay this sum into Court. The executors disobeyed ; and, on the 24th of December 1866, a writ of fi-fa was issued from the High Court, in execution of which certain property belonging to the estate of A. D. was sold to the defendants on the 18th of July 1867. Previously, however, on the 12th of October 1866, the executors had mortgaged the same property to the plaintiff, who brought a suit on his mortgage on the 10th of June 1867. On the 28th of August 1867, the present defendants were made parties to that suit, and in their written statement they alleged that they had been improperly made [691] parties and claimed a title superior to that of the plaintiff. That suit was dismissed with costs as against the present defendants, on the ground, that they were improperly added; but a decree for sale was given against the executors, in execution of which the mortgaged property was sold to the plaintiff. In a subsequent suit brought by the plaintiff for possession,—

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 62 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Bhoopatty Roy, Subordinate Judge of East Burdwan, dated the 27th December 1879.

Held, that the defendants were entitled to redeem, and were not affected by the suit of 1867, as a lis pendens.

IN this case the plaintiff sued for the possession of certain lands, which were, he alleges, mortgaged to him by the executors and executrix of Ashutosh Dey, on the 12th October and 14th December 1866; and which, having obtained a decree on the mortgage, he purchased at an execution-sale on the 27th September 1870. He says, that his possession of the property has been resisted by Khogendro Nath, since deceased, and the principal defendants. Khogendro having purchased the property at a Sheriff's sale with notice of plaintiff's mortgage, the plaintiff urges, that his mortgage gives him a preferential right to that of the defendants. He prays accordingly for possession.

The material facts in this case are as follows :—In a suit brought in the Supreme Court by the representatives of one Promothonath Dey, against his brother Ashutosh, and after his death against his representatives, it was ordered, on the 29th of August 1866, that the sum of Rs. 1,32,406, due from the estate of the deceased, should be paid by his representatives, they having admitted assets, into Court to the credit of the suit.

On the 12th October 1866, the executors and executrix of Ashutosh, by deed of that day's date, mortgaged the property therein set forth for the sum of Rs. 22,347 to the plaintiff. On the 14th December 1866, the same parties mortgaged the same property to the plaintiff by way of further charge for Rs. 8,652.

On the 21st December 1866, a writ of fi-fa issued from the High Court, ordering the Sheriff of Calcutta to levy from the land and effects of the late Ashutosh Dey, the sum of Rs. 1,32,406 with interest, declared to be due by the decree of 29th August 1866. This writ was received in the Sheriff's office on the 26th January 1867.

On the 10th June 1867, the plaintiff sued (O. S. 476 of [692] 1867) on his mortgage of the 12th October 1866, and further charge of 14th December 1866, praying for recovery of the mortgage-money, and in default of recovery that the mortgage might be foreclosed, or the mortgaged property sold.

On the 18th July 1867, the Sheriff's sale under the fi-fa, issued 24th December 1866, took place, and the right, title and interest of Ashutosh Dey was put up to sale and sold to Khogendro Nath for Rs. 3,200.

On the 28th August 1867, the plaintiff petitioned the Court, setting forth the fi-fa proceedings in Promothonath Dey's suit, and the sale in execution of the right, title and interest of Ashutosh Dey in the mortgaged property, and amongst others the purchase by Khogendro Nath of the Mehal Mymareo for Rs. 3,200, and the sale of several other portions of the property for smaller sums. In consequence of this petition, Khogendro Nath and the other purchasers at the fi-fa sale were added as defendants in the mortgage-suit (O. S. 476 of 1867), and the plaint was further amended by the addition of a prayer on the part of the plaintiff to have it declared by the decree whether his title as mortgagee was to any, and if to any, to what, extent preferable to that of the several added defendants, under the sales to them by the Sheriff in the fi-fa proceedings.

On the 13th January 1868, Khogendro filed a written statement in original suit No. 476 of 1867, urging amongst other objections, that he had been improperly added as a party, denying that he owed any portion of the mortgage-debt, or was a party to the mortgage, stating that he had purchased certain parcels but not from the executors and executrix of Ashutosh, and declining to set forth his title; and he urged that the alleged mortgages could not affect the property purchased by him, and prayed that, as against him, the suit might be dismissed. On the 28th February 1868, the suit No. 476 was dismissed with costs, as against Khogendro and the other added defendants: and the original defendants were directed to redeem within six months, and in default, their right, title and interest in the mortgaged property was to be sold. In drawing up the decree, objections were raised to the form in which the Registrar had proposed that it should be couched. These [693] objections were dealt with by the Court on April 27th, 1868. The Judge explained that "the suit having been originally brought against the representatives of Ashutosh, subsequently, on the application of the plaintiff, a number of persons claiming various portions of the property by a title prior to, and independent of, that of the mortgagor, were added as defendants; but when the cause came on for settlement of issues, I considered that, as these added defendants claimed under different titles, and sought to raise a variety of different issues, and as their interests could not be affected by the result of the suit, the suit, as it then stood, was improperly framed, and I accordingly dismissed the suit as against all but the three original defendants." The Judge went on to say that the counsel for one of the defendants objected to the form of the decree, which simply ordered the sale of the mortgaged property. "All that the Court intends to order to be sold," the learned Judge observed, "and all that it has power to sell, is the interest which the mortgagor had at the time of the mortgage. If any of the other defendants have any claim on the property, it will in no way affect their title, however the decree may be worded." In order, however, to guard against possible misapprehension, the Court directed that the decree should run as ordering the sale of the right, title and interest of the mortgagors in the premises mortgaged to the plaintiff by the indenture and further charge. In execution of the decree settled in compliance with this direction, the plaintiff purchased the right, title and interest of the three original defendants in the mortgaged-premises for Rs. 1,600, and obtained a certificate to that effect dated 27th September 1870.

The question raised in the present appeal was the right of the plaintiff, as such auction-purchaser, as against the defendants, who were in possession of the mortgaged premises under the Sheriff's sale of 18th July 1867. In the original suit a question was raised as to the identity of the property now claimed with that mortgaged to the plaintiff. That point was abandoned in appeal, the defendants' counsel admitting that the properties claimed in the suit were identical with those mortgaged. It was also admitted that the defendants having purchased in [694] July 1867, the present suit having been filed 20th May 1879, was not barred by limitation.

The Court of First Instance held: (i) that the decree of 29th August 1866, against the representatives of Ashutosh, was no bar to the mortgage and further charge of 12th October 1866 and 14th December 1866 respectively; (ii) that the lands were not under attachment at the time of the mortgage and further charge; (iii) that the suit was not barred by limitation; (iv) that Khogendro having been joined as a defendant in the plaintiff's mortgage-suit, chose not to claim through the mortgagors, but set up an independent title;

(v) that the decree, drawn up in the presence of Khogendro's counsel, directed the sale of the right, title and interest of the mortgagor at the time of the mortgage, and that this had been purchased by the auction-purchasers; (vi) that Khogendro's purchase was subject to the plaintiff's mortgage; that Khogendro having had knowledge of plaintiff's decree, had not chosen to redeem, and did not even now propose to redeem the mortgaged premises, but set up a preferential title. "The defendants," the judgment says, "cannot with propriety say that Khogendro Nath was no party to the plaintiff's suit. It was by his conduct and act that Khogendro Nath had not had the question arising between the mortgagee and the purchasers from the mortgagors tried and determined in that case. The line of defence adopted by Khogendro Nath was quite distinct from that of a purchaser claiming through the mortgagors. He did not in his answer take the falsity or invalidity of plaintiff's mortgage as a ground of attack to plaintiff's cause, but did raise divers questions other than his purchase of the equity of redemption. Khogendro Nath, having been a party to the suit, chose to set up a distinct title, and I think his representatives are barred by s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code from raising the same question as ought to have been a ground of attack in the defence to the plaintiff's suit. The High Court gave a decree to the plaintiff against the mortgagors, and held, that the decree should not affect the defendant Khogendro Nath, who set up a distinct title. The decree in the plaintiff's case ultimately determined the question of mortgage between the mortgagee and mortgagors, [695] and if Khogendro Nath, who was a party to the decree, did not claim through the mortgagor, he or his representatives cannot criticise it."

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Evans, Baboo Bhoub Chunder Banerjee, Baboo Rash Behary Ghose, and Baboo Sharada Churn Mitter for the Appellants.

Mr. Bonnerjee, Baboo Gopal Lall Mitter, and Baboo Behary Lall Mitter for the Respondent.

Mr. Evans.—A suit for possession is not maintainable here. The plaintiff must foreclose the equity of redemption that has passed to the defendants - Syed Enam Moutazoddin Mahomed v. Raj Coomar Dass (11 B. L. R., 408; s. c., 10 W. R., 187), Byjnath Singh v. Gobardhan Lall Mohasohree (24 W. R., 210), Cheit Narain Singh v. Gunga Pershad (25 W. R., 216), Kokil Singh v. Duli Chund (5 C. L. R., 243), Bolaki Lal v. Thakar Pertan Singh (6 C. L. R., 370), Radha Pershad Misser v. Monohur Das (7 C. L. R., 293). The property being situated in the mofussil, the suit in the High Court for foreclosure could not affect defendants' title, and the theory of lis pendens is not applicable - Anundomoyee Dossee v. Dhonendro Chunder Mookerjee (14 Moore's I. A., 101; s. c., 8 B. L. R., 122). Besides, there would be a lis pendens on each side, the suit of Dey v. Dey having been pending and the property attached before plaintiff brought his suit in the High Court. The defendants having been discharged from the suit on the ground of multifariousness, the decree in that case is not binding on them; they must be dealt with as not having been parties thereto. As to the effect of a writ of fi-fa, see Bhuggobutty Dossee v. Shamachurn Bose (I. L. R., 1 Cal. 337), and Monmothonnath Dey v. Greender Chunder Ghose (24 W. R., 366). The plaintiff having purchased some of the properties pledged, there must be an apportionment of the mortgage-debt; but the [696] present suit is not so framed - Nawab Azimut Ali Khan v. Jowahir Singh (13 Moore's I. A., 404), Kaliprosanna Ghose v. Kamini Soonduri Choudhrai (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 475). The Court ought at least to follow the course taken in Kasumunnissa Bibee v. Nibratna Bose (ante, 79), which was a suit in respect of another portion of the Dey's property.

Mr. Banerjee for the Respondent. —The present contention is opposed to the defence made by these parties in the former suit. They then claimed to be dismissed from this suit, and they cannot now contend that they ought to have been made parties. Anundomoyee Dossce v. Dhonendro Chunder Mookerjee (14 Moore's L. A., 101; S.C., 8 B. L. R., 122), is not in point here. The parties are bound by lis pendens. They undoubtedly had full notice of the plaintiff's former suit, and might then have redeemed if they pleased.

Mr. Evans in reply.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by Cunningham, J. (who, having stated the facts as above set out, continued: — It is conceded that, for the purposes of the present argument, the decree against Ashutosh's estate, of the 29th August 1866, did not constitute a charge on the property, and consequently that the commencement of the defendant's title cannot date earlier than 24th December 1866, i.e., subsequent to the plaintiff's mortgage, and that consequently the interest which the defendants purchased was subject to the plaintiff's mortgage; and, therefore, that the independent title set up in the mortgage-suit, which led to its being dismissed as against them, cannot be made out.

The question therefore is, whether the original Court is right in considering that the defendants, having got themselves struck out of the plaintiff's mortgage suit on the strength of a title independent of the mortgagors, and not having chosen to assert their rights as holding under the mortgagors, are at liberty in the present suit to set up those rights and to claim to retain the [697] mortgaged-property now in their possession on payment of the plaintiff's claim against it under the mortgage. Section 13 of the Code provides, that "no Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue having been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit, between the same parties, has been fully heard and determined"; and Explanation II provides, that "any matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence or attack in such former suit, shall be deemed to have been directly and substantially in issue." Now the rights of the defendants as holding under the mortgagors certainly constituted a matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence, supposing the Court not to have accepted the view that the defendants held by a title prior to, and independent of, the mortgagors, and were on this ground entitled to be discharged from the suit; and it might be contended, therefore, that this question of the defendants' right must be deemed to have been directly and substantially in issue. But it cannot be said that it was "finally heard and decided," the view taken by the Court of the defendants' position having rendered any such hearing and decision unnecessary. We think, therefore, that the defendants are not precluded by s. 13 from raising the question of their rights under the mortgagors, and that we are at liberty to consider what those rights amount to.

The order of events was as follows:—The fi-fa proceedings were subsequent to the plaintiff's mortgage, but previous to the institution of the mortgage suit; and the defendants' purchase in the fi-fa proceedings was subsequent to the mortgage suit; plaintiff's purchase of the mortgaged property was last of all. It has been urged, with reference to these dates, that Khogendro having purchased subsequently to the institution of the mortgage-suit, his purchase could not withdraw any portion of the mortgaged-property from the operation of the decree in that suit, and, consequently, that plaintiff has a right to whatever he bought in execution of the decree in that suit independent of any claim by the defendants under the ji-fa sale.

But against this it may be urged that the sale under the ji-fa was in virtue of an attachment-proceeding, which commenced [698] as early as January 1867, prior to the institution of the plaintiff's mortgage suit, and that consequently whatever could have been sold in January 1867 could be, and in fact was, sold to the defendants in July '867, notwithstanding that the plaintiff had meanwhile instituted his suit.

We think that this is the right view. The doctrine of lis pendens appears to be grounded on the inconvenience which would arise, if mortgagors were able, after action brought, to alienate the mortgaged-property; but it does not follow that the rule would hold good where the alienation is not by the mortgagor, but by the Court, acting on behalf of creditors against the mortgagor, and where the process of sale, or at any rate proceedings with a view to the sale, of the property had commenced before the suit was instituted.

We think, therefore, that the plaintiff is not entitled, in virtue of having filed his suit previous to the defendants' ji-fa purchase, to ignore that purchase, and to hold the mortgaged property free from any right which the defendants acquired by the ji-fa sale. We think that we are bound to give effect to the well-recognized rule that the interest of a person, who has purchased the mortgagor's equity of redemption, is not affected by any decree in a suit to which he is not a party, and to hold accordingly that the defendants, having purchased the mortgagors' interest in the estate, viz., the right of redeeming the existing mortgage, did not lose that right of redemption in consequence of the decree obtained in a suit, against the representatives of Ashutosh.

The next question is, whether the defendants having been joined in the mortgage-suit on the plaintiff's motion, and having got the suit dismissed as against them, are now precluded from setting up their claim to the mortgaged premises. We are of opinion that the orders passed in that suit, so far as regards the present defendants, had no effect beyond deciding that, whatever their claims might be, they could not conveniently be tried in that suit, and that consequently both parties remained at liberty to contest subsequently, any matter to which the plaintiff's mortgage, or the defendants' purchase, might give rise.

[699] A counter objection has been taken that the defendants do not offer to redeem, but take their stand on an anterior and superior title. An objection has also been grounded on the form of the present suit, and it has been urged that the plaintiff having sued for direct possession, the suit ought, if he be found not entitled to direct possession, to be simply dismissed.

We think, however, that we are at liberty to follow the course taken in a very analogous case regarding the same property by PONTIFEX, J., in Kasumunnissa Bibee v. Niralatna Bose (ante, p. 79), and to give the plaintiff a decree for possession, conditional on the defendants' failure to redeem, and that we are at liberty to decide what are the equitable terms on which the defendants may be permitted to redeem. The plaintiff has himself purchased several of the mortgaged properties, and he cannot, therefore, throw more than a proportionate share of the mortgage-charge on another portion of the mortgaged-premises: see Gossyen Luchmee Narain Poori v. Bickram Singh (4 C. L. R. 294) and Nawab Azimut Ali Khan v. Jowahir Singh (13 Moore's I. A. 404).

In the present instance the plaintiff paid Rs. 1,600 as the price of the mortgaged-property, and we think that the equities of the case will be met by giving the defendant six months within which to redeem by payment of this sum, together with interest at 6 per cent. from the date of the plaintiff's purchase, 27th April 1870; the plaintiff in default of such redemption within six months to be entitled to khas possession. If the defendants redeem, they will do so on the terms of paying all costs of this litigation. If they do not redeem, there will be no order as to costs, and the plaintiff will be entitled to khas possession. The decree of the Original Court will be modified accordingly.

Decree modified.

Review of judgment—Subsequent Full Bench decision—Ground for review—

Suit by mortgagee to declare lien—Subsequent suit for possession.

The plaintiff, a mortgagee, obtained a money-decree against the defendant. A third party, in execution of another decree obtained against the same defendant, put up for sale the property included in the plaintiff's mortgage, and himself bought the right, title, and interest of his judgment-debtor in the property mortgaged to the plaintiff. The plaintiff, subsequently, in execution of his decree, bought in the same property himself, and brought a suit against the defendant and the third party to have it declared that the latter held the property subject to his mortgage. The suit was decreed by the Subordinate Judge, but eventually dismissed by the High Court, on the ground that the plaintiff, by suing for his money-decree only, had deprived himself of the benefit of his lien as against the third party. The plaintiff thereupon brought another suit against the same parties to recover possession of the mortgaged property, which suit eventually came up before a Full Bench, where it was decided that the plaintiff had no right to bring the suit for recovery of possession, but that his proper course was to sue to have his lien upon the property declared, the Court intimating that it would be open to the plaintiff to apply for a review of judgment in the suit originally brought by him.

On the review coming on to be heard, it was held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a review of that judgment, and that the case was distinguishable from the general rule as to reviews laid down in Mudhub Chunder Ghose v. Radhika Chowdhraim (7 W. R., 405), Dwarkanath Doss Bishwas v. Manick Chunder Doss (9 W. R. 102.), and Shama Churn Chuckerbutty v. Bindabun Chunder Roy (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 892; s. C., 9 W. R., 181), inasmuch as the granting the review did not interfere with previous decisions of the Court in other cases between other parties.

THE facts of this case and the arguments used at the hearing sufficiently appear from the judgment.

* Application for review in Special Appeal, No. 60 of 1877, against the decree of L. R. Tottenham, Esq., Judge of Midnapore, dated the 30th August 1876, reversing the decree of Baboo Judunath Roy, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 21st June 1875.

[701] Baboo Sreenath Dass and Baboo Bhubany Churn Dutt opposed the application.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MORRIS, J.) was delivered by.

Garth, C. J.—We thought it right in this case to grant a review of judgment in consequence of the Full Bench decision in another suit between the same parties and upon the same subject-matter. The Full Bench case is reported in I. L. R., 7 Cal., 714, and the circumstances under which this suit was brought will be found stated at length in the report of the former judgment in I. L. R., 3 Cal.; 363; s. c., 1 C. L. R., 446.

On the 26th August 1868, the ancestor of the defendant No. 2 borrowed money from the husband of defendant No. 1, upon a simple money-bond. On the 10th January 1869, the same person borrowed money from the plaintiff upon a specially registered mortgage-bond, which hypothecated two estates for payment of the loan. On the 22nd February 1871, the plaintiff obtained a money decree only on this mortgage-bond. On the 25th February 1871, the husband of defendant No. 1, in execution of a decree which had been previously obtained by him for his debt, bought at auction the right, title, and interest of his debtor in one of the properties mortgaged to the plaintiff. The plaintiff then took out execution of his money-decree, and on the 13th of June 1871 his debtor's right, title, and interest in the same property was again put up to sale and bought in by the plaintiff himself. The plaintiff then brought this suit to have it declared, that defendant No. 1 held the property subject to his mortgage.

Under these circumstances the plaintiff's suit, after having been decreed by the Subordinate Judge, was dismissed in the High Court, upon the ground that the plaintiff, by suing for his money-decree only, had deprived himself of the benefit of his lien as against the defendant No. 1.

The plaintiff then brought another suit to recover possession of the mortgaged-property from the defendant No. 1. That case came up on appeal to the High Court, and the learned Judges of the Division Bench, having grave doubts as to the correctness of the former judgment in this suit, referred [702] certain questions to the Full Bench, the first of which was as follows:—Can the purchaser, under the decree obtained under the specially registered bond, sue the first purchaser for restoration of the mortgaged property?

The Judgment of the Full Bench upon that first point being decisive of the rights of the parties, it was not considered necessary to answer the other questions referred. The Full Bench say—"The plaintiff has clearly no right to sue for the restoration of the mortgaged-property; his proper course was that which he adopted in the first instance, namely, to sue to have his lien upon the property declared. The High Court's Judgment in Dassmoney Dossee v. Jonmenjoy Mullick (I. L. R., 3 Cal. 363; 1 C. L. R., 446), appears to us to be erroneous."

The Full Bench further intimated that in that suit they were of course unable to give the plaintiff any relief, but that it was quite open to him to make an application to a Division Bench for a re-hearing or a review of the judgment in the former suit, as he might be advised.

In consequence of this intimation, an application was made to us by the plaintiff to review the former judgment of this Court; and as both the Judges who took part in that judgment had left the Court, and we considered there was sufficient ground for a review, we granted the application.

The case has now been re-heard before us on review ; and the only point which has been seriously argued by the defendants is, that the decision of the Full Bench, however clearly it may have declared the right of the plaintiff in the present suit, is no ground for a review.

It is said, and said truly, that if any change in the law, which may be occasioned by a decision of the Privy Council or by a Full Bench of a High Court, were to have the effect of reversing all former decisions in suits which had been decided on a different view of the law, litigation would never be at an end, and the rights of parties would never be secure. And in aid of that argument several authorities were cited by the learned counsel for the defendant, of which the case of Dwarka Nath Doss Biswas v. Manick Chunder Doss (9 W. R., 102), Shama Churn Chucker-[703]butty v. Bindabun Chunder Roy (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 892 ; 9 W. R., 181), and Madhab Chunder Ghose v. Radhika Chowdhraïn (7 W. R., 405) form illustrations.

In this general rule we entirely agree ; but we think that the present case stands upon a different footing.

The plaintiff in this suit, having been successful before the Subordinate Judge, had his case dismissed in the High Court. In consequence of this he made an alternative claim in a second suit, and upon the question in suit being referred to a Full Bench, the learned Judges unanimously decided, that the course which the plaintiff had taken in the second suit was wrong, and that the course which he had taken in the first suit was right.

Upon this decision of the Full Bench, we think that we are justified in reversing the former judgment on review and carrying into effect the decision of the Full Bench. This appears to us to be a very different thing from interfering with previous decisions of the Court in other cases between other parties.

It is obvious that the justice of the case is entirely in the plaintiff's favour ; and we are not aware of any rule or authority which prevents us from giving him his rights.

The former decision of this Court will, therefore, be reversed, and the decree of the District Judge restored ; and the defendants will pay the plaintiff the costs of this last hearing, but not of the former one.

Review granted and decision reversed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 22nd March, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE FIELD AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Shurroop Chunder Goocho.....Decree-holder
 Ameerrunnissa Khatoon.....Judgment-debtor.*

Mortgage decree—Execution of decree—Attachment and sale—Property in different districts—Jurisdiction—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 19.

A suit was instituted on a mortgage of a single revenue-paying estate in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the District of Backergunge, under the provisions of s. 19, Act X of 1877, and a decree was obtained for the [704] sale of the mortgaged property. On an application for execution of the decree to the Court which passed it, Held, that the Court was competent to order a sale of the whole of the mortgaged property, though only a portion of it was situated in the district of Backergunge.

Kally Prosunno Bose v. Dimonath Mullick (11 B. L. R., 56 ; S. C., 19 W. R., 434) cited and followed.

THE proceedings which took place in the Court of the Subordinate Judge in this case are as follows :—

" May 2, 1881.—The decree-holder having filed an application for the attachment of properties of the judgment-debtor situate in this district and in the district of Furreedpore, it is ordered that the application be registered, and that the same be laid before the Court to-morrow.

" May 3, 1881.—There are certain questions regarding the jurisdiction of this Court over certain properties sought to be sold, which questions have been raised and discussed this day. Order to be passed to-morrow.

" May 5, 1881.—Order postponed pending the result of a reference to be made.

" May 11, 1881.—There is an order of the superior Court prohibiting the attachment and sale by this Court of properties situate within the jurisdiction of another Court. It is therefore ordered, that the properties situate in this district be attached and sold ; that the prayer of the decree-holder, for having the properties situate in the Furreedpore District attached and sold, be disallowed, and that the case be laid before the Court on the 14th of June, after the attachment order shall have been made."

The decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Kashi Kant Sen for the appellant.—The suit in which this decree was obtained was a suit on a mortgage, instituted in the Court below under s. 19 of Act X of 1877. The defendant made no objection whatever, and the appellant obtained a decree for the sale of this property, which, though situated in different districts, is but one single estate. It is not competent for the Judge in the execution department to go behind that decree, and we are entitled to have the whole property sold—Kally Prosunno Bose v. Dinonath Mullick (11 B. L. R., 56; s. c., 19 W. R., 434), and Shib Narain [705] Singh v. Gobind Doss Bhukut (23 W. R., 154). The Subordinate Judge had no authority to refer this matter to any Court other than the High Court, and such reference is of no validity.

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 250 of 1881, against the order of Baboo Rajchunder Sannyal, Officiating Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, dated the 11th May 1881.

The respondent did not appear.

The Judgment of the Court (FIELD and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—In this case the property, in respect of which execution was sought, consisted of a single revenue-paying estate, part of which lies within the district of Backergunge and part within the district of Furreedpore. The decree, affecting the whole of this property, was obtained in the Backergunge district: and the suit having been instituted after the new Civil Procedure Code, Act X of 1877, came into force, s. 19 of that Act was applicable to the case. The decree-holder applied to have the whole of the revenue-paying estate sold in execution of his decree. The Subordinate Judge rejected this application in so far as that portion of the revenue-paying estate situate within the Furreedpore district is concerned, and he apparently allowed the execution to proceed so far as concerns that portion of the property situate within the Backergunge district. It is now contended in appeal before us, that the Subordinate Judge ought to have allowed execution to proceed in his Court against the whole revenue-paying estate, although only a portion of the estate is situate in Backergunge. We think that this contention is correct. It is supported by the case of Kally Prosunno Bose v. Dinonath Mullick (11 B. L. R., 56; s. c., 19 W. R., 434), which has been several times followed in this Court; and we may further observe, that the change introduced by s. 19 of the present Code has been accepted as applicable to execution-proceedings also. The case, of course, would be very different if the property consisted of different talooks or different revenue-paying estates, the whole of any one or more of which was situate within the Furreedpore district. This appeal must be decreed and the order of the Subordinate Judge set aside. He is directed to allow the execution to proceed in respect of the whole property.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[SALE IN EXECUTION—TERRITORIAL JURISDICTION—

The observation of Field, J., to the effect that the case would be very different if the property consisted of different talooks, etc. (pp. 705) has been regarded as a mere obiter dictum.

Sales of such property were upheld in (1887) 14 Cal. 661 and in (1888) 15 Cal. 667 the rule was upheld, though the whole property had been transferred to another jurisdiction.

See also 19 Cal. 13; 21 Cal. 639; 22 Cal. 871; 28 Cal. 238, as regards sales in suits on mortgages and charges.

As regards other suits, see 17 Cal. 699; 18 Cal. 526.

The judgment of Field, J., is criticised by Hukm Chand in his Civil Procedure (1900), Vol. I. pp. 331, 332.]

[706] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 22nd March, 1882. ●

PRESENT :

Mr. JUSTICE FIELD AND Mr. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Brojendra Coomar Bhoomick and others.....Defendants

versus

Woopendra Narain Singh and another.....Plaintiffs.

Landlord and tenant—Accretion—Enhancement—Arrears of rent, Suit for—Notice of enhancement.

When land has accreted to a ryot's holding, the rent paid by the ryot may be enhanced in respect thereof under the provisions of cl. 3, s. 18 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869; and no suit for rent in respect of such accretion will lie unless a proper notice of enhancement has been previously given.

Ramnidhee Manjee v. Parbutty Dasse (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 823) followed.

THESE were suits for rent in respect of certain lands which were formed by accretion to the defendants' holdings. The Court of first instance cited and distinguished the cases of Watson v. Neel Kant Sircar (10 W. R., 330), and Buroda Kant Roy v. Radha Churn Roy (13 W. R., 163); and, considering that the suits "were, to all intents and purposes, enhancement suits, and should have been brought after notice," dismissed them with costs. On appeal, the Judge said: "These four suits are between the same parties, and the appeals have been heard together. The suits were dismissed by the Munsif, on the ground that they were virtually suits for enhancement, and that they would not lie without service of notice. I do not quite understand the Munsif's reasoning as to the ruling in the case of Watson v. Neel Kant Sircar (10 W. R., 330). It appears to me, to render it perfectly clear, that ss. 13 and 17 of Act X of 1859 (of which s. 13 is replaced by s. 14 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869) have no application to the case of new accretions." The learned Judge then reversed the Munsif's decision, and remanded the cases for retrial.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

[707] Baboo Doorgadass Dutt for the appellants contended, that the Judge was wrong in holding that the Rent Law did not apply to these cases. In Watson v. Neel Kant Sircar (10 W. R., 330), the defendants held an under-tenure, and were not ryots as here.

Baboo Gopal Lall Mitter for the Respondents.

Field, J.—These are appeals from orders of the Officiating District Judge of Nuddea, remanding four cases under the provisions of s. 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The facts are briefly these. The plaintiffs sued for rent in respect of certain land that had accreted to the tenures or holdings of the defendants. The Munsif was of opinion that these were really enhancement suits, and that the service of the notice required by s. 14 of the Rent Act was necessary. The District Judge on appeal held that notice was not necessary; and he remanded the cases to be tried on the merits. The decision of the District Judge is opposed to the view taken by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Ramnidhee Manjee v. Parbutty Dasse (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 823). In the view there taken we agree. We think that, although the Alluvion Regulation (XI of 1825) entitles a tenant to hold, as part of his jama, additional land which has accreted thereto, yet, as regards the question of rent, the case comes substantially within the grounds of enhancement contained in clause 3 of s. 18 of the Rent Act. We must, therefore, set aside the orders of remand passed by the District Judge, and restore the Munsif's decree dismissing these suits. The appellants will be entitled to their costs in all the Courts.

* Appeal from Appellate Orders, Nos. 335, 336, 337 and 338 of 1881, against the order of J. Whitmore, Esq., Officiating Judge of Nuddea, dated the 12th August 1881, reversing the order of Baboo Behari Lall Banerjee, Second Munsif of Kooshtea, dated the 27th July 1880, remanding the case for trial on the merits.

Appeals allowed.

Co-sharers of land—Removal of building erected by one of several co-sharers—Acquiescence.

In a case a permanent building has been erected by some or one of several co-sharers on the land jointly held, and another co-sharer subsequently seeks to have the building removed; the principle upon which the Court acts is, that though it has a discretion to interfere and direct the removal of the building, this is not a discretion which must necessarily be exercised in every case; and, as a rule, it will not be exercised unless the plaintiff is able to show that injury has accrued to him by reason of the erection of the building; and perhaps further, that he took reasonable steps in time to prevent the erection.

THIS was a suit for declaration of ijmal right to a piece of land adjoining the family dwelling-house of the plaintiff and the defendants, who were joint in estate and for the demolition of a building erected upon the land by one of the defendants. The defendants contended that the land belonged to them alone, but the lower Court found that it was joint family property. It was proved that the plaintiff did not raise any objection when the building was commenced, but stood by and allowed the defendants to expend a considerable sum of money on the building before instituting the present suit. Both the lower Courts dismissed the suit, on the ground that he should have taken steps to restrain the defendants from building, and that not having done so, it was too late to come to the Court to ask for the demolition of the building.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 639 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Kristo Chunder Chatterjee, First Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, dated the 24th January 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Gopal Chunder Bose, First Munsif of Burisal, dated the 17th November 1879.

[709] The Judgment of the Court (MCDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—The plaintiff in this case sued to have a building removed, which had been erected at very considerable expense upon a piece of land, which has been found to be the joint property of Hindu co-sharers. There is a considerable number of decisions connected with or bearing upon the question at issue in this case. Some of these decisions are directed to define what are the rights of a Hindu co-sharer as regards the use of land which is the joint property of himself and other co-sharers. Others of these decisions are concerned with the proceeding by injunction, and the circumstances, under which an injunction should be granted when the rights of other co-sharers are infringed. A third class of these cases consists of decisions in suits brought to remove permanent buildings erected by one co-sharer upon land forming joint property, and in the alleged infringement of the rights of the other co-sharer. The observations which have been made by the learned Judges of this Court in many of these cases, must be read and understood with reference to the particular facts of the case with which they were dealing, and the particular remedy sought in that case. Observations made with the object of defining the right of one Hindu co-sharer may be inapplicable to a case in which, as in the present case, it is sought to remove a permanent building erected in the infringement of the rights of other co-sharers. There is a considerable difference between a case in which the other co-sharers, acting with diligent watchfulness of their rights, seek by an injunction to prevent the erection of a permanent building; and a case in which, after a permanent building has been erected at considerable expense, he seeks to have that building removed. In a case such as that last mentioned, the principle which seems to have been settled by the decisions of this Court is this, that though the Court has a discretion to interfere and direct the removal of the building, this is not a discretion which must necessarily be exercised in every case; and, as a rule, it will not be exercised unless the plaintiff is able to show that injury has accrued to him by reason of the erection of the building, and perhaps further, that [710] he took reasonable steps in time to prevent the erection. In the present case the Courts below have come to the conclusion that this discretion should not be exercised so as to direct the removal of the building, and the view which has thus been taken by the Courts below is one with which we see no reason to interfere on appeal.

This appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Malicious prosecution—Damages—Costs, Criminal Court.

In a suit for damages for malicious prosecution the plaintiff is entitled to recover the costs necessarily incurred by him in defending himself on the criminal charge.

THIS was a suit to recover damages for malicious prosecution and the costs of defence in the Criminal Court. The Munsif assessed damages "for the loss of honour or mental anxiety sustained by the plaintiff" at Rs. 79, and awarded Rs. 121 on account of the costs of defence. On appeal by the defendant it was argued, that the plaintiff was entitled to all costs incurred by him in the Criminal Court. The Additional Judge, however, said,—“that is a rule which obtains in England where the damage is assessed by the jurors, but it does not appear that it has ever been acted on by Courts in India” and modified the decree of the lower Court, giving the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 50.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Busunt Coomar Bose for the Appellant.

Baboo Anund Gopal Palit for the Respondent.

[711] The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP & BOSE, JJ.) was delivered by Prinsep, J.—The plaintiff was charged by the defendant, in the Criminal Court of Burdwan, under s. 147, with rioting, and s. 504, with intentional insult likely to cause a breach of the peace, and was acquitted. Under the orders of the Joint Magistrate he received Rs. 20 as compensation. He now sues the defendant for damages, Rs. 500 on account of injury to his reputation, and Rs. 313-7-5 as the costs incurred in the Criminal Court.

The first Court assessed the damages for the loss of honour and mental anxiety at Rs. 79, and allowed him also the pleader's fees in the Criminal Court, Rs. 121, making a total of Rs. 200. The lower Appellate Court reduced this amount to Rs. 50.

There is much in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that does not meet with our approval, but as the defendant has not appealed, we must take it that it has been rightly held, that he is liable to damages on account of having maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause falsely charged the plaintiff with a criminal offence.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2157 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Brojendro Coomar Seal, Additional Judge of East Burdwan, dated the 2nd August 1880, modifying the decree of Baboo Amrito Lal Pal, First Munsif of Burdwan, dated the 26th February 1880.

The present appeal is really directed against the refusal of the Additional Judge to give any damages on account of legal expenses incurred on the part of the plaintiff in defending himself in the Criminal Court. The Additional Judge observes, that, in England, it is the rule to give the plaintiff the costs that he incurs in defending himself in a Criminal Court, because in England "the damages are assessed by the jurors : but it does not appear that it has ever been acted on by Courts in India." In this respect we would observe that the Judges in India have in such cases to assume the functions of both Judge and jury, and it has not, so far as we know, been laid down that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover the expenses necessarily incurred by him in defending himself on a criminal charge. The law in this respect has been thus stated in Mayne on Damages, 3rd Edn., p. 78 : "where the wrongful act of one person places another in a position in which he necessarily or reasonably has recourse to law, the costs incurred by the former will be recoverable from the latter."

[712] Acting on this principle we think that the plaintiff is at least entitled to recover from the defendant the sum of Rs. 121 which was allowed to him in the first Court, that being the amount proved to have been paid to the pleader whom he retained to defend him. We, however, find a difficulty in learning from the judgment of the Additional Judge on what ground he has fixed a sum of Rs. 50 as damages for the plaintiff, but as he has undoubtedly given such damages on both the grounds claimed by the plaintiff, we think we may reasonably assume that half of this sum was awarded as damages for injury to reputation and the other half for expenses in the Criminal Court. For reasons already stated we think that the latter sum, i.e., Rs. 25, for costs, should be increased to Rs. 121. The result is that the plaintiff will get a decree for Rs. 146, with costs assessed on that amount.

Appeal allowed.

Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 102—Suit for rent below Rs. 100—Landlord and tenant—Special appeal.

In a suit for rent below Rs. 100, the defendant set up the title of a third person (the third person was, however, no party to the proceedings), and the lower Court finding that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties, and that the rent was unpaid, decided the suit on that ground in favour of the plaintiffs. The defendant appealed to the District Judge, who decided that the defendant had paid the rent, and reversed the decision of the Court below. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court, but were met with the objection that no special appeal would lie. Held, that s. 102 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 prohibited the appeal, the case being one between landlord and tenant, and there consequently being no question relating to title as between parties having conflicting claims.

THE plaintiffs were the owners of a plot of land containing 20 bighas, which they leased to the defendant at Rs. 29-8 per [713] annum; and they brought this suit to recover arrears of rent for the years 1282—1285, and a certain sum for road-cess amounting in all to a sum of Rs. 50-2, from the defendant.

The defendant contended that the plot belonged to a third person; that he had deposited the amount of rent which he alleged to be due, viz. Rs. 26-8, in Court, and that he had paid the remainder, but that he had received no dakhillas.

The Munsif found that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the plaintiffs and the defendant, and awarded to the plaintiffs the amount of rent claimed.

The defendant appealed to the District Judge, who reversed the decision of the Court below.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Durga Mohun Das and Baboo Huri Mohun Chuckerbutty for the Appellants.

Baboo Kishori Mohun Roy for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and BOSE, J.) was delivered by

Garth, C.J.—In this case an objection has been taken by the respondent, that we have no jurisdiction to hear the appeal as it is for an amount under Rs. 100, and there is no question raised in it "relating to a title to land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto."

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 565 of 1880, against the decree of T. T. Allen, Esq., Judge of Rajshahye, dated the 6th January 1880, reversing the decree of Baboo Probode Chunder Dutt, Munsif of Nattore, dated the 30th June 1879.

We think that this objection is a good one. We have been referred to two cases—Hurry Mohun Mozoomdar v. Dwarkanath Sen (18 W. R., 42), and Shank Dilber v. Issen Chunder Roy (21 W. R., 42), with which we entirely agree, and which appear to be directly in point. This being a case between landlord and tenant, there is no question of title as between parties having conflicting claims thereto. If the third person whose title was set up by the defendant, had intervened in the suit and claimed the rent against the plaintiffs, we might have had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, but as it is, we think we have no such power, and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Act XL of 1858, s. 3—Minors—Certificate of administration—Majority Act (IX of 1875), s. 3.

In the interval between an application for a certificate of administration to the property of a minor under s. 3 of Act XL of 1858 and the issue of the certificate, the minor attained the age of 18 years and signed a promissory note

Held, that the certificate afforded no defence to a suit on the note

In this case the plaintiff sued one A. J. Stephen, Mary Stephen his wife, and St. George Stephen their son, upon a joint and several promissory note executed by the three defendants on the 27th of October 1880. St. George Stephen was born on the 7th of April 1861. In 1877 his father petitioned the Dacca Court for a certificate of administration to his property under s. 3 of Act XL of 1858. On the 10th of December 1879 the Judge made an order granting the certificate, which was issued on the 10th of December 1881, and bore date as of that day.

The defendants pleaded, among other things, that, under s. 3 of Act IX of 1875, St. George Stephen was a minor, under the age of 21 years when the note was executed.

Mr. Trevelyan and Mr. Amir Ali for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Hill for the Defendant.

Wilson, J.—This is a suit on a promissory note signed by the th defendants for Rs. 1,700. Two questions were raised: 1st, How much did the plaintiff advance by way of consideration? 2nd, Is the third defendant liable on the note?

As to the first question, on one point no doubt is raised. The amount of Rs. 1,700 was made up in part by a sum of Rs. 440, deducted for future payment of premiums on a life policy effected as security for a loan. As to this it appears, that plaintiff only [716] paid Rs. 220, and then let the policy drop. as to Rs. 220, therefore, the consideration has failed. The main question is, whether the rest of the consideration was paid. The plaintiff says, it was. Defendants say, only Rs. 270, were paid, and that, as to the rest, the note was given for a wholly different purpose. The plaintiff swears that he has paid the money, and he is confirmed by a witness, who says he chanced to be present. On the other side the two male defendants contradict him. The note itself gives little help. It was one of a series of transactions, in none of which did the documents represent the transaction as it really occurred. Several circumstances are admitted tending to confirm the defendant's story. On the whole, I believe the defendants' story. Therefore the decree can only be for Rs. 220 and 270.

The second question is as to the liability of the third defendant. It is said that he was under age when the note was signed, on the ground, that though he was over 18, yet, by reason of s. 3, of the Majority Act of 1875, he was still a minor up to 21, a guardian of his property having been appointed by the District Court of Dacca.

It appears that, in September 1877, the first defendant, father of the third defendant, petitioned the Dacca Court for a certificate of administration under s. 3 of the Minors Act (XI. of 1858) to the property of the third defendant. On the 10th December 1879 the Judge made an order: "Certificate of administration under Act XL of 1858 is hereby granted." On the 10th December 1881 a certificate was issued bearing date the last mentioned day. In the meantime, between the date of the order and the issue of the certificate, the third defendant had attained the age of 18, and had signed the note in question.

It is not necessary to consider whether the judge might have issued the certificate dated as of the day when the Judge's order was made, or what the effect would have been. It is quite possible that if the delay were the act of the Court arising from the pressure of office business, and if the date were material, it might be the right course to date the certificate, as of the day when it was ordered, upon the principle actus curæ neminem gravabit. Here the delay was not that of the Court but of the [716] parties, and I must take it that the certificate was intended to operate and did operate only from the day of its date. But by then the third defendant had attained his majority and signed the note in question, therefore, the certificate affords no defence.

Decree against three defendants for Rs. 490 without costs

Judgment for plaintiff.

Jakur AliJudgment-debtor.*

Limitation--Acknowledgment in writing--Authority to sign acknowledgment—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s 19, sched. ii, art. 179.

On the 7th of December 1877, additional time for payment of the amount of a decree, dated the 24th of March 1876, was granted to the judgment-debtor upon a petition signed by his vakeel. On the 4th of December 1880 a fresh application for execution was made.

Held, that it was not barred under art. 179, sched. ii of Act XV of 1877, inasmuch as the petition constituted an acknowledgment of liability under s. 19† of the same Act, and a new period of limitation began to run from the 7th of December 1877. The object of the words "application in respect of any property or right" in s. 19 is to extend to the applications mentioned in sched. ii the same privilege as is accorded to suits.

Ramhit Rai v. Satgur Rai (1. L. R., 3 All., 247) approved of.

IN this case a decree had been made on the 24th of March 1876. On the 3rd of October 1877 an order for attachment was made, under which certain properties of the judgment-debtor were attached. On the 7th of December 1877 three months' additional time was granted by the Court to the judgment-debtor to enable him to raise money to satisfy the decree. This order [717] was made on a petition signed by the vakeel of the judgment-debtor. On the 4th December 1880 a fresh application for execution was made, which was refused by the Subordinate Judge, on the ground that it was barred by limitation.

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 296 of 1881, against the order of Baboo Giris Chunder Chowdhry, Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, dated the 6th August 1881.

† [Sec. 19 :—If, before the expiration of the period prescribed for a suit or application in respect of any property or right, an acknowledgment of liability

Effect of acknowledgment in writing. in respect of such property or right has been made in writing signed by the party against whom such property or right is claimed, or by some person through whom he derives title or liability, a new period of limitation, according to the nature of the original liability, shall be computed from the time when the acknowledgment was so signed.

When the writing containing the acknowledgment is undated, oral evidence may be given of the time when it was signed ; but oral evidence of its contents shall not be received.

Explanation 1.—For the purposes of this section an acknowledgment may be sufficient, though it omits to specify the exact nature of the property or right, or avers that the time for payment, delivery, performance or enjoyment has not yet come, or is accompanied by a refusal to pay, deliver, perform, or permit to enjoy, or is coupled with a claim to a set-off, or is addressed to a person other than the person entitled to the property or right.

Explanation 2.—In this section "signed" means signed either personally or by an Agent duly authorized in this behalf.]

The judgment-creditor appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen for the Appellant.

Baboo Tarucknath Palit and Munshi Serajul Islam for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (WHITE and MACPHERSON, JJ.) was delivered by White, J.—The present application for execution was made on the 4th of December 1880. The one immediately preceding was made on the 3rd of October 1877, consequently the present application is prima facie barred under art. 179, sched. ii, of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). But it is contended by the vakeel on behalf of the judgment-creditor, that, under s. 19 of the Act, an acknowledgment of liability was made by the judgment-debtor on the 7th of December 1877, by virtue of which a new period of limitation has been given to his client starting from the latter date.

It appears that, upon the application of the 3rd of October 1877, an order for attachment was made, under which certain properties of the judgment-debtor were attached; and that, on the 7th of December in the same year, the judgment-debtor, through his vakeel, presented to the Court a petition, which, after setting out the facts relating to the attachment, prayed that the judgment-debtor might be permitted himself to sell or mortgage the property attached, and out of the proceeds so realized satisfy the amount of the decree. It also prayed that, in the meantime, execution might be postponed for one year. The Court did not grant a year's grace, but acceded so far to the prayer of the petition as to allow to the judgment-debtor three months' time within which he might endeavour to pay off the decree, by raising sufficient money through the medium of a private sale or mortgage.

We are of opinion that the petition did constitute an acknowledgment of liability in writing within the meaning of s. 19. It expressly admitted the debt under the decree to be due and [718] the judgment-creditor's right to have execution; and even if there had been no express admission, we should have implied one from the fact that the judgment-debtor asked for leave to sell the attached properties by private sale for the purposes of the decree.

We also think that the application of the 4th December 1880 is an application in respect of a right, viz., the right to have execution of the decree, and that the acknowledgment of liability contained in the petition of the 7th of December 1877 was in respect of such right. The words "application in respect of any property or right" were not in the previous Limitation Act. They are introduced for the first time into the one now in force, and clearly with the object of extending to the applications which are mentioned in sched. ii the same privilege as was under the old Act and is also under the present Act accorded to suits.

It is contended that the acknowledgment in question has not been signed by an agent duly authorized by the judgment-debtor as required by Expln. II of s. 13. We think that it has. The vakeel who signed the petition for the judgment-debtor held a vakalatnama from him to represent him in the suit, and acted as his vakeel throughout the suit and execution-proceedings. Looking to the nature of the application of the 7th of December, and to the fact that it was substantially granted, we think there can be little doubt but that the judgment-debtor expressly authorized his vakeel to make it; but whether he did so or not, he must be taken to have ratified the act of his vakeel. The judgment-debtor having, in consequence of the success of the application, had the benefit of a suspension of the execution for three months in order that he might himself sell or mortgage the attached property, it does not lie in his mouth to dispute that the vakeel was his duly authorized agent for the purpose of the application.

Section 19 of the Limitation Act does not appear to have been the subject of decision in this Court as far as we know (see Mungul Prashad Dichit v. Shama Kanto Lahory Chowdry, I.L.R., 4 Cal., 708; & Parhottinath Roy v. Tejomoy Banerji, I. L. R., 5 Cal., 303), [719] but it has been so in the Allahabad High Court in the case of Ramhit Rai v. Satgur Rai (I. L. R., 3 All., 247). We agree with that Court in the construction which it has there put upon the section.

Such being our opinion, we hold that the point of departure in this case for the purpose of limitation, is the 7th of December 1877, and consequently that the application for execution made on the 4th of December 1880 was in time. We, therefore, reverse the decision of the lower Court; but, inasmuch as the point on which we have decided this appeal was not clearly taken in the lower Court, we shall allow no costs.

Appeal allowed.

Power of Manager under s. 243 of Act VIII of 1859—Notice of enhancement—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 503.

A manager appointed under s. 243 of Act VIII of 1859 is appointed merely to collect rent and other receipts and profits of the land, to carry on the existing state of affairs as the proprietor himself had been doing, and he has no power to issue notice of enhancement.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1194 of 1880, against the decree of W. H. Page, Esq., Officiating Additional Judge of the 24-Perganas, dated the 31st May 1880, reversing the decree of Baboo Jogesh Chunder Mitter, First Munsif of Alipore, dated the 21st January 1880.

Mr. Jackson and Bahoo Jadub Chunder Seal for the Appellant.

Baboo Unnoda Persad Banerjee for the Respondent.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment, which was delivered by Prinsep, J.—The plaintiff, as a manager appointed under s. 243 of Act VIII of 1859, has sued for rent at an enhanced rate after service of notice of enhancement under the Rent Law. The objection taken has throughout been as to his power as a manager to issue such notice of enhancement. The Munsif pro-[720]perly held, that "the Court that appoints this manager has no greater powers than those which the statute-law confers on it, so that the manager himself cannot possess more powers than this." The Munsif accordingly held, that the plaintiff had no authority to issue the notice of enhancement. The District Judge, in appeal, considered that the manager stands exactly in the same position as a gomashta or administrator. In this view of the law he held, under the authority of two cases which apply to gomashtas, that the manager had rightly exercised his powers. It appears to us that the view taken by the Munsif is the correct view. A manager under s. 243 is, in our opinion, appointed merely to collect rents and other receipts and profits of the land; in fact, to carry on the existing state of affairs as the proprietor himself had been doing. We observe that, under the present law, s. 503* of Act X of 1877, higher powers are conferred on him; but so far as under the terms of the law under which he acted, we think that he exceeded his powers. We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the first Court. The defendant will receive his costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed.

Appeal from Order under s. 331 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) as amended by s. 52 of Act XII of 1879— Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), Art. 11, cl. (b), Sched. ii.

Appeals from Orders under s. 331 of Act X of 1877, as amended by s. 52 of Act XII of 1879, are chargeable with the same court-fee as is required in the case of appeals from decrees.

[721] IN these cases appeals were filed against orders made in two suits, under s. 331 of Act X of 1877. The memorandum of appeal bore in both cases a stamp of Rs. 2, in accordance with art. 11, cl. (b) of sched. ii of Act VII of 1870.

The Deputy Registrar and the Taxing Officer were both of opinion that the amendment of s. 331 of Act X of 1877 by s. 52 of Act XII of 1879 restored in effect the procedure under the provisions of s. 229 of Act VIII of 1859, and that therefore the ruling of Asap Khan (9 Sevestre, 43) and of Sayud Ameer Aly (9 Savestre 95) must be followed, which rulings laid down that the court-fee chargeable on such an order was the same as that chargeable for an appeal from a decree.

The Taxing Officer, however, referred the matter to the Chief Justice in the following terms :—" Are appeals from orders passed under s. 331 of Act X of 1877, as amended by Act XII of 1879, chargeable with a court-fee of Rs. 2, as under art. 11, cl. (b), sched. ii of Act VII of 1870, or are they chargeable with a full stamp as in the case of appeals from decrees ? "

The Opinion of the Chief Justice was as follows :—I think that these appeals are chargeable with a full stamp as in the case of appeals from decrees. They clearly do not come within art. 11, cl.(b), sched. ii of Act VII of 1870, because that article does not apply to orders which have the force of a decree.

PRESENT:

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE BOSE.

versus

Abhoy Churn Mitter and others.....Defendants.*

Hundi stamped with adhesive stamps admissibility in evidence—"Duly stamped"—Stamp Act (I of 1879), ss. 3 (10) 10, 34.

The words 'duly stamped' in s. 3 of the Stamp Act signify "stamped or written upon paper bearing an impressed stamp."

[722] A bill of exchange for Rs. 500, payable otherwise than on demand, must under art. 11 of sched. i of the Act, be stamped with an impressed stamp of the value of six annas.

ON the 29th Bysakh 1286 (11th May 1879), the plaintiffs advanced to the defendants Rs. 500 on the security of a hundi payable in fifteen days. The hundi was stamped with six one anna receipt stamps. On presentation, the defendants refused payment. The plaintiffs thereupon brought this suit. The defendants contended, amongst other things, that the instrument was insufficiently stamped.

The Assistant Commissioner held, that, under the provisions of s. 10 of the Stamp Act of 1879, and of s. 5 of the Act of 1869, such a stamping was insufficient; and that the defect could not be rectified by payment of a penalty, nor could independent evidence of consideration be received. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs appealed to the Deputy Commissioner, who affirmed the decree of the lower Court, and dismissed the appeal.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Srinath Doss and Baboo Ganendro Nath Doss, for the Appellants, contended. (i) that no rules had been made by the Government under s. 60, and therefore it was impossible to say whether impressed or adhesive stamps were required; and (ii) that oral evidence should have been admitted to prove the consideration; (iii) that the instrument was a bill of exchange, and only required a one-anna stamp.

Baboo Okil Chunder Sen for the Respondents contended, that s. 34 laid down that no instrument should be used in evidence unless 'duly stamped,' and that those words meant "stamped or written upon paper bearing an impressed stamp in accordance with the law in force in British India, when such instrument was first executed," the only exception to this being given in s. 10.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and BOSE, J.) was delivered by Garth, C.J.—This is a suit brought upon a hundi for Rs. 500, payable fifteen days after dato. The instrument was [723] stamped, not with an impressed stamp, but with six one-anna receipt stamps; and, under these circumstances, both Courts held that it was not admissible in evidence.

* Special Appeal No. 1216 of 1880, from the decree of M. O. Boyd, Esq., Deputy Commissioner of Cachar, dated the 10th April 1880 confirming that of Baboo Juggut Bundhoo Nag, Extra Assistant Commissioner and Sudder Munsif of Silchar, dated the 26th January 1880.

On appeal to this Court it was first contended that the instrument was a bill of exchange payable on demand; and that, consequently, it required only a one-anna stamp. It is clear, however, that this is not so. It is payable fifteen days after date, and therefore comes under the latter part of art. 11 of sched. i, Act I of 1879.

Two further points were then raised. The first was, that although s. 9 of the Act itself says, that "all duties with which any instruments are chargeable" shall be paid by means of stamps, it also says, that "rules may be made by the Governor-General in Council in the case of each kind of instrument regulating the description of stamps that may be used;" and it is argued that, as no rules have been made by the Government under this section, there is no provision indicating the particular stamp with which a bill of this kind should be impressed. Looking only at this section, there might seem to be something in that point; but when we look at s. 34, and also at the interpretation-clause in s. 3, all difficulty is removed. By s. 34 it is enacted, that "no instrument chargeable with duty shall be admitted in evidence for any purpose, unless such instrument is duly stamped." And then, when we look for the meaning of 'duly stamped,' we find in s. 3 (the interpretation-clause), that those words, as applied to an instrument, mean "stamped or written upon paper bearing an impressed stamp." Therefore, taking these two sections together, it is clear, that an instrument of this kind, which is a bill of exchange for Rs. 500, must be duly stamped under art. 11, sched. i of the Act with an impressed stamp of the value of six annas. The exception in s. 10 provides for cases, amongst others, "of instruments chargeable with the duty of one anna," and if this had been a bill of exchange payable on demand, it would have been chargeable with the one-anna duty only, and so would have come under the provisions of sub-section (a) of s. 10.

The second point taken by the appellants was, that even although the instrument itself was not admissible in evidence, the [724] plaintiffs were entitled to recover upon proving the consideration for the bill. Of course, if the consideration for the bill had been an independent cause of action, complete in itself before the bill was given, the appellants' argument would have been well founded. But here it is stated in the plaint, and it is evidently the fact, that the Rs. 500, which was the consideration of the bill, was advanced by the plaintiffs to the defendants upon this particular bill, and as the bill itself is the best evidence of the terms upon which the advance was made, the plaintiffs could not establish their case without proving the bill.

The law upon this subject was fully explained by this Court in the case of Sheik Akbur v. Sheik Khan (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 256).

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

The 20th April, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Abasu Begum

versus

Umda Khanum and another.*

Recognizance to keep the peace—Form of summons under s. 492 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872).

The words of s. 492 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are directory, and not imperative ; and an omission to insert in a summons under that section the amount of the recognizance and security required will not invalidate any subsequent proceedings binding over the parties to keep the peace.

ON the 27th October 1881 an Assistant Magistrate passed an order under s. 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code, calling upon certain persons to appear and show cause why they should not be bound down to keep the peace: the amount of the bond, the term for which it was to be in force, the number of sureties [726] required, and the amount in which they were to be bound were not stated in the summons.

The Sessions Judge considered the order to be illegal, inasmuch as s. 492 of the Code of Criminal Procedure had not been complied with, and referred the following question to the High Court :—Whether the provisions of s. 492 of the Criminal Procedure Code (in regard to the amount of the bond, the term for which it is to be in force, the number of sureties required, and the amount in which they are to be bound) should be strictly adhered to, or whether a simple order to show cause, without specifying any of the particulars required by the section, is sufficient ?

Baboo Romesh Chunder Bose, Baboo Ram Churn Mitter, and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey for the different parties concerned by the order.

The Opinion of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—In this case one Umda Khanum has been required to give rupees one thousand as recognizance and two sureties in rupees five hundred each to keep the peace for the term of one year, and one Bahadoor Lall has been required to give rupees two hundred as recognizance and two sureties in rupees one hundred each to keep the peace for the same term.

The Sessions Judge of Gya has referred the case to this Court to have the order quashed, on the ground that the summons issued under ss. 491, 492 of the Code of Criminal Procedure did not, as it should have done, specify the amount of the recognizance, the number of sureties required, and the amount in which they were to be bound respectively.

Section 492 distinctly provides that the summons shall set forth the substance of the report or information on which it is issued, the amount of the bond, and the term for which it is to be enforced, and, if security is called for, the number of sureties required and the amount in which they are to be bound respectively, and the time and place at which the person summoned is required to attend. We think it very desirable that [726] Magistrates should, in the performance of their duties, attend strictly to the provisions of the law. This is desirable on many grounds ; and if there were no other reason for desiring it, on this ground alone, that it would save a number of references which take up a considerable portion of the time of this Court, and which are rendered possible merely because Magistrates do not pay that attention which they might reasonably be expected to pay to the express provisions of the law.

* Criminal Reference, No. 80 of 1882, from the order made by G. E. Porter, Esq., Sessions Judge of Gya, dated the 1st April 1882.

What we have to decide in the present case is, whether the omission by the Assistant Magistrate to insert in the summons certain of the particulars required by the section is an omission which will invalidate all proceedings had upon a summons so informally issued.

Now, in this case, we find that the summons did intimate to both parties who have been bound over, that they were to show cause why recognizance and security should not be taken from them. The summons did not specify, as it should have done, the amount of the recognizance or the amount in which the sureties were to be bound respectively.

What then is the nature of the precepts contained in this section of the Code of Criminal Procedure ? Are they imperative or directory merely ? The Code does not in express language say, what shall be the consequence of not attending to the exact provisions contained in s. 492, and it has been said that where the Legislature has expressed no intention on the point, that intention should be imputed to it which is most proper, and it must be that which is most consistent with reason and with due regard to convenience and justice.

In applying this principle it has generally been considered that where the proscriptions of a Statute relate to the performance of a public duty, they are to be understood as instructions merely for the guidance and government of those on whom the duty is imposed : in other words, they are to be considered as directory merely, and not imperative. Instances are :—Where a Statute provided that no person named in the commission of peace should be authorized to act as a justice of the peace until he had taken and subscribed the oaths required by law, and a person named in the commission did act without [727] having taken and subscribed those oaths, it was held, that his not having taken those oaths did not affect the validity of the acts done by him. Again, where a Parochial Assessment Act required that poor-rates should contain certain particulars relating to the person and property to be rated, this provision was held to be directory, and not to affect the validity of a rate which did not contain all the particulars required.

In a very excellent little work on statute-law recently published by Mr. Wilberforce, the result of the cases is thus stated : “ A similar construction is placed upon Statutes which provide that things shall be done in a certain manner. Such a provision is usually considered directory, unless the Legislature has used negative words or other words showing an intention to treat the manner of performance as essential to the validity to the act, or unless the Statute confers a special authority which must be strictly followed.”

Now in the case before us, if the summons had not expressly given notice to the petitioners that they would have to show cause why they should not give security, and notwithstanding this omission security had been taken from them, we think that they would have been prejudiced by the form of the summons. But as the summons did give distinct notice that both recognizance and security would be required of them, although the amount of such recognizance and security was not specified, we think that the irregularity was not one which really prejudiced the petitioners, and that the provisions of the law as to the insertion in the summons of the amount of the recognizance and security ought to be regarded as directory only, and not as imperative. In this view the omission in the summons will not invalidate the subsequent proceedings.

We, therefore, decline to interfere with the order of the Assistant Magistrate.

In the matter of the Petition of Gopal Chunder Sirdar.

Gopal Chunder Sirdar

Foolmoni Bewa.*

Abetment—Extortion—Village chowkidar—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 384.

The mere fact that the offence of extortion under s. 384 of the Penal Code is committed in the presence of the village chowkidar, without eliciting any disapproval on his part, will not render him liable as an abettor of the offence.

In this case the petitioner Gopal Chunder Sirdar was charged with aiding and abetting one Shib Chand Bhandari in extorting Rs. 15 from one Foolmoni Bewa. The Deputy Magistrate, in his judgment, said : " The evidence for the prosecution proves that the accused Shib Chand charged the complainant with the theft of the bythuk of his hookah, and threatened to 'challan' her unless she paid him Rs. 30, and that accused eventually agreed to take Rs. 15, which sum the complainant, by making over her personal jewellery to one Umesh Purkhait as security, managed to raise and pay the accused. The presence of the accused chowkidar, Gopal Chunder Sirdar, is deposed to, and though it does not appear that he said or did anything in particular, his presence during the occurrence, added to the fact of his not having disapproved of the accused Shib Chand's words and conduct and action, sufficiently indicate the abetment on his part." The Deputy Magistrate convicted Shib Chand Bhandari under s. 384 of the * Criminal Motion, No. 75 of 1882, against the order of E. M. Reilly, Esq., Deputy Magistrate of Diamond Harbour in the 24-Parganas, dated the 7th March 1882.

Penal Code, and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment, and to pay a fine of Rs. 30, or in default to similar additional imprisonment for one month. He convicted the petitioner Gopal Chunder Sirdar under ss. 384 and 109 of the Penal Code, and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment. Shib [729] Chand appealed to the District Judge, who, disbelieving the evidence for the prosecution, reversed his conviction and ordered the fine to be returned. Gopal Chunder moved the High Court to have the finding and sentence of the Deputy Magistrate reversed and annulled.

Baboo Boido Nath Dutt for the Petitioner.

The Judgment of the Court (MCDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by McDonell, J.—In this case one Shib Chand Bhandari was charged with extortion, the extortion being said to consist in taking Rs. 15 from a woman by threatening to bring a charge of theft against her.

The petitioner before us, Gopal Chunder Sirdar, was the village chowkidar, and he has been convicted of abetment of the extortion committed by Shib Chand Bhandari.

The Deputy Magistrate says in his judgment, "though it does not appear that he (Gopal Chunder Sirdar) said or did anything in particular, his presence during the occurrence, added to the fact of his not having disapproved of the accused Shib Chand's words and conduct and action, sufficiently indicate the abetment on his part."

We think that the omission on the part of Gopal Chunder Sirdar to disapprove of the conduct of Shib Chand Bhandari, cannot, under the circumstances, be said to amount to abetment. The only portion of the definition in s. 107 * of the Penal Code which can be supposed to apply is the third clause, namely, "intentionally aids by any act or illegal omission the doing of that thing." Now, there was no illegal omission on the part of the chowkidar in this case. He was not bound by s. 89 or by s. 90 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to report the offence of extortion; and even if he were so bound, his subsequent omission to report the commission of the offence could not be said to be intentionally aiding the doing of the thing itself which must have been done before it could be reported by the chowkidar.

The offence of extortion is not a "cognizable offence;" and [730] therefore, even if we suppose that the chowkidar knew the charge of theft to be false, and this does not appear, s. 95 or s. 97 of the Code of Criminal Procedure would not apply.

That the chowkidar intentionally aided the commission of the offence of extortion by any act is negatived by the Deputy Magistrate's finding; and we are unable to see that he aided by any illegal omission. We must, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence.

Conviction set aside.

Abetment of a thing. * [Sec. 107:—A person abets the doing of a thing who—

First.—Instigates any person to do that thing; or

Secondly.—Engages with one more other person or persons in any conspiracy for the doing of that thing, if an act or illegal omission takes place in pursuance of that conspiracy, and in order to the doing of that thing; or Thirdly.—Intentionally aids, by any act or illegal omission, the doing of that thing.

Explanation I.—A person who, by wilful misrepresentation or by wilful concealment of a material fact which he is bound to disclose, voluntarily causes or procures, or attempts to cause or procure, a thing to be done, is said to instigate the doing of that thing.

Explanation II.—Whoever, either prior to or at the time of the commission of an act, does anything in order to facilitate the commission of that act, and thereby facilitates the commission thereof, is said to aid the doing of that act.]

A condition in a lease, that the tenant will pay to the landlord collection charges, can be enforced if the condition is definite and certain in its nature, and forms part of the consideration for the lease.

THE question raised in this appeal is fully stated in the judgment.

Moonshi Serajul Islam for the Appellant.

Baboo Bussunt Coomar Bose for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and BOSE, J.) was delivered by Garth, C. J.—The only question raised in this appeal is, whether the sum which the defendants undertook to pay to the [731] plaintiff for collection charges at the rate of two annas in the rupee, was a claim which the plaintiff has a right to enforce.

The plaintiff granted to the defendants a patni talook at a fixed jama of Rs. 600, for which the defendants gave the plaintiff a kabuliat; and the defendants, by the same kabuliat, agreed to pay the plaintiff collection charges at the rate of two annas in the rupee along with the instalments of the annual rent.

This suit was brought both for arrears of rent and also for arrears of the two annas in the rupee for collection charges; but the defendants contended that the latter claim could not be enforced, inasmuch as it represented the illegal cesses which were collected from ryots.

Both the lower Courts have disallowed the claim upon the ground, and apparently upon the authority, of the case of Kamala Kant Ghose v. Kalu Mahomed Mandal (3 B. L. R., A. C., 44).

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court, and contends, that as the two annas for collection charges was a definite sum agreed to be paid by the defendants over and above the rent, and as there was no evidence that the charges were illegal, there is no good reason why it should not be recoverable.

The defendants, on the other hand, contend that this sum of two annas in the rupee, which professes to be for collection charges, is in fact the average amount of illegal cesses which the plaintiff, before the grant of the patni, was in the habit of collecting from the ryots, but which, under the patni, became recoverable from them by the patnidar.

There having been some doubt during the argument as to the true meaning of the language of the patni patta in this respect we have had the instrument translated by one of the translators of the Court, and we find that the passage upon which the question turns has been rendered thus: "According to the practice prevailing in the pargana, we shall annually pay the collection charges at the rate of two annas per rupee along with the instalments of the annual rent." We see no reason to doubt the accuracy of this translation; and inasmuch as it has [732] not been shown that this part of the agreement is illegal or is founded upon the collection of any illegal cess or cesses, the claim appears to us unobjectionable.

We believe that agreements of this kind are by no means unusual, and if they are certain and definite in their nature, and form part of the consideration for the lease, there is no reason why they should not be enforced. See Jugodish Chunder Biswas v. Turrikoolah Sirkar (24 W. R. 90) and Jeeutoollah Paramanick v. Jugodindro Narain Roy (22 W. R. 12).

The appeal will, therefore, be decreed, and the plaintiff will be entitled to the arrears claimed for collection charges, in addition to the sum which has already been adjudged to him by the lower Court, with interest at 6 per cent. from the date of suit.

He will also have his costs accordingly in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

The word 'deputy,' in Book 9, Chap. V, p. 591 of Baillie's Mahomedan Law, signifies some one who, as an agent, may be employed to perform the duties of the office, as to collect rents and to assist the mutwali in expending the proceeds of the endowed property for charitable purposes.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 223 of 1880, against the decree of Moulvi Mahomed Nurul Hossain, Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated the 28th of June 1880.

The plaintiff in this case alleged that one Mahomed Ali Jamadar endowed a one-anna share in Mouza Samai and a [733] garden to defray the expenses connected with a mukbora situated in Patna; and that he, under a deed of towliatnama, dated the 16th June 1823, nominated his eldest son, Khoda Buksh, and his descendants as mutwalis thereof; that Rajub Ali, son of Khoda Buksh, on the death of his father, became mutwali, and on his (Rajub Ali's) death, Medhi Hossain, his son, became mutwali; but that he laid claim to the endowed property as his own and misappropriated the proceeds. Upon this, one Sheik Wahid Ali (the defendant in the present case), one of the heirs of Mahomed Ali Jamadar, but not a lineal descendent of Khoda Buksh, was put forward as the mutwali with the consent of the family, and brought a suit against Medhi Hossain to dispossess him of the property. In that suit Wahid Ali was successful, and from 1861 to 1879, himself acted as mutwali. The plaintiffs further alleged that Wahid Ali was discovered to have converted the endowed properties to his own use, and that thereupon one Pearunnessa, a daughter of Khoda Buksh, and heir of Mahomed Ali Jamadar, dismissed him, and under a deed, dated the 11th December 1878, made Ashruff Hossain and Amjad Ali mutwalis; and on the refusal of Wahid Ali to give up possession, Ashruff Hossain and Amjad Ali, on the 12th June 1879, brought this present suit against Wahid Ali, praying that possession might be given them as mutwalis of the endowed properties, and that the defendant might be ordered to render an account, and to make good certain portions of the property which he was said to have misappropriated.

The defendant contended that Pearunnessa was not competent to appoint a mutwali, neither had she the power to dismiss him; and that he, the defendant, was appointed mutwali under a decree of Court, and had committed no malversation.

The Subordinate Judge found that Wahid Ali had mismanaged the endowed property, and that Pearunnessa, being the lineal descendent of Khoda Buksh, had a right to become mutwali herself, and to depute the plaintiffs by the deed of December 1878; and ordered the plaintiffs to be put into possession of the property in dispute, and the defendant to be dismissed from the office of mutwali.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

[734] Mr. C. Gregory and Moonshi Mahomed Yusuf for the Appellant.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Moonshi Serajul Islam for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and BOSE, J.) was delivered by Garth, C. J.—We think that this case must be decided upon a point which appears to have been improperly considered by the Court below.

The defendant denies the right of the plaintiffs to dispossess him of the endowment. He denies that he is in any respect unworthy of the post, or has misappropriated any part of the property; and he also denies the plaintiffs' right to bring this suit. He further says, that the plaintiff Ashruff Ali is himself an improper person to be mutwali.

The lower Court has found in favour of the plaintiffs. It has decided that Wahid Ali has mismanaged the endowment and is otherwise an improper person to hold the office of mutwali. It also finds that Mussamut Bibi Pearunnessa, being the lineal descendant of Khoda Buksh, had a right to be mutwali herself, and to depute the plaintiffs, by the deed of 1878, to be mutwalis in her place. Now, if the question had been simply, whether the defendant Wahid Ali was a proper person to perform the duties of mutwali, and whether Mussamut Pearunnessa, as being the lineal descendant of Khoda Buksh, had a right to be mutwali in his stead, we might probably have agreed with the Court below. But the point which has been urged upon us here, and which we consider to be an answer to the suit, is this, that although Mussamut Pearunnessa might herself have had a right to claim to be mutwali in the room of Wahid Ali, she had no right to appoint the plaintiffs by deed or otherwise to be mutwalis in her stead.

We consider that the office of mutwali is a trust, which a woman, equally with a man, is capable of discharging; but we think that it is a personal trust, and we find no authority for [736] the position, that the office may be transferred and the endowed property conveyed to any person whom the acting mutwali may select. Besides which, there is this further difficulty in this case, that Pearunnessa, although she might have a right to become the mutwali, and to dispossess Wahid Ali, has never taken any steps to assert her claim, and she professes to have conveyed away the office to the plaintiffs before she had acquired it herself. It has been contended by the plaintiffs, that this passage at commencement of Book 9, Chap. V, p. 591, of Baillie's Mahomedan Law, is an authority in support of their claim: "No one should be appointed but an ameen or trustee who is able to act by himself and by deputy; and in this males and females are alike."

It is said that the word 'deputy' justifies a complete transfer of the office of mutwali from the superintendent to some other person; but we think this is not so. The word 'deputy' in that passage merely means some one who, as an agent, may be employed to perform the duties of the office, as to collect the rents or other proceeds of the property, and to assist the mutwali in expending them for charitable purposes. But the employment of an agent in this way is a totally different thing from a complete transfer of the office of mutwali to a third person. The office in such case would remain with the mutwali, although he might employ this or that person to perform some of the duties attached to it.

In this case it appears to us that the only person who could claim the office and bring the suit would be the Mussamut herself; and that the plaintiffs have clearly no right to do so as her transferees.

We think, therefore, that the suit must be dismissed, and that as there is no sufficient reason for departing from the ordinary rule as to costs, the plaintiffs must pay the defendant's costs in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Maintenance—Mutta form of marriage—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 536—Mahomedan Law—Sheea Sect.

Under the Law of the Sheea sect of Mahomedans a mutta wife is not entitled to maintenance, but such a provision of the law does not interfere with the statutory right to maintenance given by s. 536† of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The mutta form of marriage does not admit of repudiation under the law of the Sheea sect of Mahomedans.

Quere.—Whether the form of divorce called Zihar may be exercised in the mutta form of marriage.

ONE Luddun Sahiba applied to a Magistrate, under s. 536 † of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for maintenance, stating that she had been married to her husband, under the mutta form, for a period of fifty years, and that her husband had now refused to maintain her.

* Criminal Motion, No. 93 of 1882, against the order of Syed Amir Hussain Deputy Magistrate of the 24-Parganas, dated the 25th February 1882.

† [Sec. 536 :—If any person, having sufficient means, neglects or refuses to maintain his wife, or legitimate or illegitimate child unable to maintain hima district, or a Magistrate of the first class may, upon due proof thereof by evidence, order such person to make a monthly allowance for the maintenance of his wife or such child at such monthly rate, not exceeding fifty rupees in the whole, as to such Magistrate seems reasonable.

Such allowance shall be payable from the date of the order.

If such person wilfully neglects to comply with this order, such Magistrate may, for every breach of the order by warrant, direct the amount due to be levied

Enforcement of order. in the manner provided for levying fines ; and may order such person to be imprisoned with or without hard labour for any term not exceeding one month for each month's allowance remaining unpaid :

Provided that, if such person offers to maintain his wife on condition of her living with him, and his wife refuses to live with him, such Magistrate may

Proviso. consider any grounds of refusal stated by such wife ; and may make the order allowed by this section notwithstanding such offer, if he is satisfied that such person is living in adultery, or that he has habitually treated his wife with cruelty.

No wife shall be entitled to receive an allowance from her husband under this section, if she is living in adultery, or if, without any sufficient reason, she refuses to live with her husband, or if they are living separately by consent.]

The husband alleged that the mutta was contracted for one month and a half only, and that, after living with Luddun for a month, he gave up the remaining fifteen days on her going away to her own house without his consent.

The Deputy Magistrate held, that, according to the Sheea law, by which the parties were governed, the woman had no right to maintenance, she being a mutta wife to whom the section of the Criminal Procedure Code was inapplicable; and that the husband having given up a portion of the period of the mutta marriage, the woman was no longer his wife within the meaning of s. 536. He, therefore, dismissed the application.

The case came up to the High Court under s. 294 of Act X of 1872.

[737] Mr. Amir Ali and Moonshi Serajul Islam, for the petitioner, contended, that the provisions of the Sheea law could not interfere with the statutory right to maintenance given by s. 536.

Mr. Abdool Rahman, contra, contended, that the effect of giving up part of the period for which the contract of marriage has been made, was to put an end to the relationship of husband and wife.

The Order of the Court (MCDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was as follows :—

The petitioner in this case made an application under s. 536 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the purpose of obtaining an order for maintenance of herself as the wife of Prince Mirza Kamar Kudar. It is admitted on all hands that the parties are Shecas, and that she was a wife by the mutta form of marriage contract. She alleges that the period of the contract made between herself and the defendant was fifty years. The defendant, on the other hand, alleges that the period was one month and-a-half only.

The Deputy Magistrate, before whom the case came for disposal, was of opinion,—first, that inasmuch as, under the Sheea law, a mutta wife has no right to maintenance, the petitioner was not entitled to obtain an order for maintenance under the provisions of s. 536 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; and, secondly, that as the defendant had given up the remaining term of the period of the mutta marriage, the petitioner was no longer a wife within the meaning of s. 536.

As to the first point there is no dispute that, according to the Sheea law, a mutta wife is not entitled to maintenance. But it is contended by Mr. Amir Ali that this provision of the Sheea law cannot interfere with the statutory right to maintenance given by s. 536 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

We think that this contention is correct. A right to maintenance, depending upon the personal law of the individual, is a right capable of being enforced, and properly forms the subject of a suit in a Civil Court. But we think that this right, depending upon the personal law of the individual, is altogether different from the statutory right to maintenance given by [738] s. 536 in every case in which a person, having sufficient means, neglects or refuses to maintain his wife.

As to the second point, it is admitted by both sides that the husband can give up the remaining portion of the period for which the contract of mutta marriage is made. For the defendant it is contended, that the effect of giving up the rest of the period is to put an end to the relationship of husband and wife. No authority has been shown to us in support of this contention, and as at present advised, we are unable to concur in the argument, that the giving up of the remainder of the term terminates the relationship of husband and wife. According to the Sheea law the mutta form of marriage does not admit of repudiation, and if the giving up of the remainder of the term had the effect contended for, this would practically destroy the provision of the law which forbids repudiation in this form of marriage.

We think, therefore, that the Deputy Magistrate was not right in dismissing the petition on either of the grounds on which he has proceeded. We must, therefore, set aside his order and remand the case in order that he may determine whether the period of the mutta contract was fifty years, as alleged by the petitioner, or one month and-a-half only, as alleged by the defendant—determine, in other words, whether the petitioner is still the wife of the defendant.

In the course of the argument a question was raised before us, upon which we pronounce no opinion, because it was not a point which was raised before the Deputy Magistrate. We refer to the question whether the form of divorce known as zihar may be exercised in the mutta form of marriage. Mr. Baillie says, that there is some difference of opinion on this point, but that, according to the opinion which is founded on traditional authority, it may be exercised. The defendant contended before the Deputy Magistrate that he had given up the remainder of the term, and that this had the effect of terminating the relationship of husband and wife. He made no allegation that he had exercised and had a right to exercise zihar.

Order set aside.

NOTES.

[I. MAHOMEDAN LAW—' MUTTA ' MARRIAGE—

The point as to divorce, which was left undetermined in this case, came up in (1886) 14 Cal. 276, where it was held that the husband can validly 'give up the unexpired term, by a hiba-a-muddat, even without the wife's consent or acceptance, he being in the position of a debtor.

[739] APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The 28th April, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

In the matter of the Petition of Jhubboo Mahton and others.

The Empress

Jhubboo Mahton and others.*

Evidence—Writing to refresh memory—Right of Counsel to inspect the writing—Neglect to exercise such right—Deposition of medical witness—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), ss. 240, 323—Duty of a Judge when charging a Jury—Constructive murder under s. 34 of Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Effect on others charged under s. 149—Irregularities in procedure and admission of evidence.

Per FIELD, J.—The grounds upon which the opposite party is permitted to inspect a writing, and to refresh the memory of a witness, are threefold : (i) to secure the full benefit of the witness's recollection as to the whole of the fact; (ii) to check the use of improper documents; (iii) to compare his oral testimony with his written statement.

Per FIELD, J.—The opposite party has a right to look at any particular writing before or at the moment when the witness uses it to refresh his memory in order to answer a particular question; but if he then neglects to exercise his right, he cannot continue to retain the right throughout the whole of the subsequent examination of the witness.

Per FIELD, J.—Under the provisions of s. 323 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the examination of a medical witness taken and duly attested may be given in evidence in any criminal trial; but in order that such evidence may be admissible against any individual accused person, the examination must have been taken in the presence of the accused person.

Per FIELD, J.—It is the duty of a Judge to give a direction upon the law to the jury so far as to make them understand the law as bearing upon the fact; and if he does not give them an explanation of the law sufficiently comprehensive to enable them to decide the particular issue, it is a misdirection.

Per FIELD, J.—Where a prisoner is constructively guilty of murder under s. 34 of the Penal Code, it is doubtful if he can be said to have committed the offence of murder within the meaning of s. 149, so as to make other prisoners, by a double construction, guilty of murder.

Per FIELD, J.—Irregularities under s. 240 of the Criminal Procedure Code in the selection of the jurors, and in the admission of the deposition of a medical witness treated, it not being shown that the prisoners had been thereby prejudiced, as being objections which ought not to be entertained for the [740] purpose of interfering with the verdict, regard being had to the provisions of s. 283 of the Criminal Procedure Code and s. 167 of the Evidence Act.

THIS was an appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge of Patna.

The facts of the case are fully set out in the judgment of FIELD, J.

Mr. Branson, Mr. Huda and Mr. Sandel for the Appellants.

The Officiating Advocate-General (Mr. Phillips) and Mr. M. Ghose for the Crown.

The following Judgments were delivered:—

Field, J.—In this case eight persons have been tried and convicted under s. 302 read with s. 142 of the Penal Code, and have been sentenced to transportation for life. The circumstance out of which the case arose was a dispute concerning a piece of land and the crop which, at the time of the occurrence, was upon this land.

The first prisoner Jhubboo was originally charged under ss. 302, 326, 396 and 148 of the Penal Code. In the course of the trial two further charges were added, viz., that he, Jhubboo, was a member of an unlawful assembly in the prosecution of the common object of which, namely taking possession of certain crops by force, one of the members committed murder by causing the death of one Ibrahim Hossein, and that he was thereby guilty under s. 302 read with s. 149 of the Penal Code; and secondly, that he was a member of an unlawful assembly in the prosecution of the common object of which, namely, in taking possession of the crops by force, one or more of the members caused grievous hurt to one Torab Ali, and that he had thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 325 read with s. 149 of the Penal Code.

Against the next two prisoners, Lukshman Mahton and Umrao Mahton, there were charges under s. 302 read with s. 149, s. 326 read with s. 149 and s. 396 of the Penal Code. The charge under s. 302 runs thus: "That you were members of an unlawful assembly, by a member of which, to wit, Jhubboo, an offence, the murder of Ibrahim Hossein, was committed [741] such as you knew to be likely to be committed, in the prosecution of the common object, to wit, the taking possession of the crops by force." Lukshman is also charged with rioting armed with a deadly weapon, under s. 148.

Against the remaining five prisoners,—Harihur Mahton, Randeal Mahton, Sajwan Mahton, Mahabir Mahton, and Ramjiwan Mahton,—there are charges under s. 302 read with s. 149, s. 326 read with s. 149, and s. 396 of the Penal Code; and in these charges the common object is indefinitely stated to be "the taking possession of the crops by force." And the charges as to murder and grievous hurt allege that the accused persons knew these offences to be likely to be committed in the prosecution of the common object. There was also against Harihur Mahton an additional charge under s. 148.

Two observations may be made in respect of the prisoners other than Jhubboo: first, the charges against them did not allege that the offences of murder and grievous hurt were committed in the prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly, and yet the jury have found that these prisoners are guilty on the ground that the offence of murder was committed in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly. The Judge gave no direction upon the matter of the charge as framed,—viz., that murder was such an offence as the members of the unlawful assembly knew to be likely to be committed in the prosecution of the common object; he summed up as if the charge alleged, which it did not, that murder had been committed in prosecution of the common object. It is reasonable to suppose that the Judge's misdirection led the jury into error. Secondly, the charges allege that the offences of murder and grievous hurt were committed by Jhubboo Mahton. These charges were not amended by the insertion of any such words as the following:—"or some other person unknown who was a member of the unlawful assembly." The jury have found as a fact that Jhubboo Mahton did not commit the murder; and if Jhubboo did not commit the murder, it is not easy to understand how the prisoners other than Jhubboo could be constructively convicted of murder on the ground that murder had been committed by Jhubboo in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly.

[742] Five persons are said to have been injured in the course of the riot,—namely, Ibrahim Hossein, Imdad Ali, Gohur Ali, Torab Ali, and Abdul Karim. Of these, Ibrahim Hossein has since died in consequence, as is alleged by the prosecution, of the injuries which he received on the occasion of the riot.

In the petition of appeal, which has been presented to this Court, a number of points have been taken; but as they have not all been pressed upon us, I shall, before proceeding to deal with the Judge's charge to the jury, notice those only which formed the subject of the arguments addressed to us.

The first point is, that the jurors who tried the case were not, as they should have been, chosen by lot from the persons summoned to act as jurors. Section 239 of the Code of Criminal Procedure directs that assessors shall be chosen by the Judge. Section 240 directs that the jurors shall be chosen by lot from the persons summoned to act as jurors. If, as is alleged in the petition of appeal, the Judge himself selected the jurors instead of choosing them by lot, he acted contrary to the provisions of s. 240. But as there is no serious contention that the appellants were in any way prejudiced by what the Judge is said to have done in this matter, I think the objection is not one which ought to be entertained for the purpose of interfering with the verdict, regard being had to the provisions of S. 283 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The next point is, that although the police-officer, Ram Surrun Lal, was allowed to refresh his memory by looking at his diary, the Sessions Judge improperly refused to allow the counsel for the defence to see this diary. What really happened was this: The police-officer Ram Surrun Lal, when under examination, was asked whether he took down the statement made by the witness Leakat, and he replied that he did. He then read, or refreshed his memory, by looking at the original statement so taken down by him. This was, as I understand it, a statement taken down under the provisions of s. 119 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and was not necessarily a part of the diary which a police-officer is required to keep by s. 126. The particulars which s. 126 requires to be recorded in a police-diary do not include any written statement [743] taken down under s. 119, and from the papers produced before us it would appear that, as a matter of fact, the written statement was not an integral portion of the diary. Having looked at Leakat's statement the police-officer said in answer to a question put by the prisoner's counsel that it contained nothing about Jhubboo jumping on Ibrahim. The object of asking this question was to show that Leakat in his first statement to the police had said nothing about the prisoner Jhubboo jumping on the deceased Ibrahim. The medical evidence showed that Ibrahim had received internal injuries, and the theory of the defence was, that, after these injuries were discovered upon a post-mortem examination, the witness Leakat improved his testimony by adding a statement about Jhubboo jumping on Ibrahim with the object of accounting for the internal injuries discovered by the post-Mortem examination. As, however, the police-officer stated that Leakat had said nothing to him about Jhubboo jumping on Ibrahim, the object of the question was attained, and it was unnecessary for the prisoner's counsel to ask to look at the diary.

The police-officer then stated in answer to a further question that the statement taken by him did not record that Jhubboo had given orders. It appears from a note made lower down by the Sessions Judge that this question also was answered by the witness after looking at the written statements taken by him, when he questioned the persons afterwards called for the prosecution in the Court of Session. Here also as the answer of the witness was all that the prisoner's counsel could desire, there was no necessity for him to look at the original statement with which the witness refreshed his memory, and he did not ask to do so.

After this we have nearly a page and-a-half of the same witness's cross-examination, and then we find that the witness was asked—"Did Torab Ali say anything to you about his having seen Gohur Ali, Imdad Ali, and Abdul Karim being struck?" The answer was, "I do not remember." Before giving this answer it is not contended that the witness again looked at the original statements of the witnesses, and the Judge then makes this note—"The counsel for the defence wishes to see the diary [744] and to make the witness refresh his memory therewith. The Court declined to do this." It is now contended that because, before answering the two first questions above referred to, the witness had looked at the original statements in order to refresh his memory, the counsel was entitled to see the diary when at a later stage of the examination, the witness gave the answer, "I do not remember." I think that this contention is untenable. I have first to observe that although the term 'diary' has been used, I take it that what the Judge and the counsel were really alluding to, was the statement taken down by the police-officer under s. 119. Having regard to s. 161 of the Evidence Act, the prisoners' counsel was entitled to see the writing with which the police-officer refreshed his memory in order to answer the first two questions. This writing was, as to the first question, the original statement of Leakat. What the writing was with respect to the second question is not very clear.

Now the writing which the prisoners' counsel desired to see when the witness said "I do not remember," was not the statement of Leakat, but the statement of Torab Ali. I think that, as the prisoners' counsel did not exercise his right to look at the writing when the first or when the second question was answered, but allowed the examination to proceed, he lost his opportunity of claiming to look at the writing to which the witness referred before answering the first and the second questions. I do not assent to the argument that because counsel was entitled to see the writing which contained the statement of Leakat, he was, therefore, entitled to see other writings which contained the statements of persons other than Leakat and which had no connection with Leakat's statement except that they were taken in the course of the same enquiry by the police. Nor can I assent to the argument that counsel, having a right to look at a particular writing before or at the moment when the witness used it to refresh his memory in order to answer a particular question, and not then exercising this right, continued to retain it through the whole of the subsequent examination of the witness.

The grounds upon which the opposite party is permitted to inspect a writing and to refresh the memory of a witness are [745] three-fold: (i) to secure the full benefit of the witness's recollection as to the whole of the facts; (ii) to check the use of improper documents; and (iii) to compare his oral testimony with his written statement. The opposite party may look at the writing to see what kind of writing it is in order to check the use of improper documents; but I doubt whether he is entitled, except for this particular purpose, to question the witness as to other and independent matters contained in the same series of writings. I think, therefore, that, at the particular stage at which the prisoners' counsel asked to see what he called the diary, by which I presume he meant the whole series of writings containing the statements of all the persons examined by the police-officer, he was not entitled to exercise the right claimed in the particular way claimed by him. I further think that the Sessions Judge was not bound to compel the witness to look at the so-called diary in order to refresh his memory; and that it was wholly within his discretion whether he should do so or not.

The third point is, that the deposition of the medical officer was taken by the Magistrate when only three prisoners,—namely, Jhubboo, Lukshman, and Umrao,—were before him and that, as regards the remaining five prisoners, this examination of the medical officer was improperly used as evidence in the Court of Sessions, inasmuch as it was not taken by the Magistrate in their presence.

Under the provisions of s. 323 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, "the examination of a Civil Surgeon or other medical witness, taken and duly attested by a Magistrate, may be given in evidence in any criminal trial, although the person examined is not called as a witness, but the Court may summon such Civil Surgeon or other medical witness if it sees sufficient cause for doing so." I take it that in order to be admissible under this section as evidence against any individual accused, the examination must have been taken by the Magistrate in his presence. In the present case, I think it exceedingly probable that the examination of the medical witness was not taken in the presence of the five prisoners other than Jhubboo, Lukshman, and Umrao. At the same time I cannot say that this is a point upon which there is no possible doubt. No specific objection to [746] the admissibility of the medical officer's examination was taken upon this ground in the Court of Session. If such objection had been taken, 'it is just possible that matter might have been forthcoming to show that the other five accused were present in person or by agent (s. 191,† Criminal Procedure Code) when the medical officer was examined by the Magistrate.

The medical officer was called in the Court of Session, and it has been contended before us, that, as he was called, his deposition taken by the Magistrate was absolutely inadmissible. I do not assent to this argument. I think that a deposition, properly taken, may be put in, and that the medical officer may then be called and further interrogated upon any points upon which there had not been a sufficient examination by the Magistrate. In the present case the medical officer was called and was cross-examined by the prisoners' counsel. It is true that this cross-examination was expressly, stated to be on behalf of one of the prisoners only, but it is equally true that counsel had an opportunity of cross-examining on behalf of all the prisoners. One important reason why a deposition not taken in the presence of a person sought to be affected by it is inadmissible is, that such person had no opportunity of cross-examining the witness. In this case all the accused were afforded this opportunity in the Court of Session. Then, further, it has not been contended, that if the medical officer had been examined again in chief in the Court of Session, any advantage would have accrued to the appellants which they could not have obtained by cross-examining him when he was called by the Sessions Judge.

Under these circumstances, I think it has not been shown to us that the prisoners were prejudiced by the irregularity, if committed; and, with reference to s. 283 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and s. 167 of the Evidence Act, I think that this objection would not justify us in interfering with the verdict.

Having disposed of these preliminary questions, I now come to consider the Judge's charge to the jury, and as the conclusion to which I feel myself constrained to come is, that this charge is radically defective in at least two essential particulars, I shall set out the essential portions of the charge and state somewhat fully the grounds upon which I am led to this conclusion.

[747] After some preliminary observations the Judge preceeds to say:—"The first question which you have to decide is—Was there a disturbance in the village of Sopowan and plot called Jhikitia Kunda on the morning of Monday the 28th November last and were Ibrahim and four others wounded there? There can be no doubt that Ibrahim is dead, and I do not think that there can be any reasonable doubt that he was killed. The medical evidence shows that he had a severe and dangerous wound on the left arm. The ulnar artery had been cut and the ulnar bone broken and comminuted, and this wound appeared to have been inflicted with a sword. The medical evidence shows that death was the result of hæmorrhage and shock."

personal attendance is dispensed with and he appears by agent.

Accused may cross-examine. The accused person or his agent shall be permitted to examine and re-examine his own witnesses and to cross-examine the complainant and his witnesses.]

He then proceeds to remark upon the injuries said to have been caused to Torab Ali, Imdad Ali, Gohur Ali, and Abdul Carim; and after this he says:—The next questions which you have to decide are: Were the prisoners present at that disturbance? Did they take part in it? Was that disturbance a riot? Did the prisoners take part in the riot? Was the common object of the rioters to take possession by force of a crop of paddy, and were the killing of Ibrahim Hossein and the wounding of the other four men done in prosecution of the common object of the rioters? The question of the presence of the prisoners and of their participation in the riot must be considered by you separately for each prisoner. You must consider if the evidence shows that each of the prisoners was present and took part in the riot. If you have any doubt as to the presence or participation of any one of the prisoners, you will give him the benefit of it. If you find that there was a riot and that the prisoners took part in it, then you have to consider under what circumstances the riot was committed. It is evident that the dispute was about the cutting of a crop of paddy. A most important question here arises,—namely who cultivated the land and sowed the paddy?"

After this he discusses the question as to who sowed the paddy; and he then continues:—

"You will ask yourselves who sowed the land? Was it Jhubboo or Leaket? If you find that Leakat sowed the lands, [748] then Jhubboo's right of private defence is gone (1) whether the land was really his or not. For if he allowed (2) Leakat to take possession in Assar, he had no right to resist the cutting in Aghran. If Leakat sowed the land in Assar even though wrongfully, his cutting the crop in Aghran was not theft, &c., so as to give Jhubboo a right of private defence (3). If you find that Leakat sowed the crops, and that the prisoners were present and took part in the riot, I think that you must find them guilty (4).

"If again you find that the crop was sown by Jhubboo, then the question which you have to ask yourselves is, if he and his party exceeded their right of private defence. The 4th exception to s. 99 declares that the right of private defence in no case extends to the inflicting more harm than is necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence. Did the prisoners or any of them exceed this limit? The evidence shows that there were some 200 Kurmis armed with swords and lutties, while there were only four or five Mahomedans, and that they were unarmed. I do not think that it can be said that they needed to wound three persons and kill a fourth in order to preserve the paddy (5). The case is rather one of killing and wounding under grave and sudden provocation (6), and therefore punishable under ss. 304, 334, and 335. Here it will be necessary for you to consider the evidence against each prisoner."

(1) The soundness of this direction is very questionable. Note by FIELD, J.

(2) It is said that there is no evidence that he allowed him; that no such case was made; that the prisoners did not rely upon the right of private defence, but denied the transaction as stated by the prosecution; & that the Judge, assuming for the prisoners a defence based on the exercise of the right of private defence misled the jury with supposing that they admitted the facts and sought to explain away their criminality. Note by FIELD, J.

(3) This also is questionable. It can scarcely be said that if A wrongfully sows a crop on B's land A is entitled to reap this crop, and B has no right to prevent him. Note by FIELD, J.

(4) Of murder. Note by FIELD, J.

(5) It might with equal truth have been pointed out that two hundred men did not need to wound three persons and kill a fourth in order to achieve the common object of getting possession of the crop. Note by FIELD, J.

(6) The Judge does not say, and it is not easy to understand, what constituted the grave and sudden provocation here referred to. Note by FIELD, J.

[749] The Sessions Judge then discusses the part which Jhubboo took in the occurrence, and adverts to the fact that the witnesses in their statements before the police, and the deceased Ibrahim in his dying declaration, said nothing about Jhubboo giving orders or jumping upon Ibrahim when down. The direction of the Judge upon this part of the evidence was particularly favourable to the prisoner Jhubboo. In order to enable the jury to consider the effect of the evidence against each of the other accused, the learned Judge says that he here 'summarized' the evidence of each witness; but the charge does not contain this summary. The Judge then proceeds:—"If you find that the crop was sown by Jhubboo and that he and the other prisoners had a right of protecting the crop from being cut and carried away by Torab and Leakat's party, but that the limits of the right of private defence were exceeded, you shall consider what, in your opinion, each prisoner did. Jhubboo is said to have ordered the killing of Ibrahim, and to have aided in doing so by stamping on his chest, etc. He is also said to have wounded Torab, an old and feeble man. It could scarcely have been necessary for him to do this in order to defend * his property. Lukshman is said to have wounded Gohur Ali with a sword and Harihur to have wounded Abdul Karim with a sword. The other five are all said to have used their latties. If you believe that they did, and that they exceeded their right of private defence by doing so, then you can find them guilty of causing hurt. You will also remember that if all the prisoners joined together in assaulting the other side, and if they were not justified by the law of private defence in doing so, or if they exceeded that right by striking the other party, then they were an unlawful assembly, and each is liable for the acts done by the assembly or any member thereof. You will also remember the law that an assembly not originally unlawful may become unlawful afterwards. If the crop was Jhubboo's, and he and the other prisoners went to protect it, they did not commit a riot by assembly; but if they went on and attacked [750] the other party, and in doing so exceeded the limits of their right of private defence, they became an unlawful assembly."

Now there are parts of this charge, and particularly of this last passage, more especially the words "if they exceeded that right by striking the other party, then they were an unlawful assembly, and each is liable for the acts done by the assembly, or any member thereof," which appear to me wholly defective and misleading, but I do not propose to comment upon every portion of this charge which appears to me open to observation. I shall notice only two defects, which appear to me so serious that I feel constrained to express my opinion that the appellants have not had a fair trial upon the grave charge upon which they have been convicted. These defects are: (i) No explanation of, or direction as to, the law relating to murder was given by the Sessions Judge to the jury; (ii) the jury were misdirected with respect to that portion of the charge which was concerned with s. 149 of the Penal Code.

It was properly pointed out by the Sessions Judge to the jury that the seven prisoners other than Jhubboo were not charged with having themselves done any act which could constitute the offence of murder. The charge against them was that Jhubboo had committed murder, and that inasmuch as they were, with Jhubboo, members of an unlawful assembly, and Jhubboo, while with them a member of that unlawful assembly, committed murder, they were, by virtue of the provisions of s. 149, guilty of murder, because they knew it to be likely that murder would be committed in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly. Upon this charge, the first essential question was, whether murder had been committed by Jhubboo? There was no amendment charging in the alternative that the offence of murder had been committed by some person other than Jhubboo. The second essential question was, did the prisoners other than Jhubboo know it to be likely that the offence of murder would be committed in the prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly?

As to the first point, the jury found that the murder was not committed by Jhubboo, and this being so, it is not easy to understand how, upon the charge as drawn, the other seven 751 prisoners could have been convicted under s. 302 read with s. 149. The Sessions Judge appears to have assumed throughout the whole of his charge that the act by which Ibrahim lost his life was murder. As to what constitutes murder, I find no direction whatever. It is the duty of a Judge to give a direction upon the law to the jury so far as to make them understand the law as bearing upon the facts, and if he does not give them an explanation of the law sufficiently comprehensive to enable them to decide the particular issue, it is a misdirection. In this case the medical evidence goes to show injuries of three kinds:—(i) there were injuries about the head and congestion of the brain—on this point nothing whatever was said to the jury; (ii) there were injuries to the small intestines; and (iii) there was a sword-cut on the arm. The opinion of the medical officer as to the cause of death was, that death was due to shock following the injuries of the small intestines and to hæmorrhage from a wound in the arm. He gave no opinion, and apparently was not asked his opinion, as to whether death did, or could, result from the injury to the arm alone. If the jury believed that Jhubboo inflicted the wound on the arm and also caused the injuries to the intestines, this was not very material. If, however, the jury did not believe that Jhubboo caused the injuries to the intestines, but believed that he inflicted the wound on the arm, this became very material. The jury appear to have disbelieved the evidence as to Jhubboo jumping upon the deceased and so causing the injuries to the intestines. If this were so, the question at once arose, whether a shock sufficient to cause death was, or could have been, the result of hæmorrhage from the wound in the arm.

If the wound on the arm alone did not or could not cause death, it is impossible to say that Jhubboo committed murder. If death were the result of the combined effect of the wound on the arm and the injuries to the intestines, and the jury believed that Jhubboo inflicted the wound on the arm and some other person unknown caused the internal injuries, Jhubboo might be liable for murder by reason of the provisions of s. 34 of the Penal Code, which provides that when a criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each [752] of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone. But it may be a question whether in this case Jhubboo, being thus constructively guilty of murder, could be said to have committed the offence of murder within the meaning of s. 149, so as to make the other prisoners by a double construction guilty of murder.

On these essential points no direction whatever was given to the jury.

Then in the next place, when the jury had made up their minds as to whether Jhubboo had inflicted both injuries or one of them or neither of them, if they believed that he inflicted one or both, they should have been directed to consider what offence was committed thereby; and to enable them to do so, the law relating to murder should have been explained to them. There is apparently nothing to suggest that the infliction of injury was, with reference to the first clause of s. 300, an act done with the intention of causing death. It then became necessary to consider whether there was an intention of causing bodily injury ; and if so, whether Jhubboo knew this bodily injury to be likely to cause the death of Ibrahim (cl. 2, s. 300). If the jury found that Jhubboo intended to cause bodily injury, but did not know this bodily injury to be likely to cause death, they ought then to have considered whether this bodily injury was sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death, and upon this point the opinion of the medical witness would have been very material. If the jury found that it was not so sufficient, they should further have considered, with reference to the fourth clause of s. 300, whether Jhubboo knew that his act was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death or such bodily injury, etc. (cl. 4, s. 300). As to whether the act was so imminently dangerous, the opinion of the medical officer would again have been material. If the jury found that the act of Jhubboo did not come within any of the four clauses of s. 300, they could not have found that Jhubboo committed murder.

But Jhubboo's act, though not falling within any of the clauses of s. 300, might, with reference to s. 299, have been done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, or with the knowledge that he was likely by such [753] act to cause death. As to whether the bodily injury was likely to cause death, the opinion of the medical witness would again have been material. If the jury found that Jhubboo's act came under the portion of s. 299 just referred to, this act would have been culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

The same observations are applicable if for Jhubboo some person or persons unknown had been substituted in the charge by alternative language or otherwise.

On all these essential points no remark or observation was made to the jury ; and I entertain no doubt that the appellants have been seriously prejudiced by this misdirection or want of direction. If the jury had been properly directed upon these points, it is quite possible that they would have found that the act by which Ibrahim lost his life was not murder, but the lesser offence of culpable homicide in the person who committed that act. They might even have found that this act did not amount to culpable homicide, but constituted grievous hurt only.

I may further here remark that although there were charges under ss. 326 and 396, no instruction whatever appears to have been given by the Sessions Judge as to these charges.

I now come to the second point. The Judge records the following note of what passed between him and the jury after they had retired to consider their verdict : " After about three-quarters of an hour the jury returned and stated, that four of them, including the foreman, found all the prisoners guilty. The fifth jurymen, Baboo Kesho Ram Bhuth, doubted the guilt of the prisoners and would acquit them. The foreman stated that they found the prisoners all guilty of the charges under s. 149. They did not find that Jhubboo himself killed Ibrahim Hossain, and that therefore he was not guilty under the charge under s. 302, which charged him with having personally murdered Ibrahim Hossain. But they found that Ibrahim Hossain was murdered by some member of the unlawful assembly, and that the murder was committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly. They found that all eight prisoners were present and took part in the riot, and that all eight were therefore guilty, under ss. 149 and 302, of having murdered Ibrahim [734] Hossain. In reply to a question from the Court, four of them stated—i.e., the four who were unanimous stated—that they found that the crop was sown by Leakat Hossein.

The fifth jurymen, in reply to a question, said that he doubted who had sown the crop. The Court concurred with the verdict. The Court had not itself felt quite certain as to who had sown the crop. But that point having been once found by the majority in favour of Leakat, it followed that the crime of the accused was murder. The Court was not prepared to dissent from the opinion of the majority that Leakat had sown the crop. That was a point on which they were the best judges, and as the Court remarked in the charge, once it was held that Leakat sowed the crop, Jhubboo's plea of private defence was gone. As the jury did not find that Jhubboo personally murdered Ibrahim, the Court could not regard him as more guilty than the others, nor did it think that capital sentences should be passed on eight men."

The Court sentenced each of the eight prisoners under ss. 302 and 149 to transportation for life.

The Court did not pass any sentence under the other sections.

I may here observe that when the jury were not unanimous as to their verdict, the judge would properly have required them to retire for further consideration see s. 263, Code of Criminal Procedure. Again, this same section allows the Judge to ask the jury such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their verdict is, and directs that such questions and answers shall be recorded. The learned Sessions Judge has not complied with this direction of the law by recording the questions and answers, but has given the substance of them merely.

It will appear from the extracts above made from the Judge's charge, and from the above record of what took place between the Judge and the jury, that the jury were directed to consider whether the murder was committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly, and that the jury found that the murder was committed in prosecution of the common object. Now the charge against the prisoners other than Jhubboo did not allege that murder was committed in prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly. What it did allege was that the prisoners knew it to be likely that murder would be committed in prosecution of that object, and upon this, the language of the charge, I find no direction. It appears to me that the jury were in consequence misled to find in the affirmative something which was not alleged in the charge.

The prisoners other than Jhubboo could not, upon the charges as drawn, have been convicted of murder, unless they knew that it was likely that murder would be committed in prosecution of the common object of taking possession of the crops by force. The circumstances from which the jury could infer that the prisoners knew this to be likely, were not placed before them. They were told to find that which was not in the charge, viz., whether murder was committed in prosecution of the common object of taking possession of the crops by force.

Having regard to the law as laid down in the case of The Queen v. bed Ali 11 B. L. R., 347: s. c., 20 W. R., F. B. I think the observations of the Judge upon this point, even assuming that the charge alleged murder to have been committed in prosecution of the common object, were meagre and defective, and not calculated to give the jury that assistance which they ought to have had in order to enable them to understand clearly the circumstance under which they would be justified in convicting the prisoners other than Jhubboo constructively of the serious offence of murder.

This case has, I observe, occupied no less than eight days of the Sessions Judge's time, and I should be extremely reluctant to send it back to be tried again if I saw any other way in which the interests of justice could be satisfied. Having regard to the defects which I have pointed out, I cannot satisfy myself that these prisoners have had a fair trial. At the same time their absolute innocence is not so clearly doubtful or beyond doubt that I feel justified in saying that the body of evidence which is to be found in the case should not again be submitted to a jury.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the only proper course is to set aside the conviction and sentence and direct a new trial, and I think that before the new trial is commenced, the charges ought to be redrawn more exactly with reference to the facts which have appeared in evidence.

[786] As to whether the prisoners should be admitted to bail pending the second trial, we express no opinion, this being a matter for the discretion of the Sessions Judge.

McDonell, J.—I concur in the decision arrived at by my learned brother. I hold that the misdirections to the jury are such as to compel us, in the interest of justice, not only to set aside the conviction and sentence, but to direct a new trial. The Judge appears to have assumed throughout the whole trial that the act by which Ibrahim lost his life was murder, unless the accused could establish the plea of right of private defence.

The difference between murder and culpable homicide was apparently never explained to the jury, and even if one of the unlawful assembly committed culpable homicide amounting to murder, I do not think that the jury were instructed sufficiently as to the circumstances under which they would be justified in convicting the accused other than the one who committed the act constructively of the offence of murder.

Conviction set aside and new trial directed.

Practice—Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s. 16—Decree absolute—Service of decree on respondent.

It is not necessary, in order that a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage may be made absolute, that the decree should be served upon the respondent. (See Warden v. Warden, 9 B. L. R., Ap., 39; and Willis v. Willis, B. L. R., O. C., 52.)

IN this case a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery had been made. The decree had not been served on the wife.

[757] Mr. Fergusson now moved to make the decree absolute. It is not necessary, under the Divorce Act, that the respondent should be served with the decree. The practice in England of requiring such service is based on the principle that the Queen's Proctor should have notice in order to intervene, if necessary.

Cur. ad. vult.

Wilson, J.—I am satisfied that the practice does not require the decree to be served; and there will, therefore, be a decree absolute.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT, CHIEF JUSTICE.

Kirty Churn Mitter.....Plaintiff

Aunath Nath Deb.....Defendant.*

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), art. vi, cl. 17, sched. ii—Stamp on memorandum of appeal in partition-suits—Valuation of suit.

The stamp-fee payable on appeals to the High Court in suits asking for "partition, the separation of a share, and for khas possession of that share after separation," is that leviable under art. vi, cl. 17,† sched. ii, of the Court-Fees Act.

For the purpose of jurisdiction the Court should be guided by the value of the property in suit, but the amount of the stamp-fee should be governed by a different principle.

THE suit in which the present reference arose was brought for partition and possession of the share allotted by the partition; and the suit was valued at Rs. 31,000, and an ad valorem fee on that sum was duly paid.

The case came up on appeal to the High Court, and was valued for the purpose of jurisdiction at the same amount, but a court-[758]fee stamp of 10 rupees only was affixed on the memorandum of appeal, on the ground that the suit being one for partition only, and it being impossible to estimate the value of the right to partition in money, the fee of Rs. 10 was correct under art. vi, cl. 17, sched. ii of Act VII of 1870.

The Deputy Registrar was of opinion, that art. vi of cl. 17, sched. ii, was provided for cases of a very different description to the present, and thought that an ad valorem fee of Rs. 995 was leviable under cl. iv (b) of s. 7 of the Court-Fees Act.

The matter was referred to the Taxing Master, who was of opinion that the Deputy Registrar was wrong in applying cl. iv (b), s. 7, because the suit was not brought to "enforce the right to share in any property on the ground that it was joint family property," but the plaintiff was in actual possession of his share in the joint estate, and merely sought for the partition of the estate, the separation of his share, and for khas possession of such share when separated; and he, therefore, was of opinion that the stamp of 10 rupees affixed was correct.

He, however, referred the matter to the Chief Justice under s. 5 of the Court-Fees Act.

* Reference under section 5 of the Court-Fees Act, VII of 1870, in Regular Appeal No. 97 of 1882.

† [Art. VI, cl. 17 :—

Number.		Proper Fee.
Plaint or memorandum of appeal in each of the following suits :—		Ten Rupees.]
VI. Every other suit where it is not possible to estimate at a money-value the subject-matter in dispute, and which is not otherwise provided for by this Act.

Baboo Amarendro Nath Chatterjee for the Appellant.

The Opinion of the Chief Justice was as follows :—

Garth, C.J.—I think the Taxing Master is quite right. If the plaintiff's suit had been to recover possession of, or establish his title to, the share which he claims in the property, he must have paid an ad valorem stamp-fee upon the value of that share. But, as I understand, he is already in possession of his share, and all that he wants is, to obtain a partition, which is merely, as explained by the learned Judges in the case of Rajendro Lall Gossami v. Shama Churn Lahoory (4 C. L. R., 418), to "change the form of his enjoyment" of the property, or, in other words, to obtain a divided, instead of an undivided, share.

It seems to me impossible to say what will be the value to the plaintiff of this change in the nature of his property, and I, therefore, think a stamp-fee of Rs. 10 is sufficient.

[739] The view of the Judges in the above case seems quite in accordance with this conclusion.

It was quite right of course, for the purpose of jurisdiction, to be guided by the value of the property in suit, but the amount of the stamp-fee is governed by a different principle.

NOTES.

[I. LATER STAGES OF THE CASE—HEARING FEE—

The hearing fee at this appeal came up for decision in (1883) 13 C.L.R., 253, and it was held that the Court ought to fix the amount in each case.

II. VALUATION OF PARTITION SUIT—

When this case came up again with reference to the hearing fee, GARTH, C.J. and MACPHERSON, J., said (1883), 13 C.L.R., 253—

"It is clear that, in suits where the sole object of the plaintiff is to obtain a partition, the proper value of the suit is not the value of the property sought to be partitioned. The value of the suit, generally speaking, would be the difference between the value of the plaintiff's share which he requires to be partitioned, and the value of the same share not partitioned."

III. PARTITION SUIT—COURT FEES—

Where the suit is for partition without any claim for possession by one in joint possession this case has been followed by the Calcutta High Court, and approved by MOOKERJEE J., in (1907) 6 C.L.J., 651, 12 C.W.N. 37, in a learned judgment where all the previous cases are reviewed. Also in cases where one co-owner's possession is constructively the joint possession of all :—(1893) 20 Cal., 762.

In (1894) 4 M.L.J. 110, the Madras High Court held art. 17 to be inapplicable, and this has been affirmed in the Full Bench case of (1910) 8 I.C. 512 : 21 M.L.J. 21 : 9 M.L.T. 3 : 1 M.W.N. 755, where the previous cases including MOOKERJEE, J.'s judgment in 6 C.L.J. 655, reviewed at great length by KRISHNASWAMI AYYAR. Suit for possession—Land purchased benami by plaintiff for defendant—Burden of proof—Evidence Act (1 of 1872), s. 110.

The plaintiff sought to recover possession of certain lands, alleging that he had been dispossessed. The defendants, who were in possession, alleged that, at an auction-sale, the plaintiff had bought the lands benami for the defendants. Held, that the burden of proving a prima facie case that the land belonged to the plaintiff, was on him.

THIS was a suit to recover possession of five bighas seven cottas of land with wasilat.

The plaintiff stated that he held nineteen bighas twelve cottas of maurasi kashtkari land, and further purchased, at an auction-sale, two bighas fifteen cottas ; that, in 1285 (1878), one Harman, defendant No. 3 (who was the manager on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 & 2) took forcible possession of two bighas ten cottas in plaintiff's maurasi holding, and of ten cottas in the land he had purchased at the auction sale ; but subsequently gave up possession of these lands, finding them unfit for indigo purposes, and he, the plaintiff, remained in possession and occupation up to 1st December 1878; and that the defendants again wrongfully ousted him from possession from five bighas on the 2nd December 1878.

The defendants contended that the plaintiff had let out to the [760] defendants three bighas eleven cottas out of the maurasi land, for the purpose of growing indigo ; and that the plaintiff was a mere gurzidar of the defendants in the matter of the auction-purchase, the defendants being the real purchasers.

The Munsif found that the onus of proving that the plaintiff sublet to the defendants for the purpose of indigo cultivation lay upon the defendants, and that they had failed to establish the fact ; and further found that the real purchasers at the auction-sale were the defendants, the plaintiff being their gurzidar, but found that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for possession of a portion of the lands in dispute, the amount of wasilat to be determined in execution, and that the claim as to the remaining portion of the lands should be dismissed.

The defendants appealed to the District Judge, who held, that the defendants having alleged that the plaintiff bought at the auction-sale benami for them, the burden of proof lay upon the defendants to show they were the real purchasers and allowed the appeal.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 119 of 1881, against the decree of J. F. Stevens, Esq., District Judge of Sarun, dated the 16th September 1880, reversing the decree Baboo Tara Prosunno Banerjee, Sudder Munsif of that district, dated the 23 September 1877.

Moonshee Mahomed Yusuf for the Appellants.

Baboo Rajender Nath Bose for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—We are of opinion that the District Judge is in error in holding that, as regards plot 13, the burden of proof lay upon the defendants, and not upon the plaintiff. He says, "I think that the finding of the lower Court on this point might be defended, if the burden of proof lay upon the plaintiff to show that he was the real purchaser, but it lies upon the defendants to prove that he was not." The plaintiff in this case sought to recover possession of this plot alleging that he was dispossessed. Therefore, as an ordinary case, the burden of proof lay upon the plaintiff to establish a prima facie case. There is no reason why any difference should be made in this case because the defendants say that the property was purchased benami by the plaintiff. Under s. 110 of the Evidence Act it [761] is for the person who says that the party who is in possession of a disputed property is not the owner of it, to prove that he is not the owner of it. The section says—"when the question is whether any person is owner of anything of which he is shown to be in possession, the burden of proving that he is not the owner is on the person who affirms that he is not the owner." In this case there is no dispute between the parties that the defendants are in possession. The defendants say they are the owners of the plot in dispute, and it is for the plaintiff to prove that they are not the owners thereof. The burden of proof is on the plaintiff, and as the District Judge has not come to the conclusion in favour of the plaintiff upon the evidence adduced by him, we send back the record to him for a finding upon this point.

As regards the other plot, and in all other respects, we do not think that there is any ground for interference with the decision of the lower Appellate Court.

The case will be finally disposed of when the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the point stated above comes up. We reserve the costs of this hearing.

Case remanded.

MR. JUSTICE WILSON.

Bhujendro Bhusan Chatterjee

versus

Trigunanath Mookerjee and others.

Declaratory decree—Sepecific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42.

Certain trusts of a house were declared in favour of A and B for life, subject to forfeiture upon the happening of particular events, and further trusts in favour of the issue of A and B were also declared. The settlor died leaving a will under which C took an estate for his life with remainder to the settlor's son E absolutely. E assigned his interest in the trust premises to the plaintiff, who now sued the cestuis que trustent and C, praying that, in the event which had happened, it might be declared that the life-estates of A and B had been forfeited. He also asked for various declarations as to his rights.

Held, that no declaratory decree could be made.

On the 6th June 1868, one Prosunno Coomar Tagore conveyed [762] a house to trustees, upon trust for the defendants Trigunanath Mookerjee and Tridosnath Mookerjee for life; and after their respective deaths, upon certain other trusts for their issue. Prosunno Coomar Tagore died on the 30th August 1868, leaving a will, which was disputed, and ultimately it was decided, that the defendant Jotendro Mohun Tagore was beneficially entitled to a life-estate in the testator's property, and that, on the failure or determination of his estate, the testator's only son, Ganendro Mohun Tagore, was entitled as his heir-at-law to the beneficial enjoyment of the testator's estate.

On the 12th of May 1879, Ganendro Mohun Tagore, according to his estate and interest if any in the trust premises, and so far only as he could or lawfully might, and not by way of covenant of warranty, granted the house to the plaintiff, his heirs, representatives and assigns, for his and their absolute benefit, subject to the trusts and provisions of the indenture of the 6th June 1868.

The plaintiff contended that, in the events which had happened, and which it is not necessary to state for the purposes of this report, the interests of the defendants Trigunanath Mookerjee and Tridosnath Mookerjee had become forfeited, and he prayed (a) that the trust-deed might be construed; (b) that it might be declared that the trusts to take effect upon the death of the tenants-for-life were invalid; and (c) that it might be declared that he was entitled to the interest of Ganendro Mohun Tagore in the house. He also prayed—

“(d) That, should this Honourable Court be of opinion that the instrument aforesaid does amount to an assignment, charge, or incumbrance within the meaning of the said indenture of the 6th day of June 1868, then such order may be made for the possession of the said house and for the enjoyment of the rents, issues, and profits thereof by the person or persons entitled thereto as to this Honourable Court may seem meet :

“(e) That, should this Honourable Court not be of the opinion aforesaid, then a new trustee or trustees of the said indenture of the 6th day of June 1868 may be appointed to carry out so many of the trusts thereof as are valid and still subsisting ;

“(f) That, for all or any of the purposes aforesaid, such directions may be given and accounts taken as may be expedient ;

[763] “(g) That the plaintiff may have such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require.”

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Mookerjee for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Evans and Mr. Palit for the Defendants Trigunanath Mookerjee and Tridosnath Mookerjee.

The Advocate-General, Offg. (Mr. Phillips), Mr. Allen, and Mr. O'Kinealy for other Defendants.

Mr. Bonnerjee contended, that this was a suit in which a declaratory decree ought to be made, and referred to Lady Langdale v. Briggs (8 DeGex. M. and G., 391), and Ram Lall Mookerjee v. The Secretary of State for India (L. R., 8 I. A., 46; s.c., I. L. R., 7 Cal., 304). [WILSON, J., referred to Kathama Natchiar v. Dora Singa Tevar (L. R., 2 I. A., 169; s.c., 15 B. L. R., 83)].

For the defendants it was contended, that the present was not such a suit as is contemplated by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

Wilson, J.—This suit came on for settlement of issues, when it appeared that several issues of fact and several issues of law arose on the pleadings. But before the other issues could be usefully tried, it became necessary to determine whether, on the plaint, any case was shown entitling the plaintiff to a decree.

The plaint shows that, on the 6th of June 1868, the late Prosunno Coomar Tagore executed a deed, by which he conveyed a house, upon certain trusts, for the benefit of the first two defendants and their issue, all of which trusts, the plaintiff contends, are invalid, except those which give life-estates to the first two defendants.

The plaint then shows that, under the will of Prosunno Coomar Tagore, the defendant, Moharaja Jotendro Mohun Tagore, takes a life-estate in the residuary estate of the testator, the remission in fee being in the testator's son Ganendro Mohun Tagore; and that, in 1879, the plaintiff, for a nominal money-consideration, and in further consideration of some covenant, the nature of which [764] does not appear, obtained a conveyance from Ganendro Mohun, of his interest, if any, in the house, without any warranty of title.

The plaintiff shows also that the first two defendants have dealt with the house in question in a way which he alleges marks a forfeiture of their life-interests under the terms of the trust-deed.

On these allegations he asks for various declarations as to his rights. He also asks: [His Lordship read the prayers of the plaint (d), (e), (f), and (g) as above, and continued].

The first question is, whether the plaint shows any title to relief other than a mere declaration.

The only such relief specifically asked for is the appointment of a new trustee of the trust-deed. But the plaintiff is a total stranger to the trust, and has, therefore, no right to ask for this.

It was further urged, though not very stronoously, that the plaint shows the property to have been in some way endangered by the acts of the present tenants-for-life, so as to entitle the plaintiff as reversioners to some relief. But I fail to see any such injury or danger disclosed.

The main question remains, whether, on the facts alleged in the plaint, the plaintiff shows that he ought to have a declaratory decree apart from any right to other relief.

Prior to the Specific Relief Act it was the law in this country, as in England, that a declaratory decree could not be made unless a right to consequential relief were shown. Any doubt upon this point was set at rest by the decision of the Privy Council in Kathama Natchiar v. Dora Singa Tevar (L. R., 2 I. A., 169; s.c., 15 B. L. R., 83). But the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42, contains provisions different from those previously in force. It enacts that—"Any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right, and the Court may, in its discretion, make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the plaintiff need not in such suit ask for any further relief. Provided that no Court shall make any such declaration where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so."

[765] I am not aware that there has been any authoritative determination of the principles upon which the discretion of the Court under this section ought to be exercised : and I do not propose to attempt to lay down any general rule, beyond this, that I think the discretion ought to be exercised with great caution. I have no doubt, however, that the present case is not one in which a declaratory decree ought to be given. To hold otherwise would be to lay down that any one who claims any interest in property, present or future, ought to be allowed to ask the Court to give him an opinion on his title, and it cannot, I think, have been the intention of the Legislature to lay down any such rule. Beyond the fact that he obtained a conveyance of a reversionary interest, the plaintiff shows no single circumstance which ought, in my judgment, to lead the Court to interfere. On the other hand, to give a declaratory decree in such a case would be to offer direct encouragement to speculative purchasers of doubtful titles.

One other point I notice, because stress was laid upon it in argument. It was said that, in respect of the alleged forfeiture of the first two defendants' life-estates, some decree might be given. I cannot agree with this. Even assuming that the plaintiff's contention is correct, and that the ultimate reversioner can enforce a forfeiture which the immediate reversioner does not insist upon, (a proposition which it would require stronger reasons than I have yet heard to convince me of), still the most that could be given now would be a mere declaration on the subject, and in addition to the general reasons I have given, for not giving a declaratory decree in the case, there is as to this point the additional reason that the question is one in which the plaintiff can have no interest except in the one contingency of the Moharaja Jotendro Mohun Tagore dying before the first life-tenants. The suit is dismissed with costs.

Suit dismissed.

[766] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 10th April, and 23rd May, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE WILSON.

Hurro Coomaree Dossee

versus

Tarini Churn Bysack and others.

Express trust—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 10.

A suit against trustees for the purpose of charging certain property with the trusts declared by the author of the trust in respect of that property and for an account, is a suit to follow property, and, as such, is not barred by any lapse of time.

THIS was a suit for an account of trust-moneys, praying that the suit might be taken as supplemental to certain other suits for the same purpose.

The plaintiff was one of the grand-daughters of one Bhuggobutty Dossee, who died in the year 1841, leaving a will, of which she appointed one Udoichand Bysack, since deceased, sole executor, and by which she directed that the incomes of certain houses should be applied towards the performance of the worship of an idol, and that the balance should be divided in equal shares between the defendant Manmohini Dossee and two persons named Golapmoni Dossee and Radhakanto Sett, both of whom were dead at the time of the institution of the suit. Udoichand Bysack died leaving a will, of which he appointed two executors, Romanath Tagore and Modan Mohun Chatterjee, since deceased, who acted in the trusts of the will of Bhoggobutty Dossee.

Radhakanto Sett died in 1846, leaving the defendants, Preonath Sett and Romanath Sett, his sons, him surviving. Golapmoni Dossee died in 1851, leaving two daughters, the plaintiff and one Chandkumari Dossee, since deceased, her surviving.

By the decree, dated the 14th of December 1857, made by the Supreme Court of Calcutta in two causes, in the first of which Golapmoni was the plaintiff and Romanath Tagore and others were the defendants, and in the second, of which the present plaintiff and Chandkumari Dossee were the plaintiffs and Romanath Tagore and others were defendants, it was declared that one Sreemutty Shibosoondery Dossee was a fit and [767] proper person to execute the trusts mentioned in Bhuggobutty Dossee's will, and that of the surplus income of the trust-property, one-third should be paid to the representatives of Radhakanto Sett, one-third to the representatives of Golapmoni Dossee, and one-third to the defendant Manmohini Dossee during her lifetime, and after her death, to her representatives; and a reference was directed to the Master to enquire and report what would be a sufficient sum to be set apart out of the produce of the trust-property for the performance of the worship of the idol, but no enquiry was ever made.

By an order made in these last-mentioned causes on the 17th of June 1859, it was declared, that the defendants, Tarini Churn Bysack and Nirmul Chand Bysack, who were the grandsons in the male line of a contemporary wife with Bhuggobutty Dossee, were fit and proper persons to perform the trusts.

In the present suit the plaintiff charged the trustee-defendants, Tarini Churn Bysack and Nirmul Chand Bysack, with various breaches of trust, and prayed (among other things) (a) that the suit might be taken as supplemental to the abovementioned causes, (b) for an account, and (c) that the surviving trustees might be decreed to pay to the plaintiff what, upon taking the account, might be found to be due to her in respect of the surplus produce of the two houses.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Hyde for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Palit and Mr. Haldar for the Defendant Tarini Churn Bysack.

Mr. Mookerjee for the Defendant, Manmohini Dossee.

Mr. Mitter for the Defendant, Romanath Sett.

Mr. Apcar for the Defendant, Preonath Sett.

Wilson, J.—This case came before me for settlement of issues, and several questions of law were argued which I do not deal with, because the view which I take of the scope of the suit makes it unnecessary to do so. This is a suit to revive and give effect to a former suit, and all that is asked for might have been obtained by orders in the former suit (which would [768] have been made almost as a matter of course) if the time for applying for such orders had not long since expired. I took time to consider my judgment, because it was contended that this suit also was barred by limitation, at any rate as to some portion of the accounts asked for.

The original suit was, and this suit is, brought to enforce express trusts, and the plaintiff's case is that, under s. 10 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), no length of time is a bar. That section is as follows:—"Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, or against his legal representatives or assigns (not being assigns for valuable consideration), for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property, shall be barred by any length of time."

I was referred by the defendants' counsel to the case of Saroda Persad Chatteerjee v. Brojonath Bhattacharjee (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 910). In that case it was held, that a suit against a trustee, not to recover any trust-property in specie, but only for an account, was not within the protection of s. 10. Sitting as a Court of First Instance, I should have felt bound to follow this ruling had it been expressly in point. But I am not inclined to extend it, and the case is not expressly in point. The primary object of the original suit, and therefore of this suit, is to charge two houses with the trusts of the will of the testatrix. It is, therefore, a suit to follow property, and as such a suit is saved from the bar of limitation by s. 10. I think the plaintiff is entitled to all relief ordinarily given in such a suit without limitation.

There will be a decree in terms of prayers (a), (b) and (c) of the plaint. Costs and all other questions are reserved.

Suit decreed.

Attorney for the Plaintiff: Mr. Hart.

Attorneys for the Defendants: Messrs. Remfry and Remfry, Messrs. Beeby and Rutter, and Messrs. Swinhoe and Co.

[On Appeal from the Court of the Commissioner of the Faizabad Division.]

Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), ss. 8, 9, and 10—Recognition of trust—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42.

Notwithstanding the confiscation of land in Oudh, followed by its restoration under the Government Order of 11th March 1858, affirming the absolute title of those with whom summary settlements had been made, and the granting of sanads to the latter persons, with full power of alienation, confirmed by "The Oudh Estates Act, 1869," the legal owner may, either by express agreement, or by his conduct, constitute himself a trustee for others as to the whole or part of the beneficial interest in the land, the subject of such restoration, settlement, and sanad.

A taluqdar, deceased before annexation, had provided by will for the succession of his five widows, one at a time, to his estate, with remainder to a son of his nephew. Settlement was made with the senior widow after the mutiny; a sanad granted to her as taluqdar, with full power of alienation, and her name was afterwards entered in the lists prepared under s. 8 of "The Oudh Estates Act, 1869." But certain of her acts were not explicable except on the understanding that she was abiding by the will.

Held, in a suit by the widow next in order, that such senior widow had undertaken the trust of carrying out the provisions of the will, and that a deed of gift made by her transferred only her interest, which was an estate for life.

Held also, in a suit by the remainderman for a declaration of the invalidity of the transfer by the widow as against him, that although declaratory relief might have been, at the Court's discretion, refused to him, on the ground of his remoteness in remainder, and the identity of the object of his suit with that of the other, yet he was entitled on this appeal to the decree which he sought, because his suit had been wrongly decided against him on the merits.

[770] APPEAL from a decree of the Additional Judicial Commissioner of Oudh (17th July 1878), affirming a decree of the Commissioner of the Faizabad Division (17th November 1877), which reversed a decree of the Deputy Commissioner of the Faizabad District (2nd July 1877).

Appeal from a decree of the Commissioner of the Faizabad Division (17th November 1877), affirming, save as to costs, a decree of the Deputy Commissioner of the Faizabad District (2nd July 1877).

These two appeals related to the succession to the taluq Sihipore, of which the lands were situate partly in the District of Faizabad and partly in that of Sultanpore in Oudh. It was formerly held by Nihal Singh, who died without issue in 1832, leaving five widows, of whom two died before 1858.

The widow then senior was Thakurain Raghunath Kuar, the first defendant in both these suits. The widow next in order was Thakurain Ramanand Kuar, the plaintiff in the first suit and one of the defendants in the second. The last surviving widow was Thakurain Sheonath Kuar, also one of the defendants in the second suit. By his will, dated 30th June 1831, which is set forth in their Lordships' judgment, Nihal Singh had provided for the succession of each of these widows to the taluqdari for her life, one at a time, with remainder to Sheombar Singh, the grandson of his brother, now represented by the plaintiff in the second suit, the Appellant Anant Bahadur Singh.

The question was—what, with reference to the will, were the rights of the senior widow, Raghunath Kuar, the settlement having been made with her as taluqdar, followed by other proceedings, and by "The Oudh Estates Act, 1869," confirmatory of her title: and it was raised by these two suits brought under "The Specific Relief Act, 1877," one by the widow next in order, the other by the remainderman. Both sought a declaration that a deed of gift made on the 27th February 1877, by Raghunath Kuar in favour of her nephew Bisheshur Baksh, was invalid.

The taluq of Sihipore was not within the exceptions made in the order issued by the Governor-General in Council on the [771] 15th of March 1858, whereby the proprietary right in the land of Oudh was generally confiscated. On the 2nd December 1858, the summary settlement of the taluq was made with Raghunath Kuar, and the Circular Order of Government confirmed the title of the grantees of summary settlements on the 10th October 1859. The sanad which followed on the 15th March 1861 was to this effect:—"The Government confers on Raghunath Kuar the full proprietary right, title, and possession of the estate of Sihipore, bearing a jama of Rs. 33,018, and gives her the power to alienate the estate during her lifetime, either wholly or in part, by sale, mortgage, gift, or bequest, as she pleases, or to declare her successor, and make him proprietor of the estate." Her name was afterwards entered as taluqdar in the lists prepared under "The Oudh Estates Act, 1869."*

The suit of Anant Bahadur Singh, son of Ramsorup Singh, who represented the remainderman, was dismissed by the Deputy Commissioner of the Faizabad District (Colonel J. Parkins), on the ground that the will having given the taluqdari right to Raghunath Kuar for life, the settlement and sanad had enlarged this estate to absolute ownership, confirmed by "The Oudh Estates Act, 1869," and that no trust had been established. Ramanund Kuar's suit was decreed by the same officer, who held that, in reference to the rights of this and the other widows, Raghunath Kuar had admitted that her exercise of the 'thakurait' or lordship did not extend beyond her own life.

The Commissioner of the Faizabad Division, Mr. Capper, [772] disposing of both appeals in one judgment, to the effect that the widow's title was absolute under "The Oudh Estates Act, 1869," confirmed the dismissal of Anant Bahadur's suit, and dismissed Ramanand's, with the order as to costs that both parties should pay their own. No further appeal in India was open to Anant Bahadur Singh under Act XXXII of 1871 ("The Oudh Courts Act, 1871"), s. 17 : and the Additional Judicial Commissioner, Colonel Reid, on Ramanand's appeal, concurred with the Commissioner.

* This was to "define the rights of taluqdars and others in certain estates in Oudh, and to regulate the succession thereto." Sections 3 and 4.—Taluqdars with whom (a) a summary settlement was made between 1st April 1858 and 10th October 1859, or to whom (b) a taluqdari sanad was granted between 1st April 1858 and the passing of the Act, to be deemed to have acquired a permanent, heritable, and transferable right in the estate comprising the villages and lands named in the list attached to the agreement, or kabuliati, executed by such taluqdar, etc., etc. Sections 8, 9, and 10 provide for the preparation of lists of the taluqdars and grantees of sanads, and that none but persons therein named are to be deemed taluqdars or grantees.

In both appeals

Mr. J. F. Leith, Q.C., and Mr. J. W. H. Arathoon appeared for the Appellants.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. J. T. Woodrose for the Respondents.

The argument for both the appellants was, that to this case the ruling in Mussanut Thukrain Sookraj Koonwar v. The Government of India (14 Moore's I. A., 112) was applicable. An absolute title was given to the person who was settled with as taluqdar with full power of alienation; but this was as against the State and as against claimants adverse to the taluqdar. The taluqdar was not relieved from equitable obligations and trust to which he might be subject. Raghunath Kuar had obtained the rights conferred upon her by the effect of the settlement, the sanad, and "The Oudh Estates Act, 1869"; but her acts showed that she had recognized her own position, under the will of Nihal Singh, in regard to the rights of others. There had been admissions on her part, both before and after the summary settlement of 1858, to the effect that the other widows were also entitled. The Deputy Commissioner had correctly held that, in the agreement of 14th November 1858, Raghunath implied that her exercise of powers did not extend beyond her own lifetime. Her letter also, of the 6th of January 1861, to the Government, showed that she had Nihal Singh's will in her mind. The appellant Ramanand was to the registered taluqdar, Raghunath, in the position of a cestui que trust. Cor-[773]rect in regard to her, the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner had incorrectly disallowed the claim of the remainderman to a declaratory decree. Reference was made to The Widow of Shunker Sahai v. Raja Kashi Persad (L. R., 4 I. A., 198; s.c., L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 220), Hardeo Buksh v. Jowahir Singh (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 522; s.c., L. R., 4 I. A., 178), Thakoor Hurdeo Bux v. Thakoor Jowahir Singh (L. R. 6 I. A. 161), Brijendur Bahadur Singh v. Rancee Jankee Kuar (L. R., 5 I. A., 1), Thakur Shere Bahadur Singh v. Thakurain Dariao Kuar (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 645), Seth Jaidial v. Seth Sita Ram (L. R., 8 I. A., 215), and Hurpurshad v. Sheo Dyal (L. R., 3 I. A., 259). ☞

For the respondents it was contended that the case of the claimants under the will of Nihal Singh was distinguishable from that of Thukrain Sookraj Koonwar (14 Moore's I. A., 112), in which the respondent had given rise to an equitable right against himself, as taluqdar, by undertaking to protect the interests of others, on the understanding that they would not interfere with his taking the kabuliati at settlement. Again, in Hurpurshad v. Sheo Dyal (L. R., 3 I. A., 259), all the lands in the kabuliati, which had previously been part of the family estate, were exempted from confiscation. Neither the latter case, nor that of The Widow of Shunker Sahai (L. R., 4 I. A., 198; s.c., L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 220), could be cited as precedents in the present case, being those of estates excepted from the general confiscation, and falling under a different head of the "Oudh Estates Act, 1869."

The effect of the confiscation of 1858 had been to leave nothing upon which the will of Nihal Singh could operate: there having been no re-grant by the Government restoring expectant estates of persons interested in remainder, as were all the devisees under the will of Nihal Singh, except Raghunath. The latter alone had been recognized in the settlement proceedings. It had rested with the Government to restore, and the restoration had been made direct to those with whom the summary settlement had been made, as was shown by the terms used. Then "The Oudh Estates Act, 1869," had confirmed an absolute title in those taluqdars who were in the position of the taluqdar of Sihipore, viz., Raghunath.

[774] The expressions said, or the argument for the appellants, to have recognized a trust, did not go so far, but only indicated the widow's intention of disposing of her property, according to what she knew to be the testator's wish. She did not relinquish, but asserted, the power to control the devolution of the estate.

Again, neither of the appellants were entitled to declaratory decrees—Thakoor Deen Tewarry v. Nawab Syed Ali Hossein Khan (13 B. L. R., 427). The claim for declaratory relief by persons in the position of guardians of the inheritance through whom it should descend, was distinguishable from the claims for declaratory decrees made by reversioners who could enforce their rights; if well founded, when they accrued; and this distinction might call for the exercise of the discretion to withhold the assistance of the Court. Reference was made to the Shivayanga case (L. R., 2 I. A., 169; s.c., 15 B. L. R., 83), Garlick v. Lawson (10 Hare, App., xiv), Lady Langdale v. Briggs (8 DeGex. M. and G., 391; s.c. 26 L. J., Ch., 27), Pranputtee Koer v. Lalla Futteh Bahadur (2 Hay's Rep., 608). Ranee Anand Kunwar v. The Court of Wards (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 764; s.c., L. R., 8 I. A., 14), Act I of 1877 (The Specific Relief Act), s. 42, cl. (d).

Mr. J. F. Leith, Q.C., replied.

The Judgments, of their Lordships in both appeals were delivered on a subsequent day (January 21st, 1882) by Sir R. P. Collier.—First Appeal.—This suit is brought by Ramanand Kuar, one of the widows of Nihal Singh, taluqdar of Sihipore, against Raghunath Kuar, another of his widows, and Bisheshur Baksh Singh, to whom the latter widow had made a gift of the taluq.

The suit is described as a suit for a declaratory decree under the 6th chapter of The Specific Relief Act, and the plaintiff prays for a declaration "that the plaintiff is reversioner and is entitled to succeed to the estate of Sihipore after the [775] death of the first defendant, who holds only a life-interest and is a trustee, anything contained in Act I of 1869 notwithstanding."

Then follows a short statement of facts, viz., that Nihal Singh was taluqdar and owner of Sihipore; that he died in the year 1832, leaving him surviving five widows, of whom the first defendant is the third, and the plaintiff the fourth: that the first widow succeeded her husband in the possession of the taluq, and that, upon her death, the second widow having predeceased her, the first defendant succeeded in pursuance of a will of Nihal Singh, and that the first defendant has acknowledged that she holds a life-estate only under the will: and that the said defendant made a gift of the estate to the second defendant on the 27th February 1877. The plaintiff concludes thus:—

"The plaintiff submits that, as the first defendant is only a holder of a life-interest and is a trustee, the gift is invalid. The plaintiff, therefore, prays that she is entitled as a reversioner aforesaid."

It was not contested that, by virtue of Act I of 1877, s. 42, such a suit is maintainable. The case of the defendants was, in substance, that Raghunath Kuar had, by virtue of a summary settlement made with her on the 2nd December 1858, and of a sanad on the 15th of March 1861, followed by the entry of her name on the first and third lists, prepared by the Chief Commissioner of Oudh under s. 8 of Act I of 1869, as published in the Gazette of India under s. 9 of that Act, an absolute estate, which she had power to alienate to whom she chose.

The case of the plaintiff was, that, granting the legal title thus conferred upon the first defendant, she has so conducted herself that she must be deemed in equity to be bound to hold the estate in trust, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of her husband's will.

Whether or not she has so conducted herself is the question in the cause.

The Deputy Commissioner gave judgment for the plaintiff, the Commissioner and the Additional Judicial Commissioner for the defendants. Against the judgment of the latter this appeal is preferred.

[776] The will of Nihal Singh is in these terms:—

"I, Nihal Singh, taluqdar of Sihpore, do hereby declare in writing that I have married five wives, and therefore I execute this deed, and deliver it into the custody of Baldi Ram Pandit. After my death, my first wife should become the proprietor of the taluqa and all the goods and chattels that may be in my house, and she shall support the other four wives by supplying them with food and raiment, and they shall not claim a share in the estate. After the death of my first wife, my second wife shall become the proprietor of the estate; on the death of the 2nd wife, my third wife shall become the proprietor; on her death, my fourth wife; and on her death, the fifth wife shall become proprietor. After the death of all the five wives Sheoamber Singh (may he live long) shall become proprietor of my estate, goods, and chattels.

"I have reduced the above into writing in order to maintain the integrity of the Sihpore estate, and to perpetuate its name and memory. Every one in my house is interdicted by oath of my person to do any act contrary to the terms hereof. I pray God that any one contravening it may be visited with calamity, similar to what befell the people of Chittour. The Hindus are bound by oath of the Ganges, and the Mahomedans by the Koran, to act in consonance with the terms hereof. I have no issue, and therefore I have executed this deed. But if I get a child, it shall succeed to my estate, and manage all the affairs.

"Dated this 5th day of Asarh Badi, 1238 Fasli (30th June 1831).

With respect to the devolution of the estate after the death of the testator, their Lordships adopt the view expressed by the Commissioner in his judgment of 17th November 1877. "Whoever may have been considered 'malik,' or real owner, of the estate, it seems certain that none of the widows engaged for it as revenue-payers with Government subsequent to the death of Nihal Singh. Till after the death of Harpal Singh, shortly before Annexation, the present holder being the senior [777] surviving widow, perhaps took an engagement, and was found in possession at Annexation."

Had the taluqdar left no will, each of the widows would, by the ordinary Hindu law, have been entitled to an equal share of the estate; and, after the death of Harpal (who would seem to have taken unauthorized possession of it), the three surviving widows—viz., the defendant, the plaintiff, and Sheonath the fifth widow (who has not joined in this suit), would have been entitled to share it. What was the effect of the sanad granted to the defendant by the Native Government, if a sanad was granted to her, we do not know; but it may not be unfairly presumed to have been in accordance with her husband's will.

The first material piece of evidence in the case is a letter (marked C) from Raghunath to Ramanand, dated 9th April 1856, about two months after the annexation of Oudh, in these terms:—

"Accept my good wishes and prayers for you. May God bless us both. Now the partition deed has been written, but considering your expenses to be heavy, I will pay you Rs. 500 per annum, separate from Sheonath Kuar. But mind, you have to maintain our position; and, after my death, all the burden will fall upon you."

In the absence of any information relating to the 'partition' referred to, it is difficult fully to understand the meaning of this letter. It has been argued, with some force, that the payment for expenses, together with the intimation that the burden of the inheritance will fall on Ramanand after the death of the writer, is a recognition that she holds under the terms of her husband's will.

The next document relied on by the appellants is a deed of compromise (as it is termed) dated 14th November 1858, by which it would appear that certain disputes between the widows were for a time settled. This transaction took place some eight months after the confiscation of Oudh (15th March 1858), and before anything had been done to reinstate the landowners. The instrument is in two parts, one executed by Raghunath, the other by the other widows.

The latter document (marked D) is as follows:—

"Both of us, Ramanand Kuar and Sheonath Kuar, co-widows of [778] Thakur Nihal Singh, taluqdar of Sihipore, etc., do hereby agree with our free will and consent and bind ourselves in writing to Thakurain Raghunath Kuar, that so long as she lives she may manage the affairs of the ilaka, etc., and out of the allowance of Rs. 400 per annum fixed by her to enable us to pay for the expenses of our winter clothing, raiment, and charity, and other necessities of life, we will defray our expenses and will not indulge in extravagance. We will all three take our food, nice or coarse, whatever is cooked, together, and live in harmony with each other. We will not interfere with the management of the estate. We will try to maintain and guard what was earned by Thakur Nihal Singh, and will not waste it by extravagance. If perchance any expenses are required for the protection of life, property, or zamindari, they shall not be incurred without the sanction of Raghunath Kuar.

"As long as the said Raghunath Kuar lives and pays both of us according to the agreement herein recorded, we will not complain to the brotherhood or to the authorities; and if we do so, we shall render ourselves liable to blame before God, the brotherhood, and the authorities. If God preserves the ilaka in its present condition, we will continue to receive the allowance mentioned above; but if perchance the estate is increased or decreased, we will of course receive the allowance at an increased or decreased rate, as the case may be. Our parents, brothers, and relations will be allowed to visit us according to the universal custom of the country."

Though no express mention is therein made of the will, their Lordships regard this document, which recognizes the right of Raghunath to a life-estate in the entire property to which she was only entitled under the will, and her duty to pay an allowance to the other widows, which was only prescribed by the will, as an affirmance by both parties of its binding effect upon them. Shortly after this—viz., on the 2nd December 1858, a summary settlement of a number of villages was made with the defendant for three years.

The principal difficulty in this case arises from the conduct of the plaintiff.

Subsequent disputes arose, in the course of which the plaintiff repudiated this agreement or compromise, and indeed denied its existence; while, on the other hand, the defendant in the most explicit terms set up the will, and claimed her rights under it.

[779] On the 30th March 1859, the plaintiff presented a petition to the Revenue authorities, praying that she might be recorded as owner of one-third of the estate—a claim in direct opposition to the will. On the question being referred to the tahsildar, the defendant again set up the will, defended her exclusive possession under it, succeeded in her defence, and retained possession of the whole estate.

The litigation seems to have been ended by the following sulehnama, or deed of compromise, on the 9th December 1859:—

“We, Musst. Kawal Jhari Kuar, plaintiff, and Raghunath Kuar, defendant, widows of Nihal Singh, deceased, taluqdar of Sihipore, Pargana Sultanpore, declare herein that:—

“Whereas there has been going on a dispute between both of us about the share of inheritance, and the case was pending in the Court, the Deputy Commissioner of Faizabad personally came to Khapradih and disposed of the dispute with our mutual consent in the following manner:—that residing in Gaura or in Sihipore Khas, Kawal Jhari, plaintiff, shall get from Raghunath Kuar, defendant, Rs. 450 in cash per annum for her expenses. Consequently we, the plaintiff and the defendant, having compromised, have recorded these few words as a deed of compromise (sulehnama), that it may serve as a document for the future. And if ever we bring a claim in this matter we shall render ourselves amenable to Government.

“Dated this 9th day of December 1859, corresponding with the 14th of Aghan Sudi.”

In January 1861, a letter, probably a circular letter, was sent to the defendant, no copy of which is, unfortunately, to be found in the record, and whose purport can only be collected from her answer, which is in these terms (it is called document B):—

“Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your parwana (lotter), dated 7th December 1860, inquiring as to whom I wish to bequeath my estate after my death and what relationship he bears to me.

“Sir, so long as I live I shall continue to be the proprietor and mistress of my estate. After my death my rival widows Musst. Sheonath Kuar and Ramanand Kuar, shall succeed to my heritage and the estate. But I must note that none of my two rival widows shall have power to alienate by gift, transfer, or grant to any of their [780] relatives, or to any stranger after my death, except Ram Sarup Singh and Balbhadar Singh, taluqdars of Khapradih. After my death and after the death of the two rival widows, Ram Sarup Singh and Balbhadar Singh, taluqdars of Khapradih, shall inherit the estate and all our legacy. The said taluqdars are my great grandsons as described below.

“My husband, Thakur Nihal Singh, had an elder brother, Ganga Parshad Singh. My husband was killed and left no issue. Ganga Parshad Singh had three sons, Shoo Sowak Singh, Hubdar Singh, and Harpal Singh. Harpal

Singh also was killed and left no issue. Hubdar Singh had a son, by name Bhairon Singh, who died during the lifetime of his father; soon after Hubdar Singh was also killed. Sheo Sewak Singh had a son, by name Sheoambar Singh. The latter has left two sons, Ram Sarup Singh and Bulbhadar Singh, taluqdars of Khapradih, who shall succeed us and inherit all property.

"Petition of Raghunath Kuar, taluqdar of Sihipore, etc., Pargana Sultanpore.

"Dated this 6th day of January 1861."

It should be mentioned that another translation of this letter represents the inquiry to have been "whom she wished to appoint as her successor."

On the 15th of March following the defendant received a sanad, whereby an estate of inheritance according to the law of primogeniture, together with full power of alienation was granted to her.

The letter of the 6th January is treated by the two Appellate Courts as simply a will, revocable by the testatrix and revoked by her when she made the gift to her nephew, the second defendant, who, it may be stated, is not a member of her husband's family. If it had stood alone it might have been so treated, according to the view of this Committee in the case of Hurpurshad v. Sheo Dyal (L. R. 3 I. A., 259) with reference to a somewhat similar document, but which, having been acted upon, was there treated as amounting to a conveyance inter vivos. But looking at the document in connection with the will of Nihal Singh, the other documents, and the conduct of the defendant in the suit before the Revenue authorities, their Lordships regard it [781] rather as a declaration that on her death the estate would devolve according to the directions of the will.

The doctrine that, notwithstanding the confiscation of the land in Oudh by the proclamation of Lord Canning, its restoration by his Circular letter of 10th October 1859, affirming the absolute title of the grantees of summary settlements, and the granting a sanad with full power of alienation confirmed by the Oudh Estates Act of 1869, the legal owner may, either by express agreement or by his conduct, constitute himself in equity a trustee for others as to the whole or part of the beneficial interest, has been affirmed by many decisions of this Board.

This doctrine was first laid down in these terms in the judgment delivered by Lord Justice JAMES in the case of Thukrain Sookraj Koonwar v. The Government (14 Moore's I. A., 112):—

"It (the Government letter of 10th October 1859) gave the registered taluqdar the absolutely legal title as against the State and against adverse claimants of the taluqdari, but it did not relieve the taluqdar from any equitable rights to which, with a view to the completion of the settlement, he might have subjected himself by his own valid agreement. In this case the appellant was the acknowledged cestui que trust of the registered taluqdar, who bound himself expressly in writing that he would respect her rights if she would permit him to be alone so registered."

In the case of The Widow of Shunkar Sahai v. Raja Kashi Persad (L. R., 4 I. A., 198; s.c., L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 220) it was held that, with respect to a one-third share of seven villages in the taluq, the Raja had, though no formal deed or writing was produced, by his admissions at the time of the summary settlement, constituted himself a trustee for the plaintiff so as to be bound to account to her for a one-third share of the rents and profits.

The doctrine was further illustrated by the case of Thakoor Hurdeo Bux v. Thakoor Jawahir Singh (L. R., 6 I. A., 161). The evidence being unsatisfactory, the case was remitted for retrial on the following issue,—viz., “Whether the respondent has, in any or what manner, agreed, or become bound, to hold the villages comprised in the [782] summary settlement and sanad, or any or what part thereof, in trust for the appellant.”

On the case again coming before this Board, their Lordships observe,—“The actual relation of the appellant, respondent, and Parbut Singh (who was no party to the appeal) remained that of a joint and undivided Hindu family from the date of Lord Canning’s proclamation up to the quarrel and removal of the respondent to Kaswara in 1865. The Commissioner also found, and correctly in their Lordships’ opinion, that the evidence proved that, during that period, there had been a joint interest in and common management of the property. Such an interest could not have existed unless the defendant had consented that the villages should be held as the joint property of the family. Their Lordships are of opinion that the facts so found, coupled with the statement of the defendant in his application for a summary settlement, to the effect that Hardeo Bux was his partner, and with his deposition on the 8th July 1859, in which he stated that the custom prevailing in his family was that, if his cousins, meaning the plaintiff and Parbut Singh, who were his partners, should claim, they would get them divided, afford sufficient grounds to justify their Lordships in presuming that, up to the time of the quarrel in 1865, it was the intention of the defendant that the villages included in the summary settlement and sanad should be held by him in trust for the joint family and as a joint family estate, subject to the law of the Mitakshara.”

The principles of equity laid down in these cases (to which others might be added) appear to their Lordships to apply to the facts of the present case.

The defendant Raghunath all along, certainly from April 1856 to the time when she obtained the sanad, held herself out as claiming the estate under the terms of her husband’s will.

At the time of the summary settlement with her, on the 2nd December 1858, the agreement or compromise of the 14th of November previous, which their Lordships interpret as a recognition by all the three widows of that will, seems to have been in force. Although the junior widows soon after repudiated that compromise, and the plaintiff claimed in a suit one-third [783] of the property, the defendant succeeded in defeating her by setting up the will, and the suit ended in a second compromise of the 9th December 1859, which, though not clearly expressed, their Lordships regard as in effect recognizing the position of the defendant which she claimed. This compromise, as far as appears, remained in effect until January 1861, when the defendant executed document B, which has been before referred to, and which, coupled with the surrounding and preceding circumstances, their Lordships regard as a declaration by Raghunath that she held the estate in trust—a trust which would bind her heirs—to carry into effect the provisions of her husband’s will. It is said that nothing was done by Ramanand in consequence of Raghunath’s affirmation of the will, and that she was in no way damnified thereby. But their Lordships think it very difficult to maintain that position. It is true that Ramanand’s former claims are quite inconsistent with her present claim. But then she has been defeated, and Raghunath has succeeded. Without the will the two would have been ordinary Hindu widows, and Raghunath would not have been in a position to claim the sole benefit of the two settlements and of the sanad which were granted to her. Document D is dated eighteen days before the summary settlement. Document E is dated about ten weeks before the sanad. At two critical points of time we find Raghunath the author of formal and important documents, which, though they do not expressly mention the will, are not explicable except on the supposition that she was abiding by the will, which, on other occasions, she expressly set up and successfully used as a defence to her possession. They are, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief she prays for, viz., that it may be declared that she is entitled to succeed to the estate after the death of the first defendant. It follows that the deed of gift to the second defendant could confer no more than the life-interest of the first defendant. There is no prayer to set that deed aside, and if there had been, it could not have been effectual, inasmuch as the deed is not wholly void but operative to convey a life-estate.

Their Lordships will humbly advise her Majesty that the [784] judgment appealed against be reversed, that a declaration to the effect abovementioned be made, and the costs of both parties be paid out of the estate.

2nd Appeal.—This suit was brought by Ram Sarup Singh, who was a son of Sheoambar Singh, to whom the estate was given in remainder after the life-estates of the widows, by the will of Nihal Singh, which has been before set out. Ram Sarup having died, leaving the plaintiff, his son, and Ram Sarup's brother, Balbhadar, having also died without issue, the present plaintiff succeeds to all the rights of Sheoambar.

He brings his suit against the defendants in the former suit, with whom he has joined the two junior widows, for a declaratory decree under the Specific Relief Act, and prays to have it declared "that the deed of gift, dated the 27th day of February 1877, is invalid against the plaintiff, who is a reversioner, because the donor, the first defendant, held only a life-interest, and is a trustee, anything contained in Act I of 1869 notwithstanding."

In their Lordships' opinion, the plaintiff, having, in terms of the English law, a vested remainder immediately after the life-estates, is entitled, under the Specific Relief Act, to maintain this suit.

The question is, whether the first defendant is to be declared, quoad the plaintiff, to hold the estate in trust for carrying into effect the provisions of her husband's will.

The evidence in this case differs in some respect from that in the former case. The exhibits C and D (of the dates 9th April 1856 and 14th November 1858 respectively) are not in evidence.

The proceedings in the suit which has been referred to, of Ramanath against Raghunath, are in evidence.

Exhibit E (the letter of 6th January 1861) is in evidence.

In addition to these, two documents of some importance were tendered, one being a letter of defendant to the present plaintiff, of the 18th January 1870, marked 'Bé'; another letter of the same date, marked 'Alif,' written (as alleged) by her agent, and referred to in the first letter. With respect to [785] these documents, the Deputy Commissioner thus express himself:—

"The letters Alif and Bé remain for consideration as to the alleged admissions of trust. Alif was put in, it was said, only because it was referred to in Bé, so it will suffice to consider the value and effect of the latter. The defendant, Raghunath Kuar, if she wrote this, informed the plaintiff that she would do 'nothing contrary to the writing of the Thakoor;' that he had been falsely informed that she meant to write a deed in favour of Bisheshur Buksh (defendant 4). A witness, Kunj Behari Lal, deposes that he wrote Bé for the defendant, being at the time in her service; other witnesses depose that the signature to this letter is defendant's. The letter is denied. It is pointed out that Alif and Bé were not filed with the plaint, nor alluded to in any way. This fact, a very important one, certainly renders the genuineness of these papers doubtful; whether genuine or not, Bé contains only a promise, and does not create any fiduciary relations, if none previously existed between the plaintiff and defendant. There is nothing in the promise which gives it any legal force."

He dismissed the suit.

The Commissioner, who affirmed this judgment, makes no distinct allusion to these letters.

The judgment of the Deputy Commissioner and the Commissioner being concurrent, no appeal lay to the Judicial Commissioner. The present appeal is brought from the judgment of the Commissioner.

Although the Deputy Commissioner throws some doubt on the genuineness of the two letters—chiefly, it would appear, on the ground that they were not filed with the plaint (they seem to have been filed before the settlement of the issues),—he does not reject them, but considers their effect. As several witnesses testify to the signature of the defendant to 'Bè,' and there is no contradiction of their testimony, and as Janki Lal, the writer of 'Alif,' testifies to his own handwriting, their Lordships do not deem themselves justified, in the absence of a finding by the Court below that the witnesses were not to be believed, in rejecting the letters. 'Bè,' is in these terms:—

"May God assist us. You will know the particulars from this letter and from that of Janki Ram.

[786] "From Thakurain Raghunath Kuar to Ram Sarup Singh :

"My dear Ram Sarup Singh. After my good wishes to you, I pray God to keep us in good health.

"I have received your letter, have become acquainted with its contents, and have been satisfied. Bhagwant Singh, Lalla Gurparshad, Pandit Gurdyal Ram, and Chandka Singh paid a visit to me in person, and related all the particulars to me verbally. The report that you have received from the second wife to the effect that I wish to make a bequest in favour of Bisheshur is altogether false; she wishes to incite a quarrel between you and me. I do not wish to contravene the instructions given by my husband, either by thought, word, or deed. I am surprised that, although I have twice represented to the Government authorities my intention to comply with the instruction imparted by my husband in favour of your father, you are not satisfied, and are easily led away by others. I beg to assure you that nothing will be done contrary to the will of my husband.

"You will learn the other particulars from Janki Lal's letter. The rest is all right.

"Dated Asarh-Badi 5th, 1277 E. 18th June 1870."

'Alif' is in these terms:—

"From Janki Lal to Thakoor Ram Sarup Singh :

"Sir,—After compliments, I beg to state that may it please God to keep you in good health, which is advantageous to me. Having taken leave of you, I arrived at Sihpore yesterday, and related all the particulars to Thakurain Sahab. Lala Gurparshad, Chandka Singh, Bhagwant Singh and Gurdyal Ram came to-day to the Thakurain with your letter to her, who is going to send you a reply. Lala Gurparshad and Gurdyal Ram will give you all the particulars verbally. Thakurain Sahab takes thousands of oaths to the effect that nothing will ever be done contrary to the written wishes of Thakur Nihal Singh, and that the second wife to Thakur Nihal Singh is trying to instigate a false quarrel between you and her, Thakurain Sahab. You may, therefore, rest assured that no other plan is set on foot. The Thakurain wishes to make over one or two villages to Bisheshur from the estate lying on the west, with your sanction, which, she says, will be obtained, so that there may be no dispute or litigation hereafter. The rest is all right.

"Dated Asarh-Badi 5th, 1277 Falsi."

The proceedings in the suit of Ramanath v. Raghunath referred to the Tehsildar, wherein Raghunath insisted, and successfully, that she held under her husband's will, could not [787] have been unknown to the rest of the family. The present plaintiff, the remainderman, may well have relied on the expressed intention of Raghunath to observe that will, and may have therefore thought it unnecessary to dispute her claims to a sanad. Their Lordships have already intimated their view of her letter of the 6th January 1861, viz., that it was a declaration of trust on behalf of those interested under Nihal Singh's will, including the remainderman. But it must be here noticed that the present plaintiff, on the 9th of March 1862, presented a petition, wherein he ignored the will of Nihal Singh, and impugned as invalid this very declaration of trust, contending that he had a present right to the estate, or at the least was next in reversion to Raghunath.

If his case had rested here, their Lordships would not have been disposed to make in his favour a declaration of a trust which he had expressly repudiated. But the letters 'Alif' and 'Bè' give a different aspect to the case. The order made after his petition is, that he be directed to apply to Raghunath. What correspondence upon this took place between them can only be conjectured from these two letters. It would seem from them that the plaintiff no longer disputed the life-interest of Raghunath or the will of Nihal Singh, but had received some information that she intended to make an absolute gift of the estate, whereupon Raghunath refers to her representation to the Government of the 6th January 1861, and to some subsequent representation to the same effect, for the purpose of reassuring him of her intention to comply with her husband's will, and quitting his suspicions that she intended to avail herself of the full powers contained by her sanad. According, then, to the evidence in this suit, Raghunath has herself given a significance to her declaration of the 6th of January 1861, which still more clearly fastens upon her the obligation to abide by it. She treats it as a wrong done to her that she should be suspected of any intention of departing from her husband's directions. And this places it beyond doubt that the declaration in question, which, as before observed, does not expressly mention Nihal's will, is really founded upon it, and treats it as a direction obligatory in conscience if not in law.

[788] Their Lordships, however, think that two concurrent declaratory suits were unnecessary at the present time, and that it would not have been unreasonable if the first Court had, as a matter of discretion, declined, under the circumstances, to grant declaratory relief to the more remote remainderman. That, however, was not done. Ram Sarup's suit has been decided on the merits, and decided against him, as their Lordships think, wrongly. They will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty that the appellant is entitled to the decree he asks, but without costs, nor do they give any costs of this appeal.

Trustee and Cestui que trust—Limitation—Will—Void gift—Residue—Gift of interest—Share of rents and profits—Corpus of estate.

A by his last will and testament gave his property to trustees, partly in trust for religious and other purposes, and partly to pay thereout to certain persons and their heirs for ever certain annuities, being fixed portions of the net profits of a certain estate called the Hurro estate, which amounted to Rs. 3,150. A died in November 1863. On the 11th of August 1879, the heir of one of the annuitants instituted suit claiming a share under the will, and asking for a partition of that share. The plaintiff alleged besides, that certain of the trusts and provisions in the will were invalid in law; that, consequently, a large portion of the testator's property remained undisposed of at his death, and she claimed a share of this residue as one of the heirs of the testator.

[789] Held that, under the circumstances, the gift of the share of the rents and profits amounted to a gift of a share in the corpus of the estate; and that, in respect of that portion of the plaintiff's claim, the suit was not barred by limitation.

Where an estate is given by will to trustees for religious and other purposes some of which are invalid or fail, the heirs of the testator may be barred by limitation from recovering the portion undisposed of, though they might still bring a suit against the trustees to compel them to properly administer the trusts which had not failed.

THIS was a suit for the interpretation of the will of Hurro Mohun Ghose, for a declaration of the rights of the several parties to the suit thereunder, for a declaration as to the plaintiff's share in the property left by Hurro Mohun, and for possession of her share. The facts of the case and the will of the testator are sufficiently set out in the judgment of Mr. Justice FIELD. The following is a genealogical table of the parties:—

HURRO MOHUN GHOSE

(died in Aughran 1270. November-December 1863).

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 332 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Bhoobun Chunder Mookerjee, First Subordinate Judge of the 24-Parganas, dated the 27th September 1880.

The judgment of the Court of First Instance was confined to the following issues:—(i) Is any portion of the relief claimed by the plaintiff barred by the law of limitation? (ii) Is any and what portion of the will of Hurro Mohun Ghose illegal or invalid? The second issue was argued first. In respect of the Muddunpore property, the Judge said: "The intention of the testator was, no doubt, to create Muddunpore a debuttur [790] property, and the arguments of the defendants' pleader were adduced in support of this view. Looking to the entire will and to all the purposes for which the profits were to be spent, and to the authorities noticed below, I come to the conclusion, that the profits of Muddunpore being intended to be spent for religious, charitable, and secular purposes, it must be considered as a secular property subject to the religious and charitable bequests as specified by the testator and not purely dedicated for religious and charitable purposes." On this point the learned Judge cited Ram Gopal Banerji v. Sib Kissen Banerji (Montriau on Hindu Wills, p. 178), Sonatun Bysack v. Sreemutty Juggut Soondure Dossee (8 Moore's I. A., 66), Promotho Dossee v. Radhica Persaud Dutt (14 B. L. R., 175), Ashutosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 438), Joy Narain Mitter v. Colevin (unreported, referred to in Montriau on Hindu Wills, p. 185), and Dwarka Nath Bysack v. Burroda Persaud Bysack (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 443).

As to the Hurro estate, the learned Judge said on the second issue: "The next ground of attack relates to the Hurro estate, the net profits whereof, Rs. 3,150, were to be enjoyed as annuities by the heirs-at-law and others, and their descendants, and to meet collection charges, etc., (in the following manner):—

	RS.	A.	G.	C.	K.	RS.	A.	P.

"The testator provided that the said annuities should be given to the said annuitants and their heirs for ever for their maintenance; that they shall not partition the said Hurro estate, nor sell, mortgage, or make a gift of it; if they do, that shall be null and void to all intents and purposes." On this part of the [791] case, the learned Judge cited Krishnaramani Dasi v. Ananda Krishna Bose (4 B. L. R., O. C., 231), Tagore v. Tagore (I. L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 47; 9 B. L. R., 377), Roymoney Dossee v. Ruggonath Sein (1 I. J., N. S., 14), Nitai Charan Pyne v. Gunga Dasi (4 B. L. R., O. C., 265), Kumara Asima Krishna Deb v. Kumara Kumara Krishna Deb (2 B. L. R., O. C., 11), Nobo Krishna Mitter v. Hurish Chunder Mitter (Macnaghten's Cons., on Hindu Law, p. 323), and Ellokasse Dossee v. Durponarain Bysack (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 59), and held, that the restraint on alienation was void, and that the surplus should go to the testator's heirs-at-law.

On the issue of limitation, the learned Judge held, that the plaintiff's suit was barred, citing Kherodemoney Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee (2 C. L. R., 112; S.C. on appeal, I. L. R., 4 Cal., 455), Greender Chunder Ghose v. Mackintosh (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 897), Chundrabullee Debia v. Luckkee Debia Chowdhraanee (1 Suth. P. C. Cas., 602), Act XV of 1877, Sched. D, Arts. 123, 127, 144, and Appovier v. Ram Subhu Ayyan (11 Moore's I. A., 75). The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Branson, Baboo Nil Madhub Bose, and Baboo Jadub Chunder Seal for the Appellant.

Mr. Evans, Baboo Mohiny Mohun Roy, Baboo Troilakhyanath Mitter, and Baboo Debendro Chunder Ghose for the Respondents.

Mr. Branson.—The learned Judge is in error in applying the law of limitation to this case. Nobin Chand Ghose, as executor, takes no interest in the estate; the estate is in the beneficiaries—Kherodemoney Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee (2 C. L. R., 112: s.c., on appeal, I. L. R., 4 Cal., 455); and they are entitled to the whole estate subject to the charge in favour of the idols—Ashutosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 438). The gift of the income to the plaintiff is equivalent to the grant of a share—Sonatum Bysack v. Juggut Soonduree Dossee (8 Moore's I. A., 66) and Dowling v. Dowling (L. R., 1 Eq., 442: s.c., on appeal, 1 Chan., 612). The Judge has misconstrued Kherodemoney's case (2 C. L. R. 112: s.c., on appeal, I. L. R. 4 Cal. 455). Here we are claiming under the trust whereas in Kherodemoney's case (2 C. L. R., 112: s.c., on appeal, I. L. R., 4 Cal., 455), the plaintiff's claim was [792] altogether dehors the will. In Kherodemoney's case (2 C. L. R., 112; s.c., on appeal, I. L. R. 4 Cal., 455), the husband had provided for the wife. There the executor had nothing in trust for the widow. The property was to be held on a trust with which she had nothing to do. Here we have been paid our share up to suit, and Kherodemoney's case (2 C. L. R. 112; s.c., on appeal, I. L. R. 4 Cal. 455) does not apply. There is nothing adverse in the circumstances of the case at present before the Court. [FIELD, J.—What is the trust in this case? Are you suing to enforce that trust?] I sue to have my share allotted to me. [FIELD, J.—That is not suing to enforce the trust. How can you claim the benefit of s. 10 of the Limitation Act?] I don't claim the benefit of s. 10. Kherodemoney's case (2 C. L. R., 112: s.c., on appeal, I. L. R., 4 Cal., 455) does not apply to me. I have a right to a share under the will, and claim to have that share allotted to me. I am suing to enforce the trust which is for my own benefit. In Sookmoy Chunder Dass v. Monohari Dossee (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 269), no question of limitation was raised, and that case was similar to the present. [Mr. Evans.—So far as I recollect, the question of limitation did not arise there, as some of the parties were minors at the death of the testator.]

Mr. Evans for the Respondents.—The main claim of the plaintiff is dehors the will, and is really a claim for possession, and is, therefore, barred. She only asks for the will to be construed as incidental to her main claim. Even supposing her main object was to get the will construed, she would be barred, because all suits are included within the Limitation Act, s. 4, and in that case, cl. 118 of the second schedule would govern this suit.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.), was delivered by Field, J.—The position of the parties in this case will appear from the genealogical tree to be found at page 4 of the paper-book. Hurro Mohun Ghose, the testator, died in Aghran 1270, that is, November 1863. He left a will executed on the 4th Assar 1268 (17th June 1861). As to the factum of this will there is no dispute before us, and the present case is concerned solely with the construction to be put upon the paragraphs of this [793] instrument. Hurro Mohun had two sons, Shyam Chand and Nobin Chand, and three daughters, named Troilukhya Moni, Gobind Moni, and Nistarini,

Of the two sons, Shyam Chand died in 1257 (1850), during his father's lifetime, and left three sons,—viz., Aubinash Chunder, Gopal Chunder, and Atul Chunder, all three of whom are mentioned and provided for in the will. Aubinash Chunder died in 1271 (1864), about a year after his grandfather, and the plaintiff in the present case, Hemangini, is his only daughter and heiress. Nobin Chand survived his father Hurro Mohun, and is defendant No. 1 in the present case. Troilukhya Moni and Gobind Moni, defendants Nos. 4 and 5, were widows, residing in their father's house. Nistarini, the third daughter, died in 1269 (1862), before her father's death, but after the execution of the will; and left two sons, Roy Lall and Amrito Lall, who are defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The remaining defendants, Nos. 6 and 7, are the other two grandsons of Hurro Mohun, or sons of Shyam Chand,—namely, Gopal Chunder and Atul Chunder.

The will is to be found at page 13 and following pages of the paper-book. After the usual recital that the testator is old, suffering from disease, and likely to die, the will contains the following passage :—" My youngest son and heir Nobin Chand Ghose, and Aubinash Chunder, Gopal Chunder, and Atul Chunder Ghose, three sons of my late eldest son Shyam Chand Ghose, or their heirs, shall not be competent to act contrary to the provisions of this will." Then we have a recital of the property belonging to the testator; and after this recital, in the first paragraph, the will provides as follows :—" My self-acquired first Abad, Mouza Muddunpore, Parganna Medanmulla, now fetches an annual profit of Rs. 2,000, after paying the rent due to its zamindar. Out of which, after paying Rs. 500 for the salaries of the karpurdazes and the expenses of erecting dams, there remains a balance of Rs. 1,500 (one thousand and five hundred rupees), which—that is, the said Muddunpore Abad,—I do set apart for the better performance of my usual turn of service of the deity Gobind Ji for four months, for the feeding of mendicants and travellers, for the celebration of the annual festivals of Durgutshab and Dole Jatra, for the repair of the [794] road in front of the house and the outer apartment of the house, together with the dalan, for the celebration of the daily and occasional rites and ceremonies, and for the distribution of alms and other virtuous acts. My heirs shall have no right to the same. Besides the above property, the second Abad, Mouza Hadul, Mouza Sonegohalia, and Mouza Malunga, etc., Parganna Medanmulla, acquired by me, as well as my ancestral and self-acquired khoraj and lakheraj lands, fetch an annual profit of Rs. 3,150 exclusive of the zamindar's rent. I allot all those properties for the maintenance of my family. None of my heirs shall be entitled at any time to get any partition of the said properties effected, nor shall he be competent to transfer the same by sale or gift, or pledge the same in security for any person. If any one of them does the same at any time, the same shall be null and void. Out of the said amount of Rs. 3,150, I do sanction Rs. 500 a year for the construction of the embankments on my second Abad, Mouza Hadul, etc., for the payment of the salaries of gomasta, paik, bildar, and other agents, and for the repair, &c. of the cutcheri-house. The balance, Rs. 2,650, will be apportioned among the members of my family by way of annual allowance in the amounts specified below,—that is, the three brothers Aubinash Chunder, Gopal Chunder, and Atul Chunder Ghose, sons of my deceased elder son Shyam Chand Ghose, shall get an allowance of Rs. 366-10-13-1-1 each; total Rs. 1,100 a year; and my younger son, Nobin Chand Ghose, shall get a yearly allowance of Rs. 1,100. My younger daughter, Srimoti Nistarini Dasi, and her sons, Roy Lall and Amrito Lall, born of her, and any other son who may hereafter be born of her, shall all of them get a yearly allowance of Rs. 300. On the demise of any of the legatees, his or her heirs shall get the said allowance as sanctioned by me.

In case of any of them becoming a childless widow, she shall get the said allowance, no matter whether she lives under the roof of my family dwelling-house or at any holy place. But if she turns to be an unchaste woman and lives elsewhere, she shall get no allowance; her allowance shall be stopped and forfeited to my estate, and then whoever shall prove under the Hindu law to be her heir, shall get the allowance fixed on her. If my [793] youngest daughter, Srimoti Nistarini Dasí, and her sons, Roy Lall Bose and another born of her, do not live in the family dwelling-house or in this village, they shall forfeit the allowance fixed on them; if any one of them ~~so~~ live, he shall get the said allowance. If Nistarini Dasí is removed elsewhere by her husband, she shall get the said allowance for life. If none of her sons live in my family dwelling-house or in this village, then the allowance due to them shall be stopped and will be equally shared by my heirs. The legatees or their heirs shall not be competent to make any other claim (than the allowance sanctioned by me). If in any year the amount of money cannot, owing to any pestilence breaking out, be realized in full, then the allowance shall be paid in proportion to the amount of money realized, and the allowance shall be duly paid off as soon as the arrears shall have been realized from the tenants."

Paragraph 2 then provides for the management of the property of the testator, and it is here directed that, upon the testator's decease, his youngest son, Nobin Chand Ghose, shall be manager for the term of his life; that he is to be remunerated by an annual stipend of Rs. 300, one moiety of this stipend to be payable out of the rents and profits of Muddunpore, and the other moiety to be similarly payable out of the rents and profits of Hadul. Then follows a provision for the appointment of a manager upon the death of Nobin Chand Ghose, and for the appointment of successive managers for all future times. To these provisions it is unnecessary to refer further at large. We then come to paragraph 3, which disposes of Government paper of the value of Rs. 12,900. Of this the following disposition is made: --Rupees 3,000 is to be invested and kept as a reserve fund for the purposes of paying Government revenue in seasons of dearth or scarcity when the rents are not collected from tenants. It is directed that this amount of Government paper shall never be divided between the testator's heirs. A further sum of Rs. 3,000 is given to Nobin Chand Ghose. Then in respect of Rs. 4,900, there is a direction that this amount be invested as part of the estate and held in trust by the manager, one moiety of the interest thereon to be paid to Aubinash Chunder Ghose and his two brothers, and the other moiety to Nobin Chand Ghose. Of [796] the remaining Rs. 2,000, Rs. 500 is given to the testator's grandson, Gopal Chunder Ghose, for his marriage expenses; and Rs. 1,500 are allotted for the excavation of the bed of the Ganges and the Nundun Tank.

Then paragraph 4 contains directions as to the manner in which the family dwelling-house is to be occupied. Certain rooms are allotted for the separate occupation of different members of the family, and other portions of the house are directed to remain common for the use of all the members of the family. There are further directions contained in the will, but for the purposes of the present suit it is not necessary to refer to them specifically.

Now it will be borne in mind that Aubinash, the plaintiff's father, survived the testator for about one year, and there is no doubt that he acquiesced in the provisions of the will and in what was done by Nobin Chand as manager appointed under the provisions already referred to. The plaintiff brings the present suit more than twelve years after the death of the testator, and more than twelve years after her own father's death, and in her plaint she avers, first, that Muddunpore has not been bona fide and properly dedicated as a debuttur property, and that, since the death of the testator, all the profits of this estate have been considerably increased; while no provision is made in the will disposing of such increase; secondly, that the provisions of the will as to the second estate, Hadul, are opposed to law, and are therefore invalid; thirdly, that Nobin Chand, the manager, has not paid the allowances directed by the will, and that he is using the profits of the estate and the cash in hand wrongly and fraudulently, and that he has otherwise conducted himself in a manner opposed to the express directions of the will; fourthly, that he has not complied with the directions of the will as to the Government paper; fifthly, that the will is invalid and cannot be supported; and that the plaintiff is entitled to a one-sixth share of the whole property left by her father.

The plaintiff, therefore, asks, first, that the Court will construe the will according to the true intent thereof—that so far as the will or any portion thereof is found to be valid, will determine [797] the respective rights of the plaintiff and the defendants to the testator's estate in accordance therewith; secondly, that if the whole will or any portion of it be held to be invalid, the Court will determine and declare the extent of the plaintiff's right in the property so left undisposed of by Hurro Mohun; thirdly, that the Court will determine what properties, moveable and immoveable, existed at the time of the death of Hurro Mohun, and also what properties have been subsequently acquired and added to the corpus, and in order to do this, will compel defendant No. 1 to render an account; fourthly, that the Court, after determining these matters, will direct a partition of the whole estate, moveable and immoveable; fifthly, that Nobin Chand may be directed to submit an account of all the expenses incurred for the purposes connected with the Muddunpore property; sixthly, that, in order to prevent further waste, Nobin Chand Ghose may be removed from the management of the estate, and the Court may be pleased to appoint a receiver in his place; and seventhly, there is a prayer for general relief.

The Subordinate Judge of the 24-Parganas, who tried the case, decided—first, that Muddunpore was not bona fide dedicated to religious purposes; that it must be held to be secular property subject to the religious and charitable trusts mentioned in the first paragraph of the will: and he was, therefore, of opinion, that if the plaintiff can be held entitled to succeed to the Muddunpore estate, she must take it subject to the several charitable and religious bequests of the testator; secondly, he decided that the directions of the will in respect of the Hadul estate, prohibiting alienation and partition, are invalid: but he was of opinion that the annuities given by the testator (i) to his son, (ii) to his three grandsons, and (iii) to his daughter Nistarini, and her sons, may be enjoyed by them during their lives, but cannot descend to their heirs who are not born during the lifetime of the testator. He, therefore, held, that the plaintiff, who was born in Magh 1271 (January 1865), that is, after the death of the testator, is not entitled to the annuity enjoyed by her father, but as the defendants did not object to pay her this annuity, she might be held entitled thereto according to [798] the defendants' admission, and not by virtue of any right. In respect of the profits of the Hadul estate in excess of the annual amount stated in the will, the Subordinate Judge was of opinion, that this surplus must go among the heirs-at-law. In respect of the three thousand rupees Company's paper, which was directed to be formed into a reserve fund, the Subordinate Judge was of opinion, that the prohibition against partition could not stand good in law. As to Rs. 4,900, the Subordinate Judge held, that inasmuch as the will disposed of the interest only, and contained no disposition of the corpus, this corpus must go to the heirs-at-law. Then as to the family dwelling, the Subordinate Judge was of opinion, that such portions as were not allotted to separate occupation according to the provisions of the will are liable to partition.

Having thus dealt with the questions raised in the plaint, the Subordinate Judge proceeded to consider the further and important question of limitation, and he decided upon the authority of the cases of Kherodemoney Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee (2 C. L. R., 112: S.C. on appeal, I. L. R., 4 Cal., 455) and Greender Chander Ghose v. Mackintosh (I.L.R., 4 Cal., 897), that s. 10 of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877, does not apply to this case, inasmuch as the plaintiff is seeking by her plaint not to enforce the specific trusts created by the will, but really to defeat those trusts. Then, assuming art. 127 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877 to be applicable, the Subordinate Judge was of opinion, that time began to run from the testator's death, and that, inasmuch as the plaintiff's father, Aubinash, was at the time of the testator's death a major, and entitled to sue if he wished to dispute the will, the plaintiff, who was a minor at the time of her father's death, cannot have any benefit from such minority in the calculation of the time under art. 127. He was, therefore, of opinion, that the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation in respect of Muddunpore. As to the three thousand rupees Company's paper directed to constitute the reserve fund, and the four thousand nine hundred rupees, the interest of which was disposed of, but in respect of the corpus of which the will contained no disposition, he held, that [799] art. 127 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act is applicable and bars plaintiff's suit. Then further, in respect of this sum of Rs. 7,900 Company's paper—that is, the two items of Rs. 3,000 and Rs. 4,900 just referred to, in respect of the profits of Muddunpore exceeding the annual sum of Rs. 2,000 disposed of by the will, and in respect of all the moveables, he held that the plaintiff's claim is barred by art. 123. As to the Hadul estate he says, after referring to art. 123 of the present Limitation Act, XV of 1877 :—"The corresponding art. 122* of Act IX of 1871 has been enlarged in its scope in art. 123† of Act XV of 1877, by omitting the word 'moveable' of art. 122, and by the additional provision 'or for a distributive share of the property of an intestate;' so the substituted art. 123 includes both moveable and immoveable property, and the period of limitation prescribed is twelve years, to be computed "when the legacy or share becomes payable or deliverable." Ordinarily they become payable or deliverable from the testator's death, unless the testator wishes expressly that the payment of the legacy shall be postponed to some future period after his death, as in the case of Tagore v. Tagore (9 B. L. R., 377). But in suits for a distributive share of the property of an intestate, the share becomes deliverable immediately on the testator's death, as held by Mr. Justice MARKBY both in cases where he has actually left some property undisposed of by the will, and where he has made an illegal disposition of property which must go to the heir-at-law. "That being the case, the Hurro estate being illegally disposed of by the will, it immediately vested in the heirs-at-law—i.e., the plaintiff's father—on the testator's death; and as the invalidity of the will must be first declared before relief can be granted, a suit to set aside a will, on the ground of illegality, to declare that the testator died intestate, whereby the heirs-at-law became entitled to his property so illegally disposed of, and to seek consequential relief by decreeing possession, must be brought within twelve years from the death of the testator under art. 123, as the property became deliverable on the testator's death." The Subordinate Judge was further of opinion, that Nobin Chand cannot be regarded [800] as the karta or manager of a Hindu family; and he, therefore, considered, that the possession of Nobin cannot be regarded as possession on behalf of all the members by the manager of a joint Hindu family. The legacies of Rs. 5,000 Company's paper to persons designated by the will, he held to be good, and the result of his decision upon the points raised before him is thus summed up:—"For reasons stated above, with the exception of the claim of the rooms enjoyed by the plaintiff's father and mother in succession, as well as the moveable property held by them, of the ornaments belonging to the plaintiff's mother and the annuity enjoyed by the plaintiff, the remaining portion of the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation. The latter refers both to the Muddunpore and Hurro estates, to the corpus of Company's papers for Rs. 7,900 not disposed of by the will, as well as to all the accounts claimed by the plaintiff."

From this decree an appeal has been preferred by the plaintiff, and a cross-appeal by the defendants. On the appeal it has been contended, that limitation has no application to this suit; that if arts. 123 and 127* of the second schedule of the present Limitation Act can be held to be applicable, still s. 10† of the same Act applies, so as to save the plaintiff's claim from the operation of limitation. As to s. 10 Mr. Branson contended, that there is a general trust to manage. He relies upon the following provisions of the will:—"I allot all those properties for the maintenance of my family. None of my heirs shall be entitled at any time to get any partition of the said properties effected, nor shall be competent to transfer the same by sale or gift, or pledge the same in security for any person;" and he argues that this general trust is in its substance sufficiently specific to bring it within the provisions of s. 10. We are not able to concur in this argument. The plaintiff is not seeking to enforce this general trust in accordance with, and in pursuance of, the directions contained in the will. If there is any express trust, it is to pay to the plaintiff, as heir of her father, an annual allowance of Rs. 366, and the plaintiff is not asking to have this direction specifically enforced. On the contrary, her contention is, that this disposition fails, inasmuch as it is not a valid disposition according to law. The case is then not the case of a valid [801] disposition creating a specific trust, and a suit by a person beneficially interested to enforce such specific trust. It has been held that the section is not applicable to an implied or resulting trust; and, under these circumstances, we are of opinion that s. 10 is not applicable to the plaintiff's claim as put forward by her in her plaint. This decision is in accordance with the cases of Kherodemonay Dossee v. Doorgamonay Dossee (2 C. L. R., 112; s.c., on appeal I. L. R., 4 Cal., 455), Greender Chunder Ghose v. Mackintosh (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 897), and Anund Moye Deby v. Girish Chunder Myti (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 772). But then the question arises, is the plaintiff's suit barred by any other provisions of the law of limitation? and this question it will be convenient to consider (i) in respect of the Hadul estate, and (ii) in respect of the Muddunpore estate.

First then as to the Hadul estate. If the plaintiff's claim is barred, it must be barred by one of the following articles, viz., 123, 127, and 144* of the second schedule of the Limitation Act. Now, the view which we take of the case is this: We think that the general intention of the testator to be gathered from the will was to leave his property to the persons who would have been entitled as heirs under the Hindu law, and also to create an additional heir in the person of his daughter Nistarini and her sons. In carrying out this intention, he has, no doubt, inserted in the will certain provisions which must be rejected as invalid—the provisions, viz., against alienation and partition: but we think that what he has substantially done is this: Having created an additional heir, he has divided the Hadul estate between this heir and the persons who would have been heirs under the Hindu law. We think that, in giving to these heirs a specific share of the rents and profits, he must be held, according to the principle laid down in Mannox v. Greener (L. R., 14 Eq., 456) (see also Illustration (c) to s. 159† of the Indian Succession Act), to have given to each of these persons a share in this estate corresponding with the share of the profits which is specifically inserted in the second paragraph of the will. The case of Sookmoy Chunder Dass v. Monohari Dossee (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 269), which was [802] decided by this Bench, has been referred to in the course of the argument; but it appears to us that that case is distinguishable from the present one. In that case, the prohibition against alienation was stronger than the prohibition in the will now before us. There was an express direction that the estate should remain intact, and the testator there further attempted to create an estate-in-tail-male—that is, an estate not known to Hindu law. We there held, that it was impossible to say that an intention, by giving the rents and profits of the property, to give thereby the corpus itself was in conformity with the general intention to be gathered from the whole of the will taken together. In the case now before us it appears to us, that the intention to give the corpus by giving a share of the rents and profits is not in conflict with the general intention to be gathered from the whole will. It is true that there is a restraint on alienation and partition; but it appears to us that this direction can be set aside without destroying the essential disposition contained in the will. There being then, by a gift of a specific share of the rents and profits, a good gift of a share in the Hadul property, is it possible to say that the plaintiff's claim in respect of this share is barred by limitation? We think that it is not. Admittedly, Nobin Chand, the manager, has been paying the annual allowance given to Aubinash and his children by the will within twelve years before the institution of this suit, and it is, therefore, not possible to say with reference to art. 127, that, in respect of this share, there has been any exclusion of the plaintiff. Similarly, we think it cannot be said with reference to art. 144, that, in respect of this share, the possession of Nobin has been adverse to the plaintiff. Then with reference to art. 123, if the annual allowance made to Aubinash and his children be regarded as a legacy, there is no denial that the plaintiff has been admitted to the enjoyment of this legacy; and the object of the present suit is not to recover the legacy, but to have it defined what that legacy really is. We are, therefore, of opinion that, in respect of the share of the Hadul property, the plaintiff's claim is not barred by limitation.

Then, applying the same principle of construction to the share given to Nistarini and her children (for in respect of the [803] shares given to the other persons mentioned in the will there is no dispute), it appears to us, that the possession of Nobin Chand Ghose as trustee for Nistarini's children must be held to have been adverse to the plaintiff from the date of the death of the testator; and we think, therefore, that, in so far as the plaintiff seeks to enforce a claim to the share given to Nistarini's children, the present suit is barred. This is in accordance with the decision in Rherode-money's case (2 C. L. R., 112; s. c. on appeal, I. L. R., 4 Cal., 455) [see also the observations of the Privy Council in the case of Pirthee Singh v. Raj Koor (12 B. L. R., 238; s. c., 20 W. R., 25)]. We may observe that it has not been very strongly pressed upon us, that Nistarini's children ought not to have their annual allowance for the period of their lifetime, and all that we were asked to say was, that, upon their death, the share given to them would be divisible as part of the general estate of Hurro Mohun. We think, however, that this share has been given absolutely; and that, in respect thereof, the plaintiff is barred by limitation for the reasons already stated. Then, in connection with the Hadul property, there remains another question to be dealt with, and that is the question concerned with the increase in the annual profits over and above the sum of Rs. 3,150 set down in the second paragraph of the will. Now, the will does contain a specific provision that if the rents and profits of the estate shall in any year fall below the amount so set down, the persons entitled to shares in these profits under the will shall be subjected to a ratable and proportionate deduction; but there is no corresponding provision in respect of a possible increase. It appears to us, however, that the reasonable construction to put upon the will, all its provisions being taken together, is, that the increase ought to be dealt with in the same manner as the decrease; in other words, that any surplus profits above the sum of Rs. 3,150 specifically mentioned in the will must be divided between the legatees in the proportion of their shares.

We shall next deal with the sums of Rs. 500 allotted for the construction of embankments, the payments of salaries of gomastas, etc., and the sum of Rs. 150, which is a moiety of [304] the remuneration directed to be paid to the manager for the time being. Now, if these were bequests for specific purposes in which the plaintiff has no beneficial interest, we think that the possession of Nobin Chand would have been adverse to the plaintiff; and if these sums were disposed of for a purpose that had failed, we think that they must have fallen into the residue, and as the will contains no valid residuary bequest, the plaintiff would have been barred under the provisions of art. 123. But we think that it is impossible to say that the bequest of those two shares of the profits can be considered apart from the bequest of the remaining portions of the profits of the Hadul estate. The purposes for which the sum of Rs. 500 was bequeathed are construction of embankments, payment of salaries of gomastas, paiks, bildar, and other agents and repairs of the cutcheri. These are purposes essentially connected with the estate itself and its management, and the same observation is applicable to the sum of Rs. 150, which is a moiety of the manager's remuneration. The plaintiff asks for a partition, and upon that partition she will, of course, have to bear all expenses such as those which have been just specified in respect of her own share. We think, therefore, that these two sums of Rs. 500 and Rs. 150 must be regarded as an integral portion of the Hadul property. The result will be that the share of that property to which the plaintiff will be entitled will be ascertained in the following manner:—As Rs. 2,650 is to Rs. 366-10-13-1-1, so is the whole property to the plaintiff's share.

We have next to consider the question of limitation in connection with the Muddunpore estate. Now, the will directs that the profits of this estate, which are set down as Rs. 2,000 annually, shall be disposed of in the following manner,—viz., Rs. 500 for karpurdazes and expenses of erecting dams, and the remaining Rs. 1,500 for the following seven purposes:—

- (1) Turn of service of the idol Gobind Ji.
- (2) Feeding of mendicants and travellers.
- (3) Durgutshab and Dole Jatra.
- (4) Repair of the road in front of the house.
- (5) Repair of the outer house, dalan, &c.
- [803] (6) Daily and occasional rites and ceremonies.
- (7) Alms and other necessary acts.

Now we think there can be no doubt that the plaintiff has a certain interest in Nos. 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the above objects; and in respect of these objects we think it may be held, that the property has been vested in Nobin in trust for specific purposes within the meaning of s. 10 of the Limitation Act already referred to; but we are of opinion that the plaintiff's interest in these purposes, although it may entitle her to compel the trustee for the time being to perform the Dole Jatra, to repair the road in front of the house, to repair the outer house, dalan, etc., and to perform the daily and occasional rites and ceremonies, is not such an interest as will entitle her to say, that she is not barred by the law of limitation from asserting her right to a share in the Muddunpore estate as one of the heirs of Hurro Mohun? In respect of this estate, the possession of Nobin is adverse to the plaintiff in so far as concerns the object of the present suit, although s. 10 would save from the operation of the law of limitation a suit having for its direct object the effectuation of the purposes to which the profits of the Muddunpore estate have been directed by the will to be appropriated. Then if any of these purposes fails, the estate, so far as concerns the purposes which fail, becomes part of the residue not disposed of by the will; and in respect of this residue, Hurro Mohun died intestate. In this view, the plaintiff's claim to a share in the Muddunpore estate is barred by art. 123. We also think that the plaintiff (and before her, her father) has been excluded within the meaning of art. 127 since Hurro Mohun's death; and further, that since the same event, the possession of Nobin has been adverse within the meaning of art. 144. We think, however, that although the plaintiff is barred from asserting a title to a share in the Muddunpore estate, she has a right to ask that purposes 3, 4, 5, and 6, already referred to, be effectually performed out of the annual sum of Rs. 1,500 set apart by the will for these and the other purposes already mentioned; and we direct that a declaration to this effect be inserted in the decree.

We now come to the disposition of the Company's paper, [806] Rs. 12,900 : First, as to the sum of Rs. 3,000 set apart as a reserve fund, the prohibition against alienation is, of course, invalid; and, in consequence, this sum of Rs. 3,000 fails to be disposed of as on an intestacy, and the plaintiff's claim in respect of any part of this sum is barred by the provisions of art. 123. Then, secondly, as to the bequest of Rs. 3,000 to Nobin Chand; this is a good bequest and cannot be interfered with. Thirdly, as to Rs. 4,900, there is no specific bequest of the corpus; but we think that the bequest of the interest must be taken to carry with it the right to the corpus, and in this view the plaintiff will be entitled to a life-interest in one-third of Rs. 2,450. Fourthly, the bequest of Rs. 500 to Gopal Chunder Ghose is a good bequest, and cannot be interfered with. Fifthly, as to Rs. 500 set aside for the excavation of the bed of the Ganges and the Nundun Tank, it is admitted that the testator, who lived for some time after the execution of the will, spent this money for the purposes just mentioned; and there is no question concerned with this money with which we have now to deal. Sixthly, the claim to a share in the moveable property other than that above specifically mentioned is barred by art. 123. Then, lastly, we are informed that there is no desire on the part of appellant to interfere with the separate occupation of the family dwelling-house, in so far as that occupation has been directed and regulated by the provisions of the will. But the decree of the Subordinate Judge, in so far as it declares the undivided portion of the family dwelling liable to partition cannot be interfered with.

The result then will be, that, as to the Muddunpore property, there will be a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to have the Durgutshab, repairs of the road in front of the house, the repairs of the outer house, dalan, etc., as specified in paragraph 4 of the will, and the daily and occasional rites and ceremonies properly performed out of the annual sum of Rs. 1,500 set apart for these and other purposes in the will. Next, as to the Hadul property, the plaintiff will be entitled to a share bearing to the whole property the same proportion that Rs. 366-10-13-1-1 bears to Rs. 2,650. It will be understood that in this share the appellant is only entitled to the estate of a Hindu daughter. [807] Then, as to the account asked in respect of the Hadul property, we think that the plaintiff is entitled to such account for six years only preceding the institution of the present suit, upon the authority of the case of Baroda Pershad Chattopadhyya v. Brojo Nath Bhattacharjee (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 910). Upon taking that account, the manager, Nobin Chand, will be entitled to credit for all sums paid to the appellant in respect of the annual allowance of these six years; and she will be entitled to whatever balance of the profits of her share will remain after giving credit for these sums. The plaintiff will be further entitled to a life-interest in one-third of Rs. 2,450 Government paper; and the plaintiff will further be entitled, if she insists upon it, to a partition of the undivided portions of the family dwelling-house. Having regard to the difficult questions which have arisen upon the construction of this will, we think that the whole of the costs of these proceedings should be paid out of the estate.

I.L.R. 8 Cal. 808 GOPEEKISHEN GOSSAMY v. THAKOORDASS GOSSAMY [1882]

Decree varied.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sched. ii, art. 131—Worship of idol—Turn of worship—Recurring right.

A suit for a palla, or right to worship an idol in turn, is a periodically recurring right within the meaning of Act XV of 1877, sched. ii, art. 131.†

Eshan Chunder Roy v. Mommohini Dasi (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 683), followed.

THE judgment appealed from is as follows :—“The facts of the case are, that the plaintiff and his brothers, Ram Dass Gossamy and Pyari Mohun Gossamy, when they lived in commensality, used to worship Radhamadhubjee, the family idol of the Gossains, for forty-five days in the year; that, when they separated, it was arranged amongst themselves that each should worship the idol every third year for the whole term of [808] forty-five days, and that the said arrangement was being carried into effect, when, in the year 1283, (1876-7), which was the plaintiff's year, the defendant refused to make over to him the thakoor. The defendant, who has purchased Pyari Mohun's palla of the worship, raised numerous objections, questioning the jurisdiction of the Court and pleading that the plaintiff has no cause of action; that the case is barred by limitation of one year ; and that there was never such an agreement as stated in the plaint. The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree, overruling all the objections : hence the appeal on the following grounds :—(i) The Civil Court has no jurisdiction, and the plaintiff has no cause of action ; (ii) the case is barred by limitation ; (iii) the agreement stated in the plaint has not been proved, and the ikrars admitted by the plaintiff disprove it ; and (iv) the lower Court failed to construe some documents correctly."

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1835 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Trailokya Nath Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 23rd August 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Kodarnath Chatterjee, Munsif of Serampore, dated the 31st March 1879.

The Judge found all the issues in favour of the respondent. On the point of limitation he relied on the case of Eshan Chunder Roy v. Monmohini Dassi (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 683) distinguishing Gaur Mohun Chowdhry v. Madan Mohun Chowdhry (6 B. L. R., 352). On the third issue he found the agreement proved ; and in this part of his judgment he stated that there was "sufficient evidence that the defendant refused the idol to the plaintiff in 1275 or 1277 (1868-9 or 1870)." The defendant appealed on the grounds (i) that the suit, which was instituted in 1878, was barred by limitation, it not having been instituted within six years from the time the defendant first refused to give the idol ; and (ii) that the right claimed was not a recurring right within the meaning of art. 131 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act, XV of 1877.

Baboo Mohiney Mohun Roy for the Appellant.

Baboo Bama Churn Banerjee for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (FIELD and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—The only point in this case is what period of limitation is applicable to a suit brought to enforce a palla, or turn of worshipping an idol.

[809] The lower Court have followed the decision of Eshan Chunder Roy v. Monmohini Dassi (I. L. R. 4 Cal. 683), which decided that a palla, or right to worship an idol in turn, is a periodically recurring right within the meaning of art. 131 of the second schedule of the present Limitation Act, XV of 1877.

It has been contended before us, that this article is not applicable, and that the article which ought to be applied to a case of this kind is art. 120, which provides six years' limitation for suits for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in the second schedule. We are unable to assent to this contention, and, as at present advised, we see no sufficient ground for differing from the decision in Eshan Chunder Roy v. Monmohini Dassi (I. L. R. 4 Cal. 683). The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.
